jection, is impliedly made in American Ins. Co. v. Nelberger, 74 Mo. 167, supra, III, b. 6. It is there stated that, "when the application does not attempt to contain all the provisions which the policy to be issued must contain," then the insured is bound to inspect the policy on delivery for the purpose of ascertaining its terms. Stated conversely, the court's proposition is that when the application does set forth all the terms of the policy to be issued, the insured is not under obligation to inspect the policy to see that it incorporates them. Such a situation is found in an application to renew a policy, and the decisions uphold the converse proposition as stated.

In Palmer v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 54 Conn. 488, 9 Atl. 248, it appeared that the insured had held for several years a fire policy which contained no restriction in regard to coinsurance. The company solicited a renewal of the policy, and this was agreed to by the insured. In apparent compliance with this agreement, a new policy was issued in which, however, was inserted a stipulation against coinsurance without indorsed consent. This policy was retained for three months by the insured without examination. Loss occurring, suit was then brought to reform it by striking out the coinsurance clause, and to enforce it in this form. Granting this relief, the court states that, while it may be a salutary rule which requires the insured to examine a policy issued upon an application which states the bare facts describing the property, the term of insurance, the rates, etc., and to hold him bound by the terms and stipulations of the policy issued in pursuance thereof, it is different where the contract in extenso has been agreed upon beforehand, and the policy issued is variant therefrom. Under such circumstances, says the court, there is no obligation to inspect the policy and to learn its provisions. "In his [the insurer's] promise to make and deliver an accurate copy there is justification before the law for the omission of the other party to examine the paper delivered and for his assumption that there is no designed variance. A man is not for his pecuniary advantage to impute it to another as gross negligence that the other trusted to his fidelity to a promise of that character. The rule of law that no person shall be permitted to deliver himself from contract obligations by saying that he did not read what he signed or accepted is subject to this limitation, namely, that it is not to be applied intelligence against results of their own imprudence or negligence, in cases where the injury complained of has been intentionally inflicted through fraud or other intentional wrongdoing.

Pom. Eq. Jur. §§ 418, 419; Barndt v. Frederick, 78 Wis. 1, 11 L. R. A. 199, 47 N. W. 6; McIntire v. Pryor, 173 U. S. 38, 54-60, 43 L. ed. 606, 612-614, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 352; Warder, B. & G. Co. v. Whitish, 77 Wis. 433, 46 N. W. 540; Strohn v. Detroit & M. R. Co. 21 Wis. 554, 94 Am. Dec. 564; National Bank v. Taylor, 5 S. D. 99, 58 N. W. 299.

A wrongdoer cannot raise an equity in his own favor through his own wrongdoing.

Masson v. Bovet, 1 Denio, 69, 43 Am. Dec.

in behalf of any person who by word or act has induced the omission to read."

Where an agent informed the insured, on the latter's application for a renewal of a former policy, that he would make out another policy "like the first one," except that thereafter it could be renewed by a mere renewal premium receipt, it was held that the insured might recover in an action on the policy, although he had violated a new condition in the renewal policy avoiding it in case the insured was not the sole owner of the property covered. Burson v. Fire Asso. 136 Pa. 267, 20 Am. St. Rep. 919, 20 Atl. 401. "It would certainly have been proper for the agent, when he proposed to give the assured a new policy 'like the first one' to have informed him of any change . . . in the conditions. The assured had a right to suppose there was no essential difference between the policies; and the case does not come within the ruling in Susquehanna Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Swank, 102 Pa. 17, where it was held that a person who accepts a policy, and retains it for sixteen months without reading it, cannot, after enjoying its protection during all that time, defend against an assessment upon the ground that the policy was issued upon a different plan from the one which he had verbally requested. We think that any judge was justified in admitting the first policy in evidence. . . . Surely, if such a defense is to prevail, insurance has ceased to be an indemnity."

So, in Phoenix F. Ins. Co. v. Hoffheimer, 46 Miss. 645, where application was made for "another policy like the first one," and a policy was issued which failed to describe the insured as "agent," in the manner of the first one, reformation in this regard was granted after the lapse of eleven months. The court regarded insured's action in taking it for granted that the new policy conformed to the original policy, and failing to examine the same on receipt, as but "a reasonable confidence" in the good faith of the agent of the company.

No recovery was allowed in Wyman v. Gillett, 54 Minn. 536, 56 N. W. 167, by the receiver of an insurance company upon an obligation imposed in a policy sent to the insured in substitution for the one previously taken out, marked "duplicate," and accompanied with a letter in which the company stated that the new policy was issued to conform to certain recent legislation, and that it was more liberal and advantageous to the insured than the prior policy. 67 L. R. A.

651; Hogben v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 69 Conn. 503, 61 Am. St. Rep. 53, 38 Atl. 214; Hedden v. Griffin, 136 Mass. 231, 49 Am. Rep. 25; Beckwith v. Ryan, 66 Conn. 589, 34 Atl. 489; McCann v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 177 Mass. 280, 58 N. E. 1026; Dunn v. Amos, 14 Wis. 106; Fisher v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 160 Mass. 386, 39 Am. St. Rep. 495, 35 N. E. 849; Hendrickson v. Hendrickson, 51 Iowa, 68, 50 N. W. 287; Guckenheimer v. Angevine, 81 N. Y. 394; Neblett v. Macfarland, 92 U. S. 101, 105, 23 L. ed. 471, 472.

When the defendant sent policies differing from those agreed upon, promised, and expected, it was its duty to have notified the applicants of that fact; and its wrongful conduct in making such representations and whereas in fact all the changes in it were for the benefit of the company, and the premium obligation therein was doubled. Under such circumstances, says the court, amounting to a fraud upon the insured, the latter was excused from ascertaining the terms of the policy, and was not bound thereby, although it had been accepted and retained for some time without objection.

An application by a mortgagee for the renewal of a former policy was fulfilled in Hay v. Star F. Ins. Co. 77 N. Y. 235, 33 Am. Rep. 607, by a policy containing a new clause subrogating the company to the rights of the mortgagee against the property to the extent of the loss, if any. The new policy was subsequently renewed by premium receipts several times without discovery of the clause so inserted. After a loss the policy was reformed by striking out the subrogation clause, and enforced, the court saying: "A party, whose duty it is to prepare a written contract, in pursuance of a previous agreement to prepare one materially changing the terms of such previous agreement, and deliver it as in accordance therewith, commits a fraud which entitles the other party to relief according to the circumstances presented. Equity will reform a written instrument in cases of mutual mistake, and also in cases of fraud, and also where there is a mistake on one side and fraud on the other. . . . The negligence of the plaintiff in not discovering the change, and laches in not sooner seeking relief, are questions which make the propriety of granting relief in a given case discretionary. The court below, upon the findings of fact, we think properly exercised its discretion in this case in granting relief. Policies of fire insurance are rarely examined by the insured. The same degree of vigilance and critical examination would not be expected or demanded as in the case of some other instruments. It is found that the plaintiff did not in fact examine the policy until after the fire, when, for the first time, he was informed of the peculiar terms of this provision."

Circumstances may exist, however, sufficient to charge the insured with knowledge. Thus, the mere renewal of an outstanding policy by the issuance of an entirely new policy, instead of by the giving of a renewal receipt, as had previously been the custom between the agent and the insured, is held, in Thomson v. Southern Mut. Ins. Co. 90 Ga. 78, 15 S. E. 652, to promises, and its subsequent act of sending policies without notification that they differed from those promised, could not create a duty on the part of the applicant to examine the policy.

Strohn v. Detroit & M. R. Co. 21 Wis. 562, 94 Am. Dec. 564; Converse v. Blumrich, 14 Mich. 109, 90 Am. Dec. 230; Groton Sav. Bank v. Batty, 30 N. J. Eq. 126; Duffield v. E. T. Barnum Wire & Iron Works, 64 Mich. 293, 31 N. W. 310; Bidwell v. Astor Mut. Ins. Co. 16 N. Y. 263; Baker v. Lever, 67 N. Y. 304, 23 Am. Rep. 117; Hay v. Star F. Ins. Co. 77 N. Y. 235, 33 Am. Rep. 607; Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Gurnee, 1 Paige, 278, 19 Am. Dec. 431; Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. Norwood, 16 C. C. A. 136, 32 U. S. App. 490, 69 Fed. 71; McElroy v.

British America Assur. Co. 36 C. C. A. 615, 94 Fed. 990; Palmer v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 54 Conn. 509, 9 Atl. 248; McCarty v. New York L. Ins. Co. 74 Minn. 530, 77 N. W. 426; Kansas Mill-Owners' & Mfrs. Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Central Nat. Bank, 60 Kan. 630, 57 Pac. 524; Temminck v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 72 Mich. 388, 40 N. W. 469; Royal Neighbors of America v. Boman, 177 Ill. 27, 69 Am. St. Rep. 201, 52 N. E. 266; Bennett v. Massachusetts Mut. L. Ins. Co. 107 Tenn. 371, 64 S. W. 758; Equitable Safety Ins. Co. v. Hearne, 20 Wall. 404, 22 L. ed. 398; Kilbourn v. Sunderland, 130 U. S. 518, 519, 32 L. ed. 1010, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 594; Fargo Gas & Coke Co. v. Fargo Gas & Electric Co. 4 N. D. 219, 37 L. R. A. 593, 59 N. W. 1067; have been sufficient in itself to put the insured upon inquiry in regard to the terms thereof, and his retention of the new policy without investigation into its terms is held to be a waiver of the variation between it and the previous policy in regard to the vacancy clause. Such provision in the new policy having been broken before loss, the court refused to reform the policy in regard thereto, but permitted a recovery thereon.

It appeared in McHugh v. Imperial F. Ins. Co. 48 How. Pr. 230, that, on an application by the insured for a renewal of a previous policy, which permitted additional insurance without notice to the company, the new policy, issued in apparent compliance with his request, stipulated against such additional insurance without the indorsed permission of the company. The retention of this new policy for a year, until loss, in alleged ignorance of this stipulation, although the policy had been twice altered during that period in other respects, was held to bar relief. "The delivery of the policy to them was a distinct notice that such permission was not then conceded. . . . The mistake, if any, through which he falls, is his own, and is the result of the oversight and neglect of himself and his agents. . . . No reasonable excuse for ignorance can be well assigned."

IV. Mistake or fraud as to facts disclosed by the insured.

a. Appearing in the policy.

1. Subject-matter of insurance.

(a) Property covered.

The rule, caveat emptor, would seem to apply properly only in regard to representations of the vendor concerning the article which is the subject of sale. Where the subject of the fraud or mistake on the part of the insurer, in his character of vendor, appears, therefore, not in connection with the terms of the policy, but with facts faithfully disclosed by the insured, the rule would seem to have no application. Ordinary honesty on the part of the insurer would seem to require that he incorporate such facts in the policy where necessary. It would not seem a lax business principle which permits the insured to rely upon the insurer to this extent. These facts do not fall within the category or terms of the policy to be delivered, the qualities of the article to be sold. They are matters concerning the risk, supplied by the insured for incorporation in the policy, the terms of which have been represented to him. The majority of the cases sustain the insured in this confidence, and do not regard it as inexcusable negligence to omit an examination of the policy on delivery, for the purpose of ascertaining whether it has been drawn according to disclosed facts.

A line of cases is found, however, in which it is held that the insured is chargeable with notice of the contents of the policy as written, and that, if it is not in accordance with the facts, then good faith to the insurer requires that the latter's attention be drawn to the error. Retention of the policy by the insured amounts to an affirmation of the facts as they appear in the policy. If he is not estopped to deny that they are otherwise, by his neglect to give notice of the error he has waived his rights with respect thereto. Respectable authority is to be found in support of this position.

It is suggested as a possible ground of distinction, or of reconciliation of the cases upon their facts, that where the fraud or mistake appears to have been such as to render the policy void ab initio the insured should have relief therefrom in some appropriate form; but, on the other hand, if the policy has not been rendered void ab initio, and the insured has actually received protection under the policy, he is bound thereby notwithstanding the fraud or mistake.

In applying to the company's secretary for additional insurance, in Okes v. Fire Ins. Co. 12 Pa. Co. Ct. 341, the insured requested that a portion of the additional insurance be applied to a smokehouse about to be erected upon the premises. The additional insurance was allowed, but in noting it upon the policy the company failed to state that the smokehouse was covered thereby. After its return the policy was held by the insured for three years without objection, until a loss, including the smokehouse, occurred. The company denied liability for the damage to this portion of the property. Relief was sought by the insured in equity by way of reformation of the policy, but the court refused it, pointedly quoting the old maxim, Vigilantibus, non dormientibus, æquitas subscribit. "Nothing . . . can call forth this court into activity, but conscience, good faith, Strand v. Griffith, 38 C. C. A. 444, 97 Fed. 856; Stanley v. M'Gauran, Ir. L. R. 11 Eq. 314; Central R. Co. v. Kisch, L. R. 2 H. L. 120; Redgrave v. Hurd, L. R. 20 Ch. Div. 13; Albany City Sav. Inst. v. Burdick, 87 N. Y. 40; O. Aultman & Co. v. Olson, 34 Minn. 450, 26 N. W. 452; McClellan v. Scott, 24 Wis. 86; Gunther v. Ullrich, 82 Wis. 228, 33 Am. St. Rep. 32, 52 N. W. 88; Porter v. Beattie, 88 Wis. 30, 59 N. W. 499; Beetle v. Anderson, 98 Wis. 8, 73 N. W. 560; Butler v. Regents of University, 32 Wis. 132; Schultz v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 44 Wis. 638; Tyner v. Cotter, 67 Wis. 488, 30 N. W. 782; Rogers v. Phenix Ins. Co. 121 Ind. 570, 23 N. E. 502; Phenix Ins. Co. v. Golden, 121 Ind. 524, 23 N. E. 503; Peters v. United States Industrial Ins. Co.

10 App. Div. 533, 42 N. Y. Supp. 348; Jacobs v. Northwestern Life Assur. Co. 30 App. Div. 285, 51 N. Y. Supp. 967; Dwelling House Ins. Co. v. Bailey, 39 Ill. App. 488; Dwelling House Ins. Co. v. Downey, 39 Ill. App. 524; Donnelly v. Cedar Rapids Ins. Co. 70 Iowa, 693, 28 N. W. 608; Rowley v. Empire Ins. Co. 36 N. Y. 550; Gristock v. Royal Ins. Co. 87 Mich. 430, 49 N. W. 634; Dryer v. Security F. Ins. Co. (Iowa) 82 N. W. 495; Pomeroy v. Benton, 57 Mo. 542; Carmichael v. Vandebur, 50 Iowa, 655; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Levis, 13 Ill. App. 170; Hunt v. Barker, 22 R. I. 18, 84 Am. St. Rep. 812, 46 Atl. 46; Steckel v. First Nat. Bank, 93 Pa. 376, 39 Am. Rep. 758; Fine v. Stuart (Tenn. Ch. App.) 48 S. W. 371; Alfred Shrimpton and reasonable diligence. When they are wanting, the court is passive and does nothing.' It is the duty of one who receives a policy of insurance to acquaint himself with its contents. . . . A failure to read the instrument, or have it read, is of no avail. . . . Certainly a neglect by plaintiff for over three years to ascertain what a policy held by him covers, constitutes such laches as will turn his application for a reformation of . . . [the policy] out of a court of equity. Nor is the holder of a policy ever entitled to maintain an action for its reformation on the ground of his ignorance of its stipulations, simply because of his failure to read it, and in the absence of proofs of acts or representations on the part of the company misleading him into believing that they were different from what they are; . . . there is no such proof here."

Where the policy showed upon its face that the property intended to be covered was not included therein, its retention for "some months," taken in connection with the insured's letters to the company seeking cancelation and offering to pay short rates, was held, in Walker v. State Ins. Co. 46 Kan. 312, 26 Pac. 718, to be a waiver of the alleged fraud of the agent in obtaining the assured's signature to the application, which also failed to cover the property, and to show a recognition of the validity of the policy by the insured. He was therefore liable upon his premium note.

The policy issued in Holmes v. Charlestown Mut. F. Ins. Co. 10 Met. 211, 48 Am. Dec. 428, expressly provided that the amount of the insurance upon the building and fixtures did not exceed three fourths the value of the property as expressed in the application. In the application the values of the building and of the "movables" were separately given, the value of the building being less than three fourths of the amount covered by the policy; but more than that proportion if the value of the "movables" be added. The mistake in writing the policy to cover the building "and fixtures," instead of the building "and movables," was clear. But the action was upon the policy as it stood. "Besides," says the court, "the policy was delivered to the plaintiffs, and they must be presumed to have examined it at the time they received it, to have known what it contained, and to have understood its import. But they slept over it nearly four years, without requesting any alteration therein, until the loss happened, when the rights and liabilities of the respective parties were fixed, and the directors might not feel authorized to alter the terms of the policy."

On the contrary, a policy having been written upon information personally obtained by a soliciting agent and without written application upon the part of the insured, it was held, in Shanahan v. Agricultural Ins. Co. 6 Pa. Super. Ct. 65, that the agent's admitted mistake in writing the description of the two stables insured as but a single "building" did not bar a recovery on the policy on the loss of only one. The defense of the company was that the "building" which had been lost was the stable, which was not insured. "The erroneous description," says the court, "was the act of the agent alone in the face of light and knowledge, and it was unknown to the insured until after the loss occurred. The defendant cannot be released from its contract because the plaintiff, acting in good faith, accepted without examination the policy written by its agent."

Although the insured read over his policy before leaving the insurer's offices, it was held in Phoenix F. Ins. Co. v. Gurnee, 1 Paige, 278. 19 Am. Dec. 431, that the policy might be reformed after loss by conforming the same to the application. The policy covered only the mill house, whereas the application had been made out to cover both the building and the machinery. The insured, it was noted by the court, was a plain countryman, to whom the difference between the policy as written and his application would not be apparent.

A policy was issued in Liverpool & L. & G. Ins. Co. v. Wyld, 1 Can. S. C. 604, 850, covering goods within a certain building only, although at the time of the application the insured had stated to the agent that a portion of the stock was kept in adjoining flats, into which doors had been opened, and a proportionately higher premium due to the increased risk paid. On loss the company refused to pay for the goods within the latter premises on the ground that they were not covered by the policy. The latter had been retained by the insured for a period of nine months without reading, and therefore without discovery of the error. The court held that, in view of the insured's actual ignorance of the terms of the policy, there could be no implied assent to its terms from the mere fact that it had been in his possession. Likewise, to the second question, viz., whether such retention

& Sons v. Netzorg, 104 Mich. 225, 62 N. W. 343; Ripley v. Case, 78 Mich. 126, 18 Am. St. Rep. 428, 43 N. W. 1097; Maxfield v. Schwartz, 45 Minn. 150, 10 L. R. A. 606, 47 N. W. 448; Erickson v. Fisher, 51 Minn. 300, 53 N. W. 638; Alfred Shrimpton & Sons v. Philbriok, 53 Minn. 368, 55 N. W. 551; Briggs v. Ewart, 51 Mo. 245, 11 Am. Rep. 445; Woodbridge Bros. v. DeWitt, 51 Neb. 98, 70 N. W. 506; West v. Wright, 98 Ind. 335; Wenzel v. Shulz, 78 Cal. 221, 20 Pac. 404; Brooks v. Matthews, 78 Ga. 739, 3 S. E. 627; Wilson v. Higbee, 62 Fed. 723; Linington v. Strong, 107 Ill. 302; Trimble v. Ward, 97 Ky. 748, 31 S. W. 866; Iowa Economic Heater Co. v. American Economic Heater Co. 32 Fed. 735; Gardner v. Tremary, 65 Iowa, 646, 22 N. W. 912; Speed

v. Hollingsworth, 54 Kan. 436, 38 Pac. 496; Babcock v. Case, 61 Pa. 427, 100 Am. Dec. 654; Eaton v. Winnie, 20 Mich. 156, 4 Am. Rep. 377; McBeth v. Craddock, 28 Mo. App. 380; Chamberlain v. Rankin, 49 Vt. 133; Alexander v. Church, 53 Conn. 561, 4 Atl. 103; Moak's Underhill, Torts, p. 538; Bigelow, Fr. §§ 522, 523; Bigelow, Torts, §§ 150, 152, 156; Jaggard, Torts, pp. 595-598, 970; Cooley, Torts, 2d ed. 583, 584; 14 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 122, 161.

Marshall, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Two propositions are presented for consideration: First, Were the applicants for insurance bound by their applications because of their failure to know what they without objection had induced the insurer to alter its position, and thereby entitled it to set up an equitable estoppel against the claim that the policy as issued was inoperative, and that the true contract was expressed in the application and premium receipt, the court took a view favorable to the insured. "It has been said that, if the respondents had promptly read the policy, they would have discovered the mistake in time to have returned it, and have given the directors an opportunity of declining the risk and returning the premium before a loss. Still, actual knowledge of the contents of the policy is an indispensable element of such a defense; and the evidence not only fails in showing such knowledge, but the testimony of Mr. Jermyn and of Mr. Darling shows that the policy was never actually read, or even seen, by the defendants. . . . There could be no imputed knowledge of the contents of the policy, inasmuch as there was no obligation binding the respondents to read it; indeed, on the other hand, the respondents might well assume that it was sent to them to carry out the only contract of insurance they had with the appellants,—that entered into through their agent, Hooper, and not, as according to the contention of the insurance company it must have been, as a proposal for a contract entirely different in its terms from that just mentioned. . . . If the appellants have been greatly prejudiced in having been deprived of the option of rejecting the risk, their loss is attributable to the negligence of their own agent, Hooper, in omitting to communicate to the company's office, at Montreal, the letter of the 10th August, 1871, in its integrity. . . . It was not for the respondents to inquire either of the appellants or of Hooper, if the latter had performed his duty to the company. They had a perfect right to assume that the knowledge and contract of Hooper within the limits of his authority was the knowledge and contract of the company, and to act accordingly. In short, the case is one which, as far as legal principle is involved, depends on the application of that familiar rule of the law of agency, which throws the loss occasioned by the neglect of an agent on his principal, though innocent, rather than on another equally innocent third party."

(b) Voyage covered by marine policy.

A contract for marine insurance was established L. R. A.

lished by the correspondence between the parties in Equitable Safety Ins. Co. v. Hearne, 20 Wall. 494, 22 L. ed. 398, by which the port of loading, as well as the port of discharge, was to be covered by the policy. The policy as written failed to include this risk. Loss having occurred at such port, the policy was reformed by the insertion of this additional clause, and enforced. "It is not denied," says the court, "that the correspondence . . . constituted a preliminary agreement. Such, clearly, was its effect. The policy was intended to put the contract in a more full and formal shape. The assured was bound to read the letters of the company in reply to his own with care. It is to be presumed he did so. He had a right to assume that the policy would accurately conform to the agreement thus made, and to rest confidently in that belief. It is not probable that he scanned the policy with the same vigilance as the letters of the company. They tended to prevent such scrutiny, and, if it were necessary, threw him off his guard."

An application was made in Wylde v. Union Marine Ins. Co. 10 N. S. 205, for a marine policy covering a vessel "to and from" a certain port. The policy issued in apparent compliance with this application covered the vessel only from the day after loading. This policy was received and retained without reading until loss some two weeks after its issue. Reformation was granted without hesitation, the court stating that the defense based upon the insured's laches in failing to seek relief earlier was a mere assertion which hardly lies in the mouth of the defendants, one would think, who thus made the mistake. "To hold that plaintiffs had in any manner waived their rights under such a state of facts would, I think, be without warrant or precedent."

So, in an early marine insurance case—Motoux v. London Assurance (1739) 1 Atk. 545—it appeared that in writing the policy the risk had been limited to the voyage "from" a certain port, while the memorandum of agreement was for a policy upon the vessel "at and from" the port. It was urged by the insurer that the agent of the insured, when he came to get the policy should have compared it with the memorandum, so that any discrepancy might have been corrected on the spot, and that, in view of his failure to do so, the policy must prevail as written though at material variance from the agreement. The chancellor, however, held that signed? Second, Did the retention of the policies by the applicants for several months, without objection, constitute an acceptance thereof, and waive the fraud, if there was fraud, in securing the applications? The learned counsel for respondent devoted nearly all their printed argument, as they did nearly all their oral argument, to the first proposition. As we do not think it is necessarily decisive of the case, we shall assume that in deciding it the trial court did not err. On the second proposition the court held that the applicants did not accept the policies because they repudiated them within a reasonable time after knowing that the instruments were not what they supposed their applications called for; that the mere retention of the policies without such knowledge did not constitute an acceptance. Appellant's counsel contend that when the policies were received the applicants were, as ordinarily prudent persons, put upon inquiry as to the character thereof, that they should have examined the policies, and that their failure to do so, and retention thereof for several months before making any complaint, was an acceptance of them as fulfilling the applications as they supposed such applications were made, and a waiver of fraud, if there was fraud, in obtaining the same.

As we view the turning question above suggested, the law has been firmly settled in favor of appellant, and has been applied by this court in many cases. It does not militate, as counsel for respondent seem to the objection was without color "because Hal-head was a mere agent or servant to the owner of the ship, and not at all necessary that he should be so exact as to compare the label [memorandum of agreement] and policy at the time he fetched it."

(c) Misdescription of property.

The insured was defeated in Goddard v. Monitor Mut. F. Ins. Co. 108 Mass. 56, 11 Am. Rep. 307, in an action upon a policy which, through an agent's mistake with which the insured had no connection, erroneously described an organ factory as a machine shop. "It is decisive of the case," says the court, "that the policy which the plaintiff accepted without objection, or attempt to have any mistake corrected, cannot be applied to the building which was destroyed by the fire. . . . However unfortunate this may be for the plaintiff, he accepted the policy in its present shape, and cannot complain that he has been misled by it."

But a recovery upon a fire policy written by an agent himself having authority to issue policies, without previous reference to his company for approval of the risk, was allowed in Dowling v. Merchants' Ins. Co. 168 Pa. 234, 31 Atl. 1087, where the insured had disclosed the fact that the property was used as a boarding house, although the policy was written by the agent describing the property as "occupied by insured as a dwelling house only," and the policy in this form had been accepted and retained by the insured without examination until loss. "The defendant cannot be released from its contract because the plaintiff, acting in good faith, accepted, without examination the policy written by its agent. . . . Having made a full and frank disclosure of the facts to the company's agent, who was empowered to write the policy, and who from observation knew the character and use of the building, there was nothing to induce or warn the insured to read the policy, unless it was the anticipation of fraud or mistake, and this could impose no duty in protection of the rights of the defendant." Swan v. Watertown F. Ins. Co. 96 Pa. 37, infra, IV., a, 3, (c), is distinguished upon the ground that there the insured knew facts putting him on his guard against mistakes, and which should have incited him to read the policy.

(d) Location of property.

A broker's blunder in returning the wrong 67 L. R. A. policy for cancellation is held, in Birnstein v. Stuyvesant Ins. Co. 83 App. Div. 436, 82 N. Y. Supp. 140, to have been waived by the insured's retention of the policy incorporating an erroneous location of the property covered. Two policies were issued by the defendant, one describing the property as located on Third avenue, and a subsequent one correctly locating the property on First avenue. The latter was, by a blunder, returned and canceled; the former delivered to the insured and retained till loss,—a month later. The error was attributable to the broker, rather than to the insurer, the latter properly cancelling the policy returned. Retention of the wrong policy by the insured was deemed a ratification of the broker's mistake. No action was maintainable, at any rate, upon the policy as it read.

But a mutual mistake as to the section in which the premises were located was reformed in German F. Ins. Co. v. Gueck, 130 Ill. 345, 6 L. R. A. 835, 23 N. E. 112, although the policies had been in insured's hands fourteen years.

2. Interest protected.

An error in writing a policy so as to insure the interest of the mortgagor, loss payable to the mortgagee, instead of directly insuring the interest of the mortgagee, was relieved against in Williams v. North German Ins. Co. 24 Fed. 625, by reforming the policy after loss, where the error was chargeable to the fault of the agent. "Where an instrument fails to represent what both parties intended to have it represent, and one party had drawn up the instrument, and the other party merely accepted it, and the fault was on the part of the party drawing up the instrument, it can be reformed. It would be a harsh rule if a person applying to an insurance agent, who is supposed to know the legal value of the language used in such policies, which he is drawing up every day, and who is supposed to know exactly what is desired, if that agent fails to do that which was intended. —It would be harsh to say that the instrument shall not be reformed, and that chancery shall not give relief."

So, a policy issued to a mortgagee in pursuance of a request to insure his interest was reformed after loss in Humphry v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 15 Blatchf. 504, Fed. Cas. No. 6,875, where the policy was erroneously issued to cover the mortgagor's interest, loss payable to the think, against the maxim that a person cannot take advantage of his own wrong, but enforces that other one, which is quite as well established, that the court will not constitute itself the guardian of persons of mature age and ordinary intelligence, protecting them against the results of their own negligence; that it will not furnish a person a remedy for a wrong where he cannot prove a legal claim for damages without showing that his own negligence intervened between the act of the alleged wrongdoer and the result complained of, and was the real, efficient, producing cause of his injury; that in such a case it will be conclusively presumed that he voluntarily accepted the situation, because, if he had used ordinary care, the injury complained of would have been prevented. Applying that in the decision of the cases, it has been repeatedly held that if a person contracts for an article to be delivered, and delivery is made ostensibly in fulfillment of the contract, under such circumstances that he has ample opportunity to test the thing delivered by the contract, he is put upon inquiry as to all departures therefrom which are open and obvious to ordinary inspection; that he is bound to see those things which are plainly observable, and is charged with knowledge thereof from the time he ought, in the exercise of ordinary care, to have discovered them; and that if he does not, within a reasonable time thereafter, give notice that the thing delivered is not accepted as satisfying the agreement to purchase, he mortgagee. The policy remained in the hands of the insurer's agent pursuant to an arrangement with the insured, and the latter therefore, says the court, "had no opportunity before the fire, and before the rights of the parties had become fixed by the loss, to accept or reject it."

Seven months' retention by a mortgagee of the policy written in his favor is held, in Bennett v. City Ins. Co. 115 Mass. 241, to be evidence against the mortgagor of the latter's acceptance of the policy so written. It was a circumstance "having some tendency to show an acceptance by the plaintiff of the alleged new arrangement. It was a mistake, however, to rule that, as a matter of law, it constituted an acceptance on the plaintiff's part." It appeared that the application for insurance had been made by the mortgagor through a third party, and that the policy issued in response to such application had read in favor of the mortgagor. This policy was returned without authority by the third party, through whom it had been obtained, with the request that a new one be issued payable to the mortgagee. The policy issued in compliance with this request came into the mortgagee's hands by mistake, and there remained for the seven months until loss. In this action by the mortgagor upon the original policy, it was held that parol evidence showed that the return of the original policy by the third party was without authority, and a recovery upon the original policy was, therefore, allowed.

See also Bidwell v. Astor Mut. Ins. Co. 16 N. Y. 263, infra, IV., a, 3, (a).

A mistake by the company's agent in writing insurance upon a ship in the name of the agent of her owners, instead of in the name of the owners themselves, was corrected in Hill v. Millville Mut. M. & F. Ins. Co. 39 N. J. Eq. 66, although the error was not discovered by the insured till after loss. "The fact that they did not examine it [the policy] and discover the mistake cannot affect . . . [their] right to relief in this suit. Manifestly, justice requires that the company shall not be permitted to take advantage of its own mistake."

In Franklin F. Ins. Co. v. Hewitt, 3 B. Mon. 231, it appeared that the plaintiffs, who were commission merchants, applied for insurance upon the goods handled by them, both in their own right, and on commission. The premium receipt given at the time of the application evidenced such a policy. But the policy itself when issued covered only such goods as they owned in their own right, and not those held upon commission. This policy was received by the plaintiffs' clerk and put away without examination among the other papers of the firm. The mistake was discovered only after loss. The policy was, nevertheless, then reformed and enforced. "If," says the court, "as may be assumed, they never saw it, there could have been no such acceptance of it by them as would prove that they had waived the original contract or taken this policy as a consummation of it. And, although their neglect to inquire whether it had been delivered, or to examine it, if they knew of its delivery, shows a high and culpable degree of carelessness, we think it would be visiting upon them too heavy a penalty for this neglect to say that by that alone they had forfeited the indemnity for which they had paid the stipulated price, and especially as they still held the certificate which bore evidence of the contract, and as they had no reason to anticipate a variance from it in any policy which had been, or might be, furnished, and as it is, moreover, by no means certain, nor even very probable, that, had they inspected the policy, they would have at once detected the variance or become aware of its importance until they had demanded payment upon it."

It was mistakenly represented by the company's agent in Snell v. Atlantic F. & M. Ins. Co. 98 U. S. 85, 25 L. ed. 52, that a policy written in the name of a single partner was sufficient to cover the firm's interest in the property. And on such representations the application was made for a policy which covered one partner's, instead of the firm's, interest. The policy as so written was retained by the company's agent until loss, when it was surrendered to the insured and immediately repudiated, on the ground that it did not insure the interest which it had been intended to cover. The court granted a reformation of the policy by inserting the firm name in place of the single partner's name, excusing the insured's ignorance of its terms by the fact that it had not actually come into the assured's hands until the loss. Under such circumstances, it says there was no such acceptance of the written policy as would justify the inference that he had waived any rights existing under the original agreement, or had conceded that instrument to be a correct statement of the contract of insurance. "Of course parol proof, in all such cases, is to be received will be deemed to have accepted it and waived obvious departures from the agreement if there are such. Counsel for respondent vigorously attack that doctrine, but it is too firmly entrenched in our jurisprudence, and in the law generally, to be open to question.

The first case in which the principle above stated is distinctly declared in the decisions of this court is Locke v. Williamson, 40 Wis. 377. The court there said: "We have therefore concluded to hold this rule in respect to an executory contract: That when the defects in the goods are patent and obvious to the senses, when the purchaser has a full opportunity for examination, and knows of such defects, he must, either when he receives the goods or within what, under the circumstances, is a reasonable time thereafter, notify the seller that the goods are not accepted as fulfilling the warranty: otherwise the defects will be deemed waived." In subsequent cases that rule was considerably expanded in accordance with the current of authority, to the effect that reasonable opportunity for obtaining knowledge is equivalent to knowledge, as the following citations will show. In Mamlock v. Fairbanks, 46 Wis. 415, 32 Am. Rep. 716. 1 N. W. 167, it was said that present means of knowledge must be considered; that the doctrine that one must observe what he has reasonable opportunity for knowing in matters of contract is within the rule of caveat emptor; that the law for the protection of persons against fraud will not be extended with great caution, and where the mistake is denied, should never be made the foundation of a decree, variant from the written contract, except it be of the clearest and most satisfactory character. Nor should relief be granted where the party seeking it has unreasonably delayed application for redress, or where the circumstances raise the presumption that he acquiesced in the written agreement after becoming aware of the mistake."

See also Phoenix F. Ins. Co. v. Hoffheimer, 46 Miss. 645, supra, III., c.

Retention is taken as "potent evidence" that no mistake was committed in writing a policy in favor of the insured "as trustees," instead of in their individual interest, in Bishop v. Clay F. & M. Ins. Co. 49 Conn. 167. Taken in connection with other circumstances, the majority of the court found that there was no mistake, and accordingly refused relief. The case is of little value, though frequently cited, upon the question of the effect of retention as a bar to relief in cases where a mistake is made out,—especially when taken in connection with the opinion of the dissenting judges granting such relief upon their finding that a mistake had been made out.

Similarly, in Graves v. Boston Marine Ins. Co. 2 Cranch, 419, 2 L. ed. 324, the evidence did not clearly establish a mistake on the part of the company in writing the policy so as to cover only the individual interest of the partner applying for the insurance, and not the entire interest of the firm in the property. And the fact of the retention of the policy without objection is taken as evidence that no mistake had actually been made. "The policy was in the possession of the agent for the plaintiffs, and ought to have been understood by him before it was executed; he retained it in his possession for several months before a mistake was alleged. Under such circumstances, the information given to the insurance company ought to be very clear to justify a court of equity in conforming the policy to the intention of one of the parties, which was not communicated to the other till the loss had happened."

Where the policy was written in the name of another party, and both accepted and assigned by such party to the plaintiff, whose interest it was intended to cover, it was held that the mistake in writing the policy was thereby 67 L. R. A.

waived. Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Kelly, 52 C. C. A. 154, 114 Fed. 268.

Beneficiary.

Lapse of the statutory period within which a mistake may be corrected is held, in Webb v. Webb, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 1057, 64 S. W. 839, to bar a suit to reform the policy. The suit was by the children of the insured by his wife at the time the insurance was taken out against his children by a second wife, the former claiming that the insured intended that they alone, and not "his children," as stated in the policy, were the intended beneficiaries.

So, failure to object within ten months to the writing of the policy in favor of the beneficiary, and on his death in favor of his son (the insured), instead of in favor of the beneficiary or his heirs, where such error was known to the beneficiary shortly after the delivery of the policy, is held, in Roddey v. Talbot, 115 N. C. 287, 20 S. E. 375, to bar any defense to his premium note executed at the time of the application. The failure to object, it is said, must be construed as an acceptance of the benefits of the policy. "To lend our sanction to the contention of the defendant would give him all the advantage of a beneficiary under the policy held by the assured for him, even though his purpose may have been, by apparent acquiescence, to place himself in a position to recover in case of the death of the assured, while he entertained the purpose during the interval to repudiate the contract in case his son should survive the maturity of the note. If defendant's conduct did not estop him, it was at least a waiver of the right to object when he failed to give notice of such objection within a reasonable time after acquiring knowledge of the precise terms of the policy delivered to the assured."

3. Facts affecting the hazard.

(a) Other insurance.

The existence of prior insurance was disclosed to the soliciting agent in Barrett v. Union Mut. F. Ins. Co. 7 Cush. 175, but through his error was not indorsed upon the policy as required by its terms. In an action upon the policy at law it was held that no recovery could be had, although the insured might have rights in equity. "It was said in the argument, that to those who, "having the means in their own hand, neglect to protect themselves;" that "the law requires men, in their dealings with each other, to exercise proper vigilance, and apply their attention to those particulars which may be supposed to be within reach of their observation and judgment, and not close their eyes to the means of information which are accessible to them." Vigilantibus, non dormientibus, jura subveniunt. In Warner v. Benjamin, 89 Wis. 290, 62 N. W. 179, it was held that, if a person is put upon inquiry in respect to the quality of a thing offered for sale to him, he is bound to know what is discoverable in regard thereto by the exercise of ordinary care; that he cannot "close his eyes to defects which are before him, or to the information which is at hand." In Farr v. Peterson, 91 Wis. 182, 64 N. W. 863, it was held that, if the defects in the subject-matter of the contract are patent, and should be discerned by the exercise of ordinary diligence, the purchaser is bound to discover them at his peril; that in dealings between individuals each is bound to apply his attention reasonably to the subject-matter thereof, and to discover those things which are within reach of ordinary observation and judgment, and which they are not prevented from discovering by artifice or fraud. Again, in J. Thompson Mfg. Co. v. Gunderson, 106 Wis. 449, 453, 49 L. R. A. 859, 82 N. W. 290, it was held that, if an article is delivered in fulfillment of an executory contract, and the receiver thereof has full opportunity for there was a mistake or fault on the part of the defendants; that the policy was prepared by the defendants; and that they should have expressed in it the prior policy, and omitted to do so by design or by wilful negligence; and that the assured did not read it, but supposed that the prior policy was expressed. The assured certainly had abundant opportunity to read the policy, and need not have accepted it, if it was not satisfactory to him, according to the agreement of the parties. If the assured accepted the policy without looking at it, or knowing what it was, he would seem himself to be liable to the charge of culpable negligence made against the defendants."

To the same effect, McHugh v. Imperial F. Ins. Co. 48 How. Pr. 230, supra, III., c.

See also Kiels v. Niagara F. Ins. Co. 117 Mich. 469, 76 N. W. 155, and Madison Ins. Co. v. Fellowes, 1 Disney (Ohio) 217, infra, IX., where actions at law upon the policy were held not maintainable for breach of this condition.

On the other hand, the weight of authority is to the contrary.

A defense based upon the existence of concurrent insurance not indorsed upon the policy was overruled in Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. Norwood, 16 C. C. A. 136, 32 U. S. App. 490, 69 Fed. 71, where the failure to note the same was chargeable to the company's agent to whom it had been disclosed at the time of the application. "It is next said that it was the duty of the insured to examine the policies at the time the agent delivered them, and see that he had made the required indorsement in relation to other insurance, and that not having done so, they are conclusively bound by the condition. The law imposed no absolute duty on the insured to see what indorsement the agent had put on the policy in relation to other insurance. The insured had done their duty in the premises. They had imparted to the agent the requisite information to enable him to make the proper indorsement. It was his duty to make it in conformity to the information given him, and the insured had a right to rely upon his performing that duty, and his failure to do so, whether the result of a mistake or of a deliberate fraud, cannot operate to the prejudice of the insured. The contract of insurance is pre-eminently one that should be characterized by the utmost good faith on both sides. There is no rule of law requiring the business world to deal with insurance agents upon the assumption that they are cheats and frauds. The presumption is that they are reasonably intelligent and honest men, who know and perform their duty both to the insurer and to the insured; and the company cannot escape payment of the loss merely because the insured acted upon this presumption."

Where an existing mortgage and the insured's intention to take out additional insurance upon the property were both disclosed to the soliciting agent at the time of the application, the same defense was again overruled in McElroy v. British America Assur. Co. 36 C. C. A. 615, 94 Fed. 990. The policy was issued on an application written wholly by the agent and unsigned by the insured, which made no mention of either. A defense based on the existence of an undisclosed mortgage and additional insurance, not assented to, was overruled in an action on the policy, the court saying: "It may be said that the insured should have ascertained the correctness of the policy upon receiving it. Barrington, who acted for the insured in the matter, testified that he did open the policy, and note the company insuring, and the amount of insurance, but nothing more. It would certainly have been an act of prudence on his part to read the entire policy, but his neglect to do so cannot excuse the company for the default of the agent in not writing the contract in accordance with the representations made by the insured. The insured had a right to rely upon the agent's performing his duty of making the contract in conformity with the information given; and the agent's failure to do so, whether the result of a mistake, or of a deliberate fraud, cannot operate to the prejudice of the insured. The contract of insurance is pre-eminently one that should be characterized by the utmost good faith on both sides."

So in North British & M. Ins. Co. v. Steiger, 26 Ill. App. 228, an action upon a fire policy after loss, the court's opinion does not disclose the length of time during which the policy was retained by the insured before loss; but it appears that the amount of additional insurance was erroneously stated in the policy as a result of the agent's mistake or negligent omission at the time of the application. "According to . . . [assured's] statement, the agent of the company called on him and solicited a renewal of the policy issued by a former agent, and the question was asked how much insurance he already had. To this the examining the same and observing variations therein from the article contracted for, and fails within a reasonable time to give notice that the article is not accepted as fulfilling the contract, the variances, if any, will be deemed waived.

It is easy to apply the foregoing to the facts of this case. The applicants for insurance had ample opportunity to examine their policies when the same were received. It was their duty to do that. An examination of the policies, even of a casual character, would have revealed all the material facts. The applicants did nothing by way of examining the papers for months after receiving them, during all of which time the defendant carried the risks it had assumed. What appears to counsel for respondent to be want of harmony in the authorities, in respect to such a situation, in the main, grows out of failure to take in the full scope of the rule that every person must use reasonable diligence for his own protection, or in confusing it with other rules with which it does not conflict. Counsel errs most grievously in the idea advanced, that negligence is never a defense in a case grounded on fraud against the wrongdoer, as the cases above cited amply show; though it is true that there are expressions in legal opinions that may be referred to in justification of the error, and later we will refer to an instance of that kind in our own decisions, and probably there are others. However, on a question so well settled, contrary statements in opinions, used arguendo, ought not, it plaintiff replied he did not know, but referred the solicitor to two other agents in the city where all his other insurance was issued, for information. Whether this source of information was resorted to does not appear, nor is it material, for the way was open; but in a few days the plaintiff found on his desk the policy in suit, and, supposing it was properly drawn and binding on the company, he placed it in his safe without examination. In this he acted as would any ordinary business man under like circumstances, and to allow this defense would, in our judgment, work great injustice." A recovery upon the policy was allowed.

The jury having found that the insured was kept in ignorance of the company's failure to allow additional insurance through the misrepresentations of the insurer's agent at the delivery of the policy, a recovery was allowed thereon in McKenzie v. Planters' Ins. Co. 9 Helsk. 261, in spite of the existence of additional insurance in violation of a provision of the policy.

Reformation was granted in Barnes v. Hekla F. Ins. Co. 75 Iowa, 11, 9 Am. St. Rep. 450, 39 N. W. 122, although the policy had been in insured's hands up to the time of loss. The court said: "Because he failed to read the policy and discover the omission therein, and its terms and conditions, he is not guilty of such negligence as will bar him of relief."

Similar relief against the mistake of an agent in limiting the amount of additional insurance to $12,000 instead of $20,000, as had been agreed upon, was given in Fitchner v. Fidelity Mut. Fire Asso. 103 Iowa, 276, 72 N. W. 530, although the mistake appeared in the application signed by the assured, and although a copy of this application was attached to the policy, which the insured accepted and retained till loss. "The mere failure of the assured to read his application or the copy of it on the policy does not establish negligence. . . . Nor is the mere omission to read the policy [in which the mistake was incorporated] negligence. . . . Laub [the insured] had no reason to suppose the policy and application were drawn differently than understood. As to matters affecting the rights of the firm at the time the policy was delivered or in the future, it must be charged with notice, but the law did not require him to search through the policy to ascertain past mistakes or misstatements of the agent or company."

67 L. R. A.

The equitable rule as to reformation of instruments in case of mutual mistake is applied in a recent Nebraska case to make a policy express the intended contract notwithstanding the insured had retained it in his possession without objection, the court treating the mistake of the agent in failing to make the policy express the contract, and that of the insured in believing that he had done so, as concurrent or mutual. The court in so doing permitted the insured to avoid the effect of a judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States that there could be no recovery on the policy. The case is Northern Assur. Co. v. Grand View Bldg. Asso. 183 U. S. 308, 46 L. ed. 213, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 133, and the parol-evidence rule was applied by the United States Supreme Court to defeat a recovery at law on the policy upon which the insurer's agent had failed to note an intention to take out additional insurance, disclosed at the time of application. (See supra, I.) Recovery was allowed by the state court, however, in a subsequent suit to reform. (Neb.) 102 N. W. 246. "The whole impression that this evidence makes upon our minds is this: That Walsh desired to obtain from the defendant insurance concurrent with that then existing. That Borgelt, the agent, knew of the existing insurance, and knew of the desire of Walsh, and intended to comply with it, but, through inadvertence, omitted so to do. That he knew of the condition for a forfeiture contained in the policy, and knew that it could be avoided only by an indorsement on the instrument. That the failure to make the indorsement was due, not to fraud, but to the mistake or inadvertence of the agent, and that the acceptance of the contract by Walsh without the indorsement was due, also, to his mistake or inadvertence. The evidence falls short of showing that he knew that such an indorsement was necessary. He seems to have had a desire for concurrent insurance, and to have made it known to Borgelt; but what form of contract or policy was requisite for that purpose, he does not testify; nor is it otherwise shown that he knew. That matter he seems to have left to the skill and fidelity of the agent. That he was somewhat negligent in so doing, and in accepting and retaining the policy without reading it, is evident; but his negligence in that regard was not greater than that of the agent, with which it was concurrent, nor, we think, greater than that of ordinary capable would seem, to lead one astray. In 14 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 115-117, the rule stated is supported by citations from English decisions, and from most of the states of the Union. The author says: "This doctrine is not based upon any consideration for the party who has been guilty of the false representations, but upon the ground that public policy requires that persons shall be required to exercise at least ordinary prudence in their business dealings, instead of calling upon the courts to relieve them from the consequences of their inattention and negligence."

Counsel for respondent cite to our attention cases to the effect that the time for a person who receives property upon an executory contract, or who is defrauded in the making of a contract, to rescind the transaction, does not begin to run till he has knowledge of the facts. That is true, but, as we have seen, the rule does not require actual knowledge; constructive knowledge is just as efficient as actual knowledge. A person is presumed to know those things which reasonable diligence on his part would bring to his attention. If he accepts the article furnished without exercising that diligence, he does so at his peril. In that sense the maxim, Caveat emptor, applies, as said in Mamlock v. Fairbanks, 46 Wis. 415, 32 Am. Rep. 716, 1 N. W. 167. The observation in Beetle v. Anderson, 98 Wis. 5, 73 N. W. 560, that "the rule caveat emptor has no application to cases of fraud," as it might be understood, is wrong. The idea which the court and prudent men in the transaction of such affairs."

A mortgagee applied for insurance upon his interest in the mortgaged property, in Blidwell v. Astor Mut. Ins. Co. 16 N. Y. 283. The policy as issued not only purported to cover the interest of the owner of the ship, payable in case of loss to the mortgagee, but the valuation of the property and the amount of concurrent insurance which it had been agreed upon might be taken out, had both been reduced also. These alterations were made at the request of the owner of the property, without the authority or knowledge of the mortgagee. The policy, though it came into the hands of the mortgagee more than a year before the loss, was not read, and the variations not discovered, until after the loss. To defeat a defense based upon an excess of concurrent insurance over that allowed by the policy, the mortgagee sought to have the policy conformed to the preliminary agreement in this regard. A reformation was granted. "The fact on which the appellants rely," says the court, "that the policy actually made out was in the plaintiffs' hands for a considerable time, and until after the loss had occurred, was a circumstance to be weighed by the judge, as bearing upon the truth of the plaintiffs' allegation that the policy did not pursue the contract. It has undoubtedly been considered by the judge, and his judgment has been given, notwithstanding that circumstance, in favor of the plaintiffs. There is no rule of law which fixes the period within which a man may discover that a writing does not express the contract which he supposed it to contain, and which bars him of relief for delay in asserting his rights, short of the period fixed by the statute of limitations."

See also Palmer v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 54 Conn. 488, 9 Atl. 248, supra, III., c.

(b) Occupancy of premises.

Compare IV., b, 1, (c).

The vacancy of the premises covered by the policy in McHoney v. German Ins. Co. 52 Mo. App. 94, was disclosed by the insured to the soliciting agent at the time of application, but, through his mistake or fraud, was not noted therein. It was represented that the policy would contain a thirty-day vacancy clause. No such clause appeared in the policy, and on 67 L. R. A.

the back of it were copied the falsified answers of the application. Fourteen months' retention of this policy without objection was held to bar even reformation thereof. "Whatever fraud or deception," says the court, "may have been practised upon him by the soliciting agent in filling out his answers to the questions in the application, by keeping the policy in his possession without examination, he, in intentment of law, accepted it as written, and assented to its terms as constituting the contract, and the only contract, between him and the defendant."

Insured's acceptance of a fire policy covering a dwelling described as "occupied," is said, in Hamburg-Bremen F. Ins. Co. v. Lewis, 4 App. D. C. 66, to render the insured a participant in the fraud of a soliciting agent who was aware, through information conveyed by the insured before the issuance of the policy, that the property was unoccupied. "Even putting Gorman [soliciting agent] upon the footing of an agent of the company, the principle is settled that, if the agent be guilty of a fraud upon the insurers, and the assured knowingly aids in its perpetration, or, by neglecting to read the application or the policy, suffers it to be perpetrated, he is guilty of participating in the fraud, and must suffer the consequences."

See also Thomson v. Southern Mut. Ins. Co. 90 Ga. 78, 15 S. E. 652, supra, III., c.

On the contrary, a recovery on the policy is allowed in Thackery Min. & Smelting Co. v. American F. Ins. Co. 62 Mo. App. 293, an interesting case, in view of the earlier decisions from the Missouri courts. It appeared in that case that at the time of the application the soliciting agent knew that the property to be insured was vacant, and would probably continue to be so. The policy issued contained a clause avoiding it if the manufacturing plant, which was the property covered, ceased to operate for the space of more than ten days. In fact it was not operated during the four and a half months preceding the loss, which was the entire period during which the policy was in operation. In an action at law upon the policy the company defended under the vacancy clause, but a recovery was permitted nevertheless. "The defendant's agent well knew the nature and condition of the property, what it was then, and what its future condition as to operation would be. His knowledge was that of the company. With this knowledge the intended to convey is that, where a person is so circumstanced that he may, consistently with reasonable care, rely upon the representations of the person with whom he is contracting the rule caveat emptor does not apply. That is, where the fraud complained of is actually produced by the wrongful conduct of the defendant, he cannot invoke the doctrine of caveat emptor to protect himself from the consequences thereof. But a person acts at the peril of suffering the consequences in relying upon the representations of another with whom he is contracting if the exercise of reasonable care would uncover to him the truth. Cases are cited to the effect that a person cannot profit by his own wrong. That is true as a general proposition, but it is just as true, as we have seen, that a person cannot have the protection of the law where he fails to use reasonable care to protect himself. When it is said that a person cannot take advantage of his own wrong, it is meant that he cannot do so as against a person who is injured by that wrong. The mere fact that one person relies upon false representations made by another to his injury does not constitute a cause of action against such other. There must be a further circumstance. Such person must be induced to rely upon the fraudulent representations, and that circumstance does not exist where such person would not be so induced but for his own heedlessness.

The rule we have discussed has been applied elsewhere generally, and in many cases quite similar to the one before us, some of plaintiff was, in effect, assured that the company would make no objection to the nonoperation of the plant. The plaintiff was thereby lulled into a sense of security, and, on the faith that defendant would raise no objection to the condition of the property, paid the premium. It would work a fraud on the plaintiff if this defense was allowed." Both American Ins. Co. v. Nelberger, 74 Mo. 167, supra, III., b, 6, and McHoney v. German Ins. Co. were before the court, and it was urged by counsel that they governed the decision. The McHoney Case was distinguished by the court on the ground that it was in equity, and the Nelberger Case was entirely disregarded as not in point.

An application for policies upon property in the course of erection, premiums for such a risk being paid, was filed in Guggenheimer v. Greenwich F. Ins. Co. 9 N. Y. S. R. 316, by policies stating the buildings to be occupied as stores and dwellings. Loss occurring within a few months after the delivery of these policies, the insured was permitted to recover on them in spite of the misdescription in this regard. "If O'Sullivan rightly stated the facts, . . . then there was no waiver on his part of his right to insist upon the performance of the oral agreement alleged to have been made for the issuing of these policies. For, without knowledge or information of their contents, it could not be inferred that he designed to accept these policies in place of those mentioned by him in his testimony as the form in which the insurance was to be made by the company.

There was no such lapse of time between the issuing of the policies and the occurrence of the fire and the discovery of the form in which they had been made out as would prevent him from refusing to accept them. In dealings of this description no very rigid rule can be applied, for some heedlessness on the part of the insured is not an uncommon attribute, and it is ordinarily excusable by reason of the manner in which the business of insurance is done. The party receiving policies commonly takes it for granted that they are properly issued by the agents or officers of the company. Reliance is placed upon the expectation that the company itself will take care to make the insurance valid and effectual, and that expectation relieves the assured from the obligation of making that degree of scrutiny as would exist if so much confidence was not reposed in the agents and officers of the company itself. In this case it was undoubtedly assumed, when the policies were received, that they were effective and legal insurances of this property, and, if O'Sullivan is reliable in his statements, he had reason to believe them to be so, for he had enjoined upon the agent the description of policy expected to be obtained, and had, in his interview with the clerk in the presence of one of the officers of the company, impressed that also upon these individuals. And he had paid the premium exacted for the description of insurance desired to be obtained on these buildings. They were not so made, and when that fact was discovered O'Sullivan . . . was not deprived of the right to reject the policies, and to rest upon the agreement stated by him to have been made . . . at the office of the company."

Reformation was granted in Continental Ins. Co. v. Ruckman, 127 Ill. 364, 11 Am. St. Rep. 121, 20 N. E. 77, where the insured, not only at the time of the application, but also at the delivery of the policy, inquired of the agent in regard to the existence of a vacancy clause in the policy, and received an affirmative assurance in regard thereto from the agent. The retention of the policy for two years and six months thereafter was not deemed sufficient to charge the insured with notice of the actual terms of the policy and the agent's lack of authority to waive the same, although a clause limiting waiver of conditions to those made in writing on the policy under the authority of its officers appeared on its face.

Where the policy remained in the hands of the insurer's agent, it was held (St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Wells, 89 Ill. 32) that constructive notice of its terms was not imputable to the insured. Consequently, having a right to presume that it conformed, as written, to the verbal agreement with the agent in regard to the vacancy of the premises, a breach of its terms in this regard was held to be no defense to the company. "Appellee," says the court, "no doubt relied upon the contract he had made with the agent, and nothing is shown to put him on inquiry. He had a right to suppose that the policy would conform to the contract as he made it with the agent. The company, failing to notify appellee of the change, that he might repudiate or ratify it, must be bound the more important of which are cited in the brief of counsel for appellant. In New York L. Ins. Co. v. McMaster, 30 C. C. A. 532, 57 U. S. App. 638, 87 Fed. 63, it was held, that where a person receives an insurance policy pursuant to an application it is his duty to examine it and see those things in respect thereto which are open to ordinary observation by a person of ordinary intelligence, and that if he neglects to do so, taking it for granted that he has received what he applied for or intended to apply for, he is guilty of inexcusable negligence, and in law his conduct amounts to an acceptance of the policy received regardless of whether it corresponds to the policy applied for or intended to have been applied for or not; that representations made by an insurance agent at the time the application for a policy of insurance is made constitute no excuse for failure of the applicant to look at his policy when it is delivered to him, to see if it corresponds to the one expected, and to discover the facts in that regard if that can be done by a reasonable examination of the paper; that if one fails to read his contract under such circumstances, having full opportunity for doing so and ability to read, he is guilty of gross negligence, and cannot be heard successfully to say that he kept it in ignorance of its character; that the rule in that regard applies to all contracts, insurance contracts being no exception. In Fennell v. Zimmerman, 96 Va. 197, 31 S. E. 22, it was held that it is the duty of a person, on receipt of an insur-by the contract as it was made with the agent."

(c) State of title.

Eight months' retention of a policy alleged to misdescribe, through the agent's mistake, the interest of the insured as that of absolute owners, instead of that as commission merchants, was held, in Westchester F. Ins. Co. v. Wagner (Tex. Civ. App.) 38 S. W. 214, to bar a reformation. "The evidence developed the fact that there were no statements on the part of the agent to mislead appellees or throw them off their guard; and yet for at least eight months they held the policy of insurance in their hands, and did not discover the error in it until after the property was consumed by fire, and their attention was called to it by the adjuster of the insurance company. Equity will not relieve against a mistake which resulted from carelessness and neglect. It does not put a premium upon the carelessness or inattention of a person to his own business."

No recovery was allowed, likewise, in Swan v. Watertown F. Ins. Co. 96 Pa. 37. The insured in this case signed the application before it had been completed by the agent, after some discussion with him in regard to the property which should be covered by the policy. No inquiry had been made in regard to the existence of encumbrances. The application was completed by the agent without consulting the insured, included certain property not owned absolutely by the insured, and stated that no encumbrances upon the property existed. A policy issued in conformity with the application was retained by the insured without reading, and, therefore, without objection for two months, until loss. The errors of the agent appeared in the policy, although a copy of the application was not attached. Under these circumstances, no recovery was allowed on the policy. "When he accepted the policy he accepted its terms. He was not the sole owner of part of the property insured, and part was encumbered by judgment, neither of which facts was expressed in the written portion of the policy. This was plain, and he could readily see that his policy was void. To say that he did not read the policy, and, therefore, is not bound by its terms, sounds as ill in him as in the company to say it did not know Smullen was its agent. Warren held the policy more than 67 L. R. A.

two months before the fire. Not a circumstance is proved tending to induce him not to read it; but, instead, he says the application was not finished when he signed it; that he was not satisfied about the sewing machine being put in, and that he instructed Smullen to fill it up. Then he knew facts to incite him to read the policy. After the lapse of a reasonable time without objection, he is presumed to have accepted it. There is no evidence which ought to overcome that presumption."

On the other hand, the mere acceptance of a policy by an illiterate insured, who is ignorant that it contains the usual provision for avoidance in case his title to the property covered by the policy, if less than absolute, is not expressed in the policy, is held, in Mlotke v. Milwaukee Mechanics' Ins. Co. 113 Mich. 166, 71 N. W. 463, not to defeat a recovery thereon after loss, where the true state of his title was disclosed to the agent, and it is through the latter's negligence or mistake that it was not inserted in the policy.

The Missouri supreme court, in Franklin v. Atlantic F. Ins. Co. 42 Mo. 456, unanimously reversed the judgment of the trial court in excluding evidence offered by the insured to show that, before the delivery of the policy, or payment of the premium, he had informed the general agent of the company that he was only a part owner of the property covered, and that his interest was encumbered, and that the agent had informed him that it was "all right, it would make no difference," although the policy in suit, expressly demanding that the title of the insured, if less than absolute, should be indorsed thereon, had been retained by the insured until after loss. "The policy is accepted and the premium is paid on the faith of this assurance. The party insured goes away relying upon its validity to protect him against loss during the time specified. He acts upon a state of things represented to him by the agent to be sufficient, and it would work a fraud upon him if the company should now be allowed to avail itself of this defense."

The insured correctly stated the deed under which his title had been acquired, in Medley v. German Alliance Ins. Co. (W. Va.) 47 S. E. 101, but the agent erroneously construed the estate conveyed thereby to be a fee simple, and it was so stated in the application and in the policy issued thereon. In fact it was but a mere life estate, and the company defended an action ance policy pursuant to his application, to examine it; that he commences receiving benefits immediately upon the policy coming to his hand, and that it is his duty to examine the paper upon its receipt, and to return it within a reasonable time if it is not satisfactory, and that a failure to do so is in law an acceptance of the policy. In McMaster v. New York L. Ins. Co. 40 C. C. A. 119, 99 Fed. 856, cited by counsel for respondent, the doctrine in the previous case, regarding the same policy (30 C. C. A. 532, 57 U. S. App. 638, 87 Fed. 63), was discussed at length, and it was said to apply both at law and in equity. There are many cases of like character, which might be referred to, but the principle upon which they rest is so universally recognized that we shall omit further reference to cases, except to cite American Ins. Co. v. Neiberger, 74 Mo. 167, as an indication of the current of authority as regards the length of time held by courts to constitute ratification of a policy not issued according to the representations of the agent, where no objection is made in that regard within a reasonable time after the assured has had a fair opportunity to read and understand it. In that case no objection was made for about three months, and it was held that the delay constituted an acceptance of the policy.

In this case the representations made to the applicants for insurance in no way prevented them from examining the policies when they were received. It was their duty to make such examination. Had they person on the policy on the ground of this misstatement of title. The court, however, allowed a recovery. Speaking of reformation of policies, the court says: "If the terms of a policy are so unalterably and absolutely binding upon the assured, after its acceptance, upon the theory of notice, how is it possible that such jurisdiction exists and may be exercised in one forum or another in all the states? . . . The only ground upon which this right of reformation can be denied is laches. How is the person into whose hands the policy of insurance is placed to know whether it has been drawn according to the verbal understanding of the parties until after he has read it? Is he to reject it upon suspicion? Has he not the right to assume for the time being that it has been properly drawn? As a matter of fact, is it not common knowledge that agents are relied upon to properly prepare the policies, and that they are scarcely ever critically examined before acceptance? There can be no notice until after the reading, and, after the acceptance of the policy, there can be nothing more than a sort of implied notice; and a court of equity will not hold the party guilty of laches for mere negligence to actually read the policy, any more than it will in the case of a deed. Compare the case of a misdescription of a tract of land with the insertion of the complex and artificial terms of insurance policy, such as 'unconditional and sole ownership,' 'fee-simple title,' and say whether a layman, especially an illiterate person, can be rightfully or legally subjected to a stricter rule in respect to them than he is in respect to a description of a thing with which he is perfectly familiar, or which he is obviously capable of fully comprehending." There is a strong dissent, however, in this case by Brannon, J., who refuses to concur in an "opinion excusing one from reading a policy before he accepts, and excusing him from its conditions because he did not read or understand it."

The soliciting agent in Ben Franklin Ins. Co. v. Gillett, 54 Md. 212, was informed by the insured at the time of the application that the building insured stood upon leased ground. This fact was omitted by mistake when the agent, on returning to his office, made out the policy, and the error was not discovered by the insured until some nine months later, when the property was destroyed by fire, and he had occasion to examine his policy. He had put it away with other policies on receipt, "having entire confidence in the good faith of the agent." Under these circumstances, the policy was reformed and enforced after the loss.

A policy erroneously written in favor of insured's husband, her agent, who had no interest in the property covered, as was known to the agent of the insurer, was reformed in German F. Ins. Co. v. Gueck, 130 Ill. 345, 6 L. R. A. 835, 23 N. E. 112, in spite of fourteen years' retention of the policy, where it was shown that the insured was an illiterate foreigner, and that the policies were brought home, put away in a drawer, and never read, under the supposition that they were all right.

Failure of the insured to read the policy and discover that it has been erroneously issued through the agent's mistake in the name of a deceased owner is held, in Taylor v. Glens Falls Ins. Co. 44 Fla. 273, 32 So. 887, not to be such laches as will preclude the insured from a reformation and enforcement thereof after loss, although the policy so erroneously written has been in his possession over two years.

See also Burson v. Fire Asso. 136 Pa. 287, 20 Am. St. Rep. 919, 20 Atl. 401, supra, III., c.

(d) Encumbrances.

Compare IV., b, 1, (d).

On application for a policy covering a warehouse and grain, the insured disclosed the probability of future chattel mortgages upon the grain, but received the assurance from the agent "that the company cared nothing for encumbrances upon the chattels." Smith v. Continental Ins. Co. 6 Dak. 433, 43 N. W. 810. In reliance upon this statement, subsequent mortgages upon the grain were placed without obtaining the assent of the company, thereby violating the usual stipulation in the policy against encumbrances. The policy having been retained by the insured without objection, it was said that "he cannot now shield himself from the effect of violating its provisions under the plea that he never read it." A suggestion appears, p. 440, 6 Dak., p. 811, 43 N. W., however, that a different result might have been reached had the representation been made by a general agent; under which circumstances a waiver of the condition of the policy might have been worked out.

A failure of the insurer's general agent to note existing and anticipated mortgages in the formed that duty they would have easily discovered all that they complain of. The opening lines of the letter sent appellant with his policy told the whole story. A casual glance at it would have informed him that the policy was not such as he expected to receive. Certainly he cannot, under any rule, be excused for omitting to read the first three lines of a letter addressed to him on so important a business matter, which contained other information of interest to him than that with reference to the character of his policy, viz., information in regard to the amount of his annual payment. All the parties were insured for months before appellant had any intimation that the policies were not satisfactory. It cannot be doubted that, if death had come to any of them in that period, his policy would have been enforced. Under those circumstances the applicants for insurance must be presumed to have accepted their policies long before their attempted rescission thereof and demand for the payment of the money paid thereon. The trial court and the learned counsel for respondent fell into a grievous error in supposing that the omission by the policy holders to look at their policies can be justified by what occurred at the time the applications for insurance were made, and that, as against a party charged with fraud in the making of an executory contract, the injured party was not bound to object in order to preserve his rights, till he has actual knowledge; that negligence on his part in failing to make the discovery is application written by him was held no bar to a recovery by the insured on the policy, in Copeland v. Dwelling-House Ins. Co. 77 Mich. 554, 18 Am. St. Rep. 414, 43 N. W. 991, although it had been accepted and retained some time prior to the loss. The agent's omission of the mortgage from the application is declared "as much a fraud . . . as though he had written a clause in the application without the knowledge of the plaintiffs, making the policy void if such additional encumbrance was placed upon the property. The plaintiffs had a right to rely upon the agreement of the agent to so write the application, and when they took the policy they had a right to assume that the company waived any conditions in the policy inconsistent with their right to further encumber. Parol evidence was certainly competent to show such an agreement."

So, a recovery was allowed in Gristock v. Royal Ins. Co. 87 Mich. 428, 49 N. W. 634, upon a policy which, through the agent's mistake, failed to note a mortgage upon the insured property, disclosed by the insured at the time of his oral application. "Plaintiff had a right to rely upon the assumption that his policy would be in accordance with the terms of his oral application. If the defendant desired to make it anything different, it should, in order to make it binding upon plaintiff, under the authorities in this state, have called his attention to those clauses which differed from the oral application."

In McGuire v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 7 App. Div. 575, 40 N. Y. Supp. 300, where the insured was an illiterate farmer to whom the local agent of the company had represented that its policy was good, although the property to be covered was chattel mortgaged; and it appeared that the agent actually had authority to waive the express condition of the policy against such mortgages by his personal indorsement thereon,—the negligent mistake of such agent in failing to make the required indorsement after promising the insured so to do was held no bar to a recovery on the policy. The loss occurred six days after the issue of the policy which was retained at the request of the insured, by the agent. "No fault or laches is imputable to the insured. . . . Having made a full and frank disclosure of the facts to the company's agent, who was empowered to write the policy, there was nothing to induce or warn the insured to have the policy read, unless it was the anticipation of fraud or mistake, and this could impose no duty in protection of the rights of plaintiff."

In Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Warttemberg, 24 C. C. A. 547, 48 U. S. App. 344, 79 Fed. 245, it appeared that the agent of the company, at the time he solicited the insurance, was informed of the existence of certain mortgages upon the property to be covered by the policy, and that the insured expected to pay them off within a short time. Instead of stating the existence of these mortgages in the application, the agent assured the applicant that, in view of the fact that they would soon be removed, it was unimportant to mention them, and therefore they were entirely omitted from the application. The policy issued in pursuance thereof contained the usual statement that it was based upon the application the answers of which were declared warranties. After loss the company defended on the existence of the undisclosed mortgages. A recovery was nevertheless allowed, the court saying: "If would be a harsh doctrine, indeed, to hold that insurance companies shall have the opportunity of perpetrating such wrong and injustice as would result from the application of the ruling in the Fletcher Case, 117 U. S. 519, 29 L. ed. 934, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 837, infra, IV., b. 1, (a), to the facts presented in the present case. It is well known that insurance is usually effected, especially upon farm property, by agents who travel through the country supplied with the printed blanks of the insurance companies for the purpose of taking applications and forwarding them to their home offices. The applicant for insurance naturally relies upon the statements of him whose business it is to procure insurance, and the agent should not have it in his power, while obtaining premiums from the insured for the enrichment of his company, to absolve the latter from liability on its policies, provided he can, either honestly or otherwise, induce the applicant to adopt in his application such construction as the agent may persuade him to believe is proper to be placed upon the facts which he has honestly detailed."

To the same effect, also, are Boetcher v. Hawkeye Ins. Co. 47 Iowa, 253, infra, III., b. 11; Klister v. Lebanon Mut. Ins. Co. 128 Pa. 553, 5 L. R. A. 646, 13 Am. St. Rep. 698, 18 Atl. 447, infra, IV., b. 1, (d); McElroy v. British America Assur. Co. 36 C. C. A. 615, 94 Fed. 990, infra, IV., a. 3, (a).

not to be considered. The law is otherwise as we have seen. It seems perfectly clear that plaintiff entirely failed to establish any cause of action against the defendant, and that the complaint should have been dismissed.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is reversed and the cause remanded with directions to render judgment in favor of defendant for costs.

A rehearing having been had, Marshall, J., on November 11, 1902, handed down the following additional opinion:

A rehearing having been had in this case, we have examined the questions involved with this result: We are satisfied the law was correctly laid down in the former decision, though it is considered that the same was not in all respects correctly applied to the facts. If we should attempt to write an opinion discussing at length all the propositions advanced in defense of the judgment appealed from, reviewing each of the multitude of authorities cited in support thereof, eliminating in detail those believed not to be in point as to any proposition legitimately in the case, harmonizing those which are correctly decided, and pointing out the errors of expression therein, and such errors and decisions in the others, we are fearful the result would be an opinion of such great length that in so attempting to light a clear way through the mass of things to which our attention has been called, the law, though correctly stated, would not be so clearly de-

See, however, Swan v. Watertown F. Ins. Co. 96 Pa. 37, infra, IV., a, 3, (c), where circumstances tending to put the insured upon inquiry were found, and Johnson v. Dakota F. & M. Ins. Co. 1 N. D. 187, 45 N. W. 799, infra; IV., b, 1, (d), where the principles of the Fletcher Case are applied.

b. Appearing only in the application.

1. Copy attached to policy.

(a) Physical condition of insured.

It is stated in the frequently cited case, New York L. Ins. Co. v. Fletcher, 117 U. S. 519, 29 L. ed. 934, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 837, that a party who retains a policy to which is attached a copy of the application, containing false answers inserted by a soliciting agent after the disclosure of the truth by the insured, becomes a participant in the agent's fraud, if he makes no objection within a reasonable time after the receipt of the policy. In this case it appeared that the insured had honestly stated his physical condition, and disclosed the fact that he had diabetes. This was misstated, entirely omitted, by the agent in writing the application, which the insured signed without reading. Notice in red type appeared at the top of the copy attached to the policy, that such copy was attached for the purpose of giving the insured notice of the answers in the application as forwarded to the company, in order that any errors therein might be corrected. The insured did not discover the agent's fraud because he neglected to read the policy and the application. Aside from the fact that the agent's authority was limited by a stipulation in the application, says the court, "there is another view of this case equally fatal to a recovery. Assuming that the answers of the assured were falsified, as alleged, the fact would be at once disclosed by the copy of the application, annexed to the policy, to which his attention was called. He would have discovered by inspection that a fraud had been perpetrated, not only upon himself, but upon the company, and it would have been his duty to make the fact known to the company. He could not hold the policy without approving the action of the agents, and thus becoming a participant in the fraud committed. The retention of the policy was an approval of the application and 67 L. R. A.

of its statements. The consequences of that approval cannot, after his death, be avoided."

A dictum appears in John Hancock Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Houtt, 113 Fed. 572, in accord with the Fletcher Case, to the effect that false answers inserted by a medical examiner in the application must be deemed adopted by the insured, where a copy of the application is indorsed on the back of the policy, which is accepted and retained by the insured without objection. "He could not, in good faith to the company, hold the policy." Cancellation of the policy was granted at the suit of the company.

Whether the insured had correctly stated his physical condition and the names of the physicians who had previously attended him, does not appear in National Union v. Arnhorst, 74 Ill. App. 482, but the application signed by him and attached to his policy, showing the answers inserted in regard to these questions, clearly misstated the facts. Retention of the policy for a year and a half in this condition was deemed by the court an affirmation of the truth of the answers as reported in the application, and therefore supported a cancellation of the policy by the company upon proof of their falsity. "Arnhorst accepted the certificate knowing the misrepresentations made to the medical examiner, and retained it for more than a year and a half among his other valuable papers, where he frequently saw it, and therefore must be charged with knowledge of what the answers were. By these acts he adopted and approved the answers, as written by the medical examiner, and appellee cannot now claim any benefit from his contract based on his untruthful statements."

There was a conflict of evidence in Reynolds v. Atlas Acci. Ins. Co. 69 Minn. 93, 71 N. W. 831, upon the question whether, at the time of the application, the insured had actually stated to the agent, who wrote the answers therein, whether or not he was subject to epileptic fits. But a copy of the application was attached to the policy, and the latter retained for three years without objection. Under such circumstances, the insured, it is said, "must be deemed to have approved of it and accepted it as containing his answer. The consequences of that approval and acceptance cannot now be avoided after his death." No recovery upon the policy was allowed in favor of the beneficiary. Compare, however, Otte v. Hartford L. Ins.

clared as to enable trial courts and the profession to easily understand the position of this court by which they are to be guided in future cases involving the same questions. The ground required to be explored to that end, if we were to take the course indicated, would be so extensive that the essential principle finally elucidated would after all be in a measure obscured to one who, from necessity or otherwise, must act from a quick view of things, and the result would be mistakes in the application of the law. Desiring, however, to leave nothing untouched that might, in any event, give rise to a thought on the part of counsel who with much labor presented the case for consideration, that material matters have been overlooked, we will endeavor to cover all the important contentions urged upon our notice, supplementing briefly, as seems practicable, what was formerly said on some points, and discussing others so far as seems necessary to show the infirmity of counsel's reasons for a different decision as to the law, and wherein and why we have concluded to apply the same to the facts with a somewhat different result than at first decided upon.

A brief restatement of the facts seems appropriate to the end that the change decided upon from the previous result, may be better understood. We treat the facts as found by the court as verities, and add such undisputed matters on the evidence, not mentioned specifically in the findings, as are of importance.

Appellant's agent induced respondent to Co. 88 Minn. 423, 97 Am. St. Rep. 532, 93 N. W. 608, following.

A strong dissent from the Fletcher Case and the decisions following it is to be found in well-considered opinions both prior and subsequent to its date.

A recent case from Minnesota, Otte v. Hartford L. Ins. Co. 88 Minn. 423, 97 Am. St. Rep. 532, 93 N. W. 608, expressly repudiates the doctrine. It appears in this case that a canvassing agent appointed by a resident general agent of the insurer misstated in the application insured's answers in regard to his health and previous sickness and medical attendance. A copy of this application was attached to the policy subsequently issued pursuant thereto. And the usual defense was interposed by the insurer, based upon the falsity of the answers, in an action upon the policy by the beneficiary. A recovery was allowed, however, the court saying: "Since the insured is to be treated as having dealt directly with the company when he signed the application, the insurer took it upon itself to make out the application and to answer the questions truthfully; hence, it cannot transfer the results of its own misconduct to the innocent victim of its deception, who parted with his money in the belief, induced by defendant, that he was obtaining indemnity; nor can we hold that the insured was bound to suspect a dishonest purpose on the part of the insurer contrary to the dictates of good faith and all rules of legal presumption, and hence required to institute an inspection of the policy upon its receipt to ascertain if he had been deceived."

The fraud of a medical examiner in inserting false answers as to insured's physical condition and family history, in his application, was not deemed waived by three years' retention of the policy to which a copy of the application containing the false answers was attached. Bennett v. Massachusetts Mut. L. Ins. Co. 107 Tenn. 371, 64 S. W. 758. It does not appear that the insured was put off his guard by any representation at the time of the policy's delivery. The company claimed that there was no fraud or mistake on its part, or, if there had been, that the insured was estopped to assert the same. But the court says that, "reposing confidence in the examiner, and assuming that he wrote the answers correctly, the complainant neither read the medical examination when it was made nor until two years or more thereafter, when he became aware of the fraud, and thereupon sought to avoid it. While it was an act of negligence in complainant not to have examined the writing, it was negligence superinduced by the confidence which he reposed in the medical examiner, and this enabled the company to practise the fraud upon the assured. We think that, whatever might be the rights of third persons growing out of this matter, it does not lie in the mouth of the company, upon the one hand, to confess its fraud, and, on the other, to say that you are estopped to rely upon that fraud because you have not more promptly discovered it. As a matter of common observation, even good business men do not examine the various conditions and statements in their policies as they should; but we think that, when the fraud is virtually confessed, and from the very nature of the case must have been premeditated and designed, it would be going too far to hold that, because the assured was lulled and misled by his confidence in the agent of the insurance company, that the company can take advantage of this to make its own fraud effective."

(b) Prior insurance.

A false answer in regard to prior insurance, written by the agent in the application, was held, in Hook v. Michigan Mut. L. Ins. Co. 80 N. Y. Supp. 56, to bar a recovery on the policy where it was retained by the beneficiary, with a copy of the application attached, for six or seven months, without objection. "Ordinarily . . . it is incumbent on a party to a contract to acquaint himself with its contents, and he cannot escape the consequences thereof by failing to read the same, in the absence of fraud or other circumstances, such as do not exist in this case. It is only by the application of the principle of estoppel as applied to actions on insurance policies, and as distinguishing such contracts from other contracts, that the plaintiff seeks to avoid the effect of the untruthful answer which the parties have incorporated into the contract between them. But to constitute an act of estoppel it must be such as to mislead another acting in good faith and with reasonable care and diligence, . . . and the party setting up the estoppel must be free from laches. . . . Tested by these principles, I do not think that the defendant is estopped from setting up the breach of war-sign an application for a $10,000 policy of life insurance by representing to him that it called for one that would be fully paid for in ten annual payments of a specified amount. He signed and parted with such application, relying on the truth of such representations. During the negotiations between respondent and appellant's agent, resulting as stated, the latter urged the former to take out what he called a 5-per-cent debenture policy, while respondent insisted from first to last that he wanted and would purchase only a contract that would be fully performed on his part by ten annual payments. In due time a policy was sent to respondent by mail, ostensibly responsive to his application, accompanied by a letter from appellant's agent to the effect that it was a 5-per-cent debenture policy issued pursuant to the application. Respondent put the policy away among his papers without making any examination thereof, relying upon its being what the agent assured him the application called for. He gave cash and notes therefor to the amount of $1,062 for the first premium, which notes he subsequently paid. About four and one-half months after receiving the policy he examined it for the first time, and then easily and at once discovered that it was an annual-payment life policy, requiring him to pay $1,062 each year during his life. He immediately made complaint to appellant's managing agent in respect to the matter, expressing dissatisfaction, and making known that he wanted a different policy.—

ranty in question. This case is easily distinguishable from those relied on by the plaintiff. . . . In none of those cases does it appear that copies of the application and medical examination were delivered with the policy as in this case. According to the testimony of the plaintiff, the answer under consideration was written down by the examiner without comment or explanation. Nothing was said to mislead the insured or the plaintiff, or to throw them off their guard. Copies of all questions and answers were attached to the policy when it was delivered by the company's agent. It was received by the plaintiff, who was the beneficiary named therein, and the initial premium was paid by him. He procured the application to be made, and sent the defendant's agent to the insured for that purpose. The policy and copies of the application and of all questions and answers have, ever since the delivery thereof, remained in possession of the plaintiff. Whether in his possession or that of the insured is immaterial as far as this question is concerned. He, as well as the insured, knew the facts concerning the prior applications for insurance, because he testifies that he was present and heard his brother state those facts to the medical examiner at the time when it is claimed that the latter recorded the false answer. Before accepting and paying for the policy, it was incumbent upon the insured or the plaintiff to examine the same. It was for this purpose that copies of the application and questions and answers were attached to the policy and delivered therewith. Good faith toward the defendant, as well as reasonable care on the part of the plaintiff, requires an examination of the contract, and a failure to make such examination constituted laches on the part of the plaintiff, which precludes him from asserting an estoppel against the defendant."

A contrary conclusion was reached in Michigan Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Leon, 138 Ind. 636, 37 N. E. 584. It appeared in this case that the agent falsified insured's answers in an application for life insurance in regard to a prior application to and refusal by another company. This application was signed by the insured without reading. Attached to the policy issued in pursuance thereof was a copy of the application containing the false answers. This was retained for a year and a half by the insured without actual discovery of the fraud. Dur- 67 L. R. A.

ing the progress of a suit by the company to cancel the policy on this ground the insured died, and the beneficiary under the policy brought counteraction thereon. The court, in refusing the cancellation and enforcing the policy, states that this retention by the insured did not have the effect of making him a party to the fraud, or of giving him notice thereof, where it appeared that the agent who drew up the application was a general agent having no superior in the state, "whatever may be the rule as to applications prepared by special agents where the assured has knowledge of the limitations upon his authority. . . . We think," says the court, "the insured might well assume that the policy was properly prepared and was based upon such facts, and that he was under no obligation to make a diligent reading of the policy with a view of ascertaining whether the appellant's own agent had perpetrated a fraud upon it. To permit the appellant now, since a loss has occurred, to avoid its policy on the ground that it was deceived by its own agent without the fault of the assured is to permit it to violate one of the best known principles of the law, namely, [to permit it] to take advantage of its own wrong. It is equivalent to permitting it to say, It is true I issued to the assured the policy upon which the suit is based, but I will not pay it, because I, through my duly authorized agent was guilty of the wrong of falsely recording the answers made by the assured to the questions asked him. . . . No wrong is attributed to him, unless it be said that he was guilty of a wrong in neglecting to read the copy of the application attached to the policy issued to him by the appellant. We do not think that this was such a wrong as would relieve the appellant from liability on its policy under the circumstances surrounding this case."

(c) Occupation.

A good defense to an action by the company upon a premium note was held to have been made out in Michigan Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Reed, 84 Mich. 524, 13 L. R. A. 349, 47 N. W. 1106. It appeared that "some days" after the delivery of his policy, to which a copy of his application was attached, the insured discovered that the soliciting agent, in making out the application, had misdescribed his occupation, and he thereupon returned the policy to the one such as he bargained for. He continued negotiations for several months, endeavoring to have appellant give him what he supposed his application called for, ending with his becoming convinced that no satisfaction would be given him, whereupon, and about eleven months after the policy was received, he wholly rejected it.

One George H. Parker applied to appellant for a $5,000 policy of life insurance under circumstances similar in all respects to those characterizing respondent's application, except the one Parker supposed he was to obtain was a twenty-annual-payment life contract. In due time a policy was delivered to him by mail, accompanied by a letter, not stating anything to the effect that it was pursuant to or in accordance with his application. He gave cash and notes to the amount of $144 for the first premium, which notes he afterwards paid. He examined the policy for the first time about four months after its receipt, readily and at once discovering that it was an annual-payment life policy instead of one such as he supposed his application called for. A few days thereafter he notified appellant's managing agent that he had been deceived into applying for, receiving, and keeping a policy different from the one he desired, tendered the policy back, and demanded to be restored to his former position by a refunding to him of all that he had given for the policy except a proportionate amount of the premium to cover the time his life had been insured, which demand was refused.

agent to correct this error. Shortly afterwards the agent redelivered the policy, saying that the change had been made. Relying upon this assurance, the insured did not examine the policy again for some time, but finally discovered that no change had actually been made. He complained again to the agent, and finally returned the policy to the company some months after its issuance. While the court states that it was the duty of the insured to call attention to the agent's misrepresentation if he did not wish to be considered a participant in the latter's fraud upon the company, yet this duty was deemed to have been fulfilled under the circumstances, and the retention of the policy after its return by the agent with the assurance that it was corrected was not deemed to deprive him of his right to cancel it, and to refuse payment of the premium note.

(d) Encumbrances.

The Fletcher Case is followed in Johnson v. Dakota F. & M. Ins. Co. 1 N. D. 187, 45 N. W. 799. Failure of the insured to ascertain from the attached application that the soliciting agent had falsified it as to the amount of encumbrances truthfully disclosed renders him "constructively a participant in the original fraud of the agent," where the policy had been in his hands "some months" before loss. "Upon receiving the policy with copy indorsed thereon, the plaintiff is legally chargeable with notice and knowledge of the entire terms of the insurance contract, and he is estopped from denying such knowledge. It was the plaintiff's duty to have taken steps at once, upon receiving the policy, to have the same corrected or rescinded."

An adoption of the agent's misstatement in the application concerning encumbrances is said, in Richardson v. Maine Ins. Co. 46 Me. 394, 74 Am. Dec. 459, to have been worked by the retention of a policy to which a copy of the application was attached. The statement being false, and a breach of warranty, there could be no recovery upon the policy.

But an agent's fraud in falsifying insured's answers to questions in the application in regard to encumbrances and prior losses of the property to be insured was held, in Kister v. Lebanon Mut. Ins. Co. 128 Pa. 553, 5 L. R. A. 646, 15 Am. St. Rep. 696, 18 Atl. 447, to be 67 L. R. A.

available to the insured in an action upon the policy, although he had retained it, with a copy of the application attached showing the false answers, for the period of two and a half years before loss. "A copy of the application accompanied the policy, and it is argued that Kister could and ought to have read it, and, if he had done so, he would have seen the answers were untrue. These are considerations which were properly addressed to the jury. We cannot say that the law, in anticipation of the fraud upon the part of a company, imposed any absolute duty upon Kister to read his policy when he received it, although it would certainly have been an act of prudence on his part to do so."

One thing is certain, however,—the company cannot repudiate the fraud of its agent, and thus escape the obligations of a contract consummated thereby, merely because Kister accepted in good faith the act of the agent without examination."

2. Copy not attached.

The Fletcher Case, 117 U. S. 519, 29 L. ed. 934, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 837, supra, IV., b, 1, (a), is distinguished in Lewis v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assn. (Miss.) 27 So. 649, on the ground that a copy of the application containing the falsified answers was not attached to the policy. Untrue answers as to insured's health and attending physicians, inserted through the agent's fraud in the application retained by the company, were held no defense to an action on the policy by the beneficiary. "How can one ascertain and correct errors in answers in the application where the company keeps that and puts in copy of it with the policy?"

But in Providence Life Assur. Soc. v. Reutlinger, 58 Ark. 528, 25 S. W. 835, the insured was held bound in a case of similar fraud. The policy appears to have contained the usual statement that it was issued "in consideration of the stipulations and agreements in the application hereof," etc. This is deemed sufficient to incorporate the application therein, and to make the applicant responsible for, and chargeable with notice of, its statements. So that a retention of the policy, although a copy of the application was not attached, rendered the insured "a participant in the fraud committed."

Arthur H. Barrington, under circumstances similar to those last detailed, applied to appellant for a policy of life insurance, supposing he was to obtain a twenty-annual-payment life contract. His application in fact called for an annual-payment life contract. In due time he received such a policy, accompanied by a letter not stating anything to the effect that it was in accordance with the application. He gave his note for the first premium, amounting to $195.50, which he afterwards paid. About five months after receiving the policy he examined it for the first time, immediately and readily discovering that it was not what he supposed he was to get. A few days thereafter he notified appellant's managing agent of the facts, tendered back the policy, and demanded to be restored to his former position, which was refused.

There was nothing in either instance misleading the applicant into receiving and retaining his policy as stated, other than what occurred at the time the application was made, except, in respondent's case, the circumstance of the assurance, in the letter accompanying the policy, that it was the one applied for.

Parker and Barrington severally assigned their rights against appellant to respondent before this action was commenced. The court held that in each case, by artifice and fraud of appellant's agent, the assured signed his application for a policy, supposing it to call for one different from that actually sent in response thereto; that by

V. Mistake or fraud as to matters outside of the policy and application.

Actual knowledge of misrepresentations as to matters not disclosed by the policy seems to be required, inasmuch as there can be in such case no imputation thereof from the mere possession of the policy. This seems to be clear from the cases.

Being induced to take out a policy by a false and fraudulent circular stating that insurance in the defendant company would cost only half as much as elsewhere, by reason of the cancellation of the premium notes by dividends, the insured, in Rohrschneider v. Knickerbocker L. Ins. Co. 76 N. Y. 216, 32 Am. Rep. 290, retained the policy and paid half the premiums thereon during the five-year period of its life without discovering the fraud. At the end of that time, plaintiff's demand for the surrender value of the policy at the sum advertised in the circular being refused, suit was brought to recover the premiums with interest that had been paid on the policy. This was granted, the court saying that she was not estopped, although the policy had run to maturity, to recover the premiums that had been obtained through the fraud. "She did not discover the fraud, and, so far as we can perceive, had no means of discovering it, during the five years. She was bound to give the notes, but was assured that the dividends would pay them. After she gave the notes, she had no occasion to look after them. She could rest upon the representations made to her. The defendant had the whole five years to make good the representations: and the first time she could expect to learn their falsity was when she went to demand the $500. When she made such demand, and learned that her note had not been paid by the dividends, she asserted the fraud. It is impossible, therefore, to perceive upon what theory it can be said that she waived or lost any right to assert this fraud against the defendant."

In Beckwith v. Ryan, 66 Conn. 589, 34 Atl. 488, the agent of the company had fraudulently represented to the insured the amount by which the annual dividends would reduce the premiums on his policy, and thereby induced him to take out the insurance. In an action upon the premium note, in which the insured defended upon the ground of such fraudulent representations, the court held that his failure to ascertain the fraud was no bar to the defense, where it appeared that, immediately upon learning of the fraud, he returned the policy for cancellation, and notified the holder of the note thereof. "The plaintiff's claim that the attempt to disaffirm and repudiate the contract was too late can hardly raise a question of law," says the court, "when the finding shows that the defendant returned the policy for cancellation on the day when he first ascertained the falsity of the representations on which he had relied, and that he immediately thereafter notified the plaintiff. Counsel for the plaintiff urged in argument that the defendant did not act with sufficient promptness in ascertaining the falsity of the statement relied on. If in fact the defendant believed the statement, it would hardly be claimed that he was under an obligation to investigate the truth of a statement he believed and acted upon."

A defense to an action upon premium notes, based upon fraudulent representations of the insurer's agent in regard to the rate of assessment on such notes, the solvency of the company, and the fact of insurance in the same company by business acquaintances of the defendant, which induced the latter to take out his policy, was sustained in Whitman v. Melssner, 34 Ind. 487, where the policy had been returned as worthless upon discovery of the fraud seven months after its issue.

An agent who fraudulently represented that certain parties had insured under a certain plan with his company, and thereby induced the insured to take out a similar policy, was held liable personally for the fraud in Hedden v. Griffin, 136 Mass. 229, 49 Am. Rep. 25. Six months had elapsed between the issuance of the policy and the discovery of the fraud. This lapse of time is not considered by the court, but only that which elapsed after the insured discovered the fraud. "Upon discovering the fraud, the plaintiff had his election of two remedies. He could retain his policy, or he could cancel and repudiate it, and have resort to the defendant for the fraud practised upon him. . . . The plaintiff had the right to, and did, elect to cancel the policy."

Five years' retention of the tontine policy accepted in substitution of a prior endowment policy upon the false representations of the company's cashier as to the value and condireason thereof the applicant was not estopped from rescinding the transaction with appellant if, before the expiration of a reasonable length of time after he obtained actual knowledge of the facts, he made his election in the matter; that he acted in that regard within such reasonable time, and that respondent was therefore entitled to recover as to each of the causes of action sued on.

If this decision depended wholly on whether the applicants for insurance were estopped from rescinding the policies, by signing the applications therefor, they would be entitled to the relief granted by the circuit court. It is elementary that a person of mature age and sound mind, who, in his dealings with another, deliberately signs a written instrument, is conclusively presumed, as to that other and all persons claiming under him, to know and consent to what the paper contains, no fraud or deceit being used by such other or in his behalf at the time of such signing or efficiently reaching thereto, reasonably calculated to and which does induce such other to become a party to the instrument without reading it, and there being no mutual mistake. It is just as well settled that, where there is such fraud or deceit, such person is not guilty of such unreasonable conduct, in relying upon the honesty of such other and signing the paper without reading it or knowing its contents, as to preclude him from obtaining judicial redress in some form for the wrong, if he is injuriously affected by the instrument not being what such other's tions of the former was held, in Knauer v. Globe Mut. L. Ins. Co. 16 Jones & S. 454, to be no bar to a rescission by the insured, an illiterate German, upon a discovery of the fraud, and a recovery of the premiums which he had paid thereon. In reply to the defense, based on the insured's retention of the policy for so long a period without objection, the court says: "It may well be doubted whether the plaintiff had not the statutory time within which to bring his action, viz., six years, . . . and so whether it could be held that any action brought within that time should fail because of laches. . . . The fact that the second policy was obscure in its terms—so much so that only experts in insurance matters could understand it—takes this out of that class of cases where courts of equity have refused to relieve a party who, by the exercise of ordinary diligence and by such an examination as a prudent person ought to have made, might have discovered the falsity of the representations."

The especial diligence required of members of a mutual company in the discovery of fraud as to their liability to assessment (noted supra, III., b. 5) is required, even to matters not appearing upon the face of the policy.

Thus, a fraudulent statement by the soliciting agent as to the financial condition of the mutual company was the inducement which led the insured to take out a policy and give the premium note sued upon in Schofield v. Leach, 15 Pa. Super. Ct. 354. "By his delay of nearly two years, and the payment of the assessments on the policies while he held them," says the court, "he allowed the rights of other parties to intervene. He owed a duty to his fellow members, and especially to those who may have been induced through his membership in the company to unite their risks with his, some of whom sustained losses to which he must contribute his share towards paying. . . . A delay of one year has been held to be an unreasonable time to withhold such a defense."

The same principle is invoked in Capital City Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Boggs, 5 Pa. Super. Ct. 394, to charge a member upon his premium note, where he had made no attempt to rescind his policy, on the ground of a fraud as to the financial standing of the company, before the rights of subsequent members intervened.

Similarly, where the rights of innocent subsequent policy holders have intervened, the company's fraud in pretending to have previously issued a thousand policies is no bar to an action by the company's receiver to collect an assessment made for losses occurring after the issue of the policy. Dettra v. Kestner, 147 Pa. 566, 23 Atl. 889.

After having received the benefits of his policy for the whole period of six years covered by it, it was held in Sherman v. Frasier, 112 Iowa, 236, 83 N. W. 886, that a member of a mutual fire insurance company was liable to its receiver in an action to recover an assessment, and that he was liable in spite of the fact that he had been induced to take out his policy by the false representation of the company's general agent backed by a circular issued by the company, to the effect that the company was solvent, in good standing, and secured indemnity to the insured at lower rates than were procurable elsewhere; and that the said agent fraudulently concealed from the insured knowledge of the company's by-laws and charter. "If," the court said, "by reason of the fraud alleged, they did not become members upon the making and accepting of their applications, they did become members by standing upon their contract after, by reasonable diligence, they could have ascertained the facts." The same attitude on similar facts is found in Corey v. Sherman, 96 Iowa, 115, 32 L. R. A. 490, 64 N. W. 828.

VI. Effect of retention by other than insured.

Where the policy is retained by the company's agent under an arrangement with the insured, who does not see it before loss, there is no such imputed knowledge of its terms as will bind him as to a mistake due to the agent's error. Humphry v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 15 Blatchf. 504, Fed. Cas. No. 6,875; Snell v. Atlantic F. & M. Ins. Co. 98 U. S. 85, 25 L. ed. 52; St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Wells, 89 Ill. 82.

The contrary is true where the policy is delivered to the agent of the insured. Graves v. Boston Marine Ins. Co. 2 Cranch, 419, 2 L. ed. 324; Smith v. Continental Ins. Co. 6 Dak. 438, 43 N. W. 810.

So, the beneficiary is as much chargeable with laches as the insured, where the policy comes into his hands with a copy of the application containing the answers falsified by the insurer's medical examiner, attached, and no objection wrongful conduct induced him to understand was its import, and if he acts in the matter before the intervention of some other element legally efficient to render such wrong without remedy. Of course, mere ignorance by a person of the contents of a paper which he signs, cannot avail him to avoid it. True, there are decisions which do not clearly recognize that. Some of them counsel for respondent point to as excusing the applicants here, both in not knowing the contents of their applications, and in not knowing the character of the policies received in response thereto till months after their receipt. Butler v. Regents of University, 32 Wis. 124; Schultz v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 44 Wis. 638. So far as such authorities are referred to to show that mere ignorance on the part of the applicants for insurance, of the contents of their applications, is sufficient to rebut the legal presumption that such applications were signed and parted with by them with knowledge of the contents thereof, and that the written evidence may be impeached by oral evidence of the actual bargain made at the time the applications were signed, they are not in point, because the court found the element of fraud reasonably calculated to induce the applicants to sign the papers in ignorance of their contents. So far as they are referred to to excuse the applicants on the ground of mere ignorance, for receiving and keeping the policies for months without objection, they have been discredited by more recent decisions of the court. Prince v. Overholser, 75 Wis. 646.

is made thereto, although the truth is equally well known to him and to the insured. Hook v. Michigan Mut. L. Ins. Co. 90 N. Y. Supp. 56.

And delivery to the insured is sufficient to charge the beneficiary with notice of the terms of the policy and render him liable on the premium note given by him, where no objection is made to the writing of the policy in a manner variant from that stipulated for. Roddey v. Talbot, 115 N. C. 287, 20 S. E. 375.

But retention of a policy by a mortgagee, to whom it was delivered by mistake, is regarded in Bennett v. City Ins. Co. 115 Mass. 241, as merely evidence of assent by the mortgagor to its terms as written, subject to rebuttal.

See also Franklin F. Ins. Co. v. Hewitt, 3 B. Mon. 231, where the policy, received through the mails, was put away among the insured's papers by its clerk, without examination. Reformation was, nevertheless, granted after considerable retention.

VII. Effect of insured's illiteracy.

Where the retention of the policy is urged as presumptive knowledge of its contents, the illiteracy of the insured has sometimes been taken to rebut the presumption.

Taken in connection with an agent's misrepresentation as to the terms of the policy, it is said, in Continental Ins. Co. v. Ruckman, 127 Ill. 364, 11 Am. St. Rep. 121, 20 N. E. 77, to be doubtful whether the insured should be held chargeable with notice of such terms in spite of retention.

It is again adverted to in German F. Ins. Co. v. Gueck, 130 Ill. 345, 6 L. R. A. 835, 23 N. E. 112, where twelve years' retention of a policy by a foreigner unable to read English was not deemed to work a waiver of a mistake by the insurer's agent, appearing in the policy.

"The rule that the law favors those who are diligent and careful, rather than the reckless and indifferent, is not to be applied," says the court in Keller v. Equitable F. Ins. Co. 28 Ind. 170, "for the protection of those who avail themselves of the ignorance existing in the community to perpetrate fraud upon its members. If, as is charged in the answer, the conditions of an insurance policy, upon which its validity depends, are to be printed in a type so small as in fact to discourage their perusal, 67 L. R. A.

and in terms requiring more than ordinary capacity to comprehend their effect, it must be expected that, as the standard of education and intelligence requisite to understand the conditions is thus elevated, the courts will, in a corresponding degree, lower the tests of diligence exacted from the insured."

"It ought not to be held," says the court in State Ins. Co. v. Gray, 44 Kan. 731, 25 Pac. 197, "that a person not able to read or write, by merely holding the policy in his possession which contains his application signed with his mark, thereby approves the action of the agent or solicitor in falsely or improperly taking his application, and becomes, by holding such a policy, a participant in the fraud committed by the agent or solicitor."

"How can it be negligence not to read when one cannot read?" inquires the court in Lewis v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assn. (Miss.) 27 So. 649, where the fraud perpetrated by a medical examiner in the application of an illiterate negroess was held not to defeat her beneficiary's rights.

"We are unable to assent to it as a proposition of law," says the court in McGuire v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 7 App. Div. 575, 40 N. Y. Supp. 300, "and much less as a principle of equity, that an insurance company may relieve itself from responsibility for the fraudulent representations of its agent by imposing upon a blind or illiterate person the obligation of seeing to it, at his peril, that the agent has fulfilled his duty to himself and to the company by making out the policy according to the terms and conditions agreed upon. In other words, that the insurance company may, by and through the false assurances of its agent, foist upon an illiterate person an instrument that is void at the instant of its creation."

The fact that the insured had read his policy before leaving the office of the company, and that he retained it without objection until loss, was held, in Phoenix F. Ins. Co. v. Gurnee, 1 Paige, 278, 19 Am. Dec. 431, to be no bar to a reformation and enforcement of the policy, where the insured was merely "a plain countryman, unacquainted with the law of insurance," and the effect of the language used in the policy was not such as would have informed him of its variance from the application which he had made in unambiguous terms.

To the same effect, see Miotke v. Milwaukee Mechanics' Ins. Co. 113 Mich. 166, 71 N. W.

44 N. W. 775; German Bank v. Muth, 96 Wis. 344, 71 N. W. 361; Jackowski v. Illinois Steel Co. 103 Wis. 448, 79 N. W. 757; Straker v. Phenix Ins. Co. 101 Wis. 413, 77 N. W. 752; McGowan v. Supreme Court, 1 O. F. 107 Wis. 462, 83 N. W. 775; Deering v. Hoeft, 111 Wis. 339, 87 N. W. 298. It follows that no further attention need be paid to the question of whether the applicants were precluded from rescinding their policies upon the ground that they might, had they seen fit to use the means in their hands at the time of such signing, have known the kind of policies they were to receive. The maxim, Vigilantibus, et non dormientibus, servat lex (the law assists those who watch and not those who sleep) does not apply to a business transaction as between parties thereto where one omits to investigate, relying on assurances by the other as to the facts, made at the time of entering into the transaction, such as signing and parting with a paper by one relying on representations as to its contents by the opposite party thereto. Schultz v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 44 Wis. 638; Brooks v. Matthews, 78 Ga. 739, 3 S. E. 627; Wenzel v. Shultz, 78 Cal. 221, 20 Pac. 404.

Counsel vigorously urges receding from the former decision to the effect that it is negligence for a person to omit to examine his policy of insurance as soon as reasonable opportunity therefor is afforded, relying on assurances made by the company's agent at the time he took the application, as to the kind of policy it called for. We must adhere 463, and Knauer v. Globe Mut. L. Ins. Co. 16 Jones & S. 454.

The contrary view is found in some cases, however.

Illiteracy is held no excuse for insured's failure to become acquainted with the terms of his policy, in Massey v. Cotton States L. Ins. Co. 70 Ga. 794. The court said: "If the plaintiff could not understand or fully comprehend the nature of the policy issued to him by defendant, then, as an ordinarily prudent man, he should have made inquiry of someone who could have informed him as to its character and nature."

"Nor does the fact that the plaintiff could not read take his case out of this principle," says the court in McHoney v. German Ins. Co. 52 Mo. App. 94, speaking of the imputation to the insured of knowledge of the terms of his contract, and of the statements in the application attached thereto. "His wife could read; his daughter could read; his neighbors could read; his lawyers could read; and the same duty rested upon him of informing himself seasonably whether or not the provisions of the contract as executed and delivered to him complied with the original understanding, as rests under such circumstances, upon contracting parties who are not illiterate."

To the same effect is Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. v. Stephens, 115 Ga. 192, 41 S. E. 679.

VIII. Retention with knowledge of defect.

a. Generally.

Retention without objection is adverted to by BOSTWICK V. MUTUAL L. INS. CO. as ground for the imputation to the insured of knowledge of the terms of his policy.

Where knowledge is admitted the rule of caveat emptor has no application. Retention after notice is generally admitted to be a waiver of rights arising from fraud or mistake, or to be inexcusable laches barring the enforcement of such rights. The cases are uniform in the enforcement of this proposition.

An agent's fraudulent representation as to the amount of the probable surplus at maturity of the policy was the ground on which the insured defended, in an action upon a premium note given by him at the time of the application, in Norton v. Gleason, 61 Vt. 474, 18 Atl. 45. It appeared that the insured discovered 67 L. R. A.

the agent's fraud three days after the receipt of the policy, and immediately wrote to the company to substantiate the facts stated by the agent. Receiving no reply, he returned the policy a week later. Whether the insured acted with reasonable diligence in rescinding was deemed a question for the jury. "A contract induced by fraud is only voidable, not void; and if, after discovery of the fraud, the party acquiesces by express words or an unequivocal act, such as treating the property as his own, his election will be determined, and he cannot afterwards reject the property. Mere delay, also, may have the same effect, if, while deliberating, the position of the vendor has been altered. . . . In this case . . . it was, so far as appears, a case of mere delay, in good faith, and fairly required in order to make the legal status clear. As the case stood, we think it was clearly a question for the jury whether the defendant acted with due promptness in rescinding."

In Plympton v. Dunn, 148 Mass. 523, 20 N. E. 180, it appeared that the soliciting agent, after receiving a correct reply in regard to insured's health, falsified the application on which the policy was based. A copy of this application was attached to the policy, which was delivered to the insured and retained by him for a month before he discovered the error. Upon discovery of the error, however, no objection was made, or any notice given of the falsification, until two months later, when an indorsee of his premium note demanded payment, and he denied liability upon the ground of failure of consideration, saying that the policy was "no good." There was no offer to return or rescind the policy until fifteen months later, just prior to the action upon the note by such indorsee. Under such circumstances, says the court, the insured must be held liable upon the note, having received the benefit of the policy. "Every day that elapsed after the defendant discovered, or ought to have discovered, the error without notifying the company, he was receiving the benefit of the policy. To be sure, the company might discover the falsity of the statement, but it might not, and the defendant cannot be allowed to speculate on that chance. By his silence he left the company bound so far as they knew, and in a position in which, if he had died, they might have paid the loss in ignorance of any defense. To accept the benefit of a contract after you have notice of

to our former conclusion on that point, notwithstanding the decisions confidently relied on by counsel to show that it is in conflict with other decisions of this court and authorities elsewhere. We believe the former decision is right on principle, is well supported by authorities cited in the opinion, and is in strict accordance with the doctrine of the Supreme Court of the United States on the subject, as we shall show before closing what we have to say. If it were clear that there was any conflict of authority to be dealt with, as claimed by counsel for respondent, since the doctrine involved is within the spirit, if not the letter, of Mamlock v. Fairbanks, 46 Wis. 416, 32 Am. Rep. 716, 1 N. W. 167; Locke v. Williamson, 40 Wis. 377; Warner v. Benjamin, 89 Wis.

290, 62 N. W. 170, and Farr v. Peterson, 91 Wis. 182, 64 N. W. 863; and not contrary to any other case in this court when rightly understood,—we should not hesitate to be guided, if assistance were necessary, by the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States rather than to depart from the settled position here, which has not been disturbed since proclaimed clearly in the Mamlock Case. Nearly all the authorities which counsel for respondent rely upon relate to where the complaining party was lulled into security by something said or done by the wrongdoer at the time of the particular transaction complained of. Under those circumstances, it is rightly held that such person is not inexcusably negligent. The following are samples of the authorities referred your right to rescind it is to affirm it,—especially when, as here, the benefit accepted and the corresponding risk imposed upon the company are of a kind 'that never can be cured, in a rational sense,' by a subsequent surrender of the policy."

See also Hedden v. Griffin, 136 Mass. 229, 40 Am. Rep. 25, infra, V.

In State Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Smith, 1 Pa. Super. Ct. 470, the insured was induced to take out a policy in a mutual company by the representation of its secretary that an indemnity fund proportionate to the membership of the association was kept for the special purpose of reimbursing withdrawing members according to their contract, and for no other purpose. It appeared that this was false, and, upon discovery of the fraud the insured, according to the testimony, had gone to the company's office, but failed to find anyone there. He made no subsequent attempt to cancel the policy, and retained the same for over a year and a half, when he again attempted to cancel the policy in view of the levy of a second assessment, which he refused to pay. He was held liable, nevertheless, the court saying that, "by his laches, the appellee lost the opportunity to have his policy canceled, and he allowed the rights of other parties to intervene while he was a member of the company; and upon no just principle should he be allowed to escape the burden of his undertaking."

The misrepresentations of a soliciting agent that the insurer maintained an office in a neighboring city, where premiums would be payable and money obtained in case of loss, was relied upon in American Ins. Co. v. Kuhlman, 6 Mo. App. 522, to defeat an action upon the premium notes. The policy required annual premiums, but had been retained its three-year period. It was thus apparent that the insured had learned the falsity of the representation early in the life of the policy. "Another rule concerning fraudulent representations," says the court, "requires that the party claiming to have been injured by them shall make his objections known within a reasonable time after his discovery of the alleged falsehood, and that he shall not leave the other contracting party to suppose the contract in full force while the objector continues to enjoy its benefits. Here the defendant held his insurance policy for three full years, without any protest or attempt at cancellation on the ground of the alleged false representations. If a loss had occurred during that time, he could, for aught that appears in the record, have claimed and recovered indemnity from the plaintiff to the extent of the policy. The defense as presented was unfair and inequitable in every respect, and ought not to have been allowed."

The agent of a mutual hall insurance company, in soliciting the insured for a policy, greatly exaggerated the number of members in the company, and also the amount of property insured. This was urged by the assured as a defense to an action upon a premium note; but it appeared upon the trial that he had become aware of the extent of the exaggeration while the policy was in force, and had made no attempt to repudiate the obligation by cancellation of the policy, until suit upon the note a couple of months later, after the danger of loss was over. It was held that he did not bring himself within Dak. Comp. Laws, § 3591, which requires a prompt rescission upon discovery of the facts entitling a party thereto, and a restoration to the other party of everything of value which he has received from him under the contract; and he was therefore held liable upon the premium note. Northwestern Mut. Hall Ins. Co. v. Fleming, 12 S. D. 36, 80 N. W. 147.

So, in Elchman v. Herscher, 170 Pa. 402, 33 Atl. 229, where there was a fraudulent representation by the agent as to the extent of the membership in a mutual company, thereby inducing the insured to take out a policy, it was held that the retention of the policy and the continued payment of assessments by the insured after he had learned of the fraud estopped him from denying liability to the company's receiver for assessments necessitated by losses occurring during the life of his policy.

b. Effect of attempted rescission.

Of course, the retention of the policy after an attempt has been made to return the same, because of its noncompliance with the application, does not affect the applicant's rights, or render him liable upon a premium note, where such offer to return was made with due diligence. Jones v. Gilbert, 93 Ga. 604, 20 S. E. 48.

What is effectual rescission.

A return, or offer to return, to the insurer's general agent is sufficient. Jones v. Gilbert, 93 Ga. 604, 20 S. E. 48.

to: Warder, B. & G. Co. v. Whitish, 77 Wis. 433, 434, 46 N. W. 540, where the rule in Mamlock v. Fairbanks was inferentially affirmed. The injured person, by false representations made at the time, was induced to sign a paper, which was immediately taken away by the wrongdoer. The court said: "This is not the case of a party, in the absence of fraud or mistake, failing to know the contents of a written instrument signed by himself by reason of his own negligence or want of reasonable care. as . . . Herbat v. Lowe, 65 Wis. 316, 26 N. W. 751. . . . Certainly no one will contend that a person can procure the signature of a party to a contract by false representations, and then enforce the contract on the ground that, had the party so deceived been more vigilant, he would have discovered the fraud in time to have withheld his signature from the contract. In other words, a person cannot procure a contract in his favor by fraud, and then bar a defense to it on the ground that had not the other party been so ignorant or negligent he could not have succeeded in deceiving him."

That clearly shows that the court did not have in mind the action of a person in accepting an article in fulfillment of an order therefor, nothing being then done to prevent or deter such person from seeing obvious departures from the thing bargained for. The distinction between the two classes of cases has not always been carefully pointed out in legal opinions, and not always recognized, leading to expressions therein quite liable

Return to the soliciting agent is sufficient when the policy does not conform to the application, although the policy contains a provision limiting the agent's powers. New York L. Ins. Co. v. Easton, 69 Ill. App. 479. The clause is inoperative as to applicant since no provision of a policy, not accepted, can be binding upon him, and the soliciting agent has the apparent authority, outside the stipulations of the policy, to accept a rescission.

An agent "to receive applications and send them to the company," is held, however, in Susquehanna Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Swank, 102 Pa. 17, to be the agent of the insured, and not of the insurer, as regards a return of the policy. So that the sending of a policy to such agent for correction or rescission is ineffectual as a return to the company, where such agent retains it, and does not forward it to the company.

The return of a policy is not effectual where made, not to the agent, but to his father, among whose papers it is found after his death, where it appears that such father was not in any way connected with the affairs of the insurance company. Leigh v. Brown, 99 Ga. 258, 25 S. E. 621.

c. Effect of agent's reassurances.

The effect of a reassurance as to the validity of the policy, on objection to its terms, has been variously treated.

The property covered by the policy in Maier v. Hibernia Ins. Co. 67 N. Y. 283, was described as "occupied as dwelling." The agent knew to the contrary, that the lower floor was used as a store, but told the insured that the description was sufficient. On receipt of the policy, insured again complained of the description, and was again reassured by the agent that it was all right. The officers of the company also were aware of the condition of the property from personal inspection. On refusal to pay the loss on the ground of misdescription of the risk, relief was sought by way of reformation in equity, and was granted by the court, which recognized that the parol-evidence rule would prevent a recovery at law. While it is stated that the assured must ordinarily make himself master of the form and contents of his policy when he receives it. It is different when he is prevented, or thrown off his guard and dissuaded, therefrom by the act or declaration of the insurer. The evidence in regard to the agent's representations, both at the time of the application and on receipt of the policy "was material and competent, as tending to show that the plaintiff was not careless,—was not thoughtlessly satisfied with the terms of the policy,—but sought an emendation thereof, and was balked of a successful pursuit thereof by the action and declaration of the defendants through their agents and officers."

Upon receipt of the policy in German Ins. Co. v. Davis, 6 Kan. App. 268, 51 Pac. 60, the insured noted that the title to the property was written in his wife's name through the negligence of the agent in failing to inquire concerning the title at the time of the application. He immediately gave notice of the error to the agent, and requested correction, but was told that "that would make no difference." Relying upon this statement of the agent, the insured retained the policy without further objection until loss. Under these circumstances the retention of the policy was held by the court not to amount to an assent to its terms, and relief was granted by reformation and enforcement after loss.

A hard case on the insured, however, appears in Mecke v. Life Ins. Co. 8 Phila. 6. It appeared that the insured agreed with the agent upon an endowment policy nonforfeitable after the expiration of two years. The application, written and signed by the insured himself, contained no provision for nonforfeiture; nor did the policy. On receipt of the latter and examination of its terms, the insured found that it contained no nonforfeiture provision, and immediately complained to the resident general agent of the company, who assured him that the company would make it all right. Relying upon this, he kept the policy, and paid two premiums without objection. On demand for the third premium, he applied to the company for a nonforfeitable policy, such as he had agreed upon with the agent. The company refusing to issue such policy to him, he attempted to rescind and recover back the premiums which he had already paid. The court, however, refused to give him this relief, saying that "originally he might have abandoned the contract and treated it as a nullity, and claimed the consideration. But, having made his election to keep the policy, which he received as a subsisting contract, and having thereby imposed the risk upon the defendants for two years, it was to cause one to go astray if he does not keep in mind the philosophy of the rule that caveat emptor applies when no deceit is exercised to reasonably excuse a person from dealing at arm's length, and not when there is such deceit; and therefore, while it may not apply to estop a person from successfully complaining of a transaction on account of what occurred at the time of entering into it, it may as to electing whether to abide by the transaction if he is inexcusably negligent in the matter. Those distinctions are accurately pointed out in the reasoning of Judge Sanborn in New York L. Ins. Co. v. McMaster, 30 C. C. A. 532, 57 U. S. App. 638, 87 Fed. 63, and 40 C. C. A. 110, 99 Fed. 856.

Another of the authorities relied on by counsel—one which he insists is directly in conflict with Mamlock v. Fairbanks, and is supported by the better reasoning—is Strohn v. Detroit & M. R. Co. 21 Wis. 554, 94 Am. Dec. 504; citing Boorman v. American Exp. Co. 21 Wis. 154, and King v. Woodbridge, 34 Vt. 565, in both of which it was held that a party is presumed to consent to the conditions of a paper to which he deliberately becomes a party, the idea being that it would be negligence for him not to know its contents; and, so such knowledge is conclusively presumed in the absence of some reasonable excuse for his ignorance. So far as the expressions in the Boorman and Strohn Cases indicate that mere ignorance is a sufficient excuse for avoiding a paper, they have not been followed in recent years, as we have shown. The real situation in the Strohn Case is that property was delivered to the railway company for transportation on the faith of a verbal understanding had at the time of the delivery. The property had been sent forward and was so situated that the transaction could not be varied when the freight receipt, containing the clause complained of, was delivered to the shipper. Speaking to those circumstances the court said the shipper had a right to rely on the verbal understanding, and was not bound, immediately upon receiving the freight receipt, to examine it, and used expressions, it is true, somewhat out of harmony with Mamlock v. Fairbanks. The case has never been cited by this court during the thirty-six years since it was decided to sustain such expressions as good law; while Mamlock v. Fairbanks has been followed over and over again, is firmly entrenched in the jurisprudence of the state, and is treated by text writers and courts elsewhere as proclaiming sound doctrine. The Strohn Case, with the limitations necessary to harmonize it with current authority, was cited in afterwards too late for him to adopt the other course. Men cannot by their own conduct and negligence impose burdens upon those with whom they deal, and then claim to stand in the position of persons who, in the assertion of their own rights, have been mindful of their obligations to others."

In Indiana such representations as to the effect of provisions in the policy known to the insured are taken to be nothing more than a construction of the policy's terms, upon which it is said fraud cannot be predicated. It is thus held in Farmers' Mut. F. Ins. Asso. v. Kryder, 5 Ind. App. 430, 51 Am. St. Rep. 284, 31 N. E. 851, that the statement of the insurer's agent that a policy covering "barn: contents therein" would protect horses while on the farm, is insufficient to support a charge of fraud, the insured having read his contract.

Similarly, in Fidelity & C. Co. v. Teter, 136 Ind. 672, 36 N. E. 283, no recovery for an injury received from a fall from a hayloft while caring for horses in the course of transportation was allowed on a policy clearly insuring only against injuries resulting from the hazard of travel, although the insurer's agent had represented to the insured that the policy, properly construed, covered accidents received from whatever source.

J. W. Gillum & Co. v. Fire Asso. 106 Mo. App. 673, 80 S. W. 283, is a case of similar nature, in which the insured attempted to justify a breach of the iron-safe provision of his policy, of which he was aware, by an agreement that it need not be observed, made with the insurer's agent at the time of application and reasserted on delivery of the policy. Retention of the written policy contradicting such agreement is 67 L. R. A.

deemed an assent to its terms, and recovery was denied.

IX. Distinction between action at law and suit in equity.

In some cases in which the parol-evidence rule is applied to an action at law upon the policy, which is taken as an affirmation of its terms as written, the court distinctly recognizes that relief might be granted in equity by way of reformation or rescission in spite of the policy's retention.

This is clear in Germania Ins. Co. v. Bromwell, 62 Ark. 43, 34 S. W. 83. Says the court: "If the agent of the insurance company agreed with appellee that he need not keep books, he should have refused to accept a policy in which it was expressly stipulated that he should keep books. If, through mistake, he accepted a policy which did not express the contract made with the agent, he should have applied to a court of equity to have the contract reformed. Having brought his action at law upon the policy, and prosecuted it to judgment, he has elected to treat it as expressing the true contract between himself and the company, and he cannot now recede from it or contradict it. Washburn v. Great Western Ins. Co. 114 Mass. 175. We must therefore, in considering this case, disregard entirely the testimony of oral contemporaneous declarations which contradict the provisions of the policy."

"Had the plaintiff's case been framed with a view to correct a mistake or omission in the policy," says the Cincinnati superior court in Madison Ins. Co. v. Fellowes, 1 Disney (Ohio) 217, "the testimony would certainly have been Schaller v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 97 Wis. 31, 71 N. W. 1042, this language being used: "From the delivery and acceptance of the bill of lading at the time the goods were delivered to defendant for shipment, the presumption arises that plaintiff assented to it. . . . The presumption is not conclusive, but mere ignorance of the contents of the bill of lading, arising from failure to read it or to make more reasonable effort to obtain information in that regard, in the absence of any evidence of fraud on the part of the defendant, or of the use of any means to deter the shipper from fully understanding the contract, is not sufficient to overcome it." Again the court, after saying, in effect, that ignorance is no defense to a contract where the making thereof springs from inexcusable neglect, used this language: "The familiar rule applies that, if a person makes a written contract, with another, he takes upon himself the responsibility of acting intelligently, and exercising ordinary care to inform himself of its provisions. Failure to read the contract or to examine it, or, in case of inability to do so without assistance, to obtain such assistance if reasonably within reach, is negligence as a matter of law." To the same effect are Herbst v. Lowe, 65 Wis. 316, 26 N. W. 751; Fuller v. Madison Mut. Ins. Co. 36 Wis. 599; Bonneville v.

Western Assur. Co. 68 Wis. 298, 32 N. W. 34; Wilcox v. Continental Ins. Co. 85 Wis. 197, 55 N. W. 188; J. A. Coates & Sons v. Buck, 93 Wis. 128, 67 N. W. 23. In this class of cases the question involved was, Under what circumstances can a person, by oral evidence, impeach a written contract? As shown in the Federal cases, the deceit of one person affecting the conduct of another in becoming a party to a written instrument, must refer to the particular instrument in controversy, and to deceit in the transaction leading to the injured party's signing or accepting the instrument. That applies in this case to the signing of the applications for insurance, but not to the acceptance and retention of the policies.

Another of the authorities cited on this branch of the case is Gunther v. Ullrich, 82 Wis. 222, 33 Am. St. Rep. 32, 52 N. W. 88, where a person purchased real estate on the faith of false representations, made at the time of the purchase, respecting the location of the property. West v. Wright, 98 Ind. 335, is another case. There a person purchased land of another on the faith of false representations made by such other as to the record title to the property. Strong language was used in deciding the case, condemning the transaction and stating the law along lines many times laid down by competent; but, as it was, it simply went to set up a parol agreement in contradiction to an agreement in writing. By the terms of the policy made and accepted as the contract between the parties it was expressly declared to be the agreement of the parties that it should not have effect in case there was any other insurance upon the premises not mentioned in, or indorsed upon, the policy itself. By the proof offered, it was sought to establish that such was not the agreement of the parties, but that, at the time of making the policy, the agreement was that it should have effect notwithstanding the indorsement was not made. . . . 'A court of law must act on the agreement as it is; it cannot strike out or change any part, or add anything to it so as to contradict or vary the agreement contained in the written instrument. The parol evidence offered in this case is, therefore, clearly not admissible; and, taking the policy as it is, the plaintiffs cannot recover.' But, to authorize a relief in equity, a case of fraud or mistake must be made by the bill or appear from the pleadings in the cause; otherwise the evidence cannot be received."

"But if, from mistake or fraud, an agreement is so defective," says the court in Bartlett v. Union Mut. F. Ins. Co. 7 Cush. 175, speaking of a policy upon which additional insurance disclosed by the agent had not been noted, "that, instead of conveying the meaning of the parties, it expresses a different or opposite intent, if relief can be given at all, it must be sought exclusively in a court of equity. A court of law must act on the agreement as it is; it cannot strike out or change any part, or add anything to it, so as to contradict or vary 67 L. R. A.

the agreement contained in the written instrument."

So, in Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. v. Stephens, 115 Ga. 192, 41 S. E. 679, where an action upon a policy was defeated by breach of its provision for payment of premiums in cash, in spite of the agent's representation that the premium might be paid by note, the court distinctly recognizes that rescission might have been granted had it been sought within a reasonable time after delivery of the policy.

The authorities "negative the idea that one may reduce his oral agreement to writing, formally execute or accept and keep it, and at a later time ignore the solemn writing, and bring an action upon a preliminary agreement. This would be an innovation that would render written contracts no better than oral ones, and practically make them subject to variation and contradiction by parol, and, by indirection, evade one of the best and most uniformly settled rules of law, and render obsolete a branch of equity jurisdiction." Kleis v. Niagara F. Ins. Co. 117 Mich. 469, 76 N. W. 155.

A dictum appears in Taylor v. Glens Falls Ins. Co. 44 Fla. 273, 32 So. 887, that an action at law could not have been maintained by the insured on a policy erroneously written in favor of the deceased owner of the property, although the policy was in that case reformed.

A similar statement is found in Mahe v. Hibernia Ins. Co. 67 N. Y. 283, where a policy misdescribing the occupancy of the premises was reformed after loss.

See also Holmes v. Charlestown Mut. F. Ins. Co. 10 Met. 211, 43 Am. Dec. 428, infra, IV., a, 1, (a). W. A.

this court, but having no reference to such a situation as that here presented, so far as relates to the acceptance and retention of the policies, leaving out of view for the time being the question of whether anything occurred subsequent to the making of the applications to induce such acceptance and retention, reasonably calculated to deter the applicants from examining the policies. McKinnon v. Vollmar, 75 Wis. 82, 6 L. R. A. 121, 17 Am. St. Rep. 178, 43 N. W. 800; Montreal River Lumber Co. v. Mihills, 80 Wis. 540, 50 N. W. 507; Porter v. Beattie, 88 Wis. 22, 59 N. W. 499; Beetle v. Anderson, 98 Wis. 5, 73 N. W. 560; Hart v. Moulton, 104 Wis. 349, 359, 76 Am. St. Rep. 881, 80 N. W. 599. Counsel quotes, and recited it upon the oral argument with appropriate emphasis, overlooking, as it seems, that it does not apply to the facts of this case,—leaving out of view for the moment, as before said, the question of whether any circumstance occurred at the time of the delivery of the policies reasonably calculated to mislead the persons insured,—this language from West v. Wright, 98 Ind. 335: “I cannot, however, assent to extend the maxim, Caveat emptor, so far as to hold . . . that where a vendor of real estate, for the fraudulent purpose of effecting a sale, makes a positive representation of particular facts respecting the title, which he knows or has good reason to believe to be false, and which turn out to be false in fact, but which, if true, would make the title good, he cannot be held liable in an action for the fraud, or the vendee can have no right to rescind, because he had it in his power to ascertain from the records the truth or falsehood of the representation and the true state of the title, but has neglected to do so, in reliance upon the truth of the vendor’s representation of the facts. There may be good prudential reasons why, when I am selling you a piece of land, or a mortgage, you should not rely upon my statement of the facts of the title, but if I have made that statement for the fraudulent purpose of inducing you to purchase, and you have in good faith made the purchase in reliance upon its truth, instead of making the examination for yourself, it does not lie with me to say to you, ‘It is true that I lied to you, and for the purpose of defrauding you, but you were guilty of negligence, of want of ordinary care, in believing that I told the truth; and because you trusted to my word, when you ought to have suspected me of falsehood, I am entitled to the fruits of my falsehood and cunning, and you are without remedy.’”

It will be easily seen that the court held that there was no negligence on the part of 47 L. R. A.

the injured person in that case, because he relied upon the positive representations made by the wrongdoer at the time the transaction was entered into. To make that apply to this case we must be able to point to something said or done by the appellant at the time the policies were delivered, reasonably calculated to deter the persons receiving the same from making any examination thereof. Prince v. Overholser, 75 Wis. 646, 44 N. W. 775, was referred to. There the rule of Mamlook v. Fairbanks was expressly affirmed, the court saying, in effect, that to take the case out of the rule there must be fraud or mistake of such a nature that the defendant could not, with reasonable diligence, acquire knowledge thereof when put upon his inquiry.

We should say, in passing, that we deem it to be elementary law, as held in Locke v. Williamson, that when a person receives an article pursuant to an order or contract therefor, he is put upon inquiry as to departures therein from the thing bargained for, which are open to ordinary observation, nothing occurring then to induce him to accept the article as satisfying the order or contract without examining it. Such is the rule laid down in the Federal court in the McMaster Cases in all stages of the litigation over the six policies involved in the transaction, with which the court had to deal. In all stages of the litigation up to and inclusive of the final disposition thereof by the Supreme Court of the United States, as we shall see hereafter, the rule we have stated was clearly recognized and applied. We might go on through substantially all the great array of cases cited by counsel to show that deceit practised by the appellant’s agent in obtaining the applications for insurance excused the applicants from making any examination of their policies when received, with the same result as with those to which we have referred. To do so would draw this opinion out to a very great length, which is what we desire to avoid. We will suspend on the question here discussed, believing that the law is fully established, and that we have clearly demonstrated it, that a person is negligent in receiving an article and accepting it without any examination thereof, wholly relying on representations, whether fraudulent or not, made at or previous to the time when the article was contracted for or ordered. In this it should be understood that the mere reception of the article does not imply acceptance thereof till the expiration of reasonable time for examination. That is the rule of Locke v. Williamson.

It is earnestly contended by counsel for respondent that the former decision, holding that negligence on the part of the insured persons, in receiving and retaining the policies for a long time without objection, stands effectively in the way of respondent's recovery, is wrong on principle: (1) Because negligence does not preclude relief by a person damaged by intentional wrongdoing; (2) negligence of one does not accrue to the benefit of another to whom he owes no duty; (3) the court's decision is out of harmony with the doctrine that a person cannot profit by his own wrong; (4) nothing short of actual knowledge prevents relief till the right involved is extinguished by the statute of limitations,—that reasonable means of knowledge, and negligence in not profiting by it, from which knowledge in fact is presumed, is not sufficient. We will briefly answer each of the propositions, though in doing so we must repeat, somewhat, what was formerly said.

1. The conclusive answer to the first proposition is that it does not necessarily apply here, leaving out of view the question of whether anything occurred inducing belief as to the character of the policies at the time they were received, because it relates only to when there is a concurrence of intentional wrongdoing and negligence producing the injury, not where inexcusable inadvertence actually intervenes between the wrong and the injury complained of, so as to stand as the real producing cause of such injury.

2, 3. The second proposition does not fit this case, because the inexcusable negligence of a person, in entering into or abiding by a business transaction with another guilty of deception, influencing such person's conduct in the matter, is not held to be a direct defense to such person's claim for redress, but to be evidence of acquiescence with knowledge of the facts, or in connection with injury to such other by delay in such person's asserting his right to relief, if such assertion were successful, or in connection with some other efficient circumstance, to estop such person from doing anything inconsistent therewith. Even a wrongdoer has rights which the law respects. A person injuriously affected by the wrong of another in a business transaction may himself be guilty of wrong in asserting his right to redress, so affecting the latter as to give him the right to use the doctrine of estoppel for his protection against the former's claim. A third answer is this: Inexcusable negligence of a person in his business transactions with another is not, as said in the former opinion, held to be a defense to the former's claim for redress out of any favor found in the law for the latter, or defense, strictly so called, to such claim at all, in 67 L. R. A.

any other sense than that the law affords no redress under the circumstances, its policy being only to aid those who use some reasonable degree of care to guard their own interests. All of such reasons, we apprehend, will readily be recognized as elementary law.

Answering more particularly counsel's first proposition, a contract entered into by fraud on one side, or mistake through negligence on the other, is not absolutely void. While in one sense it is not the contract of the latter at all, because of his nonassent to its terms with knowledge of the facts, he may add the element of assent at any time, actually or constructively. Such a transaction is not then, in a legal sense, absolutely void; it is only voidable. Weed v. Page, 7 Wis. 503, 512; Potter v. Taggart, 54 Wis. 395, 400, 11 N. W. 678. When the essential element of assent is added, it gives effect to the transaction as a binding contract from the beginning, the same as if no deception had been practised. The evidence of such assent may rest solely in inexcusable neglect of the injured person to do anything inconsistent with the validity of the contract. Then if such person fails to recover, such other does not, in the sense of the salutary doctrine which counsel invokes, profit by his own wrong, but by such person's submission to the wrong. Or, if the other element be added, of misleading the wrongdoer himself in the meantime, the recovery is defeated by such person's own wrong, misleading the first wrongdoer to his prejudice, upon principles of estoppel. Speaking of contracts voidable for fraud, it is said in Wald's Pollock, Contr. p. 539: "Omission to repudiate within a reasonable time is evidence, and may be conclusive evidence, of an election to affirm the contract; and this," says the writer, "is in truth the only effect of lapse of time," by itself. Again the writer says (p. 541): "The party who made the misrepresentation in the first instance may have acted on the faith of the contract being valid in such a manner that a subsequent rescission would work irreparable injury to him."

Keeping in mind that rescission, whether the object of a suit in equity or forming the basis of a rescission at law, is governed by equitable principles (Gates v. Raymond, 106 Wis. 657, 82 N. W. 530; Gay v. D. M. Osborne & Co. 102 Wis. 641, 78 N. W. 1079; Ludington v. Patton, 111 Wis. 208, 86 N. W. 571), the application of this language from the opinion of Sir Barnes Peacock, in Lindsay Petroleum Co. v. Hurd, L. R. 5 P. C. 221, 239, to the facts before us is not difficult to see: "Where it would be practically unjust to give a remedy, either be cause the party has, by his conduct, done that which might fairly be regarded as equivalent to a waiver of it, or where by his conduct and neglect he has, though perhaps not waiving that remedy, yet put the other party in a situation in which it would not be reasonable to place him if the remedy were afterwards to be asserted, in either of these cases, lapse of time and delay are most material. . . . Two circumstances, always important in such cases, are, the length of the delay and the nature of the acts done during the interval, which might affect either party and cause a balance of justice or injustice in taking the one course or the other, so far as relates to the remedy."

In Clough v. London & N. W. R. Co. L. R. 7 Exch. 26, 35, Mellor, J., said, in effect; that, if a person is induced to enter into a contract by fraud, he has his election to avoid it till he elects to affirm it, and that lapse of time alone may constitute conclusive evidence of such election, with this exception, however: If the rights of innocent third persons intervene in the meantime, or if, in consequence of the delay, the position of the wrongdoer is affected, it will preclude him (the injured party) from exercising his right of rescission. See also, to the same effect, Oakes v. Turquand, L. R. 2 H. L. 325; Houlden v. Glasgow Bank, L. R. 5 App. Cas. 317; Kerr, Fraud & Mistake, 3d ed. by Williams, 10.

Those principles apply with great force to this class of cases. The respondent had the full benefit of his insurance for nearly a year before he repudiated the transaction, and his assignees had the benefit of theirs for months before they acted in that regard. The entire period covered by the first premium upon respondent's policy had, before he refused to abide by such policy, nearly expired. No one would venture to claim that, if he had died during such period of delay, the company would not have been bound by the policy, and his personal representatives would not have enforced it. During all that time the money paid by respondent for his policy formed a part of the fund relied upon by the other policy holders for their protection, part of the assets of the company upon which all its operations were based. It was not guilty of any moral turpitude except by imputation. Its officers were not guilty of any wrongdoing whatever. They supposed, and had a right to suppose, for months, that the company's soliciting agent acted honestly in obtaining the applications for the policies. They knew that the policies issued, received, and retained were in strict accordance with the applications. They carried the risk assumed on their books as part of their liabilities, and the premiums paid, as before indicated, as part of their assets. All the policy holders of the company were interested in the fund of which the money sought to be recovered formed a part, and many of them, we may rightly assume, joined the company during the period of delay.

Speaking more particularly in regard to the third reason we have given for condemning counsel's second proposition, that the rule declared in the former opinion, that negligence may prevent a recovery in a case like this, is wrong on principle,—the rule following the maxim, "The law assists the vigilant, not the careless," Vigilantibus, et non dormientibus succurrunt jura, is grounded on that wise policy in the law which at every turn of life casts upon all persons in severalty, who are of sound mind and mature years, the personal duty to exercise some reasonable degree of care for their own protection, enforcing it, in some cases, solely by refusing to open the doors of judicial tribunals to those who deal heedless of their interests, depending upon the courts to protect them from injurious results, as that policy which in the end best protects individual members of society and at the same time guards against those responsibilities that can be better borne in an individual way, being unnecessarily or unreasonably, to any extent, cast upon the public at large. In that, as can readily be seen, the courts, while not excusing at all the iniquity of the wrongdoer, regarding the interests of society as a whole as well as individual rights, place a reasonable limit upon the use of those instruments provided for administering justice between man and man. Litigants do not bear the burden of administering justice except in a very small degree. It is borne in the greater part by the public at large. Proper appreciation of that will enable one to easily and clearly see the wisdom of that policy which extends the benefit of courts of law in business matters, only to those who use common prudence to guard their own interests. One may consent, either actually or constructively, to be imposed upon, if he sees fit, in a business transaction, and the courts will not interfere. It is unfortunate that courts have sometimes been so swayed by apparent hardship in applying the rules we have stated to particular cases, as to use language in opinions leading to false notions both as to the reason of the law and its application,—language quite liable to mislead unless one is firmly grounded in the philosophy of the law so as not to be unduly disturbed by the rhetorical flights sometimes indulged in by judges, seemingly losing sight, for the moment, of a safe landing place. Evidence of such mental excursions is not hard to find in some of the quotations called to our attention by the learned counsel for respondent, which have, perhaps not unreasonably, produced conviction in counsel's mind that the judgment appealed from is wholly right. The correct idea is expressed by a leading case in the Supreme Court of the United States, often cited and followed by this court, and cited by the learned counsel for respondent, substantially thus: Want of proper care on the part of the vendee of an article to protect himself from imposition takes from him all just claims for relief, whether his negligence is attributable to his indolence or credulity. Slaughter v. Gerson, 13 Wall. 379, 20 L. ed. 627. Clearly, the court used the term "just claim" solely as regards the right of the purchaser to invoke judicial power to save himself from loss, not with the idea that the moral wrong done by the vendor could be balanced by his victim's negligence. Obviously, there are many such wrongs for which the machinery of courts does not furnish a remedy. Perhaps the reason for the rule is as clearly stated in the early case of Moore v. Turbeville, 2 Bibb, 602, 5 Am. Dec. 642, often cited by courts and text writers, as anywhere: "There are many instances in which a person may be guilty of a moral delinquency, without incurring a legal responsibility; for legal obligations are necessarily more circumscribed in their nature than moral duties. Fides servanda is indeed a rule of law, as well as of morality, and will be rigorously enforced in favor of one who is chargeable with no culpable negligence or inattention to his own interest. But to one so chargeable, the law will not afford relief. . . . The law does not deny its aid in such case, because it looks upon a want of candor and sincerity with indulgence, but because it will not encourage that indolence and inattention, which are no less pernicious to the interest of society. A diligent attention to our own concerns, as well as good faith to others, is a virtue; and the law, while it recognizes the rules which tend to preserve the latter, at the same time is careful to guard the principles which prompt to the exercise of the former. With respect to points plainly within the reach of every man's observation and judgment, and where an ordinary attention would be sufficient to guard against imposition, the want of such attention is, to say the least, an inexcusable negligence. To one thus supinely inattentive to his own concerns, and improvidently and credulously confiding in the naked and interested assertions of another, the maxim, Vigilantibus, et non dormientibus, jura subveniunt, emphatically applies, and opposes 67 L. R. A.

an insuperable objection to his obtaining the aid of the law."

The supreme court of Ohio, in Etna Ins. Co. v. Reed, 33 Ohio St. 283, speaking on the same subject and citing in support a multitude of authorities, said that in matters of contract, if one negligently omits to guard his own interests, the law will not lend its help to aid him. Pages could be covered in citations to the same effect.

4. Counsel for respondent further attacks the former decision, standing firmly on the theory which the circuit court supposed ruled the case, that, conceding negligence may affect the right to recover in a case like this, it does not so operate in the absence of actual notice of the fraud; that if the wronged party is not thereafter negligent in electing what course he will pursue and informing the wrongdoer thereof, the remedy for rescission in equity, or for damages at law based on a previous rescission by the act of the party, will remain open to such party. It will be observed that the trial court did not deal at all, in the findings, with whether the policy holders were negligent in discovering the facts respecting the fraud. Counsel's contention was evidently adopted, that mere constructive notice, evidenced by negligence in not profiting by reasonable opportunity to discover the fraud, only sets running the statute of limitations: We confess there is some judicial support for that, contrary, however, to the great weight of authority, and to Mamlock v. Fairbanks and authorities affirming that case in this court, as respondent's counsel seem to appreciate. An earnest appeal to disregard the Mamlock Case is made, though it is nowhere pointed out that it has been directly discredited by this or any other court or text writer, and it is not and cannot be denied that it has been here many times affirmed in spirit, if not in letter. We have not been able to discover in any of the authorities brought to our attention a satisfactory reason for departing from the established judicial policy of the state indicated in that case. No case in this court has, in the decision thereof, directly or indirectly favored the doctrine that the right to rescind a contract for fraud continues during the running of the statute of limitations regardless of constructive notice of the facts. Means of knowledge of the fraud, said the court in the Mamlock Case, is always a material question in determining the right of rescission, and that is within the principle of caveat emptor, citing as a "principle so universally recognized by the authorities that it needs no further reference," Kerr, Fraud & Mistake, 101, to the effect that he who has under all the circumstances reasonable opportunity to discover the deceit, is chargeable with knowledge thereof to the same effect as if he possessed actual knowledge of the subject. That doctrine is laid down in 2 Parsons, Contr. pp. 781, 782, in these words: "If he rescinds on the ground of fraud, he must do so at once on discovering the fraud. Any delay, especially if it be injurious to the other party, would be regarded as a waiver of his right. The mere lapse of time, if it be considerable, goes far to establish a waiver of this right; and if it be connected with an obvious ability on the part of the defrauded person to discover the fraud at a much earlier period, by the exercise of ordinary care and intelligence, it would be almost conclusive."

In Erlanger v. New Sombrero Phosphate Co. L. R. 3 App. Cas. 1283, the language heretofore quoted from the judgment of the privy council in Lindsay Petroleum Co. v. Hurd, L. R. 5 P. C. 230, was cited with approval, with remarks by Lord Blackburn, recognizing that the deceived party may forfeit his right to rescind by failing to make his claim in that regard with reasonable promptness after "he knows, or may with reasonable diligence know, that he has been defrauded." Moncreiff, Fraud & Misrepresentation, 282.

McCarty v. New York L. Ins. Co. 74 Minn. 530, 77 N. W. 426, is cited by counsel as in direct conflict with Mamlock v. Fairbanks. The court there treated the subject of negligence as evidence of waiver, and negligence as a defense, but not as involving the right to judicial remedies as affected by public policy. A clear distinction was pointed out between negligence of a person in not protecting himself from fraud perpetrated by another at the time of signing and delivering to such other an application for an insurance policy, and negligence in failing to discover obvious departures from the application when the policy is received, nothing occurring at the time to lull such person into security on the subject. The language used by the learned judge as to the last situation mentioned, wherein some discrimination is made between the rights of a person injured by the fraud of another, as against such other and as against third persons, leaving out of view the doctrine of estoppel, overlooked, as it seems, some elementary principles which we have mentioned, and is in direct conflict with the Federal cases to which we have referred and will hereafter more particularly refer. It is significant that the subject was treated very briefly, no authorities being cited to support what was said. However, where the court, earlier in the case, discussed and disposed of the question of whether constructive notice of the fraud sets running the time within which the wronged party can rescind, constructive notice was recognized as effective as well as actual notice, and it was inferentially held that a statement of the rule not so recognizing the law to be is inaccurate. Here is the language used: "The rule, as generally laid down in the books, is that the right of rescission accrues only after discovery of the fraud, and that delay is not imputable against the party defrauded, until he makes that discovery. But we have no doubt that there may be cases where the party is so grossly negligent in failing to use means of knowledge within his possession, which he was bound to avail himself of, that delay would be imputable to him, even before he actually discovered the fraud. Hence perhaps a more accurate statement of the rule is that delay is not imputable to the party defrauded until he has sufficient knowledge of the fraud to make the delay material, or such means of knowledge as he was bound to avail himself of."

Leake, Contr. 394, and Browne v. McClintock, L. R. 6 H. L. 456, were referred to, which amply support what was said. That which the learned judge said was perhaps the way to accurately state the rule was thus recognized by Mr. Justice Field to be the law, in Slaughter v. Gerson, 13 Wall. 383, 20 L. ed. 628, to which we have before referred: "A court of equity will not undertake, any more than a court of law, to relieve a party from the consequences of his own inattention and carelessness. Where the means of knowledge are at hand and equally available to both parties, and the subject of purchase is alike open to their inspection, if the purchaser does not avail himself of these means and opportunities, he will not be heard to say that he has been deceived by the vendor's misrepresentations. If, having eyes, he will not see matters directly before them, where no concealment is made or attempted, he will not be entitled to favorable consideration when he complains that he has suffered from his own voluntary blindness, and been misled by overconfidence in the statements of another."

The exception mentioned,—which is found in all careful statements of the law in these words: "where no concealment is made or attempted,"—we have heretofore shown, refers to concealment made or attempted by some act of the wrongdoer at the time, or efficiently reaching to the occasion, when the wronged party should exercise his senses, reasonably, to protect his own interests. It will be seen that the law was so distinctly applied in the McMaster Cases to which we shall presently refer. We might go on reinforcing the Mamlock Case by a large number of citations, though we confess that the inaccurate statement of the rule under discussion, recognized by Judge Mitchell, as before indicated, can be found many times in legal opinions where constructive knowledge was not material, and in some instances, probably, it formed the basis for erroneous decisions, and for misleading judicial declarations in others, some of which are found quoted in the brief of counsel for respondent, and were referred to by him with great emphasis upon the oral argument. It would seem that the confession by so learned a judicial writer as Judge Mitchell, that the statement of the law as to when time for the rescission of a contract for fraud commences to run, as in the Mamlook Case, is probably the strictly accurate way to put the matter, and the other authorities to which we have referred, render any further vindication of such case unnecessary. If, however, it needs further support, that will be found in our treatment of the next reason urged by counsel for respondent why our former decision is wrong.

Leaving out of view what we formerly regarded as controlling decisions of this court, the McMaster Cases in the Federal court were cited as worthy of the highest regard in reaching a correct conclusion. It is now contended by respondent's counsel, as we understand his argument, that, admitting the effect of the decisions in the court of appeals, those cases (30 C. C. A. 532, 57 U. S. App. 638, 87 Fed. 63, and 40 C. C. A. 119, 99 Fed. 856) if in any event they could be considered as voicing the doctrine of the Federal courts, are of no force because the last decision was reversed by the Supreme Court of the United States, it being held, "in substance, that knowledge of the contents of the policies was not 'legally imputable' to McMaster because of his failure to read them." "But," says the learned counsel, "it is not necessary to multiply citations to show the error of the assumption that the doctrine of constructive notice can be made available as a cover for fraud." In that is a most striking indication of the misapprehension in the mind of counsel of what we aimed to say, and in our view plainly said, in the former opinion, and a strikingly illegitimate characterization of the solemn decision of this court, which was based on what counsel admits to be the established doctrine in Mamlook v. Fairbanks is to stand as the settled law. Constructive notice was not formerly held to be under any circumstances a "cover for fraud." It was held to be evidence of assent, regardless of the fraud, or, if not such, of inexcusable negligence, waiving judicial remedies for fraud; and not upon mere assumption, but upon the authority of this court in previous decisions, and of most other courts.

Here we may, as it seems, properly and beneficially digress to make some observations on aspects of the argument for and on rehearing. It is hardly legitimate, in endeavoring to persuade the court to recede from a decision, admittedly right if a previous decision of the court of long standing is to be followed, to refer to the later decision as based on error of assumption, and to speak, as was done in the motion for reargument, of the former decision as if it were a personal affair, and of decisions in this and other courts, and the reasoning therein found, as mere "wind of doctrine." It is not understood here that the former opinion was based on assumption, or upon anything but judicial authority, largely drawn from our own judicial history. It was a careful, considerate decision of the court, voiced by the writer, as its instrument, to whose lot it happened to fall to perform that duty, and who performed it, keeping strictly within the lines decided upon. Courts are not infallible in fact, and never will be so long as the law must be administered by human agencies; but their judgments, based on judicial authority, are not properly referred to as based on "error of assumption," or mere "wind of doctrine." Nor are they the work of any particular member of the court,—not of the one upon whom may devolve, under the court rules, the duty of giving voice to the grounds for it in the opinion, any more than the others. The idea sometimes in the mind of counsel in viewing a decision, that it is something other than that of the court, is erroneous, and is liable to stimulate inconsiderate action on the part of counsel, both in language and procedure. It gives to counsel the appearance of not appreciating the responsibility resting here to decide controversies as to the best of our ability it is given us to decide, regardless of the effects and consequences upon parties or counsel in the particular litigation, necessary to enable them to view with complacency the final result, whatever it may be. In connection with these remarks, to the end that the beneficial purpose intended may not be misconceived, we wish to record the fact that we greatly appreciate the earnest, faithful devotion of the eminent counsel for respondent in this case to the interests he stood for in court, and entertain a high regard for his ability, industry, and courage, which is manifest on his every appearance here, and for the aid which his labor has given us in arriving at a correct conclusion now.

Returning to the McMaster Cases, we will say, and endeavor to demonstrate, that counsel is in error in his view that the supreme court, in reversing the decision of the court of appeals, 40 C. C. A. 119, 99 Fed. 856, held that possession of a policy of insurance does not impute knowledge of its contents, in the absence of any deception practised upon the possessor subsequent to his making the application therefor, reasonably calculated to deter him from examining such policy at the time of its receipt. The court, as it seems to us, held directly to the contrary. We can best demonstrate the correctness of that view by giving a full history of the McMaster litigation as found in the Federal reports. Here is the history: Fred A. McMaster signed applications for six policies of life insurance in the New York Life Insurance Company, delivering them to such company's agent. After the applications were signed the agent, without the applicant's knowledge or consent, wrote into them these words: "Please date the policies same as applications," in order to further his own interests by obtaining credit for the work in the year in which such applications were made, helping to make up the necessary amount of insurance taken by him during such year to entitle him to a greater percentage upon the business of such year, as his compensation for service, than he would otherwise obtain. The policies were issued, dated as directed, making the annual-premium payment December 12 in each year, when it otherwise would have been made December 18 in each year. As the applications were when signed, the first payment would have covered thirteen months from the time the first premium was paid, which was December 26, 1893. By the unauthorized act of the agent, the life of the policies was cut down so they had but twelve months and seventeen days, after the actual delivery thereof, to run. McMaster failed to pay the premiums on his policies when due by their terms, December 12, 1894. He died December 18th, the day he supposed the payments were due. An action was brought by his administrator to reform the policies, advancing the due date of the annual premium from December 12th to December 18th of each year, in accordance with the applications as they were when signed. There was evidence that the policies were delivered ostensibly responsive to the applications, no evidence being produced of any communication at the time of such delivery to McMaster to deter him from examining the same. There was evidence to the effect that the agent represented, when the applications were made, that the first payment of premium would cover a period of thirteen months. McMaster made no complaint at any time that the policies were not as agreed upon. He did not read them or know that they were not so drawn as to make the first payment carry the policies till December 18th the next year. The company's collector called on him December 11th or 12th before he died, to whom he said he did not intend to keep up the policies, but made no complaint whatever. The court held, on those facts, that, if fraud was committed on McMaster, his keeping the policies as he did, without objecting when he had ample opportunity to know their contents and to reject them if he did not want them, since he was not deterred from doing so by anything said or done by the company after the applications were signed, was in law a waiver of the fraud, precluding any judicial relief therefor. The court said: "He could not have been received as to the terms or legal effect of these contracts, if he read them. It was his duty to read and know the contents of the policies when he accepted them. It is true that the evidence is that he did not read them, but the legal effect of his acceptance is the same as if he had read them. He had the opportunity to read and to learn their contents, and, if he did not, it was his own gross negligence, and no act of the insurance company or its agent that concealed them and misled him as to their effect." [30 C. C. A. 535, 536, 57 U. S. App. 644, 87 Fed. 66, 67.]

Taking up the question of whether the statement made by the agent when the applications were made, to the effect that the first payment would cover thirteen months, was sufficient to take the case out of the rule requiring a person, upon receiving an article ostensibly upon fulfilment of an order or contract, to see obvious departures therein from the thing bargained for, the court held that nothing short of something said or done at the time of the delivery of the article, the applicant therefor then having ample opportunity to examine it as to defects therein, open to ordinary observation, throwing him off his guard and reasonably excusing him from making such examination, will excuse him from improving the opportunity for such examination; and if he does not intend to assent to keep the contract in satisfaction of his order, within a reasonable time thereafter, from notifying the party from whom he received such article that it will not be so accepted. This language on the subject was used, in addition to that just quoted: "The statement of the agent fourteen days before the deceased received the policies that they would insure him for thirteen months from the payment of the first premiums was not a statement of an existing fact. It was not calculated to impose upon him, or to prevent him from reading his policies and learning for himself whether this promise had been kept or broken." To the quoted language in the whole the court cited many authorities, including cases decided by this court. The conclusion reached was that neither a court of law nor of equity could afford the McMaster estate relief. The decision was inferentially approved by the Federal Supreme Court by its judgment refusing to issue a writ of certiorari to review it. 171 U. S. 687, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 944. Later, McMaster's administrator commenced an action to recover upon the policies in the circuit court for the northern district of Iowa, and was defeated. The case was carried to the circuit court of appeals for review, where the judgment was affirmed, the court following the decision in 30 C. C. A. 532, 57 U. S. App. 638, 87 Fed. 63, the evidence being substantially the same in both cases, except in the latter it was made to appear that the agent personally delivered the policies to McMaster, stating then, in response to the latter's inquiry as to whether they were as promised, and would insure him for thirteen months for the first premium, that they were and would; and the premiums were paid upon such assurance being given. The court held that such circumstances, as a matter of law, were not sufficient to excuse McMaster for not knowing the terms of his policies and seasonably objecting to them if he did not care to accept them as satisfying what he bargained for. The judgment was carried for review to the supreme court, and was there reversed solely on the ground that the assurance to McMaster at the time of the delivery of the policies, rendered the question of whether his keeping them as he did, without objecting, constituted an acceptance thereof as satisfying what was bargained for, one of fact for the jury. The general principles upon which the case was decided by the trial and appellate courts were fully approved, but it was held that the false representations made at the time of the delivery of the policies had sufficient tendency to throw McMaster off his guard,—to lull him into security as to their being what he expected.—to prevent the court from holding, as matter of law, that he was inexcusably negligent, precluding him from successfully invoking the aid of the court to redress the wrong committed by the company's agent in its name. Speaking of the changed situation produced by giving proper significance to the circumstance mentioned, this language was used: "We are unable to concur in the view that McMaster's omission to read the policies when delivered to him and payment of the premiums made constituted such negligence as to estop plaintiff from denying that McMaster, by accepting the policies, agreed that the insurance might be forfeited within thirteen months from December 12, 1893." McMaster v. New York L. Ins. Co. 183 U. S. 25, 46 L. ed. 64, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 10.

There is the rule clearly recognized that when a person receives a policy of insurance in response to an application therefor, or as the result of a written application, or a written application and verbal communications between him and the agent of the company issuing the policy, unless some misrepresentation or fraud is practised upon him at the time of the delivery of the policy, furnishing some reasonable excuse for his not reading and knowing its provisions so far as they would, by such reading, be readily understood, it is such negligence not to so read and know, that if he neglects to object to the policy within a reasonable time after receiving the same, the delay will estop him from obtaining judicial aid to remedy any injury he may suffer from the policy not being as agreed upon. That, as we have seen, is not because of any breach of duty on his part to the wrongdoer, but because of breach of duty to himself, or his assent to the contract. The idea of counsel for respondent that there can be no negligence in circumstances such as we have discussed which can help the wrongdoer because the injured party owes the wrongdoer no duty, grows out of failure to appreciate that negligence in a case like this does not, except when coupled with circumstances effecting an estoppel, presuppose duty of the injured person to the wrongdoer, but as we have indicated, duty of such person to himself.

All the reasons advanced for a different decision than that formerly announced as to the law of this case, which seem worthy of attention, have now been discussed. There remains to be considered the subject of whether we before correctly applied the law to the facts. At the threshold of that inquiry we met the point made by appellant's counsel,—not considered on the former occasion because unnecessary in view of other questions decided,—that there is no evidence that Bostwick placed himself in a position, before this action was commenced, to give him a complete cause of action. That is, that he had not, before his suit was commenced, rescinded his policy. There is no controversy but that, promptly after he actually discovered the facts he complained of the fraud established in the case and made known to appellant his election to disaffirm the policy. It does not appear that then, or at any subsequent time, he formally offered to return his policy, or that he made, before suit brought, a formal tender thereof to appellant. It is undisputed, however, that he insisted upon having his money back or a new policy; that he would not abide by the transaction as it stood; and that appellant positively refused to make any change in the matter, and denied his right to rescind. Such denial was, in effect, found by the trial court, and not excepted to. There is a finding that respondent offered to return his policy, which finding is excepted to. It is considered that the repeated demands by respondent for a return of his policy or for a new one in accordance with his understanding of the application, carried with them, inferentially, a sufficient offer to surrender the policy to effect a complete rescission thereof, before suit was commenced, in view of appellant's unqualified denial of respondent's right. This court has several times so held under similar circumstances. Potter v. Taggart, 54 Wis. 395, 11 N. W. 678; Herman v. Gray, 79 Wis. 182, 48 N. W. 113.

True, a cause of action at law to recover the consideration paid upon a contract void for fraud is not complete so that a suit may be maintained to enforce it until the transaction has been fully repudiated, the complaining party having done all that in justice he ought to do, measured by settled laws on the subject, to restore the wrongdoer to his former position. The idea is that the existence of the cause of action itself depends upon the contract, binding till avoided, having been in fact avoided. Hence, in such a case as this the plaintiff must fail unless he is able to show that before he commenced the same the contract relations between him and the defendant, which were fatally tainted with fraud, had been wholly severed so far as was reasonably within his power to accomplish it. We must not overlook the distinction between an action at law based on rescission for fraud,—an action where rescission necessarily precedes the existence of the cause of action,—and an action in equity for rescission. In the former case rescission is effected by the act of the party injured. In the latter he seeks the aid of a court of equity to effect rescission. In the one case there must be an election to rescind, fully acted upon. That requires the complainant, before commencing suit, to return, or offer to return, that which he received, or willingness and ability to return the same, and such conduct on the part of the wrongdoer as to show that a formal offer or tender would have been wholly useless. In the other case there must be at least willingness and ability to restore the wrongdoer to 67 L. R. A.

his former position so far as justice requires, as a condition of the contract being set aside by the judgment of the court. These distinctions, which have been recently carefully elucidated by this court (Ludington v. Patton, 111 Wis. 208, 86 N. W. 571), need to be kept in mind. They have not always been, as indicated by the cases cited. We need not go further than Potter v. Taggart, 54 Wis. 395, 11 N. W. 678, to discover, in an action at law based on rescission, language wholly appropriate to an action in equity for rescission. In stating the conditions precedent to the bringing of the suit, it was said that the action was for rescission, and the rule in relation to the necessary conduct of the complainant to maintain such an action was somewhat confused with that requisite to an action in equity. That was intensified in Herman v. Gray, 79 Wis. 182, 48 N. W. 113. However, those cases may be considered as holding, and have generally, we think, been so considered, that there must be at least an unconditional offer to restore the wrongdoer to his former position before suit brought, or the equivalent, such as a complete repudiation of the fraudulent transaction, notice thereof to the wrongdoer, unconditional denial of the right of rescission on the latter's part, his attitude being such as to render a formal offer to return to him what he parted with useless, and a willingness and ability to make such return so far as justice requires, at the time of the trial, enabling the court then to give back to him what the complainant could not because it would not be received. The facts of this case fully meet those requirements, so we hold that they effected a complete avoidance of the policy by respondent before the action was commenced. His insistence, from the time he discovered the fraud down to the time of the commencement of the suit, upon a return of his money or possession of such a policy as he bargained for, and the unqualified refusal of the appellant to do either one thing or the other, rendered a formal offer on the former's part to tender back his policy, a useless proceeding.

Some other points are made by appellant, which are rendered immaterial by the conclusion we have reached.

Now in applying the law to the facts, in view of what has been said each of the policy holders must be considered as having had knowledge of the fraud from the time when, by the exercise of ordinary care, he might have had it. That time, as to Parker and Barrington, was substantially when they received their policies. As to each of them, as we have seen, there was no statement made, or circumstance which occurred after the making of the applications, reasonably excusing him for not examining his policy when it was received. Since, as to each of them, when he did make such examination, he easily and at once discovered the fraud that had been perpetrated upon him, we must assume that he ought to have had knowledge thereof very soon after his policy came to his hands. We have no finding by the trial court as to electing to rescind the policies within a reasonable time, except upon the theory that constructive knowledge of the fraud did not start the time therefor running. That left several months' time out of view. We adhere to our former decision that upon the evidence Parker and Barrington are chargeable, as a matter of law, with knowledge of the fraud from the time they received their policies: that, as a matter of law, they waited thereafter an unreasonable length of time before electing to rescind the same. Therefore, as to the assigned claims, there can be no recovery.

As to the Bostwick policy, it is considered that the assurance contained in the letter accompanying it when it came into respondent's hands, in effect that it was in accordance with the understanding which he supposed and had a right to suppose was written into the application, was reasonably calculated to lull him into security on the subject and cause him to lay the policy aside without examining it. It is useless here to discuss at length the particular wording of the letter containing such assurance. We have weighed it in every reasonable aspect in which it can, in our judgment, be viewed, resulting in a conclusion—not without some misgivings, we confess, on the part of some of the members of the court as to its correctness,—that it was not, as a matter of law, entirely unreasonable for Bostwick, relying upon the letter which presumably he read, to lay the policy aside without reading it. True, the letter characterized the policy as a 5-per-cent debenture contract, and Bostwick testified that such a policy of a particular character was urged upon him by the agent at the time the application was taken, and that he then insisted that he would not take anything but a ten-annual-payment life policy, indicating, in one view, that the two policies were at the time of the application considered as entirely different. But it is also true, as we understand it, that a 5-per-cent debenture policy might well be written on a 10-annual-payment life plan. Therefore, the assurance contained in the letter, that the policy was in accordance with the application, might reasonably be said to convey the idea that it was a 10-annual-payment life contract with the 5-per-cent debenture feature which the agent so strongly recommended. In that view it is considered, not without some hesitation, we must say, that the circumstances characterizing the delivery of the policy are substantially the same as those in the last McMaster Case, which were deemed of sufficient significance to stand effectively in the way of a conclusion that, as a matter of law, McMaster knew the contents of his policies from the time he received them. Guided by that decision, we are constrained to hold that the assurance to Bostwick may be reasonably said to satisfy the principle, said in the Mamlock Case to be concomitant and necessary to be considered with the maxim, Vigilantibus, et non dormientibus, jura subveniunt, and the rule of law based thereon, "that the seller must not use any art or practise any artifice, to conceal defects, or make any representations, or do any act, to throw the purchaser off his guard, or to divert his eye, or to obscure his observation, or to prevent his use of any present means of information." In that light we must hold that it does not appear, as a matter of law, that Bostwick was chargeable with knowledge of the fraud found to have been practised upon him till he obtained actual knowledge thereof. That leaves the question of whether he ought to have read his policy when he received it notwithstanding the assurance accompanying it, one of fact not covered by the findings. It must be solved before a complete disposition of this case can be made. In the McMaster Case, it will be remembered, the farthest the court went was to hold that the question of whether the assurance given McMaster when his policy was delivered, was sufficient to render the question of whether he was inexcusably negligent, testing his conduct by what persons of ordinary care would generally do under the same or similar circumstances, in laying his policy away and not examining it, a jury question. The case was tried by a jury. Here the case was so triable, but was by consent tried by the court. In that situation this court does not direct the judgment to be rendered if the unsolved issues of fact might go either way and it is doubtful which is proper, so that in attempting to decide them originally here injustice might be done. Brown v. Griswold, 109 Wis. 275, 85 N. W. 363. If the time within which respondent was bound to make his election to rescind the policy commenced to run from the time when he obtained actual knowledge of the fraud, the circumstances being such as not to charge him with constructive knowledge, then there should be a recovery as to his policy, as decided by the trial court. But if, on the other hand, it shall be found as a fact that, notwithstanding the language of the letter accompanying his policy, and all the evidence bearing on the question, he was inexcusably negligent in not looking at the paper when he received it, or soon thereafter, and observing the evident departures therein from the one he intended to apply for, he is not entitled to recover.

The judgment of the circuit court is reversed and the cause remanded with directions to decide the question of fact suggested as being yet unsolved, and to then render judgment in accordance with this opinion.

Cassoday, Ch. J., dissenting in part:

I concur in the result of the decision in this case, except as to the Bostwick policy; and as to that I think the judgment should be affirmed. As to that policy, the evidence, in my judgment, clearly brings the case within the well-established rule stated in a recent standard work, cited by plaintiff's counsel, as follows: "By the overwhelming weight of authority, ordinary prudence and diligence do not require a person to test the truth of representations made to him by another as of his own knowledge, and with the intention that they shall be acted upon, if the facts are peculiarly within the other party's knowledge or means of knowledge, though they are not exclusively so, and though the party to whom the representations are made may have an opportunity of ascertaining the truth for himself." 14 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 120. The principle upon which the rule is based is sanctioned in cases cited in the opinion filed and the decision herein. It is cited merely as a concise summary of the law applicable to the Bostwick policy. Such evidence is, in my opinion, sufficient to sustain the judgment. The mere fact that the trial court did not specifically find upon the subject is no good ground for refusing to affirm the judgment so far as it relates to that policy. Wilkinson v. Wilkinson, 59 Wis. 560, 18 N. W. 527, and cases there cited. Jones v. Jones, 71 Wis. 520, 38 N. W. 88; Deitz v. Neenah, 91 Wis. 425, 426, 64 N. W. 299, 65 N. W. 500; Williamson v. Neeves, 94 Wis. 666, 69 N. W. 806; Disch v. Timm, 101 Wis. 189, 77 N. W. 196; Re Callahan, 102 Wis. 561, 78 N. W. 750.

67 L. R. A.

Paul VOGT, Appt.,

v.

Joe SHIENEBECK, Respt.

(.....Wis.....)

- *1. One who undertakes to accomplish a certain result, by implication agrees to supply all the means necessary thereto.
2. Courts take judicial notice that, where one agrees to sell to another property "f. o. b. cars" at the place of shipment, such term means that the seller will, without expense or act of the buyer, deliver to the latter the subject of the sale on cars at such place.
3. The term "f. o. b. cars," in mercantile contracts, means free on board cars, and so plainly as not to admit of explanation or change by reference to extrinsic evidence or circumstances. It prima facie means, also, when used as regards the seller, that he will procure the cars for use in executing the contract; and such ordinary meaning cannot be changed without clear and satisfactory evidence of a custom to the contrary, known to both parties to the transaction at the making of the contract.
4. When a contract has been reduced to writing, evidence of what occurred between the parties in respect thereto at the time thereof or prior thereto is inadmissible.
5. The rule that where a written contract is made as a mere part execution of an entire verbal contract, that portion not embodied in the paper may be shown by parol, applies only where such portion is in itself a distinct, complete contract, not to mere stipulations in regard to and varying the terms of the written contract.
6. In an action to recover damages for the breach of an executory contract to sell and deliver goods, the general rule is that the difference between the market value thereof at the time and place of delivery, and the contract price, with interest from the time of the breach, is the true measure.
7. The basis of such rule is that the buyer at the time of the breach presumably could have supplied himself with the goods at the time and place agreed upon for the delivery; and where such is not the case the rule does not apply, but the matter is governed by the broad principle that recoverable damages in such circumstances are "such as may fairly and reasonably be considered as either arising naturally, i. e., according to the usual course of things from such breach of contract itself, or such as may reasonably be supposed to have been in contemplation of both parties at the time

*Headnotes by MARSHALL, J.

NOTE.—As to effect of contract to ship goods f. o. b. see also Samuel M. Lawder & Sons Co. v. Albert Mackie Grocery Co. 62 L. R. A. 795, and note; and a recent case in the circuit court of the United States for the northern district of Illinois, holding that the obligation to deliver coal f. o. b. did not require the seller to furnish cars. Evanston Elevator & Coal Co. v. Castner, 133 Fed. 409.

they made the contract, as the probable result of the breach of it."

8. When the general rule of damages does not apply as above stated, and there was a market value for such property at the time agreed upon for the delivery, at the point to which the property was to be consigned, the difference between the contract price and such value, less any expense which the buyer, if the contract had been performed, would have been put to in delivering the goods at such place, with interest on the residue at the legal rate, from the date of the breach, is the proper measure of damages.

(September 27, 1904.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Ashland County in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for a breach of contract for sale of lumber. Reversed.

Statement by Marshall, J.:

Action to recover damages for breach of contract for the sale of lumber. The complaint was to the effect that defendant contracted to sell plaintiff 100,000 feet of 1-inch pine lumber then owned by the former and piled at Stadler's mill, near the village of Butternut, Wisconsin, at $8 per thousand feet for the culls, and $15 per thousand feet for common or better, delivery to be made to the plaintiff free on board cars at Butternut upon demand by him within two months from November 15, 1902, and the customary inspection fees to be paid one half by each party: that defendant breached such contract by refusing to deliver the lumber when the same was duly demanded, or at all, to the plaintiff's damage in the sum of $1,500.

The defendant, for answer to the complaint, denied all the allegations thereof, and alleged the making of a contract substantially as stated in the complaint, except that it was agreed, as part of such contract, that the cars for use in delivering the lumber to the plaintiff were to be furnished by him, the lumber to be delivered only upon his demand within two months after November 15, 1902; that he would furnish the inspector to examine, grade, and measure the lumber, the expenses to be paid equally by the parties; and that plaintiff did not within the time specified, or before the commencement of the action, demand the lumber or furnish cars for use in delivering the same, or furnish or offer to furnish the inspector; that, on the contrary, he at all times neglected to make any demand for the lumber, and refused to accept the same.

The evidence showed that the contract was in writing and as follows:

Received of Paul Vagt of Milwaukee, Wis., Five (5) Dollars on account of sale 67 L. R. A.

to him by me, made this 15th day of November, 1902, of 100,000 feet more or less of pine one-inch lumber at Eight Dollars per 1,000 feet cull & Fifteen Dollars per 1,000 feet common or better now at Stadler's Mill, f. o. b. cars Butternut, Wis., to be delivered upon demand within two months from above date. Inspection fees paid by both of us.

Dated at Butternut, Wis., Novbr. 15th, 1902. Josef Shienebeck.

Evidence was allowed, against objections by plaintiff's counsel, in effect that at the time such contract was made plaintiff verbally agreed to furnish the cars for use in delivering the lumber; also as to what the custom was between buyer and seller in regard to such matters. The court instructed the jury, in substance, that the burden of proof was on plaintiff to establish by a fair preponderance of the evidence that defendant agreed to furnish the cars, and that, if the jury were satisfied that he did so agree, plaintiff was entitled to recover; otherwise defendant was so entitled, and to the extent of the difference between the contract price for the lumber and the value at the time and place the same should have been delivered as agreed, if there were lumber, purchasable, of the quality and quantity contracted for at such time and place; otherwise the difference between such contract price and the value at such time at Milwaukee, less half the reasonable fees for the services of an inspector and what it would have cost to transport the lumber from the agreed delivery point to Milwaukee. The court required the jury to find whether "f. o. b.," as used in the contract, meant free on board cars, instructing them that if such were the case it was defendant's duty to furnish the cars unless there was an agreement to the contrary. The court further instructed the jury that plaintiff, in order to recover, must prove by a fair preponderance of the evidence that the words "f. o. b. cars," as used, meant that the defendant would furnish the cars for the shipment of the lumber.

At the close of the evidence defendant's counsel moved the court for a verdict, which was refused. The verdict was in favor of the defendant, and judgment was entered thereon, from which this appeal was taken, questions being duly saved for review discussed in the opinion.

Messrs. Bohmrich & Williams, for appellant:

One who undertakes to accomplish a certain result, by necessary implication agrees to supply all means necessary to such result.

John O'Brien Lumber Co. v. Wilkinson, 117 Wis. 408, 94 N. W. 337.

The clear weight and preponderance of the evidence establishing that the defendant did not deliver the lumber f. o. b. cars Butternut, there was no warrant for submitting the case to the jury on the question of whether or not the defendant was guilty of breach.

Hubbard v. McLean (Wis.) 99 N. W. 466; Flaherty v. Harrison, 98 Wis. 559, 74 N. W. 360; Finkelston v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 94 Wis. 270, 68 N. W. 1005; Lewis v. Prien, 98 Wis. 87, 73 N. W. 654.

Messrs. Salter & Holland, for respondent:

The agreement between plaintiff and defendant provided that the lumber was to be delivered on demand. A demand was therefore necessary.

Tiffany, Sales, p. 186: Posey v. Scalca, 55 Ind. 282; Rhyner v. Carver, 84 Wis. 181, 53 N. W. 849.

There was an issue for the jury on the question as to whether or not the plaintiff or the defendant was to furnish the cars for shipment of the lumber.

Boyington v. Sweeney, 77 Wis. 55, 45 N. W. 938; 27 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 862.

Marshall, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The motion for a verdict in appellant's favor was based on the assumption that from the contract or evidence, or both, it conclusively appeared that it was respondent's duty to furnish the cars. The trial court's view, as indicated in the statement, was that prima facie the contract requiring respondent to deliver the logs f. o. b. cars at the point where the transit by rail was to commence burdened appellant with the duty of furnishing the cars. So the jury were instructed: "The plaintiff must prove by a fair preponderance of evidence that the words 'f. o. b. cars,' as used in this case, mean that the defendant is required to furnish the cars for the shipment of the lumber in question." That is consistent only with this broad proposition being correct: As between buyer and seller of property to be conveyed by a common carrier, the seller having agreed to deliver the subject of sale to the buyer "f. o. b. cars" at the place where the transit is to begin, the implication of law or of fact is that the latter is to furnish the cars in place ready for loading. Doubtless the learned circuit court was guided by Boyington v. Sweeney, 77 Wis. 55, 45 N. W. 938, where, as regards a contract, the same in effect as the one before us, requiring the seller of logs to deliver the same on board cars for shipment, though the set phrase "f. o. b. cars" was not used, it was said:

"The duty of the defendant in regard to the delivery of the logs under the contract ended when they were placed on the cars. By the terms of the contract the plaintiffs were to receive them on the cars, and then the absolute title passed to them. The defendant was in no way bound to pay for the use of the cars on which they were to be loaded, or to pay for their transportation after they were placed on the cars. The plain inference to be derived from the contract is that the plaintiffs were to furnish the cars to receive and transport the logs to their destination."

No authority is cited to the proposition. Reference in the opinion to the attitude of counsel in respect to the matter and the printed argument indicates that the point was not contested in such a manner as to stimulate a very careful consideration of a doubtful question. The proposition seems contrary to universal understanding, and ought to be deemed a matter of judicial cognizance without the aid of evidence or adjudged cases. We apprehend that when one buys merchandise of another to be shipped to him by rail from a distant point, the delivery to be made to him f. o. b. cars at the point of starting, such other, as a matter of course, is expected to obtain from the railway company the necessary cars upon which to load the subject of the deal. Yet the doctrine of the Boyington Case is not wholly without support. Kunkle v. Mitchell, 56 Pa. 100; Dwight v. Eckert, 117 Pa. 508, 12 Atl. 32; Hocking v. Hamilton, 158 Pa. 107, 27 Atl. 836. However, this court, in the recent case of John O'Brien Lumber Co. v. Wilkinson, 117 Wis. 468, 94 N. W. 337, expressly repudiated such doctrine, holding that a seller, in the circumstances stated, impliedly agrees to obtain the cars, and not hold the buyer to any obligation till the goods are loaded thereon. So far as Boyington v. Sweeney is to the contrary, it was, in effect, though not in express terms, there overruled. This language was used by Mr. Justice Dodge, speaking for the court:

"The general rule is that one who undertakes to accomplish a certain result, by necessary implication agrees to supply all means necessary to such result. . . . Under this general rule, it would seem pretty obvious that one undertaking to load logs upon railroad cars ordinarily assumes the duty of obtaining the cars on which to load the logs, as much as any other implements with which to do the work. Both are alike in the open market, as much at the command of one as another, and the obtaining of each is equally essential to the accomplishment of the result."

"For the reasons stated, we cannot avoid the conclusion that the written contracts, upon their face, by necessary implication imposed on appellants the duty of obtaining the cars upon which they had agreed to load the logs."

That is supported by authorities generally holding that a sale f. o. b. cars means that the subject of the sale is to be placed on cars for shipment without any expense or act on the part of the buyer, and that as soon as so placed the title is to pass absolutely to the buyer, and the property be wholly at his risk, in the absence of any circumstances indicating a retention of such control by the seller as security for purchase money, by preserving the right of stoppage in transitu. A. J. Neimeyer Lumber Co. v. Burlington & M. River R. Co. 54 Neb. 321, 40 L. R. A. 534, 74 N. W. 670; Condon v. Kendall, 53 Neb. 282, 73 N. W. 659; Capehart v. Furman Farm Improv. Co. 103 Ala. 671, 40 Am. St. Rep. 60, 16 So. 627; Sheffield Furnace Co. v. Hull Coal & Coke Co. 101 Ala. 446, 14 So. 672; Knapp Electrical Works v. New York Insulated Wire Co. 157 Ill. 456, 42 N. E. 147; Silberman v. Clark, 90 N. Y. 522; Ex parte Rosevear China Clay Co. L. R. 11 Ch. Div. 560; Miller v. Seaman, 176 Pa. 291, 35 Atl. 134; Benjamin, Sales, 6th ed. 682; 1 Mechem, Sales, § 741, note: 4 Elliott, Railroads, § 1425. All of such authorities declare that a sale "f. o. b. cars" so plainly indicates that the seller, without expense to the buyer, is to deliver the subject of the sale on cars ready to be taken out by the carrier that the term is not open to construction. Some hold that evidence is admissible to show that the letters "f. o. b." as used in mercantile contracts stands for the words "free on board;" but, generally speaking, it is held that the courts will take judicial notice that such is the meaning, and that the import of the words is too plain to call for or permit judicial construction. It may be that such meaning would only prima facie include procurement by the seller of the carrier of cars, in place, ready for loading, and that a general custom, so well established as to become a part of the contract, might vary such prima facie meaning. But the burden would necessarily be upon the seller to establish such custom. It follows that the instruction under consideration is erroneous, and that, so far as such error led to the decision against appellant on the motion for a verdict, such decision is erroneous.

There was evidence on the part of the defendant to the effect that at the time of the verbal agreement preceding the making of the written contract, plaintiff said he would furnish the cars. The learned trial court denied the motion for judgment, assuming that such evidence raised a question for the jury. That is plain, because he expressly referred to such evidence in submitting the cause as to whether the plaintiff did or did not agree to furnish the cars. In that it seems the rule, that a written contract cannot be varied by parol evidence of what was said between the parties prior to or at the time of the making of the writing, was overlooked. The final result of all negotiation eventuating in the making of a contract which is reduced to writing, in the absence of reliable fraud or mistake, is conclusively presumed to be embodied therein, unless the writing appears clearly to be merely a part execution of an entire verbal contract, which is not the case in the instance before us. Here was the ordinary occurrence of closing contractual negotiations by reducing the consequent verbal agreement to writing. If, in doing so, anything was left out, the party prejudiced is without remedy upon the contract except to appeal to equity for its reformation and the enforcement thereof as corrected. John O'Brien Lumber Co. v. Wilkinson, 117 Wis. 468, 94 N. W. 337; Braun v. Wisconsin Rendering Co. 92 Wis. 245, 66 N. W. 196; Herbst v. Lowe, 65 Wis. 316, 26 N. W. 751. In Braun v. Wisconsin Rendering Co. it was said that the exception mentioned, to the exclusion of evidence of what was said or occurred at the time of making a written contract, is never to be so extended as to permit evidence of mere contemporaneous stipulations or conditions, the writing being the agreement reached, and not a mere part performance or incident of it. It follows that the oral testimony as to what plaintiff said respecting who was to furnish the cars, when the contract was made, cannot be regarded as a justification for denying appellant's motion for a verdict.

Whether, in denying the motion, the learned circuit court was in doubt as to whether the term "f. o. b. cars" was ambiguous in that it might or might not mean that the seller was to place the lumber on cars and procure them to be put in place for that purpose, and that such doubt involved a question of fact, is not altogether certain. This language was used in the charge: "The evidence that 'f. o. b.' means free on board cars is not disputed. In deciding this case you must take into consideration the written contract, . . . and you will observe the letters 'f. o. b.' are used therein, and if you find 'f. o. b.' mean free on board cars, it was the duty of the defendant to furnish the cars."

There being no question, as we have seen, but that the meaning of "f. o. b." as used in the contract is free on board cars, the court erroneously denied the motion for a verdict upon the theory that it was permissible for the jury to find some other meaning.

It does not seem to have occurred to the learned circuit court that "free on board cars" might not so conclusively indicate that the seller was to provide cars in place for him to load the lumber as to preclude evidence of a binding custom to the contrary. Witnesses were erroneously permitted to testify as to the meaning of "f. o. b." when, as we have seen, it is so plain that it was not permissible to explain it by custom or otherwise. The meaning of language used in a contract can only be shown by custom when it is ambiguous. Such evidence is permissible to interpret or explain or aid in that regard, not to contradict or add something not within the reasonable meaning of the language of the contract. Greenl. Ev. 294, 295. In Sheffield Furnace Co. v. Hull Coal & Coke Co. 101 Ala. 446, 481, 14 So. 672, and the other case to which we have referred, it is held correctly, as we believe, that the meaning of "f. o. b." and "free on board," as customarily used in mercantile contracts, is so obvious as not to be open to interpretation. Whether such meaning includes, under the circumstances of this case, the duty of the seller to procure the cars in place for his use in loading the merchandise, and that evidence is not permissible to show the existence of a custom which the parties contracted with reference thereto, is not altogether plain, but we are constrained to hold that it is. In any event, the inference from the use of such term could only be changed by clear proof of the existence of a custom, and that the buyer knew thereof at the time of contracting, or that it had existed so long that, presumably, he knew thereof. Hall v. Storrs, 7 Wis. 253. There was no such clear evidence here. There was no definite evidence at all in the matter.

The court correctly instructed the jury that plaintiff duly demanded of the defendant shipment of the lumber under the contract. That, in connection with what has heretofore been said, shows there was nothing to submit to the jury as to whether defendant was guilty of an actionable breach of the contract as alleged in the complaint. Therefore the court erred in refusing to take all the questions from the jury except such as related to the damages appellant was entitled to recover.

Complaint is made because the court permitted evidence to go to the jury as to the market value, at the agreed time and place for the delivery, of such lumber as that in question, though there was no evidence that there was a like quantity of such lumber then and there, or in that vicinity, which could have been purchased. A careful examination of the record satisfies us that error was committed in this respect. Respondent's counsel refers to places where it is said evidence can be found supporting his contention, but we are unable to find it. It is not in the record. On the contrary, the evidence referred to establishes the contention of appellant. The statement is made that lumber like that in question could have been obtained in most any lumber yard in the vicinity of Butternut or along the Central Railroad, referring to the evidence of Mr. Altman, who testified, however, in effect, that no such quantity of lumber of the agreed quality was so obtainable. A like quantity of lumber of better quality could have been so obtained, but none of consequence of the same quality. As the evidence stood when the case was submitted to the jury, it seems that the rule in Cockburn v. Ashland Lumber Co. 54 Wis. 619, 12 N. W. 49, governed, as claimed by appellant's counsel. The general rule, as there stated, is: "In actions to recover damages for the breach of an executory contract to sell and deliver goods, . . . the difference between the market price of the goods at the time and place specified in the contract for delivering the same and the contract price is the measure of damages. The basis of this rule is that, on failure of the vendor to deliver, the purchaser may go into the market at the time and place of delivery, and supply himself with the same kind of goods at the market price. Hence, the difference between what he is compelled to pay for the goods, and what they would have cost him had the vendor performed his contract, justly measures the damages which he has sustained by the breach of the contract. But this rule presupposes that the purchasers may go into the market at the agreed time and place of delivery and obtain the goods."

But it is said that, where the basis for the rules does not exist, then some other rule must be applied that will, so far as practicable, satisfy the broad principle that recoverable damages for breach of contract are "such as may fairly and reasonably be considered either arising naturally, i. e., according to the usual course of things from such breach of contract itself, or such as may reasonably be supposed to have been in the contemplation of both parties at the time they made the contract, as the probable result of the breach of it."

Respondent knew at the time the contract in question was made that the subject thereof was to be shipped to appellant at Milwaukee, Wisconsin. He must have apprehended that, if he failed to make the delivery according to agreement, and appellant could not supply himself with the same amount and quality of lumber at or in the vicinity of the delivery point, he would probably suffer damages to the extent of the difference between the market value of such lumber at Milwaukee at the agreed time for delivery, and the contract price, less what it would have cost appellant for inspection fees and freight had the contract been performed, with interest on the principal sum of damages at the legal rate from the time of the breach to the date of the recovery.

That is the rule of damages contended for by appellant's counsel, and is approved.

Some other questions are presented by appellant's counsel, but they are all covered incidentally by the conclusions heretofore reached, or are rendered thereby immaterial, and therefore specific reference thereto and a discussion thereof becomes unnecessary and will be omitted.

The judgment is reversed and the cause remanded for a new trial.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, EIGHTH CIRCUIT.

Re BARBER ASPHALT PAVING COMPANY.

BARBER ASPHALT PAVING COMPANY, Petitioner,
v.

Page MORRIS, District Judge.

(132 Fed. 945.)

- *1. The pendency in a state court of a prior action between the same parties for the same cause furnishes no ground for an abatement or for a stay of proceedings in a subsequent action brought by the same plaintiff in a Federal court, where no conflict arises between the courts over the custody or dominion of specific property. Wherever, however, one of the courts secures by proper process the custody or dominion of specific property which it is one of the objects of the suit in the other court to subject to its judgment or decree, the latter action should not be dismissed, but it should be stayed until the proceedings in the court which first obtained jurisdiction of the property are concluded, or ample time for their termination has elapsed.
2. The jurisdiction of the Federal courts may not be limited or impaired by state legislation which confers exclusive jurisdiction of litigation upon state courts or prescribes exclusive methods of invoking that jurisdiction. Wherever the citizens of a state may secure a trial of their controversies by its courts of general jurisdiction either by original process, or by appeal, or by other proceedings, the citizens of different states may obtain the trial of like controversies between them by some appropriate action in the Federal courts.
3. Section 80 of the charter of Duluth,

*Headnotes by SANBORN, Circuit Judge.

NOTE.—The authority of the appellate courts of the United States to issue to the subordinate courts writs of mandamus, and other necessary writs, in aid of their appellate jurisdiction, is discussed, and the cases given which illustrate when, and under what circumstances, the authority will be exercised, in div. V. of a note to State ex rel. Fourth Nat. Bank v. Johnson, 51 L. R. A. 33, 67 L. R. A.

which provides for appeals from the allowance or rejection of claims against that city to the district court of St. Louis county, Minnesota, and prohibits the payment of such claims while such appeals are there pending, does not restrict the jurisdiction of the Federal courts over claims of citizens of other states, or the power of those courts to enforce their judgments upon such claims; and actions by original process in the Federal courts may be maintained in controversies over such claims without presenting them to the city council.

4. The United States circuit courts of appeals have jurisdiction to issue writs of mandamus in the exercise of, and in aid of, their appellate jurisdiction.
5. The test of appellate jurisdiction in the exercise and aid of which the courts of appeals may issue writs of mandamus is the existence of that jurisdiction, not its prior invocation. It is the existence of a right to review by a challenge of the final decisions or otherwise in the cases or proceedings to which the applications for the writs relate, and not the prior exercise of that right by appeal or by writ of error.
6. Appeals from the allowance by the city council of Duluth of the claims of a citizen of the state of West Virginia were taken by the city to the district court of St. Louis county, Minnesota, and the charter of the city prohibited its officers from paying the claims pending the appeals, except upon the order of that court. Thereupon the petitioner sued the city upon its claims in the Federal court. The judge who was holding that court stayed all proceedings in the case pending in it until the final determination of the appeals in the state court. Held, this was error, remediless otherwise than by the writ of mandamus. The court of appeals has jurisdiction to issue its writ of mandamus, and to command the judge holding the circuit court to vacate the stay, and to proceed with all convenient speed to try and adjudicate the controversy and to enforce the judgment upon it. Writ accordingly issued.

(October 24, 1904.)

PETITION for a writ of mandamus to compel defendant to proceed with the trial of an action. Granted.

Statement by Sanborn, Circuit Judge:

The Barber Asphalt Paving Company, a corporation of the state of West Virginia, presents its petition to this court for a writ of mandamus to induce the Honorable Page Morris, District Judge holding the circuit court for the district of Minnesota, to proceed to the trial and determination of an action at law against the city of Duluth which the petitioner commenced in that court on May 31, 1904. In response to the order to show cause why the mandamus should not be issued the respondent has filed an answer, and by the petition and answer these facts are admitted: In May, 1902, the Barber company entered into a contract with the city of Duluth to pave one of its streets for the sum of $54,760. Section 80 of the charter of that city provides that the city attorney may, and upon the request of seven taxpayers he must, appeal from the allowance by its common council of any claim exceeding $25, except the claims of employees or officers for wages or salary, to the district court of St. Louis county, which shall thereupon have jurisdiction of the parties and of the subject-matter, and that thereafter no order shall be issued for the payment of any part of the claim thus challenged until a certified copy of the judgment of the district court is filed with the city clerk. The Barber company paved the street. On August 3, 1903, the mayor and common council of the city ordered the payment to that company of $25,500 on account of labor and material furnished by it under its contract, and the city attorney, at the request of seven taxpayers, appealed from this allowance to the district court of St. Louis county, where this appeal is pending. On October 8, 1903, the mayor and council of the city allowed and ordered the payment to the Barber company of $8,180 on the same account, and at the request of the same taxpayers the city attorney appealed from this allowance to the same court, where this appeal is also pending. The city charter provides that these appeals shall be placed upon the calendar of the court for trial, that the court may require pleadings, that issues of law shall be summarily heard, and that issues of fact shall be tried as other issues of that character are heard in that court. Orders for pleadings and trials have been made in these appeals, but the Barber company appeared specially in both and challenged the jurisdiction of the court, and in one failed to plead farther when its objections were overruled. In May, 1903, before the allowance of these appeals, certain taxpayers of the city of Duluth, some of whom subsequently instigated these appeals, brought a suit against that city and the Barber company in the district court of St. Louis county to enjoin the city from paying anything to the petitioner on account of the work and material furnished by it under its contract. That suit was tried upon its merits, and in May, 1904, that court decided that the complainants were entitled to no relief, but stated in a memorandum filed with the decision that, if they had been diligent, they would have been entitled to an injunction, since, in the opinion of the court, the contract was invalid because there was not a sufficient amount in the permanent revolving fund at the time it was let to warrant its existence. In this state of the case the petitioner brought an action in the United States circuit court for the district of Minnesota against the city of Duluth on May 31, 1904, for the sum of $38,316.14, which it alleged was due to it under its contract, and a portion of which had been allowed by the city council and was challenged by the appeals. The city moved the court to stay all proceedings in that action until the trial and final determination of the proceedings pending in the state court, and on July 26, 1904, Judge Morris made an order of the court that all proceedings in that action should be stayed until the final determination of the two appeals pending in the district court of St. Louis county.

Argued before Sanborn, Van Devanter, and Hook, Circuit Judges.

Messrs. Jared How and Carl Taylor, for petitioner:

Mandamus will lie to command an inferior court of the United States to hear and determine an action properly brought before it when it erroneously refuses to do so.

Ex parte Bradstreet, 7 Pet. 647, 8 L. ed. 815; Life & Fire Ins. Co. v. Wilson, 8 Pet. 291, 8 L. ed. 949; Life & Fire Ins. Co. v. Adams, 9 Pet. 571, 9 L. ed. 233; Kendall v. United States, 12 Pet. 622, 9 L. ed. 1220; Ex parte Roberts, 15 Wall. 384, 21 L. ed. 131; Ex parte United States, 16 Wall. 699, 21 L. ed. 507; Knickerbocker Ins. Co. v. Comstock, 16 Wall. 258, 21 L. ed. 493; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Wiswall, 23 Wall. 507, 23 L. ed. 103; Ex parte Schollenberger, 96 U. S. 369, 24 L. ed. 853; Harrington v. Holler, 111 U. S. 796, 28 L. ed. 602, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 697; Ex parte Morgan, 114 U. S. 174, 29 L. ed. 135, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 825; Ex parte Brown, 116 U. S. 401, 29 L. ed. 676, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 387; Ex parte Parker, 120 U. S. 737, 30 L. ed. 818, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 767; Re Parker, 131 U. S. 221, 33 L. ed. 123, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 708; Re Hohorst, 150 U. S. 653, 37 L. ed. 1211, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 221; Re Atlantic City R. Co. 164 U. S. 633, 41 L. ed. 579, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 208; Re Grossmayer, 177 U. S. 48, 44 L. ed. 665, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 535; United States ex rel. Iron County v. Severens, 18 C. C. A. 314, 37 U. S. App. 622, 71 Fed. 768; Kimberlin v. Commission to Five Civilized Tribes, 44 C. C. A. 109, 104 Fed. 653; Minnesota Moline Plow Co. v. Dowagiac Mfg. Co. 61 C. C. A. 352, 126 Fed. 746.

The United States circuit court of appeals has jurisdiction to issue a writ of mandamus to compel an inferior court to try and determine an action pending before the circuit court, of which it has appellate jurisdiction.

Kendall v. United States, 12 Pet. 622, 9 L. ed. 1220; Bath County v. Amy, 13 Wall. 248, 20 L. ed. 541; Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch, 175, 2 L. ed. 72; Ex parte Crane, 5 Pet. 190, 8 L. ed. 92; Re Green, 141 U. S. 325, 35 L. ed. 765, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 11; Ex parte Hoyt, 13 Pet. 290, 10 L. ed. 167; Virginia v. Rives (Ex parte Virginia) 100 U. S. 327, 25 L. ed. 672; Knickerbocker Ins. Co. v. Comstock, 16 Wall. 258, 21 L. ed. 493.

The petitioner is entitled, as a matter of right, to have its action in the circuit court tried in the ordinary course, without regard to the pendency of the proceedings in the state court.

Stanton v. Embrey, 93 U. S. 548, 23 L. ed. 983; Gordon v. Gilfoil, 99 U. S. 169, 25 L. ed. 383; Merritt v. American Steel-Barge Co. 24 C. C. A. 530, 49 U. S. App. 85, 79 Fed. 228; Zimmerman v. So Relle, 25 C. C. A. 518, 49 U. S. App. 387, 80 Fed. 417; Green v. Underwood, 30 C. C. A. 162, 57 U. S. App. 535, 86 Fed. 427; Ogden City v. Weaver, 47 C. C. A. 485, 108 Fed. 568; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Wabash R. Co. 57 C. C. A. 322, 119 Fed. 678; Defiance Water Co. v. Defiance, 100 Fed. 178.

A state cannot tie up a citizen of another state having property rights within its territory to suits for redress in its own courts.

Cowles v. Mercer County, 7 Wall. 118, 19 L. ed. 86; Lincoln County v. Luning, 133 U. S. 529, 33 L. ed. 766, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 363; Chicot County v. Sherwood, 148 U. S. 529, 37 L. ed. 546, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 695; Edwards v. Hill, 8 C. C. A. 233, 19 U. S. App. 493, 59 Fed. 723; Reagan v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. 154 U. S. 391, 38 L. ed. 1021, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 560, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1047.

Mr. Bert Fesler, for respondent:

A writ of mandamus cannot be issued by the circuit court of appeals to command the circuit court to do an act, the doing of which cannot be reviewed on appeal or writ of error.

United States ex rel. Harless v. United States Ct. App. Judges, 29 C. C. A. 78, 56 U. S. App. 33, 85 Fed. 177; United States ex rel. Iron County v. Severens, 18 C. C. A. 67 L. R. A.

314, 37 U. S. App. 622, 71 Fed. 768; American Constr. Co. v. Jacksonville, T. & K. W. R. Co. 148 U. S. 372, 37 L. ed. 486, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 758; Re Rice, 155 U. S. 396, 39 L. ed. 198, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 149; Ex parte Whitney, 13 Pet. 404, 10 L. ed. 221; People ex rel. McClelland v. Dowling, 55 Barb. 197; Ex parte Ostrander, 1 Denio, 679.

The writ of mandamus, in the nature of a procedendo, should never issue unless the lower court has come to a full stop, or is perseveringly and arbitrarily delaying the final judgment.

Life & Fire Ins. Co. v. Adams, 9 Pet. 571, 9 L. ed. 233; Re Parker, 131 U. S. 221, 33 L. ed. 123, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 708; Ex parte Parker, 120 U. S. 737, 30 L. ed. 818, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 767; Ex parte Brown, 116 U. S. 401, 29 L. ed. 676, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 387; Re Hohorst, 150 U. S. 653, 37 L. ed. 1211, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 221; Livingston v. Dorgenois, 7 Cranch, 577, 3 L. ed. 444; Lewis v. Baltimore & L. R. Co. 10 C. C. A. 446, 8 U. S. App. 645, 62 Fed. 218.

It is never granted in anticipation of an omission of duty, but only after actual default.

Ex parte Cutting, 94 U. S. 14, 24 L. ed. 49; Ex parte Perry, 102 U. S. 183, 26 L. ed. 43; Ex parte Whitney, 13 Pet. 404, 10 L. ed. 221; Kimberlin v. Commission to Five Civilized Tribes, 44 C. C. A. 109, 104 Fed. 653.

No question of jurisdiction of the court of appeals over the action is involved. The exercise of such jurisdiction may have been delayed, but it has not been denied.

Minnesota Moline Plow Co. v. Dowagiac Mfg. Co. 61 C. C. A. 352, 126 Fed. 746; United States ex rel. Harless v. United States Ct. App. Judges, 29 C. C. A. 78, 56 U. S. App. 33, 85 Fed. 177; Kimberlin v. Commission to Five Civilized Tribes, 44 C. C. A. 109, 104 Fed. 653.

In a case of doubtful right, the writ of mandamus will not issue.

Life & Fire Ins. Co. v. Wilson, 8 Pet. 291, 8 L. ed. 949; Ex parte Davenport, 6 Pet. 661, 8 L. ed. 537; Ex parte Cutting, 94 U. S. 14, 24 L. ed. 49; Barrow v. Hill, 13 How. 54, 14 L. ed. 48.

The writ of mandamus will not issue to compel the circuit court to reverse or revise its decision.

Ex parte Bradstreet, 8 Pet. 588, 8 L. ed. 1054; Ex parte Hoyt, 13 Pet. 279, 10 L. ed. 161; Ex parte Whitney, 13 Pet. 404, 10 L. ed. 221; Ex parte De Groot, 6 Wall. 497, 18 L. ed. 887; Ex parte Newman, 14 Wall. 152, 20 L. ed. 877; Ex parte Taylor, 14 How. 3, 14 L. ed. 302; Ex parte Many, 14 How. 24, 14 L. ed. 311; Ex parte Flippin, 94 U. S. 348, 24 L. ed. 194; Ex parte Schwab, 98 U. S. 240, 25 L. ed. 105; Ex parte Denver & R.

G. R. Co. 101 U. S. 711, 25 L. ed. 872; Ex parte Perry, 102 U. S. 183, 26 L. ed. 43; Ex parte Burtis (New York & W. S. S. Co. v. Mount) 103 U. S. 238, 26 L. ed. 351; Ex parte Des Moines & M. R. Co. 103 U. S. 794, 26 L. ed. 461; Ex parte Hoard, 105 U. S. 578, 26 L. ed. 1176; Ex parte Baltimore & O. R. Co. 108 U. S. 566, 27 L. ed. 812, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 876; Re Burdett, 127 U. S. 771, 3 L. ed. 321, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1394; Re Morrison (Morrison v. District Court) 147 U. S. 14, 37 L. ed. 60, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 246.

Mandamus will not lie to control the conduct of a judge in proceedings which take place before the trial.

Ex parte Bradstreet, 8 Pet. 588, 8 L. ed. 1054.

Nor to compel a judge to proceed according to certain rules of practice which have already been established for his court by the appellate court.

Ex parte Whitney, 13 Pet. 404, 10 L. ed. 221.

The circuit court should not proceed with the trial of this action until the final determination of the appeals from the estimates pending in the state court.

Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Wabash R. Co. 57 C. C. A. 322, 119 Fed. 678; Ball v. Tompkins, 41 Fed. 486.

Sanborn, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

The order which the petitioner challenges stays its action in the circuit court of the United States until the questions which that action presents shall have been finally determined by the courts of the state. That order is not reviewable by writ of error or by appeal, and the Barber company applies to this court for its writ of mandamus to direct the judge holding the court below to proceed to the trial of its case.

The plaint of the petitioner is that, by the order of the court below, it is practically prohibited from a trial and decision by the national courts of a controversy over $38,316.14 between citizens of different states, which is pending in that court, and which involves nothing but the question of the existence and the amount of a simple contract debt. It is unnecessary to the determination of the issues now presented to consider or decide whether or not the district court of St. Louis county had acquired, by means of the appeals, jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the parties to the action in the Federal court when that court ordered all proceedings in the action before it stayed until the final determination of those appeals. If the state court had not acquired such jurisdiction, there was no reason for staying the cause in the Federal court. If it had acquired jurisdiction, the order practically prohibits the trial of the controversy in the national courts, and remits its decision to the courts of the state, and the only reason urged in support of it is that the same controversy was pending in the district court of the state, that that court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the parties, and that by the charter of the city its officers were forbidden to pay the claim of the petitioner until that court should so direct. It will accordingly be conceded—but it is not decided—that the district court of St. Louis county had acquired jurisdiction by means of the appeals of the parties to the action in the Federal court, and of the controversy there presented when that action was commenced, and before the order which enjoined its progress was made. It is also conceded for the purposes of this decision, although that question is not decided, that the petitioner might have removed the appeals to the Federal court, and that the question here presented stands as though the Barber company had first brought actions to collect its debt in the state court, and had afterwards brought one in the Federal court to enforce the same obligation.

The question, then, is, Would the pendency of such actions be, or was the pendency of the appeals, a sound reason for prohibiting the trial of the controversy between the petitioner and the city in the Federal court until the state courts had finally decided the questions which it involves? The general rule upon this subject has been so clearly announced and so often affirmed by the supreme court and by this court that it is no longer open to debate or consideration. It is that the pendency in a state court of an action brought by the plaintiff in a subsequent action between the same parties in the Federal court, and which involves the same subject-matter, presents no bar and furnishes no ground for the abatement of the later action. Stanton v. Embrey, 93 U. S. 548, 554, 23 L. ed. 983, 984; Standley v. Roberts, 8 C. C. A. 305, 314, 19 U. S. App. 407, 59 Fed. 836, 844; Merritt v. American Steel-Barge Co. 24 C. C. A. 530, 535, 49 U. S. App. 85, 79 Fed. 228, 233; Green v. Underwood, 30 C. C. A. 162, 164, 57 U. S. App. 535, 86 Fed. 427, 429; Hughes v. Green, 28 C. C. A. 537, 539, 56 U. S. App. 56, 84 Fed. 833, 835; Hubinger v. Central Trust Co. 36 C. C. A. 494, 496, 94 Fed. 788, 790; Ogden City v. Weaver, 47 C. C. A. 485, 490, 108 Fed. 564, 568; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Wabash R. Co. 57 C. C. A. 322, 324, 119 Fed. 678, 680; Ball v. Tompkins, 41 Fed. 486, 490. But where one of the courts has secured possession or dominion of specific property by proper process, the suit in the co-ordinate jurisdiction to affect the same property should not be dismissed, but before a seizure of the property is made therein it should be stayed until the proceedings in the court which first obtained jurisdiction of the property are concluded, or ample time for their termination has elapsed. Zimmerman v. So Relle, 25 C. C. A. 518, 521, 49 U. S. App. 387, 80 Fed. 417, 420; Gates v. Bucki, 4 C. C. A. 116, 120, 12 U. S. App. 69, 53 Fed. 961, 965.

The contention of counsel for the respondent is that the action in the Federal court was properly stayed because by the charter of the city of Duluth the petitioner's claim is payable only out of the permanent revolving fund of the city, and the appeals to the state court have the effect to attach this fund, and to enjoin the officers of the city from paying it until the state court so directs. It does not, however, appear that the liability of the city to its contractor is in any way limited to the amounts which may at any time be found in its revolving fund, or that it is anything less than a direct contract liability. Barber Asphalt Paving Co. v. Denver, 19 C. C. A. 139, 143, 36 U. S. App. 499, 72 Fed. 336, 340; Denver v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co. 27 C. C. A. 677, 49 U. S. App. 633, 83 Fed. 1020; United States ex rel. Masslich v. Saunders, 59 C. C. A. 394, 401, 124 Fed. 124, 131. Moreover, it is not true that the appeals place any attachment or fasten any lien upon the revolving fund of the city. If that fund is charged with any lien or trust in favor of the petitioner, it is not by virtue of the appeals or of the suits which they evidence, but by virtue of the existence of the indebtedness of the city which those appeals challenge.

Nor does the provision of the city charter which prohibits the officers of the city from paying the claim of the Barber company pending the appeals without the order of the state court in any way restrict or impair the jurisdiction of the United States circuit court to proceed to the trial of the controversy before it, and to the enforcement of the judgment which it may render. The provisions of § 80 of the charter were not intended to limit or affect the jurisdiction of the Federal court. They furnish a convenient and speedy method of securing the opinion of the state courts of the validity of claims against the city, and, while they provide in terms that, when appeals are taken from the allowance of such claims, they shall be paid only upon the order of the appellate court, they do not exclude original suits or the enforcement of judgments upon them by the usual processes, even in the state courts (Murphy v. Steele County, 14 Minn. 67, Gil. 51), much less in the courts of the United States. Nor would this prohibition of the charter have had the effect to restrict the power of the Federal courts if such had been the intention of the legislature of the state. The jurisdiction of the Federal courts is granted to them by the Constitution and laws of the United States, and no state legislation may impair, restrict, or destroy it. Wherever the citizens of a state may secure a trial and decision of their controversies in its courts either by original suits, by appeals, or by other proceedings, citizens of different states have the right to the determination by the courts of the United States of like controversies between them which involve the requisite amounts; and no state, by conferring exclusive jurisdiction of such controversies upon its own courts, by prescribing exclusive methods of commencing litigation, by prohibiting the payment of claims save upon the order of its own courts or by any other means, may strike down that right or take away the plenary power of the national courts to enforce their lawful adjudications. Act August 13, 1888, 25 Stat. at L. 433, 434, chap. 866, § 1. U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 508; Davis v. Gray, 16 Wall. 203, 221, 21 L. ed. 447, 453; Ex parte McNeil, 13 Wall. 236, 20 L. ed. 624; Cowley v. Northern P. R. Co. 159 U. S. 569, 583, 40 L. ed. 263, 267, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 127; Cummings v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 101 U. S. 153, 157, 25 L. ed. 903, 904; Gaines v. Fuentes, 92 U. S. 10, 20, 23 L. ed. 524, 528; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Whitton, 13 Wall. 270, 278, 287, 20 L. ed. 571, 577; Broderick's Will (Kieley v. McGlynn) 21 Wall. 503, 520, 22 L. ed. 599, 605; Gormley v. Clark, 134 U. S. 338, 348, 33 L. ed. 909, 913, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 554; Darragh v. H. Wetter Mfg. Co. 23 C. C. A. 609, 616, 49 U. S. App. 1, 78 Fed. 7, 14; Richardson v. Green, 9 C. C. A. 565, 571, 578, 15 U. S. App. 488, 61 Fed. 423, 429, 435; National Surety Co. v. State Bank, 61 L. R. A. 394, 56 C. C. A. 657, 120 Fed. 593; Sawyer v. White, 58 C. C. A. 587, 591, 122 Fed. 223, 227. The provision of the city charter that, after the claims of the petitioner were challenged by appeals to the state court, they should never be paid by the officers of the city without the order of that court, was ineffective to deprive the court below of the power in a proper case before it to order those claims to be paid, or to relieve the officers of the city from the duty to obey such an order. Cowles v. Mercer County, 7 Wall. 118, 119, 19 L. ed. 86; Chicot County v. Sherwood, 148 U. S. 529, 533, 534, 37 L. ed. 546, 548, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 695; Thompson v. Searcy County, 6 C. C. A. 674, 680, 12 U. S. App. 618, 57 Fed. 1030, 1037; Hess v. Reynolds, 113 U. S. 73, 77, 78, 28 L. ed. 927-929, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 377; Clark v. Bever, 139 U. S. 96, 103, 35

L. ed. 88, 92, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 468; Union Bank v. Vaiden, 18 How. 503, 15 L. ed. 472; Lawrence v. Nelson, 143 U. S. 215, 36 L. ed. 130, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 440; Byers v. McAuley, 149 U. S. 608, 37 L. ed. 867, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 906; Security Trust Co. v. Black River Nat. Bank, 187 U. S. 211, 227, 47 L. ed. 147, 154, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 52; Barrow S. S. Co. v. Kane, 170 U. S. 100, 111, 42 L. ed. 964, 968, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 526; Re Stutsman County, 88 Fed. 337, 340, 343. Thus the laws of the states relative to the administration and settlement of decedents' estates generally expressly limit the right to establish demands against such estates to proceedings in the probate courts of the states. But a creditor of another state may nevertheless establish his claim in an action against the personal representative of the deceased in the proper Federal court without first presenting it to the probate court. Security Trust Co. v. Black River Nat. Bank, 187 U. S. 227, 47 L. ed. 154, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 52, and cases there cited.

By the law of their organization, counties in Illinois were exempt from suit elsewhere than in the circuit courts of the county. But a suit by a citizen of another state against such a county in the Federal court was sustained, and Chief Justice Chase said: "The power to contract with citizens of other states implies liability to suit by citizens of other states, and no statute limitation of suability, can defeat a jurisdiction given by the Constitution." Cowles v. Mercer County, 7 Wall. 122, 19 L. ed. 87.

The legislature of the state of Arkansas provided that no suit or proceeding against a county in that state should be maintained in any court otherwise than by a presentation of a verified claim to the county court for allowance or rejection, that the defeated party might appeal from the decision of that court to the state court of general jurisdiction, where the case should be tried in the usual course, but that, in the absence of the presentation of a verified claim to the county court, no case against or controversy with a county could arise of which any court, state or Federal, could take cognizance or jurisdiction. Citizens of New York brought an action against a county of the state of Arkansas in the Federal court by original process without presenting any claim to the county court. The Supreme Court sustained the action, and said: "Any other view of the subject would prevent citizens of other states from resorting to the Federal courts for the enforcement of their claims against counties of the state, and limit them to the special mode of relief prescribed by the act of February 27, 1879 [Ark. Stat. 1903, chap. 32, §§ 810-812]. The jurisdiction of the Federal courts is 67 L. R. A.

not to be defeated by such state legislation as this. In Hyde v. Stone, 20 How. 170, 175, 15 L. ed. 874, 875, it is said: 'But this court has repeatedly decided that the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States over controversies between citizens of different states cannot be impaired by the laws of the states which prescribe the modes of redress in their courts, or which regulate the distribution of their judicial power. In many cases state laws form a rule of decision for the courts of the United States, and the forms of proceeding in these courts have been assimilated to those of the states, either by legislative enactment or by their own rules. But the courts of the United States are bound to proceed to judgment, and to afford redress to suitors before them in every case to which their jurisdiction extends. They cannot abdicate their authority or duty in any case in favor of another jurisdiction. Suydam v. Broadnax, 14 Pet. 67, 10 L. ed. 357; Union Bank v. Vaiden, 18 How. 503, 15 L. ed. 472.' This principle has been steadily adhered to by this court." Chicot County v. Sherwood, 148 U. S. 529, 533, 534, 37 L. ed. 546, 548, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 695.

These principles and authorities render the following conclusions unavoidable: The petitioner's right of action in the circuit court to recover the debt which it alleges to be due to it from the city was not conditioned by its presentation of its claim to the city council, or by any of the other requirements of the charter of the city of Duluth relative to the method of its enforcement. The action upon it was cognizable by original process in the circuit court of the United States. There was nothing in the charter of the city which deprived that court of the power, or relieved it of the duty, to proceed with all convenient speed to the trial of the controversy between citizens of different states which the petitioner presented to it, to a judgment upon that controversy, and to the enforcement of that judgment by the usual processes of the court. This, then, was the situation when the order which stayed the action in the circuit court until all the questions in it should have been finally determined by the state courts was made. The suit of the taxpayers for an injunction against the payment of the claim of the petitioner had been decided in its favor, and that proceeding constituted no reason to delay the Barber company's collection of its demand. The appeals from the allowance of its claim and the action upon it in the Federal court presented no existing or prospective conflict of jurisdiction between the state court and the Federal court over any specific property. They involved no lien, no attachment, no injunction or prohibition, which could have any effect upon the power of the Federal court to hear and adjudge the controversy before it, and to redress the wrongs of the parties to it. The appeals and the action in the circuit court involved nothing but the single question, How much is the city of Duluth indebted to the Barber Asphalt Paving Company? The case, therefore, fell clearly under the first rule relative to the pendency of actions for the same cause in courts of concurrent jurisdiction, and the appeals present no ground for the abatement of the action in the United States circuit court.

It is, however, earnestly argued that the order of the court below constituted neither a bar nor an abatement of the action before it, but that it was a mere discretionary order staying proceedings for a definite time, and hence not subject to challenge upon an application for a writ of mandamus. The answer is that it stayed proceedings until they would in all probability be futile, until the petitioner would probably be estopped by the final judgments of other courts from any hearing or trial of its controversy upon the merits in the courts of the nation. Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Harris, 97 U. S. 331, 336, 338, 24 L. ed. 959, 962, 963. The reason for the rule that the pendency of an action in a state court is no bar and furnishes no ground for the abatement of another action for the same cause between citizens of different states in the Federal court is that the latter court has concurrent jurisdiction of such controversies with the courts of the state, and that citizens of different states have the constitutional right to the independent opinion and judgment of the judges of the national courts upon the questions presented by their controversies, at least until those questions have become res judicata by the judgments of other competent courts. Orders that such citizens shall secure no such opinions until they are conclusively estopped from obtaining them by the final judgments of other courts upon their controversies as effectually deprive them of their rights to adjudications in the national courts as judgments sustaining pleas in bar or in abatement. Nay, they deprive them of those rights more effectually, because such judgments are reviewable by appeal or by writ of error, while such stays may not be so challenged. The power is granted to the judges of the circuit court, and the duty is imposed upon them by the Constitution and the acts of Congress, to form and express their independent opinions upon controversies between citizens of different states over which the jurisdiction of their courts is properly invoked. However grateful to 67 L. R. A.

them and courteous to others it would be in cases of concurrent jurisdiction to await the opinions of the respected and able jurists who adorn the benches of the courts of the states, and then to be bound by their decisions, that power may not be lawfully abdicated, nor may that duty be legally renounced, by the judges of the Federal courts. The order staying the proceedings in the action in the circuit court until the final determination of the appeals in the state courts is violative of these principles, is calculated to deprive the petitioner of its right to the independent decision of the Federal court upon the questions involved in its controversy, and it cannot be sustained.

But it is said that the error may not be corrected by the writ of mandamus, and we turn to the consideration of that question. Section 12 of the act of March 3, 1891, chap. 517, 26 Stat. at L. 829 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 553), provides that "the circuit courts of appeals shall have the power specified in § 716 of the Revised Statutes of the United States." Section 716 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 580), provides that "the Supreme Court and the circuit and district courts shall have power to issue writs of scire facias. They shall also have power to issue all writs not specifically provided for by statute, which may be necessary for the exercise of their respective jurisdictions and agreeable to the usages and principles of law." Writs of mandamus are among those "not specifically provided for by statute which may be necessary for the exercise of their respective jurisdictions" within the meaning of this section. Bath County v. Amy, 13 Wall. 244, 249, 20 L. ed. 539, 541; Kendall v. United States, 12 Pet. 622, 9 L. ed. 1220. The power to issue writs of mandamus was granted to the Supreme Court by § 688 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 565), but the limit of the power of that court and of this is the same. Each court has jurisdiction to issue the writ to a subordinate court or judge in the exercise of and in aid of its appellate jurisdiction. It is without power to issue it in a case which is not reviewable in that court by appeal or writ of error challenging its final decision, or otherwise, or to issue it to create a case for the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction.

In United States ex rel. Harless v. United States Ct. App. Judges, 29 C. C. A. 78, 80, 56 U. S. App. 33, 85 Fed. 177, 179; this court, in discussing the limits of its power to issue this writ, declared that it was without authority to do so unless the right of appeal had been actually exercised, and the case to which the writ related was pending in this court on appeal or writ of error. It is now insisted by counsel for respondent, upon the authority of that decision, that no writ can issue in this case, because no writ of error is pending to review the action in the court below. The argument is unanswerable if the limits of the jurisdiction of this court were correctly drawn in our former opinion. Expressions of the Supreme Court may be found in the cases cited in that opinion broad enough to sustain the view there taken. In M'Clung v. Silliman, 6 Wheat. 598, 600, 5 L. ed. 340, 341, it is said that "the 14th section of the act under consideration [Act September 24, 1789, chap. 20, 1 Stat. at L. 81] (now § 716, Revised Statutes, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 580) could only have been intended to vest the power . . . in cases where the jurisdiction already exists, and not where it is to be created or acquired by means of the writ proposed to be sued out." And in Bath County v. Amy, 13 Wall. 244, 249, 20 L. ed. 539, 541, the Supreme Court said: "The writ cannot be used to confer a jurisdiction which the circuit court would not have without it. It is authorized only when ancillary to a jurisdiction already acquired." These declarations, however, were made, not only in cases in which no appellate jurisdiction had been actually invoked, but in cases in which the courts to which the applications for the writs of mandamus were made had no appellate jurisdiction which ever could be invoked. The former case arose on an application for a writ of mandamus to compel the register of a land office to issue certain documents to a pre-emptor, and the latter upon an application to compel the officers of a county to levy a tax to pay bonds upon which no suit had ever been commenced.

There is no dissent among courts or lawyers from the proposition that the national courts may issue the writ either in the exercise of, or in aid of, their appellate jurisdiction. The only question here is whether they may issue it in aid of that jurisdiction whenever it exists, or only when it has been actually invoked by a writ of error or by an appeal. This question has now been ably and exhaustively argued by counsel for the respective parties to this application. All the authorities upon it appear to have been called to our attention, and it has again received the thoughtful and deliberate consideration of the court in the light of the numerous decisions which have been cited. It is obvious that the primary reason for the grant to the Federal appellate courts of the dominant power to issue their writs of mandamus to the inferior courts in the exercise of and in aid of their appellate jurisdiction was to enable them to protect that jurisdiction against possible evasions of it. It is not less evident that the grant must in many, nay, in most, cases, fail to accomplish its chief end if the power to issue the writ can be exercised only after the appellate jurisdiction has been actually invoked by an appeal or by a writ of error. Under the acts of Congress the proceedings in every suit in the circuit court of the United States are now reviewable either in the Supreme Court or in the circuit court of appeals. The moment such a suit is commenced, the appellate jurisdiction over it exists, the power and the right to ultimately review the proceedings in it are vested in one of the appellate courts. But in the great majority of cases it is only by an appeal or by a writ of error which challenges the final decision in the case that any of the proceedings in it may be reviewed. The opportunities for subordinate courts to evade the jurisdiction of the appellate courts, to prevent the exercise of this jurisdiction, and to destroy or make ineffectual the right of the unsuccessful party to review their rulings by failures to settle bills of exceptions, by unreasonable delays, by stays of proceedings, and by direct and indirect refusals to proceed to final judgments and to their enforcement, are far more numerous before the writs of error or the appeals can be taken than they can be thereafter. Few, indeed, are the cases in which appellate jurisdiction is disregarded after the right to it has been actually exercised. But many cases arise in which the acts or orders of the inferior courts, unless corrected by the writ of mandamus, prevent the exercise of appellate jurisdiction and destroy its effect before any final decision which may be challenged by appeal or writ of error has been reached.

Thus, in Livingston v. Dorgenois, 7 Cranch, 577, 588, 3 L. ed. 444, 448, an action which was reviewable by the Supreme Court by a writ of error to challenge the final judgment which should be rendered in it, but which had been indefinitely stayed by an order of the court below before judgment was rendered, the plaintiff in error dismissed his ineffective writ of error which had been issued to challenge the stay, and the Supreme Court awarded its writ of mandamus nisi in the nature of a procedendo.

In Ex parte Bradstreet, 7 Pet. 634, 644, 8 L. ed. 810, 814, the district court, upon whose final judgment upon the merits the cases in question were then reviewable in the Supreme Court, erroneously refused to receive certain evidence essential to establish its jurisdiction, dismissed the actions, and refused to make records of the orders and judgments so that the plaintiffs might bring the cases before the Supreme Court by writs of error. No writs of error had been procured, no appeals had been taken; yet the Supreme Court issued a writ of mandamus to the district judge, and commanded him to reinstate the cases and to proceed to try and adjudicate them.

In Life & Fire Ins. Co. v. Wilson, 8 Pet. 291, 303, 8 L. ed. 949, 953, the district judge refused to sign a final judgment which had been made by his predecessor in office, and without which no appeal or writ of error would lie and no execution could issue. The Supreme Court issued its writ of mandamus, and directed him to sign the judgment, although the appellate jurisdiction of that court had been invoked in no other way than by the motion for the mandamus.

In Ex parte Roberts, 15 Wall. 384, 386, 21 L. ed. 131, 132, the court of claims refused to entertain and decide a motion for a new trial under the erroneous impression that an allowance of an appeal which had been revoked had deprived it of jurisdiction, and the Supreme Court commanded it by its writ of mandamus to hear, entertain, and decide the motion.

In Knickerbocker Ins. Co. v. Comstock, 16 Wall. 258, 270, 21 L. ed. 493, 498, the circuit court erroneously dismissed an appeal from the district court upon the ground that it was without jurisdiction to hear it. The Supreme Court held that a writ of error which had been sued out would not lie to review this judgment of dismissal, but that it had plenary power to issue the writ of mandamus to the court below to require it to reinstate the appeal and to proceed to try and adjudge the issues it presented.

In Virginia v. Rives (Ex parte Virginia) 100 U. S. 313, 316, 323, 327, 329, 25 L. ed. 667, 668, 671, 673, the circuit court had erroneously taken jurisdiction by removal from the state court of criminal prosecutions and the custody of the accused. The Supreme Court issued its writ of mandamus, and therein directed the judge of the court below to remand the prisoners to the custody of the state officers, although its appellate jurisdiction had been invoked by the application for the writ alone.

In the case of Re United States, 194 U. S. 194, 48 L. ed. 931, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 629, the district judge had refused to direct the clerk of the district court to file the necessary papers to make a record which would be reviewable by writ of error in the Supreme Court, and that court held that the petitioner was entitled to its writ of mandamus to compel him to do so.

The reasons and decisions to which we have now adverted have impelled our minds with irresistible force to the conclusion that the true test of the appellate jurisdiction in the exercise or in the aid of which the circuit court of appeals may issue the writ of mandamus is the existence of that jurisdiction, and not its prior invocation; that it is the existence of a right to review by a challenge of the final decisions, or otherwise, of the cases or proceedings to which the applications for the writs relate, and not the prior exercise of that right by appeal or by writ of error; and that the power of those courts to issue the writ is not restricted as was stated in United States ex rel. Harless v. United States Ct. App. Judges, 29 C. C. A. 78, 56 U. S. App. 33, 85 Fed. 177, to cases in which their jurisdiction has already been invoked by other proceedings. All the other authorities sustain this rule, those to which reference has already been made where the writ was issued although appellate jurisdiction had not been otherwise successfully invoked, as well as those which are now to be cited, many of which are relied upon by counsel for respondent, and in which the courts to which the applications were made had no present or prospective right to review the cases to which the applications related, and in which the applications for the writs of mandamus were accordingly denied. Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch, 137, 175, 2 L. ed. 60, 72; M'Intire v. Wood, 7 Cranch, 504, 3 L. ed. 420; Kendall v. United States, 12 Pet. 524, 9 L. ed. 1181; Ex parte Hoyt, 13 Pet. 279, 10 L. ed. 161; Riggs v. Johnson County (United States ex rel. Riggs v. Johnson County) 6 Wall. 166, 197, 198, 18 L. ed. 768, 776, 777; Ex parte City Bank, 3 How. 296, 332, 11 L. ed. 605, 621; Ex parte Gordon, 1 Black, 503, 505, 17 L. ed. 134; Ex parte Perry, 102 U. S. 183, 26 L. ed. 43; Re Green, 141 U. S. 325, 35 L. ed. 765, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 11; United States ex rel. Iron County v. Severens, 18 C. C. A. 314, 37 U. S. App. 622, 71 Fed. 768. The case under consideration is of the former class. The action in the circuit court to which the application of the petitioner relates is within the appellate jurisdiction of this court. It may be reviewed here by a writ of error to reverse any final judgment that may be rendered in it. The order which stays that action until the final determination by the state courts of the questions it involves prevents both the independent adjudication of those questions by the United States circuit court and the review of that adjudication by this court, and thus destroys, or greatly impairs, the appellate jurisdiction of this court in that case. The very purpose of the grant to this court of the power to issue the writ of mandamus was to enable it to protect and maintain this jurisdiction, and that grant not only conferred the power, but it necessarily imposed upon this court the duty, to issue its writ of mandamus to impel the court below to proceed with all convenient speed to the trial and adjudication of the controversy between citizens of different states in which its jurisdiction has been invoked to the end that the appellate jurisdiction to this court over its action may be seasonably and effectually exercised.

Finally, it is insisted that the writ of mandamus should not issue in this case because that writ may not be used to compel a subordinate court to reverse or revise its decision of a question properly submitted for its consideration in the progress of a case before it, or to direct it how to decide or by what rules to proceed. Ex parte Whitney, 13 Pet. 404, 10 L. ed. 221; Ex parte Bradstreet, 8 Pet. 588, 8 L. ed. 1054; Barrow v. Hill, 13 How. 54, 14 L. ed. 48. It is undoubtedly the general rule that a court has no power by writ of mandamus to compel a subordinate judicial officer to reverse a conclusion already reached, to correct an erroneous decision, or to direct him in what particular way he shall proceed or shall decide a specified question. But it is equally a part of this general rule that the court always has the power by means of such a writ to compel such an officer to proceed to try and decide a controversy within his jurisdiction, or to perform any other plain duty imposed by law. Kimberlin v. Commission to Five Civilized Tribes, 44 C. C. A. 109, 111, 104 Fed. 653, 655; Minnesota Moline Plow Co. v. Dowagiac Mfg. Co. 61 C. C. A. 352, 126 Fed. 746. The power to compel such an officer to proceed to the trial and determination of a case which it is his duty to hear and decide necessarily includes within it the power to compel him to reverse and set aside any erroneous decision he may have made to the effect that he will not proceed to such a trial and judgment. Living- ston v. Dorgenois, 7 Cranch, 577, 588, 3 L. ed. 444, 448; Ex parte Bradstreet, 7 Pet. 634, 649, 8 L. ed. 810, 816; Life & Fire Ins. Co. v. Wilson, 8 Pet. 291, 303, 8 L. ed. 949, 953; Ex parte Roberts, 15 Wall. 384, 386, 21 L. ed. 131, 132; Knickerbocker Ins. Co. v. Comstock, 16 Wall. 258, 270, 21 L. ed. 493, 498.

The petitioner invoked the jurisdiction of the United States circuit court in an action in personam to determine the simple question, debt or no debt, between him and a citizen of another state. Actions for the same cause between the same parties were pending in the state court. It was the duty of the judge who held the circuit court to proceed with convenient speed to try, and by means of the exercise of his own independent judgment to adjudicate, the petitioner's controversy. He stayed all proceedings in the cause before him until that controversy should be finally determined by the courts of the state. This stay deprived the petitioner of its right to the independent judgment of the national courts upon the merits of its action, and destroys the jurisdiction of this court to review the adjudication which may be made upon it in the court below. Against this error the petitioner is remediless save by means of the writ of mandamus of this court. The power is conferred and the duty is imposed upon this court by the acts of Congress to issue the writ and to command the judge holding the circuit court for the district of Minnesota to set aside and vacate the order which stays proceedings in that court in the case of the Barber Asphalt Paving Company against the city of Duluth, and to proceed with all convenient speed to a trial, a judgment, and a just enforcement of the judgment which may be rendered in that action.

Let a writ of mandamus issue accordingly.

ARKANSAS SUPREME COURT.

SUPREME LODGE KNIGHTS OF PYTHIAS, Appt.,

v.

Maria BRADLEY.

(.....Ark.....)

A clause in an insurance policy relieving the insurer from liability in case death is caused by violation of any criminal law is not applicable where insured was shot while attempting in good faith to escape from a personal difficulty, although he had begun it by assaulting his opponent with a weapon capable of producing great bodily harm, if not death.

(Battle and McCulloch, JJ., dissent.)

(December 10, 1904.)

NOTE.—On the general subject of death caused by crime as affecting liability of insurance company, see also cases in note to Darrow v. Family Fund Soc. 6 L. R. A. 495; Sheanon v. Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co. 9 L. R. A. 67 L. R. A.

685, and the later cases in this series of Wells v. New England Mut. L. Ins. Co. 53 L. R. A. 327; Shipman v. Protective Home Circle, 63 L. R. A. 347; and Royal Circle v. Achterath, 63 L. R. A. 452.

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Ashley County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to enforce payment of the amount alleged to be due on a life-insurance policy. Affirmed.

Statement by Hill, Ch. J.:

In January, 1901, at the entrance of the courthouse in Hamburg, Charles O. Morscheimer shot and killed Charles H. Bradley. The appellee is the widow of Bradley and the beneficiary in a policy for $1,000 in the appellant order, a fraternal insurance association. The facts, as reflected through the verdict of the jury, were: Ill feeling over a trivial matter existed between Bradley and Morscheimer, at least on Bradley's part. On the morning of the tragedy they came face to face at the north entrance of the courthouse, as Morscheimer was entering, and Bradley leaving, the building. Some words passed, and Bradley struck Morscheimer on the ear with a piece of iron held in his hand. Morscheimer staggered, or stepped back a few paces, drew his pistol, and commenced firing on Bradley. The first shot, or one of the first shots, passed through right breast and came out of the fleshy part of the arm, near the shoulder joint, and was not a fatal wound, and did not cause the death. Immediately upon Morscheimer opening fire, Bradley turned and ran back into the courthouse, and fell into the arms of the sheriff, as he was attempting to enter the sheriff's office, 24 feet south of the entrance where the rencounter began. He had received a fatal wound in the back, entering below the right shoulder blade and ranging diagonally through the body to the left side, and not coming out. He expired almost immediately. Appellee insists from the nature of the wound that it was received just as Bradley was turning into the sheriff's office from the hall in which he was running. Whether that contention is sustained or not, it was evidently received after he turned and fled from the rencounter. The verdict necessarily implies it, and the evidence fairly establishes it. The contract of insurance contained the following clause: "If the death of any member of the Endowment Rank heretofore admitted into the first, second, third, or fourth classes, or hereafter admitted, shall result from suicide, either voluntary or involuntary, whether such member shall be sane or insane at the time, or if such death shall be caused or superinduced by the use of intoxicating liquors, narcotics, or opiates, or in consequence of a duel or at the hands of justice, or in violation, or attempted violation, of any criminal law, then the amount to be paid on such member's certificate shall be a sum only in 67 L. R. A.

proportion to the whole amount as the matured life expectancy is to the entire expectancy at date of admission to the Endowment Rank." The court gave the following instruction: "(4) Even though you believe, from the evidence, that Bradley assaulted Morscheimer and brought on the rencounter between himself and Morscheimer, yet, if you further believe from the evidence that at the time Bradley was killed he had in good faith abandoned the rencounter, and was in good faith retreating to avoid further difficulty with Morscheimer, then he was not, at the time he was killed, violating, or attempting to violate, any criminal law, and your verdict will be for plaintiff for amount sued for." The court refused to give the following instruction asked by appellant: "(5) The jury are instructed that, if they believe from the evidence in this case that C. H. Bradley, on the morning of January 1, 1901, made an assault on Charles Morscheimer with a weapon with which he was capable of inflicting great bodily harm on him, and that, as a result of said assault, said Bradley was killed, it makes no difference whether he was trying to escape, or was continuing the assault when he received the mortal wound, if the assault and the shooting were parts of the same difficulty." The jury rendered a verdict for the plaintiff for $1,000 and interest, judgment was entered thereupon, appellant saved its exceptions and brought the case here. If the fourth instruction above set out was the law, and the requested fifth instruction not the law, there is no error prejudicial to appellant; otherwise there is.

Mr. Carlos S. Hardy, with Messrs. Pugh & Wiley, for appellant:

The clause in the policy should be construed to embrace any act of the insured which might be denominated a crime, and, if his offense was of that character, whether it was a felony or not, and he lost his life in consequence of it, and under circumstances which made the killing justifiable homicide, then a forfeiture ought to be declared.

Brown v. Supreme Lodge K. of P. 83 Mo. App. 633; Wolff v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 5 Mo. App. 236; Cluff v. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. 99 Mass. 317, 13 Allen, 308; Bloom v. Franklin L. Ins. Co. 97 Ind. 478, 49 Am. Rep. 469.

It does not make any difference whether Bradley was retreating or not, if the assault was sufficient reasonably to provoke Morscheimer to shoot, and the shooting was caused wholly by the attack, and was done in the sudden heat of passion aroused by the assault, and not in a spirit of revenge after the assault was over.

Murray v. New York L. Ins. Co. 96 N. Y. 614, 48 Am. Rep. 658; Bloom v. Franklin L. Ins. Co. 97 Ind. 478, 49 Am. Rep. 469; Neill v. Travellers' Ins. Co. 31 U. C. C. P. 394; Hatch v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 120 Mass. 550, 21 Am. Rep. 541; Travellers' Ins. Co. v. Seaver, 19 Wall. 531, 22 L. ed. 155; Duran v. Standard Life & Acci. Ins. Co. 63 Vt. 437, 13 L. R. A. 637, 25 Am. St. Rep. 773, 22 Atl. 530; Randall v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 109 U. S. 478, 27 L. ed. 1003, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 322; Ellkott v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 150 U. S. 245, 37 L. ed. 1068, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 85; Schofield v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 114 U. S. 615, 29 L. ed. 224, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1125; Union P. R. Co. v. McDonald, 152 U. S. 262, 38 L. ed. 434, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 619; Pleasants v. Fant, 22 Wall. 116, 22 L. ed. 780.

Mr. Robert E. Craig, for appellee:

The tendency of the court is to construe these forfeiture clauses strictly, and hold the insurer to the letter of the contract.

Goetzman v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 3 Hun, 515; Griffin v. Western Mut. Benev. Asso. 20 Neb. 620, 57 Am. Rep. 848, 31 N. W. 122; Harper v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 19 Mo. 506; Overton v. St. Louis Mut. L. Ins. Co. 39 Mo. 122, 90 Am. Dec. 455.

HILL, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Is a death received while retreating from a personal difficulty (and not retreating for the purpose of gaining a vantage ground to renew it), where the encounter is begun by an assault by the deceased upon his slayer with a weapon capable of inflicting great bodily harm, or death, according to its use, a death within the meaning of an insurance clause exempting against liability for a death "in violation, or attempted violation, of any criminal law?" Instruction numbered 4 said it was not, and the appellant asked instruction numbered 5, that it be declared within the exemption. The cases on this exact question are not numerous, but they are well considered, and come from courts of high standing. The following authorities sustain the instructions given by the circuit court: Harper v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 19 Mo. 506, Reiterated in Overton v. St. Louis Mut. L. Ins. Co. 39 Mo. 122, 90 Am. Dec. 455; Cluff v. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. 13 Allen, 308, Reaffirmed in the same case in 99 Mass. 318; and Bradley v. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. 45 N. Y. 422, 6 Am. Rep. 115. It is insisted that, if there is a causative connection between the assault and the death, then the death is the proximate result of the assault. Such reasoning contains the fallacy that an assault will be repelled with more than lawful force. Such is often, perhaps usually, the rule, where blood is hot and the strength sufficient or the weapon handy enough. But such is not the result naturally to be expected under the law. An assault calls for a repulsion of it by just such force as necessary to overcome it, and more than that is unlawful, and unlawful consequences are not to be presumed to follow the act. When Bradley attacked Morscheimer with a piece of iron, then Morscheimer was justified in overcoming that attack, and, if necessary to overcome it, to take Bradley's life, and a death resulting while so lawfully resisting the attack would be the natural result expected to flow from such attack, and there would be a causative connection between the assault and the death. In other words, the attack would then be the proximate cause of the death. Cases applying the doctrine of causative connection between an unlawful act and the death, the latter being held to be within the consequences flowing from the unlawful act, are cited. Bloom v. Franklin L. Ins. Co. 97 Ind. 478, 49 Am. Rep. 469; Murray v. New York L. Ins. Co. 96 N. Y. 614, 48 Am. Rep. 658; and others of kindred nature in appellant's brief. The doctrine of the cases referred to as sustaining this instruction does not impinge upon the established principles announced in those relied upon by appellant. For instance, take the case of a husband killing the paramour of his wife. If caught in the act of adultery, the paramour dies "in violation of law;" if killed subsequently, he dies as the natural result of his unlawful act,—in consequence of it, and a consequence naturally to be expected,—and this is true whether killed an hour or a year after the adultery; and yet it is held, and properly so, that the paramour is not killed "in violation of law," within the meaning of an insurance contract. Goetzman v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 3 Hun, 515. There must be a line drawn somewhere between consequences proximately, and those remotely, flowing from an unlawful assault; and the safe place to draw that line is where the law draws the line of lawful resistance to the unlawful assault. In a similar case to this one the court of appeals of New York, through Mr. Justice Rapallo, said: "So long as the evidence falls short of establishing that the homicide was legally justifiable, I can see no safe rule by which the court could be guided in deciding that the provocation proved was the cause of the killing, and in withdrawing that question from the consideration of the jury." Bradley v. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. 45 N. Y. 422, 6 Am. Rep. 115. In this case Bradley fled from the conflict and received his death wound in the back while escaping. Clearly Morscheimer was not legally justified in taking Bradley's life then, and his act in so doing was unlawful. Therefore the first violation of the law by Bradley was not the proximate cause of his death; but the subsequent unlawful act of Morscheimer, in shooting his retreating assailant, was the proximate cause. Therefore the instruction was correct, and the judgment is affirmed.

Battle and McCulloch, JJ., dissent.

STATE of Arkansas, Appt.,
v.
W. B. MALLORY.

(.....Ark.....)

A state cannot forbid a nonresident landowner to take fish and game upon his property within the state while according such privilege to resident landowners, in view of the provisions of the Federal Constitution forbidding denial of the equal protection of laws, and the deprivation of property without due process of law.

(Hull, Ch. J., and Battle, J., dissent.)

(December 3, 1904.)

A PPEAL by the State from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Crittenden County in favor of defendant in a prosecution for violating the game laws. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinions.

Messrs. George N. Murphy, Attorney General, S. R. Simpson, Cantrell & Loughborough, H. M. Armistead, and George N. Williams for appellant.

Messrs. Rose, Hemingway, & Rose, T. K. Riddick, and James P. Clarke, for appellee:

It is improbable that the legislature intended to forbid anyone to hunt or fish on his own grounds perpetually.

People v. Conrad, 125 Mich. 1, 83 N. W. 1012; Venning v. Steadman, 9 Can. S. C. 210; Murphy v. Ryan, 1r. Rep. 2, C. L. 143; Queen v. Robertson, 6 Can. S. C. 116; Maney v. State, 6 Lea, 218; Aldrich v. Wright, 53 N. H. 398, 16 Am. Rep. 339; Com. v. Gilbert, 160 Mass. 157, 22 L. R. A. 439, 35 N. E. 454.

The right to take fish in waters running by or through one's land, or to hunt on one's land, is property, though held in subordination to the right of the state to regulate its use.

Re Parrott, 1 Fed. 481; Strother v. Lucas, 12 Pet. 436, 9 L. ed. 1147; Bingham v. Salene, 15 Or. 208, 3 Am. St. Rep. 153, 14 Pac. 523; 2 Washb. Real Prop. 400, 632; Wood, Stat. Fr. § 6; Wynn v. Garland, 19 Ark. 23, 68 Am. Dec. 190; Mantooth v. Burke, 35 Ark. 547.

Defendant owned the fish in the lake surrounded by his own land as completely as he might own cattle or reclaimed deer which he had placed in a pen.

There is a distinct right of fishing and hunting on one's own lands that has always been recognized as an incorporeal hereditament, and which has always been recognized and protected by the law.

Sterling v. Jackson, 69 Mich. 488, 13 Am. St. Rep. 405, 37 N. W. 845; Hall v. Alford, 114 Mich. 165, 38 L. R. A. 205, 72 N. W. 137; June v. Purcell, 36 Ohio St. 396; State v. Shannon, 36 Ohio St. 423, 38 Am. Rep. 599.

The grant of a right to hunt or fish on one's lands is an interest in the lands, and hence within the statute of frauds.

Wood, Stat. Fr. § 3; Wood v. Leadbitter, 13 Mees. & W. 838; Collins v. Benbury, 27 N. C. (5 Ired. L.) 118, 42 Am. Dec. 155.

As to non-navigable rivers, the right of fishing to the thread of the stream is exclusively vested in the riparian owner.

Hooker v. Cummings, 20 Johns. 90, 11 Am. Dec. 249; Com. v. Chapin, 5 Pick. 199, 16 Am. Dec. 386; Duncan v. Sylvester, 24 Me. 482, 41 Am. Dec. 400; Waters v. Lilley, 4 Pick. 145, 16 Am. Dec. 333; Com. v. Alger, 7 Cush. 53; State v. Roberts, 59 N. H. 256, 47 Am. Rep. 199; Rearoth v. Coon, 15 R. I. 35, 2 Am. St. Rep. 863, 23 Atl. 37; Re Ah Chong, 6 Sawy. 451, 2 Fed. 733.

A man may grant the right of fishing in a pond or stream apart either from the land or the water on it.

Co. Litt. 4b; Turner v. Hebron, 61 Conn. 175, 14 L. R. A. 386, 22 Atl. 951; Cobb v. Davenport, 32 N. J. L. 369; Albright v. Cortright, 64 N. J. L. 330, 48 L. R. A. 616, 81 Am. St. Rep. 504, 45 Atl. 634; Smith v. Andrews [1891] 2 Ch. 678, note.

The right to fish in non-navigable waters "is a right which attaches to the ownership of the land as an appurtenance."

Heckman v. Sicett, 99 Cal. 303, 33 Pac.

NOTE.—As to property rights in animals feræ naturæ, see also, in this series, James v. Wood, 8 L. R. A. 448, and note; State v. Repp, 40 L. R. A. 687, with note as to property rights in bees; and State v. Shaw, 60 L. R. A. 481, with note as to right to fish.

As to constitutionality of game laws generally, see Territory v. Evans, 7 L. R. A. 288; American Exp. Co. v. People, 9 L. R. A. 138, 67 L. R. A.

Com. v. Gilbert, 22 L. R. A. 439; State v. Mrozinski, 27 L. R. A. 76; State ex rel. Corcoran v. Chapel, 32 L. R. A. 131; People v. O'Neill, 33 L. R. A. 696; Haggerty v. St. Louis Ice Mfg. & Storage Co. 40 L. R. A. 151; State v. Schuman, 47 L. R. A. 153; State v. Snowman, 50 L. R. A. 544; and Smith v. State, 51 L. R. A. 404.

1099; Brink v. Richtmyer, 14 Johns. 255; People v. Platt, 17 Johns. 195, 8 Am. Dec. 382.

The right over marine fisheries depends solely on the fact that the state owns the land under the sea for the distance of 3 miles from the shore line.

Gould, Waters, § 2; Miles v. Cedar Point Club, 29 C. C. A. 5, 54 U. S. App. 668, 85 Fed. 50; McCready v. Virginia, 94 U. S. 395, 24 L. ed. 248.

The act is unconstitutional because it discriminates between the citizens of this state by denying to a certain class the equal protection of the law.

Krone v. Cooper, 43 Ark. 547; Ex parte Kenneke, 136 Cal. 527, 89 Am. St. Rep. 177, 69 Pac. 261; Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. 180. 19 L. ed. 360.

The owner of lands bordering on a non-navigable stream has a freehold interest as in the use of the stream,—an incorporeal hereditament,—of which he cannot be deprived without just compensation.

Hough v. Doylestown, 4 Brewst. (Pa.) 333; McCord v. High, 24 Iowa, 336; Organ v. Memphis & L. R. R. Co. 51 Ark. 272, 11 S. W. 96; Riggs v. Martin, 5 Ark. 506, 41 Am. Dec. 103.

McCulloch, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The general assembly of the state enacted a statute approved April 24, 1903 (Acts 1903, p. 306), entitled "An Act to Protect the Game and Fish of the State, and Provide for the Appointment of Game Wardens," and the prosecution in this case is based on the 4th section of that act as follows: "Sec. 4. It shall be unlawful for any person who is a nonresident of the state of Arkansas to shoot, hunt, fish, or trap at any season of the year." In other sections of the act the open and closed seasons for killing certain kinds of game, and prescribing penalties for violations thereof, are declared; the exportation of game or fish out of the state is prohibited, and penalties therefor prescribed; and the sheriffs of the state are made game wardens for their respective counties, with power to make arrests and prosecute offenders against the statute. The appellee, Mallory, was tried upon the charge of hunting in the state, being a nonresident at the time; and from a finding of not guilty by the court, and judgment discharging him, the state has appealed.

The case was tried below before the court sitting as a jury, by consent of parties, and upon the following agreed statement of facts: (1) The defendant, Mallory, is a native of the state of Virginia, and a bona fide resident and citizen of the city of Memphis, L. R. A.

phus and the state of Tennessee. (2) That he is the owner in fee of a large body of land in the county of Crittenden, state of Arkansas, by successive deeds, the title thereto originating by a grant from the state, on which he has continuously carried on planting and farming operations for many years prior to this date, and in the prosecution of his said farming operations he has had occasion to make frequent visits to said land. (3) That on said tract of land there is a pond, or nonmeandered lake, surrounded entirely by the land of the defendant, without outlet or inlet except at times of overflow, in which body of water fish are to be found, and may be taken therefrom by ordinary methods. (4) That on said tract of land squirrels and other game are to be found. (5) That for many years the defendant has been in the habit of hunting for game on said lands, and taking fish from said waters, both by himself and those who had his permission so to do, and that the right to kill said game and to take such fish is valuable, and adds to the value of the lands. (6) That on the 18th day of June, 1903, the defendant engaged in hunting on said lands for squirrels. (7) That on the 18th day of June, 1903, the defendant engaged in fishing in the said waters above described, and took therefrom, by means of hook and line, fish found therein.

It is contended here on the part of the state that the wild game and fish in this state are its absolute property, and that it may lawfully prohibit the taking of game and fish by all nonresidents, and that the act in question is a valid prohibition against nonresidents owning lands in the state hunting or fishing thereon. The appellee insists, on the other hand, among other things, that his right to take game and fish while on his own lands is a valuable property right, which inheres by reason of his ownership of the soil, and, being so, there is an unjust discrimination against him as a property owner of the state, in violation of that part of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States as follows: "No state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."

The proper solution of these questions involves an inquiry as to the ownership of game, a consideration of the nature of the property therein,—whether exclusive, or absolute or qualified,—and the extent of the authority which the state has a lawful right to exercise in relation thereto.

It can be stated without question that primarily the title to game and fish is and has for all time been in the sovereign, but the nature and extent of that title, and the purposes for which it is held, are not altogether free from doubt. Originally the title seems to have been regarded as vested in the sovereign as a personal prerogative, but as civilization advanced it grew to be differently regarded,—not as a personal right of Kings, but as a portion of the common property of subjects. It is said that by the Roman law animals feræ naturæ were classified as common property, which, having no owner, were considered as belonging to all the citizens of the state; yet the right of an owner of land to forbid another from killing game on his property was recognized as a part of the rights of ownership of the land. Inst. Just. bk. 2, pt. 1. The ownership of such animals seems to have been assumed by British sovereigns, up to and including King John, as a personal prerogative of the Crown, until Magna Charta and the Charter of the Forest, by which the assertion and exercise of those rights were distinctly limited. Since then the ownership of wild animals, so far as vested in the sovereign, has been uniformly regarded as a trust for the benefit of the people; and we think that clearly, in effect, the title and ownership of the sovereign has been held to be only for the purposes of protection, control, and regulation. Mr. Justice White, speaking for the court in Geer v. Connecticut, 161 U. S. 519, 40 L. ed. 793, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 600, says: "The practice of the government of England from the earliest time to the present has put into execution the authority to control and regulate the taking of game. Undoubtedly this attribute of government to control the taking of animals feræ naturæ, which was thus recognized and enforced by the common law of England, was vested in the colonial governments, where not denied by their charters or in conflict with grants of the royal prerogative." But nowhere do we find that in modern times has the absolute and unqualified ownership of such animals by government been asserted and exercised further than for the purposes of controlling and regulating the taking of the same. On the other hand, we find frequent denial of the right of government to do more. In Bristow v. Cormican, 24 Moak, Eng. Rep. 431, it was decided that "the Crown has no de jure right to the soil or fisheries of an inland, nontidal lake," and that "a general grant by the Crown of a several fishery in a nontidal lake is not, without more, sufficient to establish the title thereto." In Venning v. Steadman, 9 Can. S. C. 210, the right of riparian owners of land on a non-navigable river to fish for salmon was involved, in the face of a statute providing that "fishing for salmon in the Dominion of Canada, except under the authority of leases or licenses from the department of marine and fisheries, is hereby prohibited;" and it was there held that the prohibition of this statute did not extend to such riparian owners. In the state of Wisconsin a statute was passed prohibiting the cutting of ice from any meandered lake for shipment out of the state, except by those permitted to do so by a license issued by the Secretary of State; and the supreme court, in the case of Rossmiller v. State, 114 Wis. 169, 58 L. R. A. 93, 91 Am. St. Rep. 910, 89 N. W. 839,—a prosecution for violation of this act,—held that the title to the lakes and the waters thereof was in the state for the purpose of regulating the common use and enjoyment, yet the state had no such proprietary interest as implied the right to sell or grant special privileges for the use. The court, speaking through Mr. Justice Marshall, says: "Is ice formed naturally upon the public waters of the state, state property, in a proprietary sense,—property which it can deal with as a private person deals with his property rights? . . . Obviously there can be no difference between public water in a liquid condition and in the form of ice, or between water and the land covered thereby, or the fish or fowls which inhabit the same, or any of the animals feræ naturæ, in respect to sovereign authority over the same. If one may be dealt with as the absolute property of the state, the others may be." After an exhaustive review of the authorities, the learned justice continues: "It seems clear that, if the state cannot sell the bed of a navigable lake, it cannot sell the waters thereof, or the fish therein, or the fowls that resort to its surface, or the ice that forms thereon. The rules that limit its rights as to one of those matters limit its power as to all. The foregoing seems not only to leave no reasonable, but no possible, doubt as to the conclusion which ought to be reached in this case. It stamps the act in question indelibly, as the result of a misconception of the state's interest in navigable lakes, and as being baseless and unconstitutional. The title to the beds of such lakes is in the state, but not for its own use as an entity. The mere naked legal title rests in the state, but the whole beneficial use thereof, including the use of the ice formed thereon, is vested in the people of the state as a class." See also Sanborn v. People's Ice Co. 82 Minn. 43, 51 L. R. A. 829, 83 Am. St. Rep. 401, 84 N. W. 641; People's Ice Co. v. Davenport, 149 Mass. 322, 14 Am. St. Rep. 425, 21 N. E. 385; Rowell v. Doyle, 131 Mass. 474; Brown v. Cunningham, 82 Iowa, 512, 12 L. R. A. 583, 48 N. W. 1042; Barrows v. McDermott, 73 Me. 441; Woodman v. Pitman, 79 Me. 456, 1 Am. St. Rep. 342, 10 Atl. 321; Prieve v. Wisconsin State Land & Improv. Co. 93 Wis. 534, 33 L. R. A. 645, 67 N. W. 918; McLennan v. Prentice, 85 Wis. 427, 55 N. W. 764; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Illinois, 146 U. S. 387, 36 L. ed. 1018, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 110.

We assume, therefore, as firmly established by authority, that the state's ownership of fish and game is not such a proprietary interest as will authorize a sale thereof, or the granting of special interests therein or license to enjoy, but is solely for the purposes of regulation and preservation for the common use, and is not inconsistent with a claim of individual or special ownership by the owner of the soil, if it be found that there can be any such individual or special ownership. We next inquire whether the owner of lands in the state has any title to, or property rights in, the fish or game thereon.

By the common law of England the owner of land had no absolute property in animals feræ naturæ while at liberty in the wild state, but had a qualified interest or property in such as were found, and so long as they remained, on his territory, and, when killed or captured thereon, became his absolute property. Blackstone's treatment of this subject is not altogether clear, though he seems to have considered the complete ownership of game, in the strictest proprietary sense, to have been in the Crown, as a personal prerogative, even since Magna Charta. Yet he recognized the right or privilege of one to take game or fish on his own premises without restraint as a substantial and valuable one. 2 Bl. Com. 418, 419. Mr. Christian, in his learned notes, combats, with the approval of Mr. Justice Coleridge, the doctrine apparently laid down by Blackstone to the effect that the sole right to take game rests primarily with the King, and maintains that at common law every person, ratione soli, had a right to take game on his own land. 2 Bl. Com. p. 419, note 8. In Blades v. Higgs, 11 H. L. Cas. 621, Lord Westbury says: "Property ratione soli is the common-law right which every owner of land has to kill and take all such animals feræ naturæ as may from time to time be found on his land, and, as soon as this right is exercised, the animal so killed or caught becomes the absolute property of the owner of the soil." And Lord Cranworth, in the same case, said: "Wild animals, whilst living, though they are, according to Lord Holt, the property of the owner of the soil on which they are living, are not his personal chattels, so as to be the subject of larceny. They partake, while living, of the quality of the soil, and are, 67 L. R. A.

as growing fruit was, considered as part of the realty." In Falkland Islands Co. v. Reg. 10 Jur. N. S. 807, where there arose the question of the construction of the grant of land made by the Crown without reservation, except the right to re-enter for the purpose of making roads, canals, and other works of public utility, and the right to cut timber and take stone for keeping such works in repair, it was held that "the grant of land in fee, and the demise of 10,000 acres for the term, conferred on the appellants the exclusive right of killing and taking game, beasts of the chase, and animals which are properly feræ naturæ, which might at any time be upon the land during the time such land was granted." Mr. Serjeant Stephen, after discussing the various distinctions in claims to this character of property after being reduced to possession, by reason of the difference of place where the game is found or started and where killed, says: "These distinctions seem to show that in general the property is acquired by the seizure and occupancy, though that cannot prevail against the better claim of him on whose grounds the animal is both killed and started (and who therefore may be said to be entitled ratione soli) or of him who has already a qualified property in it, ratione privilegii." 2 Stephen, Laws of England, 20-22.

The American cases not only generally treat the right of the owner of land to take game thereon as a property right inhering from the ownership of the soil, but recognize the establishment of that right at common law. In Venning v. Steadman, 9 Can. S. C. 210, the learned chief justice, in discussing the right of government to prohibit salmon fishing, except under license from the Department of Marines, says: "Such an absolute prohibition of the enjoyment of their property by riparian proprietors, or, what might be still worse, by granting a license to one proprietor and withholding it from another, thereby destroying the value of the property of the one and enhancing the value of the property of the other, would simply be an arbitrary interference with the rights of property, pure and simple." Mr. Justice Strong, in this same case, speaking of the right of riparian landowners to fish in a stream, says: "Then nothing can be better settled than the proposition that no restraint upon the ordinary rights of property, no derogation from the fullest enjoyment of these rights, can be imposed by statute, except by express words." The same court held that the right of riparian proprietors upon streams above tide water (un-navigable waters), and whose titles were such as to give them, according to the common-law principles, the ownership of the beds of the streams to the middle line, to fish therein within the limits of their own land, was a private and exclusive right of property,—a proprietary right of the same character as that to herbage or trees growing on the land, or the minerals or game to be found upon it. Queen v. Robertson, 6 Can. S. C. 52. The right of private ownership in game, so far as recognized as such at all, is of two kinds, denominated as the right or interest ratione soli (meaning, as the term implies, a right by reason of and growing out of the ownership of the soil) and the right or interest held by grant from the owner of the soil, called “profits à prendre,” the latter being defined to be “a right to take something out of the soil of another, . . . as the right of common, and also some minor rights, as a right to take drifted sand, or a liberty to fish, fowl, hunt, hawk.” 1 Crabb, Real Prop. 125; Phear, Waters, 57. The latter right is not a mere easement, but is held to be a right in the soil. Black, Law Dict.; Post v. Pearsall, 22 Wend. 425; Washb. Easements, p. 7; Pickering v. Noyes, 4 Barn. & C. 639; Waters v. Lilley, 4 Pick. 145, 16 Am. Dec. 333; Webber v. Lee, L. R. 9 Q. B. Div. 315; Bingham v. Salene, 15 Or. 208, 3 Am. St. Rep. 152, 14 Pac. 523; Tinicum Fishing Co. v. Carter, 61 Pa. 21, 100 Am. Dec. 597. In Bingham v. Salene, 15 Or. 208, 3 Am. St. Rep. 152, 14 Pac. 523, a grant of the right to hunt and kill wild fowls upon lakes within the boundaries of the owner of the soil is held to be a right of profit in the soil, and not a mere revocable license. Payne v. Sheets, 75 Vt. 335, 55 Atl. 656, which is an exceedingly well-considered and instructive opinion, holds that one not the owner of the land, who has a right to shoot game, fish, etc., has not a mere easement, but an interest in the soil, within the meaning of the term “owner,” used in a statute authorizing an action of trespass quare clausum fregit against one entering upon lands without permission of the owner or occupant for the purpose of shooting. Mr. Justice Watson, who delivered the opinion of the court, clearly distinguished, with express approval, the former decision of that court in the case of State v. Theriault, 70 Vt. 617, 43 L. R. A. 290, 67 Am. St. Rep. 695, 41 Atl. 1030; wherein the constitutionality of a law regulating the right of the owner of land to fish on his own premises was upheld as a proper exercise of the police power; it having been stated in the former case that “fish are feræ naturæ, and the common property of the public or the state.” The learned justice says: “To state it otherwise, the general ownership is in the people in their united sovereignty, but, when such animals go upon private grounds, then the qualified or special right of property in the owner of the soil attaches by virtue of his exclusive right to hunt, kill, or capture them while there; and this upon the principle that property which a person has a special right to acquire to the exclusion of others is private property.” The basis of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in McCready v. Virginia, 94 U. S. 301, 24 L. ed. 248, upholding the power and right of the state of Virginia to prohibit nonresidents from planting oysters in the soil covered by her tide waters, is the fact that the state owned the bed of all tide waters or navigable streams within its jurisdiction. Chief Justice Waite, speaking for the court, says: “The right which the people of the state thus acquire comes, not from their citizenship alone, but from their citizenship and property combined. It is in fact a property right, and not a mere privilege or immunity of citizenship.” See also Sterling v. Jackson, 69 Mich. 488, 13 Am. St. Rep. 405, 37 N. W. 845; Hall v. Alford, 114 Mich. 165, 38 L. R. A. 205, 72 N. W. 137; Cobb v. Davenport, 32 N. J. L. 369; Heckman v. Swett, 99 Cal. 303, 33 Pac. 1099.

It is insisted that these questions generally arise in suits between individuals, involving only individual rights, and that the recognized right to take game on one's own land, and to prevent others from so doing, is merely a right to prevent a trespass on the land, and not a right of property growing out of the soil. But this is not a correct estimate of the force of these authorities, for the cases all hold that it is a right inhering in the soil, and not a mere right to prevent an invasion of the possession of the owner. In Sterling v. Jackson, 69 Mich. 488, 13 Am. St. Rep. 405, 37 N. W. 845, the court says: “The defendant claims that he had the right to shoot the wild fowl from his boat, because, as the waters were navigable where he was, he had the right to be there; that, there being no property in wild fowl until captured, if he committed no trespass in being where he was no action will lie against him for being there and shooting the wild duck. There is a plausibility in the position, which, considered in the abstract, is quite forcible, and if applied to waters where there is no private ownership of the soil thereunder would be unanswerable. But, so far as the plaintiff is concerned, defendant had no right to be where he was, except for the purpose of pursuing the implied license held out to the public of navigating the waters over his land. So long as that license continued, he could navigate the water with his vessel, and do all things incident to such navigation.

He could seek the shelter of the bay in a storm, and cast his anchor therein, but he had no right to construct a 'hide,' nor to anchor his decoys for the purpose of attracting ducks within reach of his shotgun." In State v. Shannon, 36 Ohio St. 423, 38 Am. Rep. 599, the same doctrine is well illustrated, and the court therein says: "True, navigable streams in this state are declared to be public highways, but the right to use a public highway is not abridged by protecting the owner of the fee in the exclusive right of killing game therein." So it is held that a license to shoot or fish for a term amounts to a demise of an incorporeal hereditament, and comes within the statute of frauds, and can only be granted by deed. Wood, Stat. Fr. § 5.

We therefore conceive it to be settled by authority and by long recognition in the law that the owner of land has a right to take fish and wild game upon his own land, which inheres in him by reason of his ownership of the soil. It is a property right, as much as any other distinct right incident to his ownership of the soil. It is not, however, an unqualified and absolute right, but is bounded by these limitations: That it must always yield to the state's ownership and title, held for the purposes of regulation and preservation for the public use. These two ownerships or rights—that is to say, the general ownership of the state for one purpose, and the qualified or limited ownership of the individual, growing out of his ownership of the soil—are entirely consistent with each other, and in no wise conflict. The transitory nature of the property renders the benefits so diffusive that all may join in the enjoyment thereof, and for that reason the sovereign holds as the representative of the public, so as to regulate and protect the common use. Still the right of the landowner to hunt and fish on his own lands is to that extent a special property right, though subordinate to the other.

The cases of Geer v. Connecticut, 161 U. S. 519, 40 L. ed. 793, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 600, and Organ v. State, 56 Ark. 267, 19 S. W. 840, are pressed upon our attention with great force and earnestness by the learned counsel for the state, as conclusive of the case at bar. In both those cases the general doctrine of state ownership of wild game and fish is declared, but the language of the courts in those cases, when limited to the question under consideration, as must always be done when testing the soundness of a declared doctrine, is undoubtedly correct, and in no degree inconsistent with the views herein expressed. The cases were almost identical upon the facts, being criminal prosecutions for the unlawful exportation of game out of the state in violation of 67 L. R. A.

a statute prohibiting the same. We see no reason whatever in the opinion we now express for receding from the law declared by this court in Organ v. State. On the contrary, we adhere to it. The fullest latitude of power in the state to regulate and preserve the game for the common enjoyment is conceded, and no such private property right therein which we hold to exist can retard or obstruct the exercise of that undoubted power. But we have another and altogether different question to deal with in this case,—whether, finding that landowners have a right to hunt and fish upon their own lands, which is a property right, they are entitled to equal protection in the enjoyment of that right with other landowners, or whether it be destroyed by a statute passed under the guise of a police regulation to preserve the fish and game, and the right of enjoyment prohibited for the sole reason that they are nonresidents of the state. It is not the fact that appellee is excluded from enjoyment of the common right of the citizen to fish and hunt because of his nonresidence that he may complain, but of the exclusion by reason of his nonresidence from such special right which he should enjoy in common with other landowners. Does the curtailment of this right fall within the prohibition of the 14th Amendment? A complete answer to the inquiry is made in the affirmative when the conclusion is reached that the right denied is a property right. Nonresident landowners may be called upon to share the public burdens, and property rights in some instances must yield to the public demands; but the burden must rest equally upon all, and no discrimination in that respect be made against the nonresidents as such. Eldridge v. Trezevant, 160 U. S. 452, 40 L. ed. 490, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 345. In so far as the statute under consideration prevents the same enjoyment by appellee of the property right afforded the more fortunate resident landowner, it is a denial of "equal protection of the law," within the meaning of the constitutional guaranty, and cannot be enforced, and the taking away of this right because of his nonresidence is without due process of law.

Affirmed.

HILL, Ch. J., dissenting:

The act of April 24, 1903 (Acts 1903, p. 306), and the agreed statement of facts, present broadly this question: Has the state the power to make it unlawful for nonresident owners of real estate to shoot and hunt game and to fish on their own or the state's property at any season, while permitting residents to shoot and hunt and fish on their own and the state's property during seasons not prohibited by general and special game laws, known as the "open season." This question must be answered in the affirmative, unless there is a property interest in fish and game found on, over, or under the surface of the real estate owned by such nonresidents, for the manifest intention of the general assembly, as evidenced by the 4th section of said act, and the object and purpose of the act as a whole, is to make unlawful hunting and fishing by nonresidents. No exception is made in favor of nonresidents on their own land, and hence it must be concluded that the general assembly intended to exclude nonresidents from the privilege or property interest, as it may be construed, of hunting and fishing on their own lands, while granting the right to residents, within certain seasons, of hunting and fishing on their own lands and the lands and waters of the state. To restrict the plain language of the act to hunting and fishing on the public lands and waters would simply be judicial legislation. Therefore the question must be met, Has the state power to do this?

If the right to hunt and fish on one's own land is a property right inhering to the ownership of the soil, then this act is offensive to the clause in the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and the same clause in § 8, art. 1, Ark. Const., providing that no person shall be deprived of "life, liberty, or property without due process of law." This "due process of law" clause is the mudsill of constitutional government. The rough barons of England wrote it, almost with their swords, into Magna Charta. in these words: "No freeman shall be taken, or imprisoned, or be disseized of his freehold, or liberties, or free customs, or be outlawed or exiled, or any otherwise destroyed; nor will we pass upon him nor condemn him, but by the lawful judgment of his peers, or by the law of the land." These principles have lost no force in their more concise statement in our Bill of Rights, state and Federal. Counsel for appellee eloquently say: "These few but pregnant lines, fortified as they are by the Federal Constitution, are all that stand between us and the abyss of despotism or the hell of anarchy." Therefore a court must pause and carefully consider whether the legislation under review seeks to undo the work done at Runnymede. The Supreme Court of the United States is the final arbiter on all questions involving rights asserted under the Constitution of the United States, and its decision on such questions, whether in form to be reviewed by it from this court or not, should be conclusive.

In the case of Geer v. Connecticut, 161 U. S. 519, 40 L. ed. 793, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 600, 67 L. R. A.

every question here involved was considered and determined adversely to the contention of the appellee, as will be herein shown. The contest was over a statute of the state of Connecticut which provided (briefly speaking) an open and closed season for hunting and killing game, and, further, that at no time should certain game be killed for the purpose of shipment beyond the state, and further made it unlawful to transport or have in possession for transportation beyond the state any such game killed at any season. Geer was arrested for violating this statute, and, under the agreed statement of facts upon which he was tried, it was found that he was in possession of game killed during the open season for the purpose of transportation without the state, and that the game was not unlawfully killed for the purpose of transportation beyond the state. The case is stronger on the facts to support the contention of the appellee than the one at bar, because it was only dead game which was in the hands of Geer to be transported beyond the state, and it had not been killed for that purpose. Evidently, under the case made, after the game was lawfully killed Geer came into possession of it for the purpose of shipping it without the state. Mr. Justice Field and Mr. Justice Harlan dissented from the opinion of the majority upon the grounds that game, after being killed or captured, was then reduced to possession, and the taker or possessor had a property right in it, which he would not have so long as it was uncaught. The Connecticut court "decided that the state had power to make it an offense to have in possession, for the purpose of transportation beyond the state, birds which had been lawfully killed within the state during the open season; and that the statute, in creating this offense, did not violate the interstate commerce clause of the Constitution of the United States." The Federal Supreme Court said: "In other words, the sole issue which the case presents is, Was it lawful, under U. S. Const. art. I, § 8, for the state of Connecticut to allow the killing of birds within the state during a designated open season, to allow such birds, when so killed, to be used, to be sold, and to be bought for use within the state, and yet to forbid their transportation beyond the state? Or, to state it otherwise, had the state of Connecticut the power to regulate the killing of game within her borders, so as to confine its use to the limits of the state, and forbid its transmission outside of the state?" It is true that in that case and the one at bar different clauses of the Federal Constitution were invoked against the validity of the statute,—in that case the "interstate commerce clause," and in this the "due process of law." This was owing to the varying facts and terms of the statutes. But the solution of each of the questions depends solely upon whether there is property interest in game. If there is, then the Connecticut statute would fall, because in restraint of an interstate shipment of property; in this case, because it takes the property right from the landowner without due process of law. The Supreme Court of the United States considered the question as turning on whether there was a property right in game. Mr. Justice White, after stating the facts and issues presented, as above quoted, then said: "In considering this inquiry, we, of course, accept the interpretation affixed to the state statute by the court of last resort of the state. The solution of the question involves a consideration of the nature of the property in game, and the authority which the state had a right lawfully to exercise in relation thereto." Then the learned justice takes up the subject of the ownership of fish and game from the earlier times known to the laws of civilized countries. He traces it through the Grecian, Roman, and Salic laws, and gives an extract from the Code Napoleon, which he says summed up an unbroken line of law and precedent, as follows: "There are things which belong to no one, and the use of which is common to all. Police regulations direct the manner in which they may be enjoyed. The faculty of hunting and fishing is also regulated by special laws." He further says that the fundamental principles on which property in game rests pervade the laws of Germany, Austria, Italy, and, indeed, all the countries of Europe. Then passing to the common law of England, he says: "The common law of England also based property in game upon the principle of common ownership, and therefore treated it as subject to governmental authority." Then follow quotations from Blackstone, showing the paramount authority of the government over fish and game, while recognizing a qualified property in the way of the privilege of hunting and fishing on his own ground to the exclusion of others, but the minute the game passes his boundary that fugitive right is also gone. The court proceeds to declare that this attribute of the government to control animals feræ naturæ was vested by inheritance in the colonies founded in America by the English people, and passed from the colonies to the several states on the formation of the Union, and remains in the states to the present day, in so far as its exercise may be not incompatible with, or restrained by, the rights granted the Federal government. Then the court proceeds to a review of the numerous decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States and of the several states recognizing the absolute right of the states to control and regulate the common property in game and fish. The court cites and approves many cases, not only of regulation, but of control, of the common property in game. Among others so cited is Organ v. State, 56 Ark. 270, 19 S. W. 840, in which Mr. Justice Hemingway, for this court, said: "The ownership of fish is in the state for the benefit of its people in common, and the legislature has the right to permit individuals to catch them upon such terms and conditions as it may impose, and to restrict the property acquired in them, when caught, to such extent as it deems proper. McCready v. Virginia, 94 U. S. 391, 24 L. ed. 248; American Exp. Co. v. People, 133 Ill. 649, 9 L. R. A. 138, 23 Am. St. Rep. 641, 24 N. E. 758; Magner v. People, 97 Ill. 333." In the case of Magner v. People, cited with approval by Judge Hemingway, the Illinois court said: "No one has a property in the animals and fowls denominated 'game' until they are reduced to possession. . . . Whilst they are untamed and at large the ownership is said to be in the sovereign authority,—in Great Britain, the King, . . . but with us, in the people of the state. . . . The ownership being in the people of the state,—the repository of the sovereign authority,—and no individual having any property rights to be affected, . . . the representative of the people of the state may withhold or grant to individuals the right to hunt and kill game, or qualify and restrict it, as, in the opinion of its members, will best subserve the public welfare. Stated in other language, to hunt and kill game is a boon or privilege granted, either expressly or impliedly, by the sovereign authority,—not a right inhering in each individual; and consequently nothing is taken away from the individual when he is denied the privilege, at stated seasons, of hunting and killing game. . . . But in any view, the question of individual enjoyment is one of public policy, and not of private right." This is reiterated and approved in People v. Bridges, 142 Ill. 30, 16 L. R. A. 684, 31 N. E. 115. The above excerpt, and more, from Magner v. People, is quoted by Mr. Justice White in the Geer Case as expressing the correct doctrine. Thereupon the case comes as authority approved by this court, and approved and copied at length as part of its opinion by the Supreme Court of the United States. Coming thus accredited, it is conclusive and binding authority to the effect that there is no property right in fish and game in individuals, as against the state, and the state may, as a boon or privilege, permit hunting and fishing to anyone, or withhold it from anyone, and affect no property interest whatever.

67 L. R. A.

Returning to the Organ Case, Mr. Justice Hemingway continued: "It [referring to the state] may prohibit catching them entirely or for a specified season, or it may permit them to be caught for the use of the person who makes the catch, and withhold the right to sell them or ship them for sale. When preserved for the common benefit of the people of the state, they are not articles of commerce, in any sense, and we cannot see that they become such simply because the legislature permits them to be caught by individuals for use within the state only." Counsel for appellee, to break the force of this decision as authority here, says of it that it "merely follows Geer v. Connecticut. The fish were taken from public waters, and the case has no resemblance to this." It would be more accurate to say that Geer v. Connecticut followed the Organ Case, as it is twice cited approvingly therein. But the argument of counsel is answered in the opinion itself, wherein it says: "One who catches them had originally no separate property in them, and no right to acquire it except as the legislature might provide. As all right of property in them is derived from the state, it is subject to such terms as the legislature imposes. . . . The restriction was imposed by right of ownership, and not in the exercise of any assumed power to regulate the commercial uses of private property." Thus, the power of regulation is placed upon its only true basis,—the right of ownership of the fish and game in the state; and it matters not where it is found, except reclaimed game in parks, and fish in private ponds, which have a property right impressed in them by being reduced to personal possession, and are no longer feræ naturæ. But a more complete answer than is here given to the position of counsel that the Organ Case does not control as to game on private property, but only in public domain, is given in American Exp. Co. v. People, 133 Ill. 649, 9 L. R. A. 138, 23 Am. St. Rep. 641, 24 N. E. 758. This case is cited as authority by Mr. Justice Hemingway in the Organ Case, and by Mr. Justice White in the Geer Case. It grew out of a statute of Illinois prohibiting the exportation of quail killed anywhere in the state, whether on private or public domain, and the court said: "It is, however, argued that where quail have been killed the dead animals become property, and the taker becomes the absolute owner of such property, and an act to prevent a sale or transportation for sale within the state would be an interference with private right, amounting to a destruction of the right of property without due process of law." This is not distinguishable from the position of appellee herein, who insists that the right to take game on his own property is a property right, which cannot be taken from him without being a "destruction of the right of property without due process of law." But the Illinois court answered this argument as follows: "The fallacy of the position consists in the supposition that the person who may kill quail has an absolute property in the dead animals. In the Magner Case, 97 Ill. 333, it was held, as has been seen, that no one has a property in animals and fowls denominated game,—the ownership was in the people of the state. . . . The act, therefore, does not destroy a right of property, because no such right exists." Mr. Justice White, after fully reviewing the adjudications of many states on this subject, deduces these propositions: That the qualified property interest in game is derived from the sovereign grant of it, and it may be withheld, restricted, or regulated; that a state may permit its own people to enjoy their own property, and withhold from them the right to deal with it as an article of interstate commerce; that there may be an internal commerce in the dead animals, which does not conflict with the right of Congress to regulate interstate commerce; and further: "The common ownership imports the right to keep the property, if the sovereign so chooses, always within its jurisdiction, for every purpose." In speaking of cases from Kansas and Idaho contrary to the decision reached in the Geer Case, Justice White said: "But the reasoning which controlled the decision of these cases is, we think, inconclusive, from the fact that it did not consider the fundamental distinction between the qualified ownership in game and the perfect nature of ownership in other property, and thus overlooked the authority of the state over property in game killed within its confines, and the consequent power of the state to follow such property into whatever hands it might pass with the conditions and restrictions deemed necessary for the public interest." This ultimate conclusion that decisions to the contrary of this one are based on a confusion of the nature of the qualified property right in game may account for some decisions conflicting with this view, but in the main there is no serious conflict in the decisions. Take, for instance, Payne v. Sheets, 75 Vt. 335, 55 Atl. 656, which appellee's counsel present as the best considered opinion dealing with the question of ownership of game. The action was trespass quare clausum fregit, brought under a statute of Vermont giving such action to the owner or occupant of land against a person going thereon without per-of law." This is not distinguishable from the position of appellee herein, who insists that the right to take game on his own property is a property right, which cannot be taken from him without being a "destruction of the right of property without due process of law." But the Illinois court answered this argument as follows: "The fallacy of the position consists in the supposition that the person who may kill quail has an absolute property in the dead animals. In the Magner Case, 97 Ill. 333, it was held, as has been seen, that no one has a property in animals and fowls denominated game,—the ownership was in the people of the state. . . . The act, therefore, does not destroy a right of property, because no such right exists." Mr. Justice White, after fully reviewing the adjudications of many states on this subject, deduces these propositions: That the qualified property interest in game is derived from the sovereign grant of it, and it may be withheld, restricted, or regulated; that a state may permit its own people to enjoy their own property, and withhold from them the right to deal with it as an article of interstate commerce; that there may be an internal commerce in the dead animals, which does not conflict with the right of Congress to regulate interstate commerce; and further: "The common ownership imports the right to keep the property, if the sovereign so chooses, always within its jurisdiction, for every purpose." In speaking of cases from Kansas and Idaho contrary to the decision reached in the Geer Case, Justice White said: "But the reasoning which controlled the decision of these cases is, we think, inconclusive, from the fact that it did not consider the fundamental distinction between the qualified ownership in game and the perfect nature of ownership in other property, and thus overlooked the authority of the state over property in game killed within its confines, and the consequent power of the state to follow such property into whatever hands it might pass with the conditions and restrictions deemed necessary for the public interest." This ultimate conclusion that decisions to the contrary of this one are based on a confusion of the nature of the qualified property right in game may account for some decisions conflicting with this view, but in the main there is no serious conflict in the decisions. Take, for instance, Payne v. Sheets, 75 Vt. 335, 55 Atl. 656, which appellee's counsel present as the best considered opinion dealing with the question of ownership of game. The action was trespass quare clausum fregit, brought under a statute of Vermont giving such action to the owner or occupant of land against a person going thereon without permission of the owner or occupant for the purpose of hunting thereon. The plaintiff alleged that he was the owner and occupant of the land for the purpose of shooting, trapping, fishing, etc. He was not the owner of the fee, but of these hunting and fishing rights, and the question was presented whether he was an owner or occupant of the land within the statute. In an earlier Vermont case (State v. Theriault, 70 Vt. 617, 43 L. R. A. 290, 67 Am. St. Rep. 695, 41 Atl. 1030) the court had held: "Fish themselves are feræ naturæ—the common property of the public or of the state—in this country. From this common property the owner of the soil over which the nonboatable stream flows has the right to appropriate such as he may capture and retain, but this right of capture and appropriation is subject to regulation and control by the representatives of the people, so that there shall continue to be a common property. . . . Not a decision in this country, state or national, has been brought to our attention by the respondent, nor by quite an extensive examination of such cases, which holds that such acts of the state legislature in regard to this class of property, and in restraint of the right of the riparian owner to take and appropriate fish therefrom, are unconstitutional. They have uniformly been held to be, not a taking of private property or private rights for public use, for which compensation, . . . but an exercise of the police power of the state to preserve or increase a common property," etc. The court, in Payne v. Sheets, commenting on this decision, said: "The sole question in State v. Theriault was, as considered, the constitutionality of the law regulating the right of the owner of land to fish on his own premises. The law was upheld as a proper exercise of the police power, under the provisions of the Constitution." Thus this class of cases was approved and held not to be in conflict with the views entertained in the case then before the court, which was a mere question between individuals as to the rights permitted by the state. The court held that there was a qualified ownership in the soil for the purpose of hunting and fishing, separate from the ownership of the land itself. This is technically known as a "profit à prendre." It is a well-recognized and valuable right. As pointed out by counsel for appellee, vast game preserves in the north of England and Scotland are annually let to rich Americans and other parties of means and leisure. 67 L. R. A.

These game preserves are not unknown in this country, and in Payne v. Sheets the profit à prendre was protected to the extent of holding the owner of it an "owner or occupant," within the trespass statute of Vermont. But this valuable incident to real estate is held subject to the right of the sovereign authority. It is conceded on all sides that the enjoyment of it may be restricted by regulations, like the open and closed seasons. And it is thought that the authorities here adduced establish that it may also be absolutely forbidden by the sovereign, or granted as a boon or privilege to whom the sovereign chooses. Therefore the qualified ownership in game—the profit à prendre in land for purpose of hunting or fishing thereon—is a valuable right between individuals. Trespassing will not be allowed to destroy it or interfere with it; but it is subject to the dominance of the people, who have the perfect, not qualified, property interest therein.

The argument is also made that this act discriminates unlawfully by denying equal privileges to citizens of other states. McCready v. Virginia, 94 U. S. 391, 24 L. ed. 248, puts this question at rest. This same question came up in Tennessee under a statute forbidding fishing anywhere except by rod or line, and excepting private ponds, and was thus disposed of by the supreme court of that state: "Finally, it is insisted that this act is void because violative of the 1st section of the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States in that it unwarrantably interferes with the property rights of the owners of lakes, etc. We think this contention equally unsound. It overlooks the fact that fish in streams or bodies of water have always been classed by the common law as feræ naturæ, in which the riparian proprietor, or the owner of the soil covered by the water, even though he may have the sole and exclusive right of fishing in said waters, has at best but a qualified property, which can be rendered absolute only by their actual capture, and which is wholly divested the moment the fish escape to other waters." Peters v. State, 96 Tenn. 682, 33 L. R. A. 114, 36 S. W. 399.

In the opinion of the minority of the court in this case, the act is constitutional, and the 4th clause effective against nonresidents hunting and fishing in their own premises, and therefore the judgment should be reversed.

Battle, J., concurs herein.

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

Re Harriet KING.

(66 Kan. 695.)

*The judgment of a court in a proceeding in habeas corpus with regard to the custody of a child will not prevent another court from afterwards making a different order, where the welfare of the child requires it, even though no material change of circumstances is shown.

(April 11, 1903.)

APPPLICATION for a writ of habeas corpus to obtain the custody of Harry J. Hines and Edith May Hines who were alleged to be illegally detained from the rightful custody of petitioner. Denied.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. David Ritchie, for petitioner:

The proceedings of the district court of Saline county and the probate court are a bar to further inquiry into this case.

State ex rel. Lembke v. Bechdel, 37 Minn. 360, 5 Am. St. Rep. 854, 34 N. W. 334; Re Sneden, 105 Mich. 61, 55 Am. St. Rep. 435, 62 N. W. 1009; 9 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 238; Church, Habeas Corpus, 2d ed. 575; Freeman, Judgm. 4th ed. § 324; Mercein v. People, 25 Wend. 64, 35 Am. Dec. 653; McConologue's Case, 107 Mass. 170; State ex rel. Malone v. Malone, 3 Sneed, 413; Bonnett ex rel. Newmeyer v. Bonnett, 61 Iowa, 199, 47 Am. Rep. 810, 16 N. W. 91.

Mr. Z. C. Millikin for respondent.

*Headnote by MASON, J.

NOTE.—Habeas corpus decreed as to custody of infant as res judicata.

- I. Doctrine of res judicata generally applicable, 783.
- II. Former judgment only conclusive upon same state of facts, 784.
- III. Conclusiveness as to issues involved, 787.
- IV. Parties or persons concluded, 787.
- V. Foreign judgment as res judicata, 788.
- VI. Dismissal of writ without decision or prejudice, 788.

I. Doctrine of res judicata generally applicable.

The general rule deducible from the authorities is that a proper and final adjudication on habeas corpus, as to the custody of an infant, conclusively determines all questions necessarily involved, as between the same parties and upon the same state of facts.

In Com. v. Murray, 1 Legal Record Rep. 272, Cited in 10 Pepper & Lewis's (Pa.) Dig. col. 16765, a writ of habeas corpus for the custody of a child was dismissed on the ground that the controversy had been decided in favor of the respondent after a full hearing in the same court on a prior writ.

67 L. R. A.

Mason, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an original proceeding, brought by Harriet King to obtain the custody of Harry J. Hines, aged six years, and Edith May Hines, aged four years. The parents of these children were married in 1895, the mother being then about seventeen years of age. They lived near Brookville, in Saline county, Kansas, until 1897, when they went to Kansas City, Kansas, where, in February, 1900, the mother was granted a divorce from the father on the ground of nonsupport and abandonment. The decree made no reference to the children, who had been left with the father's mother, Harriet King, the petitioner in this case, in Saline county. In March, 1901, the mother was married to James E. Peck. In the following July she applied to the probate court of Saline county for a writ of habeas corpus by which she sought to have the custody of the children restored to her. Mrs. King, the respondent in that proceeding, resisted the order sought, and, after hearing testimony, the court, on August 4th, remanded the children to her custody, and awarded her their care and control until "changed in the manner prescribed by law." On August 15, 1901, Mrs. Peck made another attempt to procure the custody of the children by applying to the district court of Saline county for a writ of habeas corpus. Mrs. King, as the respondent, made return, setting up, among other matters, the proceedings in the probate court. This part of the return was de-

In Brooke v. Logan, 112 Ind. 183, 2 Am. St. Rep. 177, 13 N. E. 669, holding an adverse decision rendered in an application by a father for the removal of a statutory guardian appointed for his child, and for the appointment of himself in his stead, is not conclusive against the father in a subsequent proceeding by habeas corpus to obtain possession of his child on the ground that the cause of action was not the same, the court said: The question of the custody of a minor child, once properly and finally adjudicated, whether in a habeas corpus proceeding or otherwise, is settled for all time, unless there is an appeal and the judgment rendered is impregnable as against a collateral assault. A subsequent writ may be awarded, but upon the subsequent hearing evidence will not be heard which goes back of the previous adjudication.

An adjudication, made at special term, awarding the custody of an infant in a habeas corpus proceeding, is a bar to the prosecution of a similar proceeding so long as it remains unreversed, where in the former proceeding the matter was postponed upon a stipulation that no other writ would be sued out or action taken until the decision of the pending proceeding, and subsequently an attempt to discontinue the proceeding was made by the murred to, and the court overruled the demurrer, and dismissed the cause. On the 21st of July, 1902, Mrs. Peck and her husband went to the home of Mrs. King, took the children, and removed them to their home. The present proceeding was begun August 5, 1902. Much testimony has been taken on behalf of each of the contending parties, the grandmother and the mother, to show that the other is unfit to be intrusted with the care of the children.

The petitioner claims that the orders of the probate and district courts form a bar to the present proceeding; that the whole matter here presented for litigation has been already determined by a court of competent jurisdiction, and is not subject to further judicial investigation. It has frequently been held that the doctrine of res judicata applies to the decisions of courts in habeas corpus cases where the purpose of the writ is to obtain the custody of children. 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 213. See also the case of Re Hamilton, 66 Kan. 754, 71 Pac. 817, and cases there cited. Granting the correctness of the legal proposition stated, it only applies so long as the situation of the parties is the same. In the present case there is testimony with regard to the treatment the children received at the hands of their grandmother after the termination of the proceedings in the probate and district courts, which, if accepted as true, would justify this court in changing their custody upon the theory that a new condition had arisen, materially different from that existing when the former adjudication was had. But there is also presented testimony to the contrary, and, as the testimony is all in writing, it would be difficult to reach a satisfying conclusion to the actual facts in this regard, and we shall not attempt it, but shall decide the case upon other considerations.

A proceeding in habeas corpus, relating to the custody of a child, must be viewed in two aspects. In form, the writ purports to afford an inquiry into the question whether the child is unlawfully restrained of its liberty. In fact, it is ordinarily a means for investigating and determining which of two parties has the better right to the custody of a child. Some of the decisions—and perhaps all of them—in which it has been held that a ruling upon one application is an absolute bar to all inquiry upon a second application based upon the same state of facts assume that the matter is to be treated merely as a private controversy between adverse claimants to the custody of the child. A typical case is that of State ex rel. Lembke v. Bechdel, 37 Minn. 360, 5 Am. St. Rep. 854, 34 N. W. 334, where it is said: "In Re Snell, 31 Minn. 110, 16 N. W. 692, this court held that a decision under one writ of habeas corpus, refusing to discharge a prisoner, is not a bar to the issuing of another writ, based upon the same state of facts, nor to a hearing and discharge thereon. While there is room for a difference of opinion, and in fact a conflict of decisions, upon this question, yet, in view of the oripetitioner, who, upon the court's refusal to permit a discontinuance, made default upon the adjourned day. Re Price, 12 Hun, 508.

For cases holding that a former adjudication on habeas corpus as to the custody of an infant is res judicata while the state of facts remain the same, see infra, II.

But it is held in RE KING that the judgment of a court, in a proceeding in habeas corpus, with regard to the custody of a child, will not prevent another court from afterwards making a different order, where the welfare of the child requires it, although no material change of circumstances is shown. This decision is discussed and disapproved in CORMACK v. MARSHALL.

And see Slack v. Perrine, 9 App. D. C. 128, under infra, IV.

II. Former judgment only conclusive upon same state of facts.

The principle of res judicata applies to a decision as to the custody of a child on a writ of habeas corpus while the state of facts remains the same. Weir v. Marley, 99 Mo. 484, 6 L. R. A. 672, 12 S. W. 798; Re Sneden, 105 Mich. 61, 55 Am. St. Rep. 435, 62 N. W. 1009.

A former adjudication on the question of the right to the custody of an infant child, brought up on habeas corpus, may be pleaded as res judicata, and is conclusive upon the same parties upon the same state of facts. State ex rel. Lembke v. Bechdel, 37 Minn. 360, 5 Am. St. Rep. 854, 34 N. W. 334; Mercein v. People, 25 Wend. 64, 35 Am. Dec. 653. Cited with approval in Dubois v. Johnson, 96 Ind. 6.

The decision of a judge on habeas corpus refusing to transfer the custody of an infant child from its mother to the father on the ground of its tender age is at most conclusive in respect to facts and circumstances then existing, but not as to such as may arise afterwards; and, in a subsequent similar proceeding instituted by the father, he may allege as a new and material circumstance the advanced age of the child. People ex rel. Barry v. Mercein, 3 Hill, 399, 38 Am. Dec. 644.

An adverse determination made in habeas corpus proceedings, instituted by a father to obtain the custody of his minor child, settles and concludes all matters in issue arising upon the same state of facts, and precludes their consideration in a subsequent habeas corpus proceeding instituted by him. Re Hamilton, 66 Kan. 754, 71 Pac. 817.

An adjudication on habeas corpus that a minor, who had enlisted in the Army without the consent of his parents, could not be held as an enlisted soldier, is a conclusive determination of all questions of law and fact necessarily involved in that result, and conclusively settles, on the hearing on a subsequent writ of habeas corpus, that he was not liable gin, history, and purposes of this writ as a 'writ of liberty,' we adopted this rule in this class of cases in which the liberty of the citizen is the question directly involved. But such cases are clearly distinguishable, we think, both upon principle and authority, from those in which the writ is sued out merely for the purpose of determining which of two parties is entitled to the custody of an infant child. In the latter the question is not really whether the infant is restrained of its liberty, but, Who is entitled to its custody? It is true that the charge is that the child is unlawfully restrained, etc.; but the gist of this charge is, not that the child is unlawfully deprived of its liberty, but that such restraint is in prejudice of the right of the relators to its custody. The case is really one of private parties contesting private rights under the form of proceedings on habeas corpus." We agree that, so far as such a proceeding is to be considered as a mere trial of conflicting private rights, there is no reason, in the nature of things, why the doctrine of estoppel by former adjudication should not apply. But we think that the proceeding is in a measure just what it purports to be,—an investigation into a charge that a child is illegally restrained of its liberty; that is, that it is restrained by a custody that is illegal in the sense that it is not for the child's best interest. In such a view, the interest of the child being as sacred as the liberty of the citizen, the question of the effect of a former adjudication might be determined upon the same considerations as in an ordinary habeas corpus case. Although in Weir v. Marley, 99 Mo. 484, 6 L. R. A. 672, 12 S. W. 798, the court holds to the accepted rule of estoppel, it uses this language: "The distinction thus made between judgments remanding and those discharging the prisoner grows out of the nature of the writ, whose raison d'être is the protection of personal liberty. It loses none of its characteristics when used for the purpose of obtaining the custody of children, and the same analogies ought to obtain in such cases as when used simply for the purpose of discharging a prisoner from illegal restraint." Regardless of the analogy to the ordinary habeas corpus proceeding, however, we hold that the doctrine of estoppel does not preclude a court in any case where it has acquired jurisdiction from making such order with regard to the custody of a child as shall be for the child's best interest. The parents have, ordinarily, a legal right to the custody of their children. It is not an absolute and unqualified right, but it is a real right, with which a court may interfere only upon a showing of exceptional circumstances. When a court, in a proper proceeding, wherein conflicting claims to the right to the custody of a child are litigated, takes the custody from the parents, and bestows it upon some other person, the legal right of the parent is to that extent extinguished, and the new custodian has in that respect the same right formerly held by the parents. The parents may not to be held in custody upon the existing state of facts. McConologue's Case, 107 Mass. 170.

So, the determination on habeas corpus that a minor, who enlisted in the army without the consent of his parents, was not entitled to his discharge, is res judicata upon the same facts; and the only mode of correcting it, if wrong, is by certiorari. People ex rel. Allen v. Burnett, 5 Park. Crim. Rep. 113, 13 Abb. Pr. 8.

A decision, in a habeas corpus proceeding, awarding the custody of an infant as between its parents, is at most conclusive in respect to the facts and circumstances then existing, and does not preclude the court from making a decree as to the custody of the child in a subsequent suit for divorce between the parents. Everitt v. Everitt, 29 Ind. App. 508, 94 Am. St. Rep. 276, 64 N. E. 892.

A judgment rendered in a habeas corpus proceeding temporarily awarding the custody of a child to its mother, in preference to its father, while it may be recognized as res judicata as to the matters and issues then existing, does not compel a temporary award of the child's custody in the adverse judgment rendered in a subsequent action instituted by the child's father to have her restored to his possession, and can have no legal effect where different conditions prevail. Lemunier v. McCearly, 37 La. Ann. 138.

In Edwards v. Edwards, 84 Mo. App. 552, on a proceeding by habeas corpus brought by a 67 L. R. A.

mother to recover possession of her infant daughter, who had been awarded to her paternal grandfather in a previous habeas corpus proceeding instituted by the father against the mother, in which the grandfather intervened as a claimant for the custody of the child, the court committed the infant to the care of her mother on the ground that an essentially different state of facts had arisen since the submission of the case in the former proceeding.

So, in People ex rel. Ludden v. Winston, 34 Misc. 21, 69 N. Y. Supp. 452, the court refused to take a child from the custody of her father, to whom she had been committed in a former habeas corpus proceeding, and transfer her to her mother, where the facts remained the same, and the mother was cohabiting with one whom she had married after procuring a void foreign divorce from the child's father. But subsequently, in People ex rel. Winston v. Winston, 65 App. Div. 233, 72 N. Y. Supp. 456, upon a showing that the mother, upon the affirmation by the court of appeals of the decision declaring her foreign divorce invalid, had ceased to cohabit with her second husband, and was conducting a boarding house for a living, and was able to support and educate the child, its custody was awarded to her.

A decision rendered by a judge of the superior court, in which he doubts his authority to make an order disposing on habeas corpus of the custody of a child, is not res judicata on a subsequent proceeding by habeas corpus indispute such right, nor relitigate it, except upon a new state of facts. But the court has the same power to change the custody as against the new custodian as it had originally against the parents. Re Bort, 25 Kan. 308, 37 Am. Rep. 255. It is true that in the cases where the doctrine of res judicata is applied in its widest scope the welfare of the child is given great, and even controlling, effect, this consideration being treated as qualifying the legal rights of the claimants. Yet in other cases it is said that the custody of a child will be awarded as its own welfare may require, because the interest of the child will override the legal right, and authorize an order in spite of such right. See 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 187, and cases there cited. Whether the welfare of the child is properly spoken of as modifying the legal right, or as justifying an order in opposition to the right, may not be important. But the distinction between a question as to the comparative rights of two conflicting claimants, and one as to what is for the best interest of a child, is real and vital. The former may be controlled by a prior adjudication, but the latter is always open.

In the present case, then, we assume that the judgment of the probate court of Saline county determines the respective legal rights of the grandmother and the mother, and, as against the mother, places the right to the care of the children with the grandmother; and that the mother is estopped by such determination, and cannot relitigate the matter in this court, unless upon a showing of a material change of conditions since that judgment was rendered. But, nevertheless, the responsibility is cast upon this court, which it cannot avoid if it would, of deciding what order herein is for the best interest of these children. In a matter of such importance to them and of such inherent delicacy, it is to be regretted that more adequate means of information as to the exact facts are not afforded. This court cannot undertake to say just what portion of a mass of contradictory testimony is to be believed. From the spirit of bitterness that characterizes much of it, it is entirely probable that both charges and counter charges are untrue. The decision of the probate court is entitled to weight, but, as the evidence in that court is not before us, such decision must be considered in the light of the depositions on file here, which seem to cover all phases of the controversy. We shall reach a determination upon a general view of the situation, rather than upon an attempted resolution in detail of the disputed issues of fact. The custody is asked by the grandmother, who is sixty-two years of age, and who is living alone. The children are now, and have been for over nine months, with their mother, who is living with her present husband, a man of good habits, against whom nothing is alleged, and who professes an interest in and affection for the children as though they were his own. It is too clear for argument that in the case of children of such tender years, stituted in the supreme court,—especially where evidence of restraint exercised since the former proceeding is given. People ex rel. Trainer v. Cooper, 8 How. Pr. 288.

In Ferguson v. Ferguson, 36 Mo. 197, in speaking of a decision rendered on habeas corpus awarding the custody of minor children, the court said: The decision is not of the nature of a final judgment. It concerns only the present actual condition of things, and the order of the court is at once executed and accomplished beyond recall; and, in reference to any new state of facts existing afterwards, the parties have the same remedies as before, whether by writ of habeas corpus or other proceeding in any court of competent jurisdiction.

In a contest by habeas corpus for the custody of an infant the court intimated that any order that it might make as to the disposition of the child would be in its nature temporary. That it could not, in that proceeding, determine the question of guardianship; but could only exercise its discretion on general principles of justice, after full consideration of all the circumstances, and with a view mainly to the child's interest. Re Doyle, 16 Mo. App. 159.

It is said in Derlinger v. Derlinger, 5 Legal Gaz. 329, 30 Phila. Leg. Int. 336, 10 Phila. 190, that an order of the court, made on habeas corpus, disposing of the custody of a minor child, is not res judicata, and is intended ed only for the condition of things as they exist at the time of the hearing. It may be revoked or modified whenever required by a change of circumstances.

In Green v. Campbell, 35 W. Va. 698, 29 Am. St. Rep. 843, 14 S. E. 212, the court states that a decree awarding on habeas corpus the custody of an infant does not establish a permanent custody, but one intended to continue until a change of circumstances shall, in respect of the infant's welfare, require a change of custody, or until the infant has reached such an age that, by statute, he may nominate his own guardian, subject to the parent's right and to confirmation by the court.

On habeas corpus proceedings instituted to obtain possession of her infant daughter, by a wife who had left her husband, the custody of the child was, by the court of appeals, adjudged to the father; but, after the return of the case to the circuit court, and entry of mandate, the latter court declined to restore the infant to the custody of the father on the ground of his immoral conduct since the original judgment was rendered. This was held not to be a disregard of the mandate of the court of appeals, where the circuit court was directed to reserve in its judgment the power to take the child from its father and give it to the mother if sufficient cause was shown for it. Bonney v. Bonney, 10 Ky. L. Rep. 454, 9 S. W. 404.

See also Com. ex rel. Thompson v. Ebert, 24 having regard alone to their own welfare, leaving all other matters out of consideration, their proper place is with their mother, unless it be found that she is unfit for the trust, or incapable of caring for them; and the evidence in this case does not warrant such a finding.

The children will be committed to the custody of Emma Peck, their mother. The costs of this proceeding, in view of all the circumstances of the case, will be taxed to respondents James E. Peck and Emma Peck.

Burch, J., having been of counsel, not sitting.

All the other Justices concur.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

Joseph M. CORMACK, Petitioner,
v.

Thomas MARSHALL.

(211 Ill. 519.)

An unreversed judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction in a habeas corpus proceeding for the custody of a child is, while the facts are unchanged, binding upon the parties, and will bar independent proceedings in another court, even though it be one of higher jurisdiction.

(Wilkin, Cartwright, and Scott, JJ., dissent.)

(October 24, 1904.)

PETITION for writ of habeas corpus to obtain the custody of petitioner's infant son. Denied.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. A. D. Early for petitioner.

Messrs. Carnes, Dunton, & Faissler and Cliffe & Cliffe, for respondent:

In controversies over the custody of children the decision of the court in a habeas corpus proceeding becomes res judicata.

Pa. Co. Ct. 648; Re Barnes, 30 Ohio L. J. 164, —infra, V.

III. Conclusiveness as to issues involved.

A decision, in a habeas corpus proceeding, awarding the custody of a child as between two contestants, does not conclude the defeated party from disputing, on his subsequent application to be appointed guardian of the child, an alleged contract between the child's deceased father and the adverse party, under which the latter claims the child was permanently relinquished to him, where the former adjudication was put in part, and might have been put altogether, on the ground that the applicant for guardianship was estopped from raising the question. James v. Cleghorn, 63 Ga. 335. The court remarks: Another reason, perhaps, why a judgment rendered between two contestants for the possession of a child on a writ of habeas corpus should not stand in the way of future proceedings, looking to the supplying the child with regular guardianship, is that in the latter the child's need of a guardian and its right to have a guardian are the great and controlling elements, whilst in the former these elements are not necessarily involved.

That a decree on habeas corpus awarding the custody of an infant is res judicata as to the issues involved, see Re Hamilton, 66 Kan. 754, 71 Pac. 817; McConologue's Case, 107 Mass. 170; Lemunier v. McCearly, 37 La. Ann. 133, —supra, II.
67 L. R. A.

9 Enc. Pl. & Pr. p. 1070; 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 211; Freeman, Judgm. 3d ed. § 324; Church, Habeas Corpus, 2d ed. § 387; Mercein v. People, 25 Wend. 64, 35 Am. Dec. 653; Re Hamilton, 66 Kan. 754, 71 Pac. 817; Re Sneden, 105 Mich. 61, 55 Am. St. Rep. 435, 62 N. W. 1009.

The right of successive applications for the writ of habeas corpus in cases involving the custody of children does not depend upon the question whether appeal or writ of error lies, but is denied on other grounds.

Re Sneden, 105 Mich. 61, 55 Am. St. Rep. 435, 62 N. W. 1009; State ex rel. Lembke v. Bechdel, 37 Minn. 360, 5 Am. St. Rep. 854, 34 N. W. 334; Re Stockman, 71 Mich. 180, 38 N. W. 876; Re Snell, 31 Minn. 110, 16 N. W. 692; Church, Habeas Corpus, 2d ed. § 387; Re Hamilton, 66 Kan. 754, 71 Pac. 817.

Ricks, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an original proceeding in this

IV. Parties or persons concluded.

That a former adjudication as to the custody of an infant, brought up on habeas corpus, is conclusive upon the same parties upon the same state of facts, is held by State ex rel. Lembke v. Bechdel, 37 Minn. 360, 5 Am. St. Rep. 854, 34 N. W. 334, and Mercein v. People, 25 Wend. 64, 35 Am. Dec. 653, contrary to RE KING.

But an adjudication, in a habeas corpus proceeding sued out by a husband, awarding the custody of a minor child to another person, is not binding upon the wife, and does not estop her from suing out a like proceeding against the same person to obtain the custody of such infant, who was not the child of either of the parties. Taylor v. Nelther, 108 Ga. 765, 33 S. E. 420.

An order made on habeas corpus, giving a mother the custody of two of her children of tender years, is not conclusive against the rights of the father in a subsequent proceeding on habeas corpus, instituted by the mother to obtain possession of another child nearly seven years of age, then in the possession of its maternal grandmother, with the consent of the father, where there does not seem to have been any adjudication in the former proceeding as to the father's character and conduct, and he did not appear in either proceeding. Re Reynolds, 28 N. Y. S. R. 538, 8 N. Y. Supp. 172.

A decree awarding the custody and control of children, though res judicata as to the par-court upon a writ of habeas corpus issued upon the petition of Joseph M. Cormack for the custody of his infant son, Kimball James Marshall Cormack, in which it is alleged that said son is illegally detained by the respondent, the grandfather of said child. The respondent, by his return, admits the possession of the child, and avers that he is legally entitled to have and keep said child in his custody by virtue of an order of the circuit court of De Kalb county entered at the October term, 1903, of said court, upon a habeas corpus proceeding by the petitioner in this cause against this respondent for the custody of this same child; that, upon a writ, return, traverse, and full hearing upon both the facts and law before said court, it was found that it was for the best interests and welfare of said child that the respondent have the care, custody, and control of him, and it was so ordered; and that said child was remanded to the care, custody, and control of the respondent. The petition, return, and record of said former proceeding are set out in the return in hæc verba, and it is further averred therein that "there has been no change in the situation of said child, or the circumstances governing and controlling the question as to the right of his custody, since said hearing and order in said circuit court;" and said former proceeding and order are pleaded in bar as res judicata. Respondent also reasserts and repleads the facts and circumstances set forth in his return to the former writ, wherein are stated at large the circumstances under which said child first came into his custody and control, and why he did retain, and deemed himself still entitled to retain, said child. Petitioner answers the return as made to the writ in this court, and admits the proceedings had in the circuit court; does not deny that there has been no change in the conditions, etc., as they existed at the time of the former suit, but says the order of the circuit court was not warranted, and denies that it can operate as res judicata. Petitioner then traverses and controverts some of the allegations of fact as to the manner and claim under which respondent originally obtained the custody of said child, and the circumstances under which he retained the same. The cause was referred, and the evidence taken and reported, and the cause heard by this court upon written testimony and printed and oral arguments by counsel for both parties.

From the view we feel impelled to take of the law in this case it would seem unnecessary to enter into a discussion of the evidence, as it might affect the rights of the ties to the proceeding, is not conclusive as to the rights of the infants themselves, and does not preclude a court of competent jurisdiction from removing them, when necessary for their welfare, from the custody of the person to whom they were committed by the decree. Slack v. Perrine, 9 App. D. C. 128. See also supra, III.

V. Foreign judgment as res judicata.

A decree, rendered in a habeas corpus proceeding by a court having jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the parties, awarding the custody and control of infants, is res judicata as to the rights of the respective parties upon the state of facts then existing,—especially where the court has general jurisdiction over infants; and should be given the same effect in a foreign jurisdiction that it has by law and usage at home. Slack v. Perrine, 9 App. D. C. 128, Followed in Slack v. Slack, 9 App. D. C. 184.

So, a decree made by a court of the state in which a husband and wife resided, awarding the custody of their infant daughter to the wife as against the husband, will be respected by the courts of a sister state to which the child had been removed by the wife, in a subsequent proceeding by habeas corpus instituted therein by the husband, where the conditions remain unchanged, except that the wife is better able to provide for the child than at the time the former decree was rendered in her favor. Com. ex rel. Thompson v. Ebert, 24 Pa. Co. Ct. 648.

A decision rendered by the court of chancery of one state, awarding on a habeas corpus proceeding the custody of a child to its father in preference to its mother, will not be disregarded in a subsequent habeas corpus proceeding between the same parties in another state. 67 L. R. A.

where no circumstances have arisen since the former adjudication which put a different complexion upon the case or call for a different disposition of the custody of the infant,—and especially where the mother, who had procured a void foreign divorce from the father, had married again, and was still living with her supposed second husband. People ex rel. Ludden v. Winston, 34 Misc. 21, 69 N. Y. Supp. 452.

But a decision of the supreme court of a sister state awarding the custody of a child to her maternal grandparents in preference to her father, and reversing the decision of the circuit court which had given judgment in favor of the father, will not be regarded as res judicata by the court of another state to which the father removed with the child before the reversal of the judgment of the circuit court; but the court of the state of the father's residence will consider the facts and circumstances, and, if they have so changed that the child's welfare requires that she remain with her father, the court will so decree. Re Barnes, 30 Ohio L. J. 164.

VI. Dismissal of writ without decision or prejudice.

In proceedings by habeas corpus, instituted by a father to obtain possession of his child, who was then in the care of her maternal grandparents, the court, being equally divided in opinion as to what judgment should be entered, dismissed the writ without any decision upon the rights of the parties, and without prejudice, either to any existing right or adjudication, or to any future remedy. Stockman's Case, 56 Mich. 218, 22 N. W. 321.

A. W. R.

parties upon a hearing of the case upon its merits. We will therefore but give a brief outline of the more salient matters. The petitioner was born in 1855, and at twelve years of age began to work to support himself. He was born in Kansas, and in his youth attended the common schools of that state. By his labors and industry, and without other assistance, he was enabled to attend the State Agricultural College of Kansas five terms, beginning in 1872. After teaching school for a while, he entered the Northwestern University, at Evanston, where he remained seven or eight years, graduating from the preparatory department, the university proper, and the Garrett Biblical Institute, where he fitted himself for service in the ministry of the gospel, receiving the order of elder in 1883. In one capacity or another he has been preaching since 1877. While at Evanston he met Jennie Marshall, the daughter of the respondent and the classmate of the petitioner. They were married in 1884. By this union two children are living,—Joseph, eleven years old, and Kimball, the child now in controversy, who was born in February, 1900. The mother of Kimball, prior to his birth, entered the Presbyterian Hospital of Chicago for the purpose of confinement, and after the birth of Kimball died on March 3, 1900, in that hospital. Following the death and funeral services of his wife, petitioner received notice of the illness of his father in Kansas, and immediately went to his father, who died on the 19th day of the same month. The child, Kimball, was left in the hospital, upon the suggestion of those in charge of it, that it could be better taken care of there. Though no well-defined ailment developed in the child, it did not seem to thrive while at the hospital, and petitioner arranged with Mary Ernest, a sister of the deceased wife, to take the child and care for it. She received the child on the 10th of April, 1900, and petitioner employed a lady to assist her in her household duties in order that she might care for the child. Petitioner lived about 40 miles from Mary Ernest, and Mary Ernest lived within 5 or 6 miles of respondent. Mary Ernest kept the child but two or three weeks, when she visited the home of respondent with it, and respondent and his wife insisted upon keeping the child, and Mary Ernest left it with them without any knowledge or arrangement between her and petitioner that it should be done. The first knowledge that petitioner had that the child was at the home of respondent was while on his way to visit it on the 23d of April, 1900, when he was so informed, and went to the home of respondent, and visited the child. The child, Kimball, has remained with the respondent thence hitherto. Notwithstanding the fact that petitioner has at no time received a salary of more than $750, he purchased and owns unimproved city lots in Chicago for which he paid $3,000, has saved and loaned out at interest over $3,500, has accumulated a library of the value of $2,000, and is possessed of horses and buggies and ample household effects. In these accumulations of property and money petitioner was aided to the extent of about $500 by his wife. Petitioner was remarried in September, 1902. His present wife is now twenty-nine years of age, was reared on a farm, has good health, was educated in the district schools and the Northwestern University, has taught school, is without children, and, as far as the evidence discloses, is a woman of estimable character, economical and industrious, and has at all times been willing to receive and care for Kimball. After the death of his wife and up to the time of his remarriage the petitioner kept up his household, his family consisting of himself and a young lady who had lived with the family prior to the death of his wife, and his son Joseph, whose care and custody he kept all the time. Respondent and his wife are past seventy years of age, have reared a family of seven children, the youngest of which is about thirty years of age, and is the only one remaining at home. Respondent and his wife are both members of the same denomination of which petitioner is a minister. Respondent is possessed of about 700 acres of valuable farm land, free from encumbrance, and also possessed of a large amount of personal and other property.

So far as the social and moral fitness of either of these parties is concerned for the care of the child, there would seem to be no question, and the record sufficiently shows that all concerned are attached to this child, and, if the record were open to our consideration, and we felt free to act upon the facts, we would have no hesitancy in holding that this father is entitled to the custody of his child. As before said, we feel constrained to hold that the proceedings and order of the circuit court in relation to the custody of this child are well pleaded as a bar to this proceeding. At the time the petition was filed, the court was in some doubt upon the question, and therefore allowed the case to proceed to the taking of the evidence. It is now with some reluctance that we declare our conclusion that we are unable to consider the case upon its merits. We regard the rights of the parent as superior to those of any other person, when that parent is a fit person to have the custody of children and is so circumstanced that he can provide the necessities of life and administer to the requirements of such a charge. The mere fact that some other person may have more money or property in any form is not one that appeals to us. The divine injunction to multiply and replenish the species was not confined to the rich, nor was it intended that the poor should beget the children and the rich should rear them. To recognize such doctrine would be little less than monstrous, and would be in utter disregard of those natural instincts of love and care and interest found in the breast of the parent. And, while it is said in the books that the interest of the child is the controlling question, it is not meant thereby to say that the financial interests, only, of the child shall predominate. The courts cannot be unmindful of the great fact standing prominently in all our biographies and histories, that the greater number of the men and women of real worth in our nation and throughout the world have come up through circumstances that required a struggle upon the part of their parents and themselves to make themselves what they were. While the financial interests of the child are not to be disregarded, they are, likewise, not to be controlling. Neither the day laborer, nor the minister of the gospel, is to be discriminated against in the consideration of this one of the highest natural rights with which man is endowed merely because of the wealth of those who are contending against him. Until it becomes contrary to law that people in poor or moderate circumstances shall produce children, the courts must recognize and enforce the sacred rights and the legal rights they have to their custody, control, and society.

In the consideration of all rights, however, the unbroken custom of ages, the good of society, and the very necessities of the case require that the courts shall observe the rules of established law. If the question here presented were one between the individual seeking his liberty from alleged unlawful restraint and the people or the state insisting upon such restraint, then, by an unbroken line of decisions in this state, we would be free and bound to hold that an order in one proceeding before either a court or a judge thereof is not a final order from which an appeal or writ of error would lie, and could not be pleaded as a bar to another or further proceeding. Hammond v. People, 32 Ill. 446, 83 Am. Dec. 286; Ex parte Thompson, 93 Ill. 89; 9 Enc. Pl. & Pr. p. 1070. But in contentions arising over the custody of a child, between the parents or other parties asserting rights thereto, the proceeding is held to be but a private suit, in which the public is not concerned, and upon this question the authorities are so uniform that it can hardly be said that the question is open. It is not regarded in the light of the infant contending for his own liberty, but in the true light of other persons interested, or claiming to be, contending for the custody of the infant; and, until the infant arrives at the age of discretion, his wishes are neither considered nor consulted. Adopting this view of the nature of the proceeding, the courts, and text writers as well, have uniformly taken the view that in such proceeding the order of the court or judge having competent jurisdiction is a final order, and is binding upon the parties under the same facts and so long as the same conditions exist as did at the time of the hearing and order. 2 Spelling, Extr. Rem. § 1198; Church, Habeas Corpus, 2d ed. § 387; 9 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 1071; 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 213; Tyler, Infancy & Coverture, 291; Freeman, Judgm. 3d ed. § 324; Mercein v. People, 25 Wend. 64, 35 Am. Dec. 653; State ex rel. Lembke v. Bechdel, 37 Minn. 360, 5 Am. St. Rep. 854, 34 N. W. 334; Dubois v. Johnson, 96 Ind. 6; Brooke v. Logan, 112 Ind. 183, 2 Am. St. Rep. 177, 13 N. E. 669; Re Hamilton, 66 Kan. 754, 71 Pac. 817; Weir v. Marley, 99 Mo. 484, 6 L. R. A. 672, 12 S. W. 798; Re Sneden, 105 Mich. 61, 55 Am. St. Rep. 435, 62 N. W. 1009.

Mr. Spelling, in his work on Extraordinary Remedies, after stating in § 1197 the general rule that, "in the absence of statutory provisions on the subject, the refusal to discharge one restrained of his liberty does not bar issuance of a second writ by another court or officer," notes the exception here adverted to in the following language: "But to the rule that, in the absence of statutory provisions, a party in confinement or custody is at liberty to make subsequent applications at will, there is an exception in the case respecting the custody of children, and the determination of the court upon the first application is conclusive in these cases. An application for the writ will be denied in the absence of new and subsequent facts being presented by which the state of the case or the relative claims of the parents to the custody of the child are altered in some material respect. Where, however, new and important facts can be presented, there is no estoppel upon a second or an indefinite number of applications, even in the cases of children." § 1198. The language used by the author just quoted is practically the same in all the authorities cited and examined by us, and to further quote from them would but extend this opinion without aiding it in explicitness of statement or clearness in the announcement of the rule. Against this array of authorities, to which others might be added, we are not cited to, nor have we found, any authority, save one, either in the text-books or a well-considered case, where the rule is stated adversely to what is above announced; and we may properly conclude, from the earnestness and care with which this case has been presented, and with the undoubted knowledge on the part of counsel for petitioner that the rule is as we have stated it, that, if there had been authorities at variance with those cited, or noting an exception to the rule, they would have been called to our attention.

Our attention is directed to Re King, 66 Kan. 695, ante, 783, 97 Am. St. Rep. 399, 72 Pac. 263, which was an original proceeding in the supreme court of Kansas. In that case the mother had applied for a writ in the probate court of Saline county, in that state, to obtain the custody of her children from their grandmother, and on a hearing the children were remanded to the custody of the grandmother. Afterwards the mother applied for another writ. The prior proceedings were pleaded, to which a demurrer was interposed, overruled, and the proceedings dismissed. Later the mother applied to the supreme court, and upon the subject of res judicata the court said: "Regardless of the analogy to the ordinary habeas corpus proceeding, however, we hold that the doctrine of estoppel does not preclude a court, in any case where it has acquired jurisdiction, from making such order with regard to the custody of a child as shall be for the child's best interest. . . . It is true that in the cases where the doctrine of res judicata is applied in its widest scope the welfare of the child is given great, and even controlling, effect, this consideration being treated as qualifying the legal rights of the claimants. Yet in other cases it is said that the custody of a child will be awarded as his own welfare may require, because the interest of the child will override the legal right, and authorize an order in spite of such right. . . . Whether the welfare of the child is properly spoken of as modifying the legal right, or as justifying an order in opposition to the right, may not be important; but the distinction between a question as to the comparative rights of two conflicting claimants, and one as to what is for the best interest of a child, is real and vital. The former may be controlled by a prior adjudication, but the latter is always open."

So much of the above quotation as is italicized must be regarded as the basis upon which that court felt authorized to make a distinction between the rights of those claiming the custody of the child and the interests of the child itself, and to found upon that distinction jurisdiction in that court to reconsider the case upon its merits, although it had twice before been considered by other courts. We cannot give our assent to the distinction as a jurisdictional question. We recognize the distinction made, and understand it to be the duty of any court, in considering the question of the disposition of the custody of a child, to keep that distinction before it. The parent has the superior right to the child, but the superior right of the parent must yield to the best interest of the child. There is a recognition of both the rights, although the parent has the superior right, which is a true statement of an abstract proposition. He only has that superior right when it accords with the best interest of the child. All things being equal, as between the parent and strangers or other persons bearing a different relation to the child, the parent's right is superior; but we can readily imagine a parent who may be possessed of great wealth, and surrounded by all the luxuries that money can acquire, or of artistic tastes, to which he has given full reign, and yet there may be in his social life such glaring defects and such disregard of morals as would compel the court, in the discharge of its high duty to the infant, to place it in the hands of one in moderate circumstances, whose social and moral record were such as fitted him for such charge, and whose influence and attentions would be calculated to be more beneficial to the welfare of the child. As we have said, these considerations are presented to the court in every instance where the custody of children is involved; and we must presume that the court to whom previous applications have been made did not overlook them.

When the court in Re King, 66 Kan. 695, ante, 783, 97 Am. St. Rep. 399, 72 Pac. 263, said that upon the question as to the custody of a child the claimants might be estopped by a previous adjudication, but that the question as to the best interests of the child was always open, if it meant by that declaration that such question could be raised at any time by either of the claimants who had previously litigated it before a court of competent jurisdiction upon the same state of facts, we are unwilling to follow that court and adopt that rule. Infants are the wards of the state and of the courts of the state, and it may be that, although some court had disposed of an infant upon the contentions of parties then before it, upon a sufficient showing someone not a party to that proceeding might, in the interest of the child, invoke the action of the court, and the court might entertain the question; but to do so could only be justified in extreme cases, where it was apparent that either the court who originally passed upon the case had been imposed upon by the collusion of parties, or by perjury, or some other extraordinary matter that would warrant the court in declaring an exception to the rule.

The rule announced in Re King by the supreme court of Kansas seems not to be the uniform rule of that court. Re Hamilton, 66 Kan. 754, 71 Pac. 817, which is contained in the same volume of Reports, and was rendered a month prior to the King Case, seems not to be in accord with the latter case. An original writ was sued out of the supreme court by the father against the mother and father of the insane wife of the petitioner for the custody of the petitioner's child. A former application had been made to the district court, and the child, upon a full hearing in that court, had been remanded to the custody of the grandparents. The petition in the supreme court was denied, and the rule stated thus: "After a careful examination of the authorities we are inclined to the opinion that, in cases of this character, where the controversy arises over the custody of a child, the real issue is one between private parties contesting a question of private right under the form of habeas corpus proceedings, in which there arises no question of personal liberty, and, in consequence, all matters in issue arising upon the same state of facts determined in the prior proceeding should be regarded as settled and concluded." And in support of the rule thus announced appear many of the authorities above cited by us. Without more substantial reasons for a departure from the rule there announced by that court, we cannot accept the departure made in the King Case as the better rule, or one that should be of general application.

The contention of the petitioner that the rule we have adopted is only applicable in those states where an appeal or writ of error will lie is, we think, only half correct. As applied to all of the states where the rule of the common law obtains and the proceeding is in any inferior court of record, if the judgment be deemed final a writ of error will lie (Haines v. People, 97 Ill. 161), while the weight of authority is that the right of appeal is statutory, and only lies where expressly authorized.

The fact that Weir v. Marley, 99 Mo. 484, 6 L. R. A. 672, 12 S. W. 798, was considered upon its merits after the announcement of the rule that we have adopted does not strengthen petitioner's contention, as the opinion states that the consideration of the rights of the parties upon the merits was at the special request of both parties, and the question mostly considered by the court in that case was as to the effect of a parol contract between the petitioner and respondents touching the custody of the child. There the father had been awarded the custody of his child by the district court, and a new writ was sued out of the supreme court by the grandparents, who were respondents in the former proceeding, insisting upon a parol contract between the dying mother of the child and the grandparents, to which it was claimed the father had assented. That court, holding that the parol contract was not binding, said: "And no well-considered case will be found where the custody of a minor child was by habeas corpus taken from the father and given to another upon the sole ground that the legal right of the father had passed to and vested in such other person by parol contract." The court evidently intended to make no change in the former order, and, to comply with the request of both parties, considered that legal proposition. And while in the Mercein Case, 25 Wend. 64, 35 Am. Dec. 653, there seems to be some ground for argument that the rule of res judicata was applied because an appeal or writ of error might have been had, we do not think, upon a careful study of the case, that the rule rested upon that proposition. The return in the case at bar states that no change of conditions or new facts have arisen affecting the child since the former hearing, and the answer to the return admits, or at least does not deny, that allegation; so that the case is not brought within the exception to the rule as stated.

We have, perhaps, said more than is necessary to the proper disposal of this case, but as this is the first time the question has come before us, and the case is fraught with some general interest, we have felt at liberty to give it a somewhat extended consideration.

The custody of the child, Kimball James Marshall Cormack, will be remanded to the respondent.

Writ denied.

Wilkin, Cartwright, and Scott, JJ., dissenting:

We dissent from the foregoing opinion so far as it holds that a writ of error will lie to review a decision of a judge or court in a habeas corpus proceeding, and that such a decision is res judicata. A habeas corpus proceeding may be before a judge in vacation, in which case there is no record to be certified to an appellate court for review. An order as to the custody of a child in a habeas corpus proceeding is in its nature temporary and interlocutory, and we do not see how it can be res judicata in a subsequent proceeding in this court.

CALIFORNIA SUPREME COURT.

Sarah BLUNT, Appt.,

v.

FIDELITY & CASUALTY COMPANY,
Resp't.

(.....Cal.....)

1. The acceptance, retention, and renewal, for successive terms, of an accident insurance policy, preclude the personal representatives of the insured from claiming that there were provisions in it to which the insured had not agreed.
2. A condition in an insurance policy is not void because not referred to in the application.
3. One issuing an accident insurance policy may stipulate that it shall not cover injuries received while assured is insane.
4. Injuries to an insane person need not be intentionally inflicted to relieve the insurer from full liability under a policy providing that in case of injuries intentionally inflicted upon himself by the assured, or inflicted upon himself or received by him while insane, the measure of liability shall be a sum equal to the premiums paid.

(November 10, 1904.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for Alameda County in favor of defendant in an action brought to enforce payment of the amount alleged to be due on an accident insurance policy. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. H. V. Morehouse and J. E. Alexander for appellant.

Mr. A. E. Shaw, for respondent:

The cause of death does not come within the class of risks insured against, since death was not caused by an external, violent, and accidental means, operating independently of all other causes.

Bigelow v. Berkshire L. Ins. Co. 93 U. S. 284, 23 L. ed. 918; Chapman v. Republic L. Ins. Co. 6 Biss. 238, Fed. Cas. No. 2,606.

If assured is insane at the time of the injury he has ceased to be covered by the policy.

Adkins v. Columbia L. Ins. Co. 70 Mo. 27, 35 Am. Rep. 410; De Gogorza v. Knickerbocker L. Ins. Co. 65 N. Y. 232; Chapman v. Republic L. Ins. Co. 6 Biss. 238, Fed. Cas. No. 2,606; Pierce v. Travelers' L. Ins. Co. 34 Wis. 389; Eastabrook v. Union Mut. L. Ins. Co. 54 Me. 224, 89 Am. Dec. 743;

NOTE.—For the somewhat similar question of validity of provision in insurance policy against liability in case of suicide, even while insane, see note to Billings v. Accident Ins. Co. 17 L. R. A. 89, and note to Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Wiswell, 85 L. R. A., on page 262.
67 L. R. A.

Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. v. Daviess, 87 Ky. 541, 9 S. W. 812; Bigelow v. Berkshire L. Ins. Co. 93 U. S. 284, 23 L. ed. 918.

The company and the assured had a right to enter into this contract.

De Gogorza v. Knickerbocker L. Ins. Co. 65 N. Y. 282; Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. v. Daviess, 87 Ky. 541, 9 S. W. 812; Bigelow v. Berkshire L. Ins. Co. 93 U. S. 284, 23 L. ed. 918; Chapman v. Republic L. Ins. Co. 6 Biss. 238, Fed. Cas. No. 2,606.

Renewal must be held to be an acceptance of all the terms and conditions of the policy.

American Ins. Co. v. Neiberger, 74 Mo. 167; New York L. Ins. Co. v. Fletcher, 117 U. S. 519, 29 L. ed. 934, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 837.

Shaw, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff appeals from the judgment. The suit is upon a policy of insurance, of the kind usually designated as an "accident policy," issued by the defendant to John P. Blunt for the term of twelve months. It provided that, if death should result from an injury within ninety days from the time the injury was received, the defendant would pay to the wife of the insured, if she survived him, the sum of $5,000. The fourth clause of the policy was as follows: "(4) In case of injuries, fatal or otherwise, intentionally inflicted upon himself by the assured, or inflicted upon himself or received by him while insane, the measure of this company's liability shall be a sum equal to the premium paid, the same being agreed upon as in full liquidation of all claims under this policy." At the end of twelve months the policy was renewed for the same period, and at the end of that time it was again renewed. During the last year of the insurance, John P. Blunt became insane, and was committed to the Mendocino State Hospital. During the term of insurance, and while insane, he fell against a steam radiator in the hospital, and thereby received injuries from which, within ninety days thereafter, he died. The plaintiff is the surviving wife of the assured. Before the action was begun, the defendant tendered her the full amount of the premium paid, and in its answer it offered to allow judgment for that sum in favor of the plaintiff. The court found these facts, and gave judgment in favor of the plaintiff for the sum tendered, and against the plaintiff, in favor of the defendant, for its costs.

In contracts of insurance, as in other contracts, the rights of the parties are determined from the terms of the contract, so far as it is lawful. The contract here in question consisted of the application for insurance made and delivered by the assured to the defendant, and the policy of insurance made and delivered by the defendant to the assured. It cannot be conceded that the company was not at liberty to insert conditions in the policy which were not mentioned in the application. The application contained the affirmative stipulations and warranties made by the assured, and the policy contained the stipulations and limitations made by the insurer. The two together constitute the contract. If the policy of the company, which was issued by the company upon receipt and approval of the application, had contained any clause to which the assured did not agree, he, of course, would have been at liberty to reject it, and either demand a rescission and return of the premium paid, or insist upon a policy without the clause to which he did not assent. But when he received the policy and accepted it without objection, and especially when, as the record here shows, with the policy in his possession, he twice renewed it for an additional year, neither he nor the beneficiary can with good reason claim that there is anything contained in it to which he did not fully consent and agree. The fourth clause above quoted is not unlawful, and it cannot be eliminated on the ground that it is not expressly referred to in the application. The effect of this clause is that the defendant did not agree to insure the policy holder against injuries from accidents received by him during such part of the time covered thereby as the assured should be insane, except to the amount of the premium paid; and this regardless of the question whether the injuries were inflicted by himself, intentionally or otherwise, or were received by him from some other cause. Insurance during such insanity, except to that extent, was simply not a part of the contract; and the agreement, in that contingency, was that the company should be liable only for a sum equal to the premium paid. Language could not express this idea more clearly than it is expressed in the policy. The courts have always construed in favor of the assured every ambiguity and uncertainty in contracts of insurance. But where the words are clear and free from uncertainty, and the meaning plain, the contract as made by the parties is beyond the power of the courts to change by a forced construction. There was good reason for the insertion of the clause. A sane man will naturally and instinctively protect himself from injury, while if insane he might unconsciously expose himself thereto. It is to be presumed that, in fixing the amount to be paid as a premium, the company took into consideration its proposed exemption from full liability during such insanity, if it should occur, and reduced the premium accordingly. The assured received the benefit of this clause in the reduced amount of the premium, and hence the contract cannot be deemed inequitable or unfair.

The appellant contends that the fourth clause should be construed by interpolating the word "intentionally" a second time, making it read thus: "In case of injuries fatal or otherwise intentionally inflicted upon himself by the assured; or intentionally inflicted upon himself or received by him while insane," etc. It is obvious that this would be an unfair and forced construction. The natural inference from the context is that the element of intent was designedly omitted with respect to injuries happening to him while insane, so that in case of injury while he was insane, either consciously or unconsciously inflicted by himself, or received by him while in that condition, whether by reason of his consequent inability to avoid injury, or from causes entirely apart from his insanity, the company should be liable only to the amount of the premium. The language used seems well adapted to convey this meaning, and it is apparent that the word "intentionally" was purposely omitted from the second clause in order to avoid any question on that point.

The cases holding that a provision exempting an insurance company from liability if the assured shall commit suicide while insane does not give exemption where the suicide is the result of the insanity go upon the theory that the use of the term "suicide," or other similar description of the mode of death, implies a conscious and voluntary self-destruction, and not an act impelled by the insane delusion, and in that sense involuntary. They do not apply to this policy, which makes the insane condition, and not the volition of the assured, the test of nonliability.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: Angellotti, J.; Van Dyke, J.

Petition for rehearing denied December 10, 1904.

GEORGIA SUPREME COURT.

S. W. HEWIN et al., Plffs. in Err.,

v.

City of ATLANTA.

(.....Ga.....)

*1. An agreement between a number of merchants and a corporation provided that the latter should print the names of the former in its subscribers' directory, and circulate a number of copies of the book in a named city, and that the merchants should purchase of the corporation a number of so-called trading stamps, to be delivered to customers with their purchases (and not to be otherwise disposed of), and by them preserved and pasted in the books furnished by the corporation until a certain number had been secured, when they should be presented to the corporation in exchange for the customers' choice of certain articles kept in stock by the corporation. Held: (1) That the furnishing of the trading stamps by a merchant to his customers did not constitute a business separate and distinct from that of selling merchandise, but was merely an instrumentality in or an incident to that business, being in its nature incapable of such separate existence as to constitute of itself a business in either a commercial or a legal sense. (2) That authority in a municipal charter "to make just and proper classification of business for taxation," and "to classify business, and arrange the various business, trades, and professions carried on in said city into such classes of subjects for taxation as may be just and proper," did not authorize the passage of an ordinance separating from the business of selling merchandise the incident of furnishing trading stamps for the purpose of increasing the sale of merchandise, and classifying the furnishing of such stamps as a separate business, subject to taxation. (3) That, whether the furnishing of the trading stamps be treated as a gift, or as a part of the contract of sale of the merchandise, which is delivered at the time the stamps are furnished, the furnishing of the stamps does not constitute a business subject to be taxed under charter authority to classify and tax business. (4) That the word "business," in a commercial or legal sense, means something done or carried on for a livelihood, profit, or the like. (5) That, even if the general assembly is authorized to impose a tax upon one who gives away his property, the giving away of property is not a business, within the meaning of a charter provision authorizing the taxation of business.

*Headnotes by COBB, J.

NOTE.—As to imposition of tax on merchants furnishing trading stamps to their customers, see also, in this series, Fleetwood v. Read, 47 L. R. A. 205.

As to imposition of tax upon concern selling trading stamps to merchants, see Winston v. Beeson, 65 L. R. A. 167.

As to constitutionality of statute prohibiting use of trading stamps, see State v. Dalton, 48 L. R. A. 775.

67 L. R. A.

2. An application for an injunction, filed jointly by the trading-stamp company and one or more merchants who are its customers, seeking to enjoin the collection of a tax imposed under an ordinance of the character above referred to, is not bad for misjoinder of parties.
3. Persons against whom an unlawful exaction in the form of a tax is sought to be made may unite in an application for an injunction to restrain the collection of the tax, and are not compelled to pay the same, and bring separate suits against the tax officer for damages.

(January 27, 1905.)

ERROR to the Superior Court for Fulton County to review a judgment denying an injunction to restrain the enforcement of a tax. Reversed.

Statement by COBB, J.:

S. W. Hewin and the Atlanta Trading Stamp Company, a corporation, filed a petition against the city of Atlanta, in which an injunction was prayed to restrain the city from enforcing an ordinance under which a business tax had been levied upon all persons furnishing "trading stamps to their customers." W. D. Payne filed an intervention, and was duly made a party. The Atlanta Milling Company, a corporation, also filed an intervention, and was made a party, but its name was subsequently stricken from the case. The defendant filed both a demurrer and an answer. At the hearing the judge refused the injunction prayed for, and Hewin, Payne, and the Atlanta Trading Stamp Company excepted.

The trading-stamp company entered into an agreement with its complainants and other merchants in the city of Atlanta, the material parts of which are as follows: The trading-stamp company agrees "to print in the directory of their subscribers' book the name, business, and address of the party of the second part. To deliver to the people of ——— said books, soliciting the trade of such persons and explaining to them how to use the same. To advertise, and in every way to use their best endeavor to promote the business interest and trade of the party of the second part." The merchant agrees: "(1) To receive of the party of the first part a sufficient number of trading stamps to be supplied as discounts for cash trade to all persons who may call for them, and the party of the second part also agrees to give out such stamps as follows: One stamp to be given for each and every 10 cents represented in a purchase; 10 stamps for $1, etc. Said party of the second part also agrees not to sell said stamps or dispose of them in any other way. (2) To pay the party of the first part 50 cents per hundred for all stamps disposed of; and to make weekly settlements with the party of the first part for each full page of stamps used. (3) To co-operate in every way possible with the party of the first part in promoting the best interests of all merchants named in said subscribers' book." The nature of the trading-stamp business, and the elements which compose it, are fully set forth in the record, and it appears that three distinct factors co-operate to produce the business: (1) The trading-stamp company; (2) the retail merchant; and (3) the stamp collector.

The stamp company maintains a store in which is kept a large number of articles commonly used as necessities and adornments for the house and kitchen. These articles are matters of general commerce. Their sale is not prohibited by the state, nor do they affect the public health or safety. They are not sold by the stamp company. The stamp company issues small books, which contain a directory of the merchants who give its stamps, with the address of the merchant and the character of his stock. These books contain a sufficient number of blank pages in which are pasted the stamps as collected by the retail purchaser. A book is completed when it contains 990 of the stamps. Canvassers are sent out into the city by the stamp company, who invite the proposed retail purchaser to visit the store and inspect the stock of goods carried by the company. When he does this, it is explained to him that, by paying cash for his purchases from any of the merchants whose names are in the book, he will be given a stamp for each 10 cents, 10 stamps for $1, and so on. He is informed that, in order to obtain the stamps, he will pay no more for the article actually purchased than he would pay if he purchased either on credit, or the same article from a merchant who did not give the stamp; the cash purchase, with a request for the stamp, does not increase the price paid for the article which is the subject-matter of the sale. He is told to paste his stamps in the book given him, and when he has accumulated 990 stamps he will then be free to select any article he may desire in the store of the company. The company explains to the merchant that it will sell him the pad of stamps for $5; that by using the stamps he will increase his cash trade; his business will be advertised by the stamp company through its canvassers, by its books, and by it in the newspapers. He contracts to give the stamps at the ratio of one for each 10 cents only upon cash purchases. He stipulates that he will not give the stamps for credit purchases, nor will he sell the stamp by itself.

67 L. R. A.

Briefly stated, the company sells to the merchant a pad of stamps, and, in return, advertises his business. The merchant gives the stamps to his customers for cash purchases. The customer, when he obtains a book, presents it to the trading-stamp company, and takes away the article selected by him. There are advantages derived by each of the three parties to this transaction. The pad of stamps costs the company but little for the printing. They are upon common paper, with mucilage applied to the back. From a mere sale of the stamp it derives a large gross profit. Its expenses consist of taxes, license fee, clerk hire, canvassers, salaries, insurance, and the price paid for the articles with which it redeems the book. The merchant, by getting cash, is enabled to discount his own bills by the payment of cash. He is saved the losses which are incident to a credit business, such as failure, expense of litigation incurred in the attempt to collect accounts, bookkeeper's hire, stationery, and so on. But the chief benefit derived by the merchant is the novel way in which his business is advertised. In place of paying a high price for an advertisement in the newspaper, which is read by but a few of the total subscribers, and followed up by a still less number, he pays, by using the trading stamps, only for an advertisement which actually produces a customer with cash. It is a system of advertising which is claimed to involve no waste, and to be direct, effective, and immediate in producing material results. The consumer pays no more for the article purchased when the stamp accompanies it than he does by purchasing the article either for credit, or from a merchant who does not give the stamp. By paying cash he avoids, to a large extent, the evils which are incident to credit purchases. By merely preserving the stamps until his book is completed, he ultimately obtains an article of considerable value. When the cost of conducting the business is deducted, the trading-stamp company realizes whatever profit is derived from the sale of the stamps to the merchant. The business is one into which the element of chance does not enter in any of its various steps. The price paid by the merchant to the company is uniform. It is $5 for a book of stamps. The stamps are all alike. None of them possess any inherent value. One is the exact equivalent in every respect of all the others. No chance is injected between the merchant and the collector. The merchant is required to give at the ratio of one stamp for every 10 cents. One hundred dollars spent at separate times in dime purchases will produce exactly the same number as $100 spent in one purchase. No chance appears in the transaction between the collector and the company. When the book is produced and marked "Canceled." the one producing it wanders at will throughout the store of the company, and, when he has determined which article he will take, it is pointed out by him, his address taken, and the article delivered. The article desired by the purchaser is not selected by any turn of dice or cards. His right to any article which he may desire is determined alone by the physical fact of producing a book containing 990 stamps.

The Atlanta Trading Stamp Company opened its store in Atlanta, and a number of merchants bought stamps, and were using the same in their business according to the method outlined in the foregoing summary. In March, 1904, the mayor and general council of Atlanta adopted an ordinance, those portions of which are material to the present case being as follows:

"Section 1. Be it ordained by the mayor and general council that any person, firm, or corporation who furnish trading stamps, coupons, gift schemes, rebate checks, or punch cards, or similar stamps or cards, as a part of or premium upon the sales of goods, wares, or merchandise, shall pay an annual license therefor of one hundred ($100) dollars, no license to be issued for less than the sum named for one year.

"Sec. 2. Be it further ordained that the furnishing of the stamps, coupons, etc., named in section one (1) of this ordinance is hereby classified as a separate business, and the above license is fixed thereon for the furnishing of said articles, alone or in connection with another business, and provided further that this ordinance shall not be enforced until on and after July 1, 1904."

This ordinance was attacked in the petition upon numerous grounds, and the bill of exceptions assigns error upon the refusal of the judge to grant an injunction upon each of the grounds upon which the ordinance is attacked. The assignments of error which are referred to in the opinion are as follows:

"Because the mere gift of the stamp was not a business, trade, calling, avocation, or profession, and could not be classified as such by the city of Atlanta, nor could said city, under its charter, require the license in question, or any other license, for the furnishing of such stamps by the merchant."

"Because the furnishing of stamps by the merchant was a mere incident or method of conducting the business, and no power was conferred upon the city of Atlanta to require a license for the incidents of a business, or the methods or means by which it was carried on."

"Because, under the charter of said city, 67 L. R. A.

the power of the city to require a license for a business which paid an ad valorem tax was limited to $50."

"Because the attempted classification by said ordinance was purely arbitrary and fanciful, and neither just nor proper."

Messrs. Rosser & Brandon and John L. Hopkins & Sons, for plaintiffs in error:

The business is merely a method of advertising, and one which is therefore obviously legitimate.

State v. Ramsayer (N. H.) 58 Atl. 958; State v. Dodge (Vt.) 56 Atl. 983; State v. Dalton, 22 R. I. 77, 48 L. R. A. 775, 84 Am. St. Rep. 818, 46 Atl. 234; People ex rel. Madden v. Dycker, 72 App. Div. 308, 76 N. Y. Supp. 111; Winston v. Beeson, 135 N. C. 271, 65 L. R. A. 167, 47 S. E. 457; Young v. Com. 101 Va. 853, 45 S. E. 327; People v. Gillson, 109 N. Y. 389, 4 Am. St. Rep. 465, 17 N. E. 343; Com. v. Sisson, 178 Mass. 578, 60 N. E. 385; State v. Shugart, 138 Ala. 86, 100 Am. St. Rep. 17, 35 So. 28; Long v. State, 74 Md. 565, 12 L. R. A. 425, 28 Am. St. Rep. 268, 22 Atl. 4; Com. v. Emerson, 165 Mass. 146, 42 N. E. 559; Ex parte McKenna, 126 Cal. 429, 58 Pac. 916.

The mayor and council of a city have not, under legislative grant of "authority to levy and collect a license tax . . . upon all persons exercising any profession, trade, or calling within said city," the power to impose upon a useful and legitimate business a prohibitory tax.

Morton v. Macon, 111 Ga. 162, 50 L. R. A. 485, 36 S. E. 627; Mankato v. Fowler, 32 Minn. 364, 20 N. W. 361; St. Paul v. Traeger, 25 Minn. 248, 33 Am. Rep. 462; Hirshfield v. Dallas, 29 Tex. App. 242, 15 S. W. 124; State v. Moore, 113 N. C. 698, 22 L. R. A. 472, 18 S. E. 342; State v. Bean, 91 N. C. 554; Caldwell v. Lincoln, 19 Neb. 569, 27 N. W. 647; State v. Rowe, 72 Md. 548, 20 Atl. 179; Jackson v. Newman, 59 Miss. 385, 42 Am. Rep. 367; State, Mühlenbrinck, Prosecutor, v. Long Branch, 42 N. J. L. 364, 36 Am. Rep. 518; Sipe v. Murphy, 49 Ohio St. 536, 17 L. R. A. 184, 31 N. E. 884; Ex parte Frank, 52 Cal. 606, 28 Am. Rep. 642; Bloomington v. Wahl, 46 Ill. 489.

It is one of the privileges of every American citizen to adopt and follow such lawful industrial pursuits—not injurious to the community—as he may see fit, without unreasonable regulation or molestation.

Live Stock Dealers' & B. Asso. v. Crescent City L. S. L. & S. H. Co. 1 Abb. (U. S.) 398. Fed. Cas. No. 8,408; Chicago v. Netcher, 183 Ill. 104, 48 L. R. A. 261, 75 Am. St. Rep. 93, 55 N. E. 707; State ex rel. Wyatt v. Ashbrook, 154 Mo. 375, 48 L. R. A. 265, 77 Am. St. Rep. 765, 55 S. W. 627.

Atlanta has power to tax business only. The furnishing of trading stamps was an incident, not a business, and because unable to tax an incident the ordinance falls.

Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 41 L. ed. 666, 17 Sup. St. Rep. 255; State v. Loomis, 115 Mo. 307, 21 L. R. A. 789, 22 S. W. 350; Vanzant v. Waddel, 2 Yerg. 260; Stratton Claimants v. Morris Claimants (Dibrell v. Lanier) 89 Tenn. 497, 12 L. R. A. 70, 15 S. W. 87; Bell's Gap R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 134 U. S. 232, 33 L. ed. 892, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 533.

The power to tax incidents must be specifically given.

Com. v. Pearl Laundry Co. 105 Ky. 259, 49 S. W. 26; Savannah v. Dehoney, 55 Ga. 33; Rogers v. Sandersville, 120 Ga. 192, 47 S. E. 557.

Injunction is the proper remedy.

Vanover v. Davis, 27 Ga. 354; Herrington v. Tolbert, 110 Ga. 532, 35 S. E. 687; Albany Bottling Co. v. Watson, 103 Ga. 508, 30 S. E. 270; Wright v. Southwestern R. Co. 64 Ga. 783, 68 Ga. 311; Savannah, F. & W. R. Co. v. Morton, 71 Ga. 30; Decker v. McGowan, 59 Ga. 805; Keely v. Atlanta, 69 Ga. 586; Dill. Mun. Corp. § 923; Chicago v. Collins, 175 Ill. 445, 49 L. R. A. 408, 67 Am. St. Rep. 224, 51 N. E. 907.

Messrs. J. L. Mayson and William P. Hill, for defendant in error:

Municipal legislation of the kind now before the court is proper.

Fleetwood v. Read, 21 Wash. 547, 47 L. R. A. 205, 58 Pac. 665; Humes v. Ft. Smith, 93 Fed. 857; Landsburgh v. District of Columbia, 11 App. D. C. 512; McQuillin, Mun. Ord. 653, 659; Dill. Mun. Corp. § 357.

The city might classify the furnishing of stamps as a business.

Keely v. Atlanta, 69 Ga. 585; Macon Sash, Door, & Lumber Co. v. Macon, 96 Ga. 23, 23 S. E. 120; Johnson v. Macon, 114 Ga. 429, 40 S. E. 322; Savannah, T. & I. of H. R. Co. v. Savannah, 112 Ga. 164, 37 S. E. 393; McQuillin, Mun. Ord. p. 653; Alexander v. State, 86 Ga. 246, 10 L. R. A. 859, 12 S. E. 408; Weaver v. State, 89 Ga. 639, 15 S. E. 840.

The reasonableness of the charge, or of the ordinance, is a question solely for the court, and the evidence offered on this point was irrelevant and properly excluded.

Dill. Mun. Corp. 327; Heerwagen v. Cross-town Street R. Co. 90 App. Div. 288, 86 N. Y. Supp. 218; Political Code, § 47; Coleman, B. & W. Co. v. Dannenberg Co. 103 Ga. 784, 41 L. R. A. 470, 68 Am. St. Rep. 143, 30 S. E. 639; Kingsbery v. Love, 95 Ga. 546, 22 S. E. 617.

The court will not undertake to question the policy of the legislature.

McQuillin, Mun. Ord. § 81; Dill. Mun. 67 L. R. A.

Corp. § 328; Danville v. Hatcher, 101 Va. 523, 44 S. E. 723; Anderson v. State (Neb.) 96 N. W. 149; Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Maysville, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 615, 69 S. W. 728; Alexandria v. Morgan's L. & T. R. & S. S. Co. 109 La. 50, 33 So. 65.

There was a misjoinder of parties plaintiff and causes of action.

Code, § 4938; Governor use of Moore v. Hicks, 12 Ga. 189; Stuck v. Southern Steel & Aluminum Alloy Co. 96 Ga. 95, 22 S. E. 592.

Injunctions against the enforcement of ordinances, providing for the collection of license fees or taxes, are not granted, in the absence of strong equitable grounds.

Cooley, Taxn. 1411, 1415; 15 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 441; Rice v. Macon, 117 Ga. 401, 43 S. E. 773; Johnston v. Macon, 62 Ga. 652; Decker v. McGowan, 59 Ga. 807; Martin v. Statesboro, 100 Ga. 423, 28 S. E. 450; Morris Canal & Bkg. Co. v. Jersey City, 12 N. J. Eq. 252; Poyer v. Des Plaines, 20 Ill. App. 30, 123 Ill. 111, 5 Am. St. Rep. 494, 13 N. E. 819; Finegan v. Allen, 46 Ill. App. 553; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Ottawa, 47 Ill. App. 73; Sheldon v. Weeks, 51 Ill. App. 314; Marrin Safe Co. v. New York, 38 Hun. 146; Wertheimer v. Boonville, 29 Mo. 254.

Cobb, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The legality of the trading stamp business has been the subject of numerous decisions. It has been held in a number of cases that there is nothing in the business which subjects it to the control of the state or its subordinate public corporations under the police power. While the question has never been before this court, rulings in other states seem with practical, even if not entire, unanimity to concur in the conclusion, not only that the business is legitimate, but that the right to engage in it without undue interference from states and municipalities is guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States to the same extent, and subject only to the same restrictions, that can be placed around a person engaged in any lawful business not within the range of the police power. Among the numerous cases that might be cited on this question, we call attention to the following: Winston v. Beeson, 135 N. C. 271, 65 L. R. A. 167, 47 S. E. 457; State v. Dodge (Vt.) 56 Atl. 983; State v. Ramseyer (N. H.) 58 Atl. 958; State v. Shugart, 138 Ala. 86, 100 Am. St. Rep. 17, 35 So. 28; Long v. State, 74 Md. 565, 12 L. R. A. 425, 28 Am. St. Rep. 268, 22 Atl. 4; Com. v. Sisson, 178 Mass. 578, 60 N. E. 385; People v. Gillson, 109 N. Y. 389, 4 Am. St. Rep. 465, 17 N. E. 343; Young v. Com. 101 Va. 853, 45 S. E. 327. See also 57 Cent. Law J. 421. But the legality of the trading-stamp business is not involved in this case. The city of Atlanta has not proceeded under the police power. It has by its ordinance treated the furnishing of stamps by merchants as a business, and attempted to tax it as such; the ordinance attempting to place it as a business upon exactly the same footing with other classes of business not within the range of legislation under the police power delegated to the city. While the tax levied is referred to in the ordinance as a license, the ordinance, taken as a whole, shows that it is not to be treated as a license, in the strict sense of that term, but simply as a business tax imposed upon the merchants, just as similar taxes are imposed upon others engaged in pursuits and avocations which are not regulated by the city under its police power.

The city of Atlanta has authority under its charter to impose a tax upon any person carrying on "any trade, business, calling, or avocation, or profession" within the city, not to exceed $200 in any case, and not exceeding $50 where the person also pays an ad valorem tax on merchandise or materials. It has also power "to classify business, and arrange the various business, trades, and professions carried on in said city into such classes of subjects for taxation as may be just and proper," and also "to make a just and proper classification of business for taxation." See Anderson's Code of Atlanta (1899) §§ 64, 65, 250. The ordinance treats the furnishing of trading stamps by a seller of merchandise to his customers as a business, and taxes it as such. It is therefore unnecessary to determine whether one thus engaged in furnishing trading stamps is carrying on a "trade, calling, or avocation, or profession;" the authorities seeking to proceed against the merchants under their power to tax business, and not having sought to classify the furnishing of stamps under any of the other occupations referred to. The questions to be determined, as the case is now presented, are whether the retail merchant, who furnishes trading stamps to his customers under a contract with the trading-stamp company, as set forth in the statement of facts, is engaged in a business, within the meaning of the charter of the city authorizing a tax to be imposed upon persons engaged in business, and whether the business is of such a character that it can be disconnected and isolated from the other business of the retail merchant in such a way as to make the retail merchant a member of two classes for the purposes of taxation; that is, a merchant and a furnisher of trading stamps. It is conceded that the trading-stamp company is engaged in a business, and the record discloses that it has been taxed, and has paid the tax imposed upon it. But is a merchant who simply furnishes the stamps purchased by him from the trading-stamp company, and delivers them according to the contract into which he has entered (that is, to cash customers), in so doing, engaged in a business at all; and, if so, is that business one actually separate and distinct, and legally severable from his business as a merchant, within the meaning of the charter of Atlanta, conferring power and authority to classify businesses for taxation? If the delivery of the trading stamps to a cash customer is purely voluntary as between the merchant and his customer, the transaction being without consideration,—a mere gift,—then we suppose no one would contend that, in delivering the stamps under such circumstances, the merchant was engaged in a business at all. While the word "business," as used colloquially, carries with it a very broad meaning, still, as used in its legal and commercial sense, it applies only to that in which one engages for the purpose of livelihood, profit, or the like. This idea of business runs through all of the definitions contained in the dictionaries. This interpretation of the word "business" was recognized in the case of Brush Electric Light & P. Co. v. Wells, 110 Ga. 198, 35 S. E. 365. If the furnishing of stamps by a retail merchant to his customers is therefore a mere gift, it cannot be a business, within the ordinary and usual meaning of that term as used in the commercial world. Laws and ordinances imposing taxes are strictly construed, and authority to tax a business will not, in such legislation, be construed to authorize the taxing of one engaged in transactions from which he cannot possibly derive any profit, which cannot be the means of a livelihood, and which cannot be carried on without inevitable loss; persons so engaged not being engaged in any business, within the ordinary meaning of that term, nor within the meaning in which it must have been used in laws authorizing or imposing taxes. But it is said that the furnishing of the trading stamps is not a gift; that, when the merchant holds out to the world that he will furnish trading stamps to cash customers, such purchasers are entitled to demand the delivery of the stamps, and therefore a cash transaction involves both a sale of the article of merchandise as well as of the stamp; that, while the stamp has no intrinsic value, it is a symbol of that which has value; that the title to the article finally delivered by the stamp company to the stamp collector is really sold by the merchant when the stamp is delivered; and that the merchant would then be practically engaged in selling every character of article which it is possible for the stamp collector to obtain from the stamp company upon the presentation of the stamp book. If the stamp is sold with the article with which it is delivered, of course the title to the stamp passes immediately upon delivery, and this would also be true if the furnishing of the stamp were a mere gift. The cash purchaser owns the stamp from the time it is delivered into his possession. But can it be properly said that the title to that which is finally purchased with the stamps passes to the customer of the retail merchant at the time the stamp is delivered? Suppose 100 stamps represent 100 different transactions with 100 different merchants, none of whom are engaged in the furniture business, and upon presentation of the stamps to the stamp company a chair is delivered. Could it be contended that each of these 100 merchants is subject to classification as a dealer in furniture on account of the delivery of this chair; and, if not, would they all be taxable as joint sellers of some character? We do not think the contention is sound that the title to the article finally selected by the stamp collector passes at the time of the delivery of the stamp, though the title to the stamp does pass, and whatever that is worth—whatever its purchasing power—is the property of the stamp collector. The stamp simply represents the contract of the stamp company that, when a given number are presented, the holder of the stamps can select an article from the stock of the company in exchange for the stamps. The stamps, in certain quantities, have a purchasing power with the trading-stamp company, and their value is simply the result of this purchasing power; and, if the merchant is to be treated as the seller of the stamps at all, he simply sells the right to demand of the stamp company what it has agreed to furnish, and does not sell the article which the trading-stamp company actually furnishes to the collector when the book is delivered. The transaction does not differ in essential particulars from one where a merchant, in consideration of a $100 purchase, returns to the purchaser $5 in gold. The title to the $5 vests in the purchaser upon delivery, with the right to use it to purchase any article that it will buy; but certainly the title to the article subsequently purchased was never in the merchant, and cannot pass with the delivery to the customer of the $5. The result would be the same if, instead of giving $5, the merchant gave the purchaser an order on another merchant for an article worth $5. And this would be the same as if the purchaser were given 50 different orders at different times. We do not think that, even treating the furnishing of the trading stamps as a sale, it is a sale of the article finally procured from the stamp company, so as to make the merchant furnishing the stamp one engaged in the business of selling that particular article, whatever it may be. If the transaction partakes of the nature of a sale at all, it is simply a sale of the stamp.

67 L. R. A.

Treating the furnishing of the trading stamps as a sale and a sale of the trading stamps, is it a business which can be carried on for a livelihood, profit, or the like, when disconnected from every other business? When coupled with another business, it may result in profit owing to the owner of that business. Standing alone, it cannot be made the subject of profit, even if it can be carried on at all. Under the contract between the stamp company and the merchant, and under the plan, scheme, or device—whatever it may be properly characterized—such a thing as a person engaged in the furnishing of trading stamps, and doing nothing else, does not come within the remotest range of the contract, or the scheme therein provided for. Attached to a business, the furnishing of stamps thrives, and profits result. Detached from the business, it instantly dies; and it dies, not by withering gradually away, but its death is instantaneous. The business of the merchant can live without the sale of trading stamps, but the furnishing of trading stamps cannot live unless there is a business to which it can fasten, and from which it can draw its life blood. What has been said is applicable, no matter what the business to which the furnishing of trading stamps is attached,—whether it be that of a merchant, or of one who follows a trade or profession.

If an occupation is so made up as to include two or more separate and distinct classes of business, each of which could be maintained as a separate business,—that is, a business in the sense in which that term is above used,—then, under the power to classify subjects of business for taxation, the municipal authorities might be empowered to impose a separate tax upon each class of business embraced within this occupation. The department store is a familiar illustration of different classes of business going to make up one occupation. So it is with the hotel keeper, who, in addition to furnishing lodging and meals, sells cigars, liquors, newspapers, operates a barber shop, etc. So where a merchant undertakes himself to deliver his goods to his customers, and operates in connection therewith the business of delivering goods by wagon. See Johnson v. Macon, 114 Ga. 426. 40 S. E. 322 (2). In Macon Sash, Door & Lumber Co. v. Macon, 96 Ga. 23. 23 S. E. 120, a tax was imposed upon a wagon which was used by one engaged in the business of contracting and selling builders' supplies; and it was held that the owner of the wagon was liable to the tax, notwithstanding he also paid a tax imposed upon him as a contractor or builder. In Savannah v. Dehoney, 55 Ga. 33, it was held that where the city of Savannah had imposed a tax upon the owners or lessees of public stables, and in the same ordinance there was a provision imposing a tax upon every person engaged in the business of transporting passengers by omnibuses, it was a question of fact whether the use of omnibuses was an incident to the business of one who was the owner of a public stable, and, if so, such owner would not be liable to a second tax because he used an omnibus in connection with the business in which he had been taxed. See also Savannah v. Feeley, 66 Ga. 34. But where the business is made up of different elements, and there is only one business, a municipal corporation, under a power to classify businesses, cannot separate this business into its different elements, and call that a business for taxation which from its nature is dependent for its existence, not upon anything inherent in itself, but upon its connection with the business which is itself subject to taxation. In other words, the power of a municipal corporation to tax mere incidents of business is not conferred by a charter which authorizes it to tax a business. In Rogers v. Sandersville, 120 Ga. 192, 47 S. E. 557, it was held that, where one engaged in the sale of soda posted bills advertising the sale of his goods, he was not engaged in business as a billposter, but was simply engaged in performing what was an incident to his business as a seller of soda, and was not liable to a tax under an ordinance imposing a tax upon all persons engaged in the business of a billposter. In the opinion Mr. Justice Lamar used the following language, which is appropriate to the present case: "What he did was for the purpose of making or increasing sales, and the various steps leading to that end were part and parcel of the business of selling." It may be that the general assembly would have authority to divide an occupation into its various elements, and to tax each, and also tax every incident of every business; but certain it is that a municipal corporation which is simply given the right to tax a business and classify business has not had conferred upon it authority either to divide a business into its elements for the taxation of each, or to tax that which is merely an incident of a business, and which could not alone, from its very nature, constitute a separate and distinct business.

In the cases above cited the furnishing of trading stamps by a merchant to his customers is sometimes referred to as a business, but a careful reading of the opinions will show that this term is used by the writers in its broad and colloquial sense, and that no question similar to the one now before us was under consideration in any of the cases. There are a few cases where the question of taxing the use of trading stamps by merchants has been the subject of decision. In Humes v. Ft. Smith, 93 Fed. 857, an ordinance which had the effect to impose a tax upon the use of trading stamps by merchants was upheld; but this tax was levied under an act of the legislature of Arkansas authorizing cities of certain classes to license, tax, and regulate gift enterprises, and the act defined the term "gift enterprises" so as to include the use of trading stamps by merchants. This was also true of Lansburgh v. District of Columbia, 11 App. D. C. 512, where the tax was imposed upon gift enterprises under an act of Congress which defined this expression in such a way as to include the use of trading stamps by merchants. In Fleetwood v. Read, 21 Wash. 547, 47 L. R. A. 205, 58 Pac. 665, the supreme court of Washington held that, under an act which authorized a city to grant licenses for any "lawful purpose," a license tax for the purpose of revenue could be imposed upon merchants who used trading stamps. The question as to whether the furnishing of trading stamps by merchants was in itself a business, so as to be thus classified for the purposes of taxation, was not involved in that case. In Ex parte McKenna, 126 Cal. 429, 58 Pac. 916, the supreme court of California held that a tax on merchants using trading stamps could not be justified as a tax on a lottery, since a lottery was unlawful and could not be licensed, and that the mere use by one merchant of trading stamps, when other merchants did not engage in their use, was not a sufficient reason for passing an ordinance imposing a tax burdensome in amount, if not prohibitory, on all merchants issuing trading stamps; and that such an ordinance was discriminating in its nature, unreasonable, and void, as in restraint of trade. Mr. McQuillin, in his treatise on Municipal Ordinances (p. 659), in enumerating the cases in which a tax upon trades, occupations, vocations, etc., had been sustained, mentions gift enterprises, and in a note says the term "gift enterprise" includes trading stamps and similar schemes; the authorities cited by him to sustain this being Humes's Case, 93 Fed. 857, and Fleetwood's Case, 21 Wash. 547, 47 L. R. A. 205, 58 Pac. 665; and these cases, as has been shown, dealt with legislative acts defining gift enterprises. In its ultimate analysis, the use of trading stamps by a merchant is simply a unique and attractive form of advertising, resorted to for the purpose of increasing trade. In the strict commercial sense of the term "business," it is not a business at all. It is simply a mode or manner of business,—an instrumentality or incident of a business. When resorted to for the purpose of increasing the business to which it is annexed, it occupies the same relation to that business as newspaper advertising, circulars, dodgers, and the like; and, if the city of Atlanta can classify as a business advertising through the medium of the trading stamp, it can also classify as a business advertising through the journals of the city, or through the medium of a person employed to walk the streets with the sandwich upon which the goods, wares, and merchandise of a merchant are advertised, or the employment of a dwarf who carries upon his shoulder a barrel upon which the wares of a merchant are advertised, and who stops at every street corner and seats himself upon it. These and other methods equally unique have been resorted to, but no one has ever pretended that the merchant, in thus attempting to increase his profits from the sale of his goods, was engaging in a new business, and not simply carrying on the business of selling goods. In the case of Keely v. Atlanta, 69 Ga. 583, in which the provisions of the charter of Atlanta above referred to were under consideration, it was held that these provisions conferred power upon the municipal authorities to divide a general merchandise business into specific classes, such as dry goods, boots and shoes, and the like, and to levy a tax upon each of such classes. There is nothing in that decision which would authorize the taxing of the mere incidents of a business, which in themselves could not exist without the business to which they were annexed. We think that the classification in the ordinance under consideration was unreasonable and arbitrary, and could in no sense be declared just and proper, as the general assembly has determined must be the case with all classifications for taxation made by the city of Atlanta.

2. It is contended, though, that even if the judge erred in his conclusion as to the validity of the ordinance, the demurrer was properly sustained, for the reason that there was a misjoinder of parties; that the application for injunction could not properly be made jointly by the trading-stamp company and one or more merchants who were its customers. The trading-stamp company was not a necessary party, but it seems to us that it was a proper party. While it had paid its tax, and was not affected by the ordinance so far as further taxation upon its business was concerned, the effect of the ordinance was to embarrass and hamper those who dealt with it, and diminish its business, even if it did not have the effect to entirely destroy it. If the city of Atlanta were to impose a business tax upon a merchant, and then impose a tax upon every customer who entered his door, it would be at once apparent that the merchant was vitally and pecuniarily interested in the question as to whether his customers should be burdened with this tax. In such a case it would seem that the court would entertain a joint application by the merchant and his customers to restrain the enforcement of the tax attempted to be collected without authority of law upon the customers, when the effect of the collection would be to interfere with the customer by imposing a burden upon his right to buy, and to interfere with the merchant by impairing or destroying his right to sell.

3. It is also contended that injunction was not the remedy; that the parties should have paid the tax under protest, and then have brought suit against the tax officer for damages. If a lawful tax had been levied, and the question was whether the individual came within the description of persons subject to the tax, a question of fact would have been raised, and equity would not interfere, but would remit the party to his action at law. But where there is no law authorizing the collection of the tax, it is no tax, and equity will enjoin the attempt to collect it by anyone at the instance of the person who is about to be made the subject of the illegal exaction. Decker v. McGowan, 59 Ga. 805; Vanover v. Davis, 27 Ga. 354. The ordinance was void. There was, hence, no law authorizing the imposition of the tax. It was no tax; it was nothing; and the one attempting to enforce its collection was a wrongdoer; and those against whom the exaction was sought to be made could properly unite in an application to a court of equity to enjoin the enforcement of the ordinance, and would not be driven to their separate actions of trespass against the wrongdoer, who, under the guise of a tax officer, was attempting to collect that for which there was no authority.

Judgment reversed.

All the Justices concur.

J. L. FITTS, Plff. in Err.,
v.
City of ATLANTA.

(.....Ga.....)

- *1. The ordinance of the city of Atlanta (Mun. Code, § 1841), declaring it unlawful to hold public meetings in the streets of that city without the consent of the municipal authorities, is not unconstitutional, either because it curtails or restricts the liberty of speech, or makes an arbitrary discrimination in favor of some persons against others, or because the city had no legal power to enact it; nor is such ordinance void upon the ground that it is an unreasonable and oppressive exercise of police power.
2. The act approved December 19, 1893 (Acts 1893, p. 173), entitled "An Act to Amend the Charter of the City of Atlanta, to Wit: The Act Incorporating the City of Atlanta, Approved February 28th, 1874," etc., and empowering the mayor and general council of such city to provide by ordinance for the regulation of public meetings and public speaking in its streets by preventing the obstruction of the same or the gathering of disorderly crowds thereon, is not violative of that provision of the Constitution which prohibits the passage of any statute containing matter different from that which is expressed in the title thereof.
3. Where it appeared that the accused violated a municipal ordinance for the previously announced purpose of testing its constitutionality, it was not error to refuse to continue the case made against him merely to give his counsel time to investigate the constitutional questions claimed to be involved therein.
4. The allegations in the petition for certiorari as to the circumstances which it was claimed disqualified the mayor, as acting recorder, to try the petitioner, were not only not verified by the answer, but were expressly denied therein. Neither did the answer verify the statements made in the petition in reference to the petitioner being required, under the sentence imposed, to work upon the public works. "Points made in a petition for certiorari, not verified by the answer of the trial judge, present nothing for determination either by the superior or the supreme court."
5. When the penalty is left by the statute to the discretion of the trial judge, within certain fixed limits, his judgment will not be disturbed upon the ground that the sentence was excessive, if the penalty imposed does not exceed the limit provided.

*Headnotes by FISH, P. J.

NOTE.—For another case in this series as to validity of ordinance prohibiting making of speech in streets of city without license from mayor, see Love v. Phalen, 55 L. R. A. 618.

As to ordinance prohibiting making of public address on city common, see Com. v. Davis, 26 L. R. A. 712.

As to constitutional freedom of speech and of the press generally, see Cowan v. Fairbrother, 32 L. R. A. 829.
67 L. R. A.

6 Where complaint was made in a petition for certiorari that the trial court overruled objections to the testimony of named witnesses upon designated subjects, without setting forth, either literally or in substance, the testimony to which the objections were made, an assignment of error that the court erred in overruling such objections was not well taken.

7. The certiorari was properly overruled.

(January 26, 1905.)

ERROR to the Superior Court for Fulton County to review a judgment affirming a judgment convicting defendant of violating a municipal ordinance. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Alonzo Field and A. M. Brand for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. J. L. Mayson and W. P. Hill, for defendant in error:

It is not an unconstitutional delegation of power for the legislature to authorize the city council to empower the city board of police to make rules and regulations for the use of the streets.

Com. v. Plaisted, 148 Mass. 375, 2 L. R. A. 142, 12 Am. St. Rep. 566, 19 N. E. 224; Centralia v. Smith, 103 Mo. App. 438, 77 S. W. 488; Kansas City v. Mastin, 169 Mo. 80, 68 S. W. 1037; Kennedy v. Pawtucket, 24 R. I. 461, 53 Atl. 317; Brodline v. Revere, 182 Mass. 598, 66 N. E. 607.

An ordinance expressly authorized by statute cannot be declared void upon the ground that it is an unreasonable and oppressive exercise of the police power.

Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Mayesville, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 615, 69 S. W. 728; McQuillin, Mun. Ord. p. 181; Danville v. Hatcher, 101 Va. 523, 44 S. E. 723; Anderson v. State (Neb.) 96 N. W. 149; Taylor v. Sandersville, 118 Ga. 63, 44 S. E. 845.

FISH, P. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

J. L. Fitts was adjudged guilty, in the recorder's court of the city of Atlanta, of violating a certain municipal ordinance, and sentence imposed on him therefor. He took the case by certiorari to the superior court, where, upon the hearing, the certiorari was overruled. Thereupon he sued out a writ of error to this court. Our learned Brother Lumpkin, who presided in the superior court, rendered an opinion in the case, which comes up in the record, and which is as follows:

"This case presents a contest of strength between 'Prof.' Fitts and a municipal ordinance of the city of Atlanta. The two are diametrically opposed to each other, and one must yield. There is no halfway ground. If the ordinance was a legal and valid ordinance, Prof. Fitts's conduct was illegal. If the professor is right, the ordinance is illegal. The ordinance is contained in the Municipal Code of 1899, and reads as follows: 'Sec. 1841. The president, chairman, or other officer, or committee of men, or any persons who desire or intend to call a public meeting of the citizens of Atlanta, for political purposes, shall notify the mayor, or chief of police, of such desire or intent, and of the time and place of meeting, before said meeting is called, and, upon failure to do so, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not exceeding $50 and cost, or be imprisoned in the calaboose of the city not exceeding thirty days, in the discretion of the recorder's court; and upon receiving such notice it shall be the duty of the mayor or chief of police to attend such meeting with a sufficient police force to preserve peace and order: Provided, it shall not be lawful to hold any such meeting in any of the public streets of the city of Atlanta without the consent of the mayor and council, or the mayor and chairman of the board of police commissioners of the city of Atlanta; and any person calling or holding any public meeting, in any of the streets of the city of Atlanta, without such consent, shall, upon conviction thereof in the recorder's court of said city, be fined in a sum not exceeding $100, or imprisoned not exceeding thirty days, in the discretion of the court.' The plaintiff in certiorari appears to have made two or three speeches on the streets of Atlanta under permit or consent from the mayor and chairman of the board of police commissioners, but his permit was withdrawn. Afterwards he determined to speak on the streets either with or without a permit or consent, and, failing to obtain one, he proceeded in defiance of the ordinance and in spite of it. Handbills were issued and scattered, of which the following is a copy:

"Great Sensation!

"Testing a City Ordinance.

"Free Street Lecture on Socialism by Prof.

"J. L. Fitts of South Carolina.

Monday, August 17th, 8 p. m., corner of Broad and Marietta streets. Prof. Fitts has been refused a permit. He will speak under the right guaranteed by the 1st Amendment to the United States Constitution, which was proposed by Jefferson and approved by Washington. If interrupted, the case will be carried to the United States Supreme Court. Shall we, who built the streets, be deprived of their use for lawfully assembling to discuss our condition and needs? Come and see. Be early and get a good place. Don't Block Sidewalks or Streets.

The Committee.

"The petition states that this was admitted in evidence over objection, on the ground that there was no evidence that said Fitts had it printed or circulated, and it was irrelevant; but there is no assignment of error on any such grounds, nor does the mayor verify this statement in his answer to the writ of certiorari. The answer states that, 'as part of its evidence, the city introduced the poster which Fitts scattered over the city, as set forth in paragraph 10 of the writ of certiorari.' Having gathered his crowd in a public street in the very heart of the business portion of the city, he proceeded to make his test of the ordinance, and speak without any permit or consent. At the appointed time, among those who answered his invitation were members of the police force; and, as he had announced a desire to make a test of the law, they accommodated him by arresting him when he refused to desist from speaking on the street; and on his trial in the recorder's court, the mayor, presiding, adjudged him guilty. He brings the case to this court by writ of certiorari. The assignments of error are numerous, but the leading ground of his attack upon the ordinance is, in substance that the Constitution of the United States and of the state guarantee freedom of speech, and that under this guaranty he had a constitutional right to hold meetings and make speeches in the streets of Atlanta, and the ordinance which prevented his doing so without a permit or consent of the municipal officers was invalid. In several respects the answer of the mayor to the writ of certiorari does not agree with the petition, and, not being traversed, it must control. The petition is only taken as correct where verified by the answer. Childs v. Moran, 114 Ga. 320, 40 S. E. 271. For instance, the answer contains the following: 'On the night of the arrest of Fitts the permit had been withdrawn, but Fitts spoke in defiance of the authorities of the city, and went out into Marietta street, gathered a crowd around him, and began his speech. The sidewalk was not blocked, but the crowd gathered around Fitts in the street. The language used by Fitts was not obscene or vulgar, but on the night of his arrest he had no permit to speak, issued either from the mayor or anyone else. He took a box, and placed same out upon the roadway, and, standing thereon, undertook to gather a crowd around him, and undertook to make a speech.' In the evidence of the chief of police occurred the following: 'The sidewalk was not blocked, but people had gathered around Fitts out in the street. The people in the street, of course, obstructed the street where they stood.' Another witness states that 'the language of Fitts was not obscene, but was that calculated to arouse strife and discord and cause revolution. He represented the socialists, and seemed to be trying to convert the people to his way of thinking by a text [attacks] upon the government, legislature, capital, etc.' Further on in the answer it is stated that 'the people gathered around him out in the street, and when they undertook to arrest Fitts a number of his sympathizers became very much excited, and it was necessary to arrest them in order to disperse the assembly.'

"The primary object of streets is for public passage. They should be kept open and unobstructed for that purpose. If damage accrues to passers by reason of improperly allowing them to be used for other purposes, the city may become liable. The streets of the city are peculiarly within the police control for the purpose of preserving and protecting their use by the public as thoroughfares. A man has many constitutional and legal rights which he cannot lawfully exercise in the streets of a city. Thus, every citizen has a right to lawfully acquire and hold personal property; but he has no right, constitutional or otherwise, to insist on storing his possessions in the street. Every man has the inalienable right to sleep and eat (if he has the edibles), but he has no constitutional right to make his bed or set his table in the street. Every man has not only the right to, but he should, bathe and cleanse himself, and change his raiment, if he has a change. This is a duty imposed by his individual constitution, if not by that of his country. But there is no constitutional right on his part to perform his ablutions or exercise the most necessary demands of his nature in the public streets. At proper times and in proper places one may make loud noises, or shoot a gun, or test his lung power vocally to a considerable extent, without offending against any law; but there is no right, inherent or constitutional, to make vociferous outcries or practice gunnery in the street. If Professor Fitts's idea of constitutional law were correct, I see no reason why every citizen should not claim a right to use the public streets for the exercise of his trade, calling, or profession, which may be much more essential to his welfare and that of the public than speech making by the plaintiff in tortiori, however eloquent, and regardless of the soundness or unsoundness of his argument.

"If the Constitution, state or Federal, guarantees to Professor Fitts the right to make public speeches on the streets of Atlanta, why does it not also guarantee the same right to every lecturer who may not desire to hire a hall, and to every showman who wishes to exhibit on the highway, or to every mechanic, artisan, merchant, or other citizen, the right to ply his lawful vocation in the public thoroughfare? The constitutional right to exercise one's lawful vocation is quite as sacred, and often more important, than the right to make speeches; but the exercise of either right must yield to the municipal power properly exercised over the streets for the primary objects for which they were established. If everyone who has some constitutional right has also the constitutional right to exercise it in the streets of a city regardless of municipal regulations, these thoroughfares may soon become a gathering place of a numerous clan rivaling those adjuncts of modern exhibitions which, since the term was used during the Columbian Exposition at Chicago in 1893, have come to be distinguished by the name of 'Midway Plaisance.' The right of the public in regard to the streets is to use them for passage as public highways, provided they are used lawfully for that purpose. But even the right of passage is subject to reasonable legislative regulations for the general good. Thus, idling and loitering in the public streets has generally been prohibited, and no one has yet doubted the constitutionality of such legislation.

"In the handbill above referred to, the question is asked, 'Shall we, who built the streets, be deprived of their use for lawfully assembling to discuss our conditions and needs? Who comprise the 'committee' signing this handbill, or whether Professor Fitts was a part of it or all of it, does not appear. But, as it is shown that he was from another state, and, so far as disclosed, neither a citizen, taxpayer, property owner, nor resident of Atlanta, it is not quite clear how this question has any relevancy, or how he was one of the 'we' who built the streets of the city, or how he derived any peculiar right to use them as a forum or lecture hall because they have cost the municipality or the taxpayers or the abutting property owners money to pave or repair or keep in order for public travel. I fear that Professor Fitts has confused in his mind the constitutional right of freedom of speech with an imaginary, though nonexistent, right to hold public meetings and make speeches in the public streets regardless of municipal law or regulations. It is true that, under an ordinance prohibiting speaking on the streets without a permit, and a charge that he violated such ordinance, the defendant could not be convicted of the offense of obstructing the streets arising under another ordinance, although he might be guilty of both offenses; but, in considering the reasonableness or propriety of the ordinance on the subject of speaking on the public streets, and the necessity of police regulation and control of that subject, the liability to cause obstructions in the streets interfering with public passage and causing disorder is a matter for consideration. Neither the prohibition placed on Congress by the 1st Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, whereby it was declared that 'Congress shall make no law abridging the freedom of speech,' nor the provision of the Constitution of this state which declares that no law shall be passed curtailing or restraining the liberty of speech, confers any constitutional right to gather crowds and make public orations in the streets of a city regardless of the municipal control over them.

'If, then, the plaintiff in certiorari (the defendant in the recorder's court) had no absolute or constitutional right to use the public streets of Atlanta as a place to gather an audience and speak, is the ordinance void on the ground that it makes an arbitrary discrimination in favor of some against others, because it requires a permit or consent to be obtained, and prohibits holding public meetings on the streets without one? Under the general powers usually conferred on cities, or what is sometimes spoken of as the 'general welfare clause' in municipal charters, the corporate authorities could pass reasonable regulations for the preservation and keeping of their streets open and unobstructed for travel and preventing disorder upon them. Not content with this general power, the city of Atlanta obtained an amendment to its charter in 1893, which contains the following language: 'The mayor and general council of said city of Atlanta is empowered to provide, by ordinance, for the regulation of public meetings and public speaking in the streets of said city of Atlanta by preventing the obstruction of the streets of said city or the gathering of disorderly crowds in said streets.' City Code of 1899, 48. The ordinance quoted above does not, on its face, make any discrimination, or say that certain persons, or persons of certain classes, might speak on the streets and certain others should not do so. It says that none shall do so without a permit or consent from certain officers. By its own terms it is not discriminative. Is it invalid because it requires a permit or consent before any person shall be allowed to speak on the streets, or because it provides for the granting of such permit by the mayor and chairman of the board of police commissioners? Counsel for plaintiff in certiorari have cited but one case on this subject,—that of Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356-374, 30 L. ed. 220-227, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1064, 1065. In that case an ordinance was passed which contained the following provision: 'Section 1. It shall be unlawful, from and after the passage of this order, for any person or persons to establish, maintain, or carry on a laundry within the corporate limits of the city and county of San Francisco, without having first obtained the consent of the board of supervisors, except the same be located in a building constructed either of brick or stone.' Other sections of the ordinance prohibited the erection or maintaining of any scaffolding on any building without obtaining written permission of the board of supervisors, and provided punishment for the violation of the ordinance. Yick Wo and others were imprisoned for violating this ordinance. The case arose on the application for a writ of habeas corpus. On the return of the writ and the hearing then had the evidence plainly showed that the great majority of the laundries in the city were operated by Chinamen in wooden buildings; that the board of supervisors arbitrarily refused to consent for them to continue to do business in these wooden buildings, although a similar right was granted to Caucasians. Yick Wo showed that he had a city license which had not expired; that he had been engaged in the laundry business in the same premises and building for twenty-two years previously; that he had a license from the board of fire wardens, which showed that they had inspected the premises, and found all proper arrangements for carrying on the business; that the stove, washing and drying apparatus, etc., were in good condition, and their use not dangerous to the surrounding property from fire; and that all proper precautions had been taken to comply with the provisions of the ordinance in respect to the fire limits and making regulations concerning the erecting and use of buildings in the city; and also that he had a certificate from the health officer showing that the premises had been inspected by him, and found to be sufficiently and properly drained, and that all proper arrangements for carrying on the business of a laundry without injury to the sanitary conditions of the neighborhood had been complied with. Under the facts disclosed, the Supreme Court of the United States held that the ordinance and its administration were evidently intended to discriminate against the Chinese on account of their race, and that it was an arbitrary effort to drive them out of business in favor of their Caucasian rivals. The following extract from the opinion of Mr. Justice Matthews will serve to indicate the real basis of the decision: 'It appears that both petitioners have complied with every requisite deemed by the law or by the public officers charged with its administration necessary for the protection of neighboring property from fire, or as a precaution against injury to the public health. No reason whatever, except the will of the supervisors, is assigned why they should not be permitted to carry on, in the accustomed manner, their harmless and useful occupation, on which they depend for a livelihood. And while this consent of the supervisors is withheld from them and from two hundred others, who have also petitioned, all of whom happen to be Chinese subjects, eighty others, not Chinese subjects, are permitted to carry on the same business under similar conditions. The fact of this discrimination is admitted. No reason for it is shown, and the conclusion cannot be resisted that no reason for it exists except hostility to the race and nationality to which the petitioners belong, and which, in the eye of the law is not justified.' That imprisonment under an ordinance, the object of which was to drive out of business and prevent from exercising a legitimate and useful calling a number of persons, merely because they were Chinese, in the interest of competitors of another race, was illegal, presents a very different question from that involved in the present case; nor does the ruling that, although the ordinance involved may have been fair and impartial in appearance, yet, if it was administered by public authority with an evil eye and an unequal hand, so as practically to make illegal discriminations between persons in similar circumstances material to their rights, imprisonment so brought about was illegal, control the present case. Here no business or useful occupation, established or to be established, was involved. The right of a man to ply his trade or business occupying property owned or rented by him, by which he serves the public and earns an honest livelihood, is very different from the alleged right contended for in this case, to hold meetings and make public speeches in the public streets of the city. The municipal authorities did not prohibit Professor Fitts from speaking altogether, but prohibited him from holding public meetings and speaking in the streets without a permit or consent, and he was convicted when he did so with the express purpose of violating the municipal ordinance and asserting an alleged right which he did not have. One who gathers a crowd in a public street under the invitation expressed in a handbill, announces an intention to violate and test a police regulation, mounts a box, and insists on speaking, though requested to desist by the authorities, can hardly claim to be in the same category with those who pursue lawful and useful occupations, and who desire to use property owned or rented by them in the conduct of their legitimate business.

67 L. R. A.

"In Com. v. Plaisted, 148 Mass. 375, 2 L. R. A. 142, 12 Am. St. Rep. 566, 19 N. E. 224, a rule was passed by the board of police forbidding singing or playing or performing on instruments in the streets without the license of the board of police. A member of the Salvation Army, playing on a musical instrument, contested the rule, and the case was carried to the supreme court. In the decision it was held that it is not an unconstitutional delegation of power for the legislature to authorize a city council to empower the city board of police to make rules and regulations with reference to itinerant musicians; and that the constitutional right of freedom of worship did not prevent the adoption of reasonable rules for the use of the streets. In the case of Centralia v. Smith, 103 Mo. App. 438, 77 S. W. 488, it was held that a city ordinance prohibiting the explosion of firecrackers without the written consent of the mayor is within the police power of the city. 'A city ordinance prohibiting the explosion of firecrackers without the written consent of the mayor is not void as a delegation of legislative power to the mayor.' Without discussing this fully, it may be said that, of course, if the statute itself were unconstitutional, or the administration of the law were in excess of the authority, or in violation of the Constitution, the ruling might be otherwise. See also Kansas City v. Mastin, 169 Mo. 80, 68 S. W. 1037; Kennedy v. Pawtucket, 24 R. I. 461, 53 Atl. 317; Brodline v. Revere, 182 Mass. 598, 66 N. E. 607.

"There was nothing on the face of this ordinance to stamp it as unconstitutional. When a case of capricious, malicious, or arbitrary action arises, the courts will deal with it as the law requires; but I do not think that this is one of them. The answer of the mayor to the writ of certiorari shows that there was ample room for the legitimate exercise of discretion in refusing a permit to the plaintiff in certiorari; and the manner in which he proceeded to get up his crowd in the street, and the disorder which the answer of the mayor shows followed when the police sought to cause him to desist, indicate that there may have been good grounds for the way in which the discretion was exercised. While he may have been guilty of no actual acts of disorder himself, yet the gathering of the crowd in the street for the express purpose of violating the municipal ordinance, the practical dare to the municipal authorities to interfere with him, and the disorder occurring when they did so, as well as the other evidence in the case, indicate that the exercise of the discretion on the part of the mayor and chairman of the board in refusing the permit was not so arbitrary or capricious as to warrant a finding that either the ordinance or the administration of it was unconstitutional. In Montross v. State, 72 Ga. 261 (5), 53 Am. Rep. 840, it is said: 'Every person is presumed to intend the natural and legal consequence of his conduct; and where the agent of a newspaper, knowing of the law of this state against circulating obscene literature, violated it for the express purpose of making a test case or of vindicating the character of his paper, and, to insure a prosecution, sought the chief of police, and gave him copies of the paper, he cannot complain that he succeeded in obtaining a prosecution, or that the court, in its charge, did him injustice as to the intent with which he committed the act, although the result of his experiment was different from that which he anticipated.' In the present case not only were the handbills referred to scattered, but the plaintiff in certiorari gave written notice to the mayor of his intention to speak on the streets of Atlanta, in spite of the fact that he had no permit or consent. I hold that no constitutional right of the plaintiff in certiorari has been violated.

"There was no error in refusing the motion for a continuance under the facts set out in the mayor's answer. Nor was there any error on the part of the mayor in holding that he was not disqualified to preside, under the statements in the answer. The ordinance was not void for any of the reasons assigned, nor was the sentence so excessive as to be illegal under the facts of the case. Whitten v. State, 47 Ga. 297. Nor does the answer of the mayor verify the statements of the plaintiff as to the sentence. Childs v. Moran, 114 Ga. 320 (2), 40 S. E. 271.

"The assignment of error in regard to the admission of evidence concerning the former speeches and conduct of the plaintiff in certiorari might be disregarded on the ground that it is too vague and general, and lacking in specification. But if it be considered that he sought to attack the conduct of the mayor and the chairman of the board of police commissioners on the ground that in denying him a permit they acted arbitrarily and capriciously, it was legitimate to show his previous conduct and language, and the circumstances under which the municipal authorities exercised the authority vested in them.

"Upon the whole case I am of opinion that the certiorari should be overruled, and the judgment of the mayor allowed to stand; and an order will be entered accordingly."

In our opinion, the reasoning and authorities cited in the foregoing opinion clearly establish the conclusions therein stated, and the certiorari was properly overruled.

Judgment affirmed.

All the Justices concur.

IDAHO SUPREME COURT.

STATE of Idaho, Respt.,

v.

Frank NELSON, Appt.

(.....Idaho.....)

- *1. An ordinance that provides, "It shall be unlawful for any person maintaining any saloon, barroom, or drinking shop, or any apartment thereto attached, to permit females to enter their said places of business," is unconstitutional.
2. A city may by ordinance prohibit females from entering places where intoxicating liquors are sold, for immoral purposes.
3. An ordinance that provides a punishment by fine of not less than $25, nor more than $200, or by imprisonment in the city jail for not less than ten days, nor more than sixty days, for violation of an ordinance that prohibits females from entering their places of business for immoral purposes, is not void or unconstitutional for the reason that it is unreasonable or oppressive.

(January 14, 1905.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Ada County convicting him of violating a municipal ordinance. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. C. C. Cavanah, for appellant:

The ordinance is invalid, unreasonable, unjust, unfair, void, and contravenes the principle of common right.

Gasteneau v. Com. 108 Ky. 473, 49 L. R. A. 111, 94 Am. St. Rep. 386, 56 S. W. 705; Re Ah Jow, 29 Fed. 181; Re Maguire, 57 Cal. 604, 40 Am. Rep. 125; Hechinger v. Maysville, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 486, 49 L. R. A. 114, 57 S. W. 619; 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 322; 21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 990.

An ordinance which the city passes in the exercise of the power given it must be reasonable, and the courts have authority to inquire into that question to a greater extent than they have with reference to state statutes.

*Headnotes by STOCKSLAGER, Ch. J.

NOTE.—As to constitutionality of discrimination against women in police regulations, see also, in this series, Gastineau v. Com. 49 L. R. A. 111, and note, and Adams v. Cronin, 63 L. R. A. 61.
67 L. R. A.

1 McClain, Crim. Law, § 65; 21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 985.

Whether an ordinance is reasonable or not is a question solely for the court.

Com. v. Worcester, 3 Pick. 462; State v. Overton, 24 N. J. L. 435, 61 Am. Dec. 671; Angell & A. Priv. Corp. § 357; Helena v. Dwyer, 64 Ark. 424, 39 L. R. A. 266, 62 Am. St. Rep. 206, 42 S. W. 1071; Haynes v. Cape May, 50 N. J. L. 55, 13 Atl. 231.

An ordinance is to be tested by its own terms.

Re Wong Hane, 108 Cal. 680, 49 Am. St. Rep. 138, 41 Pac. 693; Los Angeles County v. Hollywood Cemetery Asso. 124 Cal. 344, 71 Am. St. Rep. 75, 57 Pac. 153.

The penalty prescribed for the violation of this ordinance is unreasonable, and the ordinance is therefore void.

Re Ah You, 88 Cal. 99, 11 L. R. A. 408, 22 Am. St. Rep. 280, 25 Pac. 974.

Messrs. C. F. Neal and F. B. Kinyon, for respondent:

The occupation of appellant is one in which he had no inherent and indefeasible right to engage.

Black, Intoxicating Liquors, §§ 37, 39; Giozza v. Tiernan, 148 U. S. 657, 37 L. ed. 599, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 721; Bartemeyer v. Iowa, 18 Wall. 129, 21 L. ed. 929; License Cases, 5 How. 504, 12 L. ed. 256; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 31 L. ed. 205, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273; Crouley v. Christensen, 137 U. S. 86, 34 L. ed. 620, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 13.

The ordinance was valid.

Ex parte Hayes, 98 Cal. 555, 20 L. R. A. 701, 33 Pac. 337; Foster v. Police Comrs. 102 Cal. 483, 41 Am. St. Rep. 194, 37 Pac. 763; Adams v. Cronin, 29 Colo. 488, 63 L. R. A. 61, 69 Pac. 590, 192 U. S. 108, 48 L. ed. 365, and note, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 219.

Mr. John A. Bagley, Attorney General, also for respondent.

Stockslager, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was commenced before the police magistrate of Boise, and charged defendant with permitting a female (one Rena Morrow) to enter and remain in a saloon maintained by defendant, in violation of an ordinance of the said city. A trial was had, and defendant was convicted in that court, and an appeal taken to the district court. A trial was had in that court at the February, 1904, term, and defendant was convicted, and sentenced to pay a fine of $25 and costs. The appeal is from this judgment.

57 L. R. A.

This prosecution is based on the following section of the ordinance of the city of Boise: "Sec. 858. It shall be unlawful for any person maintaining any saloon, barroom, or drinking shop, or any apartment thereto attached, to permit females to enter their said place of business or maintain any sign, or offer any inducement or any invitation to females to enter any such saloon, barroom, or drinking shop kept within the city of Boise. Approved Sept. 24th, 1903." This section was introduced in evidence, and was the state's exhibit A. State's exhibit B follows: "Any person violating any of the provisions of §§ 855, 856, 857, or 858, shall, upon conviction before the police magistrate, be punished by a fine not less than $25.00, nor more than $200.00, or by imprisonment in the city jail for not less than ten days nor more than sixty days." Section 872 provides: "In all cases where a fine shall be imposed upon a person for a violation of any of the ordinances of said Boise city, such fine may be collected under the ordinances of said city and laws of Idaho, or by imprisonment at hard labor in the city prison, or by working any person sentenced to such imprisonment upon the streets, parks, public squares, workhouse, or house of correction, during the term thereof, until such fine and costs be paid, at the rate of one day for every $2 of said fine and costs, provided the total time of imprisonment shall not exceed sixty days."

It is first urged by counsel for appellant that "this objection to the introduction in evidence of §§ 858 and 859 [plaintiff's exhibits A and B] should have been sustained, for the reason that such sections of the revised ordinances of Boise city are invalid, void, unreasonable, and an interference with individual liberty granted to the citizens of Idaho by the constitutional laws of Idaho, and, in its operation, imposes an unjust and illegal punishment upon the owners of places where liquors are sold, whenever a female enters said places, although she may enter there upon lawful business, and creates an unequal, unjust, and illegal discrimination against women who enter such places upon lawful business." This seems, from the record, to be the sole question presented for our consideration in this appeal. If the section of the ordinance state's exhibit A is valid, we do not think the penalty provided by state's exhibit B too severe. The evident intent of both sections, above referred to, is in the interest of morals, and for the general good of the people of the city. All good citizens should join in an effort to protect the people from immoral influences, and especially the young people of the community. With this object in view, we will examine the provisions of the ordinance in controversy.

In support of his contention that the provision of the ordinance under discussion is invalid, void, unreasonable, and an interference with individual liberty, counsel for appellant cites Gastenuau v. Com. 108 Ky. 473, 49 L. R. A. 111, 94 Am. St. Rep. 386, 56 S. W. 705. The ordinance in that case is dissimilar in some particulars to the one under consideration, but the reasons for declaring the ordinance unconstitutional seem to be applicable to the case at bar. The language of the ordinance is as follows: "Be it ordained by the board of council of the city of Middlesboro, Bell county, Kentucky: (1) That it shall be unlawful for any woman to go in and out of any building where a saloon is kept offering for sale any spirituous, vinous, and malt liquors, or to frequent, loaf, or stand around said building within 50 feet thereof. (2) That it shall be unlawful for any saloon keeper, or his clerk, or employees, to allow or permit any woman or women to come in or out of his building where spirituous, vinous, and malt liquors are sold or offered for sale, and it shall be the duty of said saloon keeper, clerk, or employees to immediately notify the officers that the 1st section of this ordinance has been violated, giving the name and color of the offender." These two sections are followed by § 3, which provides for the punishment of the proprietor if he violates § 2, and for the offender if she violates § 1. The Kentucky court, speaking through Mr. Justice Guffy, disposes of the case in the following concise and forcible language: "It is contended for appellee that the sole object of the ordinance is to regulate and control the sale of liquors, by reason of the fact that very disreputable, low, and vile women congregate in and about saloons and places where liquor is sold, thereby causing affrays, fights, murder, and other crimes. . . . It seems to us that the ordinance in question is unreasonable and an unnecessary interference with individual liberty, and tends to subject the vendor of liquors, as well as citizens, to unreasonable prosecutions. If the ordinance only included the persons mentioned in appellee's brief, we are not prepared to say that it would be invalid. But it might be that very good women would, for proper and legal purposes, find it necessary to go into a building where liquors are sold; . . . and, besides, we know of no rule of law which prohibits a well-behaved woman, for a lawful purpose and in a lawful manner, from going into or near a saloon. It may be taken for granted that it is not often that such would be the case, but the ordinances in question make no exceptions. If the citizens of Middlesboro choose to have saloons established where liquor is sold, it follows that all orderly and well-behaved persons have a right, in an orderly manner, and for a lawful purpose, to visit such saloons." The judgment was reversed and the lower court directed to adjudge the ordinance in question invalid and unconstitutional. For the reason that this case is particularly applicable to the case at bar, we have quoted almost the entire opinion. Counsel for respondent urges that the ordinance under consideration in the case above cited, after making it a misdemeanor for "a woman to go into a building where liquor was sold," went further, and provided that it was a misdemeanor, also, for a woman to "stand within 50 feet of such building." Counsel for respondent further says: "The last clause of this ordinance is an obviously unnecessary interference with personal liberty, which finds no parallel in the ordinance in question in the case at bar." It is true that the ordinance in the Kentucky case does add the last clause, as suggested by counsel, and that no such provision is contained in the ordinance under consideration; but it will be observed that the court in passing upon the provisions of the ordinance, devoted nearly the entire opinion to a discussion of the clause that prohibited women from entering a building where intoxicating liquors were sold.

In Re Ah Jow, 29 Fed. 181, it is shown that the city of Modesto passed an ordinance, one section of which provided that "every person who, in the city of Modesto, keeps or maintains any room or other place where opium, or any of its preparations, is sold or given away, and every person who resorts to, frequents, or visits such room or place is guilty of a misdemeanor: Provided, that this section shall not apply to the sale or gift of any of the preparations of opium by any druggist for any ailment not caused by the use of opium, or any of its preparations." The opinion, which is by Mr. Justice Sawyer, on this particular feature of the ordinance, says: "This language is extremely comprehensive, and embraces every possible case of visiting 'such room or place,' no matter whether for a proper and lawful, or improper and unlawful, purpose; whether the party has knowledge or is ignorant of the character of the 'room or place,' whether he visits it innocently, or otherwise. Neither knowledge nor purpose of the visit is made an element of the offense. The mere fact of going there, without any other element, is made an offense."

In Hechinger v. Maysville—another Kentucky case by Mr. Justice Guffy, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 486, 49 L. R. A. 114, 57 S. W. 619,—the ordinance provided "that it shall be unlawful for [any] person or persons other than the husband, father, brother, or male relative, to associate, escort, converse, or loiter with any female known as a common prostitute, either by day or by night, upon any of the streets or alleys of the city of Maysville, and any person or persons other than the said husband, father, brother, or other male relative, so offending shall, upon conviction thereof, before the police court in said city be fined." It is said in the opinion: "Manifestly the ordinance was intended to accomplish a proper and laudable object, but it seems to us that it is not properly guarded. . . . Any person should be allowed to converse with such a female long enough to transact any necessary and legitimate business."

Mr. Dillon, in his work on Municipal Corporations, vol. 1, 4th ed. § 322, in discussing the powers of municipal corporations to enact laws or ordinances for the punishment of crime, says: "As it would be unreasonable and unjust to make, under the same circumstances, an act done by one person penal, and, if done by another, not so, ordinances which have this effect cannot be sustained. Special and unwarranted discrimination or unjust or oppressive interference in particular cases is not to be allowed. The powers vested in municipal corporations should, as far as practicable, be exercised by ordinances general in their nature and impartial in their operation." See § 325, same author and volume.

In 21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 990, under the head of Contravention of common right, this subject is discussed, and the authorities of a large number of the states bearing on this question cited. Mr. McClain on Criminal Law, vol. 1, § 65, in discussing the subject of reasonableness of ordinances, says: "An ordinance which the city passes in the exercise of the powers given it must be reasonable, and the courts have authority to inquire into that question to a greater extent than they have with reference to state statutes;" citing a number of authorities to support the text. On the same subject we find the following language in 21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 985: "It is well established, as a general rule, that ordinances, in order to be valid and binding, must be reasonable, and not arbitrary or oppressive; and ordinances which do not conform to this requirement will be declared void." Numerous cases are cited from many of the American states in support of this rule. In Com. v. Worcester, 3 Pick. 462, it is said: "Whether a by-law be reasonable or not is for the court to determine."

For a very able and interesting discussion of the powers and duties of city authorities, as well as the courts in passing upon questions similar to the one before us, see Helena v. Dwyer, 64 Ark. 424, 39 L. R. A. 266, 62 Am. St. Rep. 206, 42 S. W. 1071.

In support of the contention that this ordinance should be sustained, counsel for respondent rely upon Adams v. Cronin, 29 Colo. 488, 63 L. R. A. 61, 69 Pac. 590,—a Colorado case. We have read this case with most interest and care, and are in full accord with every principle of law enunciated. A careful examination of this case, however, discloses that a very different ordinance was before the Colorado court for determination from the one we are called upon to construe. Section 745 of the Denver ordinance provided: "Each and every liquor saloon, dramshop, or tippling-house keeper, . . . who shall have or keep in connection with or as part of such liquor saloon, dramshop, or tippling house, any winerom or other place either with or without door or doors, curtain or curtains, or screen of any kind, into which any female person shall be permitted to enter from the outside, or from such liquor saloon, dramshop, or tippling house, and there be supplied with any kind of liquor whatsoever, shall, upon conviction, be fined as hereinafter provided." Section 746 provides: "No person . . . having charge or control of any liquor saloon . . . shall suffer or permit any female person to be or remain in such liquor saloon, dramshop, tippling house, or other place where intoxicating or malt liquors are sold or given away, for the purpose of their being supplied with any kind of liquor whatsoever; . . . nor shall any female person be or remain in any dramshop, tippling house, liquor saloon, or place adjacent thereto or connected therewith, and wait or attend on any person, or solicit drinks in any such place." This ordinance was declared valid, and why not? No provision in the ordinance that an orderly, well-behaved woman might not enter any saloon in the city of Denver for the transaction of legitimate business, and as often as she felt so disposed, so long as she did not visit such place for the purpose of being supplied with liquors or other immoral purposes. This ordinance falls strictly within the rule laid down in Gastanau v. Com. 108 Ky. 473, 49 L. R. A. 111, 94 Am. St. Rep. 386, 56 S. W. 705, and, indeed, all the cases to which our attention has been called, and heretofore referred to in this opinion. It was aimed at the very class of women who are usually termed "the unfortunates of the human family," and was designed to discourage and prevent their presence in and around saloons, tippling houses, and wherever intoxicating liquors are sold. There is no attempt to prohibit a woman in the ordinary course of business to enter such places in the discharge of her business, or for any legitimate reasons. The distinction between that ordinance and the one under consideration is easily drawn. The Denver ordinance prescribes a punishment for an offense that the proprietor must commit himself, whilst the Boise city ordinance provides a punishment for the proprietor if any woman enters his place, unbeknown to him, without his consent and against his will, no matter what her motive or intent may be. There is no exception. The mere matter of entrance is the essence of the crime. There is no question about the power, and we may say, the duty, of the city authorities to enact such ordinances as will promote morals and regulate the sale of intoxicating liquors in such a way as to prohibit immoral women from frequenting such places for the purpose of drinking, engaging in games, soliciting trade, or any other immoral purpose; but to say by an ordinance that a wife or mother may not enter a saloon, without subjecting herself to a fine, as well as the proprietor, in search of a recreant husband or a wayward son, is beyond the legal power of the city. So long as the state and the city of Boise see fit to license the retail sale of liquors, so long must they protect parties lawfully engaged in that business in a reasonable way.

The judgment is reversed, and cause remanded for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

Ailshie and Sullivan, JJ., concur.

INDIAN TERRITORY COURT OF APPEALS.

CORNERSTONE BANK, Appt.,

v.

William RHODES et al.

(.....Ind. Terr.....)

Ratification of an unauthorized signing of their names to a renewal note by the maker will be effected in case sureties on a note, which is past due, upon receiving notice from the payee that a new note has been substituted for the old one with their names attached to sureties, neglect to repudiate the transaction, and fail to notify the payee of their nonliability until after the insolvency and death of the maker.

(October 19, 1904.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Northern District Court in favor of defendants in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a promissory note. Reversed.

Statement by Clayton, J.:

This action was brought by the appellant against the appellees on a promissory note dated July 1, 1901, for $900 and interest, due January 1, 1902. The note purported to have been signed by one John W. Ward and the three defendants, William Rhodes, J. C. Welch, and John Clark. Ward, having died before the commencement of the action, was not joined in the suit. The defendants, in their answer, deny the execution of the note by them, and allege that, if their names appeared to it, they were forged. Verdict for the plaintiff as against William Rhodes, and for the defendants as to the others. Motion for new trial filed, overruled, exceptions saved, and cause regularly appealed to this court.

NOTE.—As to estoppel of, or ratification by, person whose signature is forged on commercial paper, see note to Traders' Nat. Bank v. Rogers, 36 L. R. A. 539.
67 L. R. A.

Mr. W. H. Kornegay, for appellant:

Defendants, by virtue of the acts of John M. Ward, got the benefit of the surrender of the old note in renewal of which the present note was given.

Mechem, Agency, ¶ 146.

The principal may, upon the discovery of the forgery, so conduct himself as, by permitting the paper to be taken upon the strength of his assertion of its genuineness; or by inducing the holder to change his position or intermit some remedial proceeding upon an assurance of its validity or a promise of protection; or, generally, remaining silent as to its invalidity when in equity and good conscience he ought to have spoken,—to estop himself from asserting that it is not binding upon him.

Mechem, Agency, ¶ 116; Reinhard, Agency, ¶ 121; Bigelow, Estoppel, pp. 583, 584; Waterson v. Rogers, 21 Kan. 530; Leather Mfrs. Nat. Bank v. Morgan, 117 U. S. 811, 29 L. ed. 811, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 657.

Mr. Preston S. Davis for appellees.

Clayton, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

That the note sued upon was not signed by the defendants Welch and Clark sufficiently appears from the proof. Their names had been signed to it by Ward, who was a son-in-law of Welch. The real consideration of the note was the retirement of another note, for $750, with interest, then four months past due, with the difference in money between the amount due on that note and the $900 note sued on in this case. This first note was signed by Ward and Welch as makers, Clark's name being put upon it, with his consent and by his direction, by Ward, who was the real borrower; the others being sureties. In the execution of this new note, it seems that Ward, after signing his own name to it and procuring Rhodes to sign it, without the knowledge or consent of Welch and Clark, wrote their names to it, immediately under his own and Rhodes's and sent it by mail to the plaintiff bank. The old note was canceled and returned to Ward, with the additional money necessary to make up the $900 embraced in the new note. Within a few days thereafter the bank, by its cashier, wrote to Welch a letter informing him of the transaction, and that his name and that of Clark were upon the paper. Upon the receipt of this letter, Welch saw Clark, and talked to him about it. The two then went to see Ward.

Welch's testimony on this point is as follows:

Q. When did you first get notice there was such a note as this in existence, claimed that,—in which they claimed that you had signed it?

A. I believe, sir, the first that I ever knew anything about it was some time in the last of June or the first of July, in the summer before John died, in the summer before John died the next spring,—I believe, in 1891; to the best of my recollection, would be in 1891—

Q. 1902?

A. 1902; and in the summer in July—last of June or the first of July—I got a notice from Mr. George Smith, notifying me that there was such a note in existence; and I went to see Uncle John Clark, and asked him about it, and he knew nothing of it, and I knew nothing of it; and he came to see John Ward about it, and asked him if there was any such note in existence, and what it was, and the reply was that he,—He replied to me. He said, "That's all right." He said, "I will fix that all right." He said, "I have got notes enough in the bank put up against this to pay it off."

Q. What, if anything, did you do towards replying to this notice,—you and Mr. Clark?

A. I didn't do anything except go and tell John, and John went himself, or at least he told me he went.

Q. What did he say after he went?

A. He came back and told me he had fixed it, or settled it, or fixed it off some way. He said, "I have got it fixed,"—is the words John told me.

67 L. R. A.

Q. What did you say to John, if anything, in this conversation, as to whether or not you had signed this note?

A. I told John I had never signed it.

Q. What did John say?

A. He didn't say anything, any more than he said, "That's all right." That's all the reply he made to me. . . .

Cross-examination:

Q. You say you got a notice in the summer before John died the next spring, letting you know that this note was in existence?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You never replied to those people at all, did you?

A. No, sir.

The witness is evidently mistaken in putting the date of the reception from the bank of the notice on the last of June or first of July, 1902. This suit was filed April 18, 1902, and the witness himself says that it was in the summer before the spring that John Ward died, which was the spring of 1902. Clark, in his testimony, puts the date as being in the summer of 1901, which was unquestionably the time, and this was the date the note was executed. Neither of them replied to the letter, or otherwise gave the bank any information that they had not signed the note, or had not authorized it to be done, until after the paper became due, and a demand was made upon them for payment. In the meantime Ward had died, hopelessly insolvent.

We are of the opinion that, under the facts and circumstances of the case, the defendants Welch and Clark, upon being notified by the bank, so soon after the execution of the note, of the fact that their names were upon it, should have promptly and at once given notice of their repudiation of the act of Ward in putting their names to the paper. They were on the original note, which was four months past due and unpaid. It was their duty to see that it was paid. They were expecting Ward to look after it. They were interested in seeing that it was taken care of. There was such a mutuality of interest between them that one might well look after it for all. And this is what Ward did. He took up the old note by executing a new one, to which, without authority, it is true, he put the names of Welch and Clark. But their names were on the old note, and they were immediately notified of the transaction. In their previous dealings when the old note was executed, Clark's name was, by authority, signed by Ward, and Welch was Ward's father-in-law. Had it been a bald, naked forgery, without any relation to their mutual interest and to the past dealings with the bank, they might possibly be excused for their remarkable silence when notified of the conditions; but, under the circumstances of this case, the law will hold their silence as conclusive proof of ratification. It is a maxim of the law that "he who remains silent when, in conscience, he ought to speak, will be debarred from speaking when, in conscience, he ought to remain silent." And as to forgery, Mr. Mechem, in his work on Agency (§ 116), says: "But whatever may be regarded as the true rule in the abstract, it is certain that the principal may, upon the discovery of the forgery, so conduct himself, as by permitting the paper to be taken upon the strength of his assertion of its genuineness, or by inducing the holder to change his position or intermit some remedial proceeding upon an assurance of its validity or a promise of protection, or, generally, by remaining silent as to its invalidity, when, in equity and good conscience, he ought to have spoken, as to estop himself from asserting that it is not binding upon him." The same authority (§§ 154, 155) says: "A principal, upon being informed of the unauthorized act of another in his behalf, has the right to elect whether he will ratify or repudiate the act. And this right of election belongs in the first instance to him alone, and, so long as the condition of all parties remains unchanged, he cannot be prevented from ratifying because the other party may for any reason prefer to treat the act as invalid. And even though at first he may disapprove, he may afterwards, if the condition of all parties remains unchanged, elect to give confirmation to the act. But where the rights and obligations of third persons may depend on his election, it is obvious that he is bound to act, or suffer the necessary consequences of his inaction, and that if, after knowledge, he remains entirely passive in regard to the transaction, it is but just, when the protection of third persons may require it, to presume that, what upon knowledge he has failed to repudiate, he has at least tacitly confirmed. If, therefore, he would escape responsibility for the act, he must give notice of his nonconurrence. The time within which this notice is to be given has not been settled with absolute harmony by the courts. Many cases hold that the principal is bound to act at once upon receiving knowledge, but the better rule, and the one supported by the majority of the authorities, is that, if the principal desires to repudiate the transaction, he must give notice thereof within a reasonable time after becoming fully informed, and that, if he does not so dissent, his silence will afford conclusive evidence of his approval. What shall be deemed to be a reasonable time depends . . . upon the situation of the parties and the facts and circumstances of the case." Mr. Reinhard, in his work on Agency (§ 121), says: "Implied Ratification—Intention. But the most common instances of ratification are those arising by implication from the conduct of the supposed principal. The ratification of an act is but a retroactive grant of authority, and this, as we have seen, may be effected in the same manner as the granting of authority prior to the act. Hence, as the delegation of authority may be proved by circumstances from which an inference may be drawn that such authority had in fact been bestowed, an inference may likewise be gathered from circumstances from which the ratification is commonly implied, or the acts and conduct of the principal with reference to the transaction performed for him. One who conducts himself in such a manner as to lead an ordinarily prudent man to believe, to his prejudice, that an act, though done without authority, has received the approval of him for whom it was performed, cannot, in justice and good conscience, be permitted to say that he really never assented to the act, or that he did not intend his words and conduct to have the effect of such assent. It is not material, therefore, what the actual intention of the ratifying party may have been, as to whether he would affirm the act or reject it. The old and familiar rule that a person must be held to have intended the natural and ordinary consequences of his act is fully applicable; and if his language, his silence, or his acts were such as would naturally cause another to believe that he had assented, and to act upon such belief, it will be conclusively presumed that his intention was consistent with his conduct, and he will be held responsible, the same as if he had manifested his assent by express ratification."

If it shall be said that the principle of ratification or estoppel does not apply in this case, because the bank may still proceed to sue on the old note, and therefore the making of the new note was not to its prejudice, the answer is that the making of the new note has changed the conditions to the injury of the bank. The time of payment was continued six months, and Ward has since died, leaving an insolvent estate. And reading between the lines of Welch's and Clark's testimony, and observing the strenuous efforts of their counsel to keep from the jury all knowledge of the old note, and of the intentions of his clients as to the payment of it, it is evident that the plaintiff is to be driven to the expense and annoyance of another suit. And, besides there went into the new note $100 or more that was not embraced in the old one, and which was an entirely new and independent consideration, for which the sureties on the old note are not bound; and, Ward having died insolvent, the plaintiff must necessarily look alone to the sureties on the new one for payment. If that sum cannot be collected from the sureties, it cannot be collected at all, and the bank will sustain a loss of the whole of it; and therefore, as to that part of the consideration, the case is brought fairly within the rule that "the acts claimed to effect a ratification must be of such a nature that the rights of the other party, who has relied upon them, will be prejudiced if a ratification has not taken place." Mechem, Agency, § 131. And: "It is a fundamental rule that, if the principal elects to ratify any part of the unauthorized act, he must ratify the whole of it. He cannot avail himself of it so far as it is advantageous to him, and repudiate its obligations; and this rule applies, not only when his ratification is express, but also when it is implied." Mechem, Agency, § 130. In this case the facts which, in law, constitute a ratification of the act of Ward in signing the names of the defendants Welch and Clark to the note being admitted by them, they are undisputed, and, "where the facts are undisputed, the question whether or not they amount to a ratification is one of law for the court." Mechem, Agency, § 135. In our opinion, it was the duty of the court below to have peremptorily charged the jury to find their verdict for the plaintiff for the full amount of the note, with interest.

Reversed and remanded, with directions to the court below to grant a new trial.

Raymond, Ch. J., and Townsend, J., concur.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

S. W. HAGER, State Auditor, Appt.,

v.

KENTUCKY CHILDREN'S HOME SOCIETY.

(.....Ky.....)

1. The appropriation of money for the care of destitute children is for a public purpose.
2. The appropriation of public money for use by a private corporation organized to care for destitute children is not prevented by a constitutional provision forbidding the giving or loaning of the state's credit to any corporation.
3. That a public charity is to be administered by a private corporation will not prevent the state from appropriating the public funds to it.
4. That a state has no power to remove the officers of a corporation organized to administer a public charity to which the state has made an appropriation will not invalidate the appropriation, where the state takes a bond conditioned upon the proper use of the funds, and requires a report of such use to the proper state officials.
5. A charter giving a corporation organized to secure homes for destitute children power to adopt by-laws in harmony with those of a national association does not show that an appropriation of public funds for its use may be diverted to objects in which the state has no interest, where the statute provides that the by-laws must not be in conflict with the laws of the state, and the appropriation act requires the money to be applied for the benefit of the children of the state.

6. An appropriation of public funds to be expended by a private corporation organized to provide homes for destitute children is not void as local or special legislation when it is for the benefit of all children of the class within the state generally.
7. An appropriation of public funds for a public charity to be administered by a private corporation does not create an indebtedness against the state if it may be discontinued, reduced, or changed at the pleasure of the legislature.

(December 7, 1904.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Franklin County in favor of plaintiff in a proceeding brought to compel the defendant to approve an appropriation which had been made by the legislature in plaintiff's favor. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. N. B. Hays, Attorney General, and Loraine Mix for appellant.

Messrs. Hazelrigg, Chenault, & Hazelrigg, with Mr. W. S. Pryor, for appellee:

The support of paupers, and the giving assistance to those who, by reason of age, infirmity, or disability, are likely to become such, are, by the practice and common consent of civilized countries, a public purpose.

1 Cooley, Taxn. 3d ed. 204.

NOTE.—As to what are public purposes generally, for which money may be appropriated or raised by taxation, see note to Daggett v. Colgan, 14 L. R. A. 474.

As to appropriation for benefit of sufferers from flood, see Patty v. Colgan, 18 L. R. A. 744.

As to appropriation to pay debt incurred by city for benefit of sufferers from cyclone, see State ex rel. New Richmond v. Davidson, 58 L. R. A. 739.

67 L. R. A.

If for a public purpose, and confined to that alone, the fund may be controlled as well by a private corporation as by those directly under the control of the lawmaking power.

Kentucky Female Orphan School v. Louisville, 100 Ky. 470, 40 L. R. A. 119, 36 S. W. 921; Zable v. Louisville Baptist Orphans' Home, 92 Ky. 89, 13 L. R. A. 668, 17 S. W. 212; Norman v. Kentucky Bd. of Managers, 93 Ky. 537, 18 L. R. A. 556, 20 S. W. 901; Shepherd's Fold of Protestant Church v. New York, 96 N. Y. 138; Wisconsin Industrial School v. Clark County, 103 Wis. 661, 79 N. W. 422.

O'Rear, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This appeal involves the constitutionality of the act of general assembly approved February 20, 1904 (Acts 1904, p. 33, chap. 7), appropriating $15,000 annually to the Kentucky Children's Home Society, a private corporation organized under the laws of this state for purely charitable purposes. The articles of incorporation of the society show that it is conducted solely to seek out destitute children and provide for them homes where they will be under the supervision of the institution during their dependent minority. The constitutionality of the act is assailed on several grounds, which will be taken up in order.

That the care of the indigent poor is a purely public charity is not really questioned by the attorney general. Christ commended it as a public privilege, whilst every civilized people upon the earth now regard it as a public duty. That great evasive question propounded in the adjustment of the first social relation of men, "Am I my brother's keeper?" is answered emphatically in the affirmative upon the consciences of this era of civilization, when speaking of the destitute and helpless. In this state, from its earliest history, it has been treated, as it had been in Virginia and England before us, as a public charge imposed as a matter of rightful exercise of governmental power upon the state, or such subdivisions of it as legislation might provide. It was borne by taxation, in one form or another, applied to such subjects and under such conditions as addressed themselves to the lawmaking branch as being the most expedient. Whatever errors may have been committed so far in its exercise, it is doubted if any has occurred on the side of its having been more liberal than just. The care of the insane, the special education of the deaf and dumb, the blind, and of the feeble minded, are particular applications of this general doctrine. They are all well provided for by the statute laws of this state, and have been for many years. Separate institutions, especially fitted and officered for the appropriate service in each are established and maintained at the public expense by taxation levied upon all the taxable property in the state. The care of the indigent poor generally is given over to the counties (Ky. Stat. 1903, § 3933) and cities of the commonwealth. Ky. Stat. 1903, §§ 3058, 3290, 3490. Instead of this being an exclusive delegation by the state of this governmental function, it is its exercise by the state in the limited manner indicated by the several statutes, by the use of local government subdivisions. But the state is not precluded by these several provisions from exercising some part of the same power in some other proper way. It would scarcely be argued that, because legislation had been adopted making it the duty of the counties of the state to provide for their pauper citizens, the state itself could not take on any part of that burden.

The Constitution provides that taxes shall be levied for public purposes only, and forbids the donation or loaning by the state of its credit to any individual or corporation. Const. §§ 171-177. That the purpose of the appropriation in this case is a public one is too clear, in our opinion, to require more extended argument. Obviously appropriations of money out of the treasury must be measured by the same test as that by which it is raised by taxation and put into the treasury. If taxes could not be imposed for a purpose, money already in the treasury could not be appropriated to that purpose.

The purpose being a public one, for which the state might have levied a tax and applied it, the question immediately recurs, Can the state apply it otherwise than through its own officers? At this point § 177 of the Constitution is invoked by the attorney general. That section reads: "The credit of the commonwealth shall not be given, pledged, or loaned to any individual, company, corporation, or association, municipality, or political subdivision of the state; nor shall the commonwealth become an owner or stockholder in, nor make donation to, any company, association, or corporation; nor shall the commonwealth construct a railroad or other highway." There was a time when the state was allowed to subscribe, and did subscribe, to the capital stock of various quasi-public improvement companies, and loaned or gave its credit to such. It was to prevent a repetition of that practice by the state that the section was enacted. It was to keep the state out of partnership enterprises, or even the doing solely on its own behalf of that class of public works,—the building of highways and railroads. The state cannot now loan or give its credit to any person or corporation for any purpose, public or otherwise. But this does not mean at all that the state cannot buy and pay for what it needs to enable it to discharge its governmental duties. Nor does it mean that the state cannot employ the services of a person or corporation to do a lawful act which it has the right to have done, and to pay for it. For example, the state may provide for the mobilization of the militia at a given point. It may hire a railroad corporation to transport them, and some other person to provision them, and may pay for these services. This is in no sense donating or lending the state's credit to the railroad company or to the caterer. Yet the state is not bound to avail itself of their services, but it may do it. If it does the transaction in no wise involves § 177 of the Constitution, though it does § 171; i. e., the purpose for which the state's money is paid out must be a public purpose. That is the only inquiry, other than that, Has the legislature enacted the statute allowing the thing to be done? When the legislature is authorized to do a thing generally, and no particular method is prescribed, it may pursue its own course in the means adapted to the accomplishment of the purpose. For example, it is admittedly a public purpose for the state to support at the public expense its pauper lunatics and idiots. It might have kept them all in its own institutions. It might have compelled the counties to keep one class, as it did for a while, or to keep either class or both. But it employs its own institutions in the care of the former, and hires individuals at so much per year for each pauper idiot kept, to care for the latter. Cooley, in his work on Taxation (2d ed.), p. 125, lays it down that the state, in its care for such dependent objects, might not only do it by an establishment of its own institutions for the purpose, "but," he says, "private institutions might undoubtedly be aided with public funds, in consideration of services to be rendered to the public, and expenses to be incurred by them in assisting and relieving the same necessitous and dependent classes."

In 1899 a terrific cyclone struck the city of New Richmond, Wisconsin, devastating its homes and business houses, killing outright a great many people, seriously injuring a great many others, killing large numbers of animals, and causing widespread disaster, want, and distress. The conditions were such that, but for immediate relief beyond the reduced powers of the city and its inhabitants to meet, disease and pestilence, in addition to the other woes occasioned by the storm, would in every probability have followed. The city incurred a heavy debt to meet the critical emergency,—one, in view of the severe visitation upon it, it could ill afford to bear alone. The state legislature voted an appropriation to defray and thus carry in part this burden. Its payment was resisted on the ground that the state had not the right to tax all its inhabitants for the benefit of those of New Richmond alone. The supreme court of Wisconsin upheld the appropriation (State ex rel. New Richmond v. Davidson, 114 Wis. 563, 58 L. R. A. 739, 88 N. W. 596, 90 N. W. 1067, on the ground that it was for a public purpose. The court said: "The state at large was concerned in the objects of the appropriation in question, and that, if the legislature had been in session June 12, 1899, it might legitimately have appropriated the amount mentioned for the object in question. This being so, it follows that the legislature had the power to pass the act in question to reimburse the city for such expenditures." The court admitted that, unless the purpose was a public one, there was no power under the Constitution to appropriate the state's money to do it, no matter how laudable it may have been.

The legislature of Missouri appropriated $50,000 to the St. Louis Insane Asylum, an institution owned and conducted by the city of St. Louis alone; the appropriation being "for the support of the indigent insane in the insane asylum in the city of St. Louis, who belong to the state outside of the city of St. Louis." The payment of the appropriation was resisted on the grounds that it was not for a public purpose; that the state had otherwise provided for the care of its indigent insane; that the Constitution of Missouri expressly prohibited such appropriations in the following provision: "The general assembly shall have no power to make any grant, or to authorize the making of any grant, of public money or thing of value to any individual, association of individuals, municipal or other corporation whatsoever." [Mo. Const. art. 4, § 46]. The supreme court of Missouri upheld the appropriation. State ex rel. St. Louis v. Seibert, 123 Mo. 424, 24 S. W. 750, 27 S. W. 624. The court reasoned thus, in part: "The insane of the state being proper objects of charity, some of the insane of the state outside the city of St. Louis being supported by the St. Louis Insane Asylum, the Constitution authorizing an appropriation for their support, unless prohibited expressly or by reasonable implication, the question is whether there is such prohibition. The words of the Constitution do not contain a prohibition." The language of the provision first quoted is then set out; the court continuing: "The appropriation is for the 'indigent insane of the state outside the city of St. Louis,' and not for the institution. There is no prohibition here unless the state has no power to dispense its public charity through the agency of a private institution. There is no constitutional inhibition against it doing so. . . . But a private corporation or individual may be the recipient of the funds of taxation, provided that the use be a public one." "We can see no reason why the insane of the state," concludes the court, "not belonging to the city of St. Louis, who are found in the city, may not be cared for and supported in its insane asylum at the public expense, if it can be as well and economically done."

In the case of the Shepherd's Fold of Protestant Church v. New York, 96 N. Y. 137, the object of the corporation was to receive, adopt, keep, support, and educate orphan or friendless children, and the commissioners of charities and corrections were authorized to transfer eligible orphans and friendless children to it. In consideration of the corporation taking care of these children, an appropriation of $5,000 annually was made for the benefit of the corporation. A provision of the Constitution of the state prohibited the giving or loaning of the money of the state to or in aid of any association or private undertaking, and also prohibited the counties and cities "from giving their moneys in aid of any individual, association, or corporation for the support of their poor." The court held that caring for the poor of the city through the instrumentality of private corporations was not prohibited, and the legislature had power to authorize the city to provide for the burden assumed by plaintiff and cast upon it by the act of 1868, by payment of a gross sum. The fact that the corporation might also receive subjects for which the city would in no event be liable was held not to be material, as the city was only paying for what it got.

In Norman v. Kentucky Bd. of Managers, 93 Ky. 537, 18 L. R. A. 556, 20 S. W. 901, this court construed the two sections of the Constitutions now involved,— §§ 171 and 177. In that case an appropriation had been made by the legislature to the appellee board, a corporation, to enable it to make an exhibit of the resources of our state at the World's Columbian Exposition at Chicago. The court held the purpose to be a public one, and that the appropriation was not a loaning of the credit of the state. It was said: "The commissioners selected to expend the money are merely the state's agents to do so, and provide the exhibit for the benefit of its people. The legislature had the power to provide the means for such a purpose." A similar construction of almost identical constitutional provisions was had in Daggett v. Colgan, 92 Cal. 53, 14 L. R. A. 474, 27 Am. St. Rep. 95, 28 Pac. 51, and in Minneapolis v. Janney, 86 Minn. 111, 90 N. W. 313, both Citing and Following Norman v. Kentucky Bd. of Managers, 93 Ky. 537, 18 L. R. A. 556, 20 S. W. 901.

In House of Reform v. Lexington, 112 Ky. 171, 65 S. W. 350, there was involved the power of a city of the second class to appropriate $5,000 to the houses of reform, state penal institutions for the correction of incorrigible youth. It was held that the legislature had conferred upon the municipality the power to provide itself with houses of reform for the keeping of its juvenile criminals, and that having the power to do that, it might do less by procuring the state to locate its reform houses so that the city could avail itself of the peculiar advantages afforded by their proximity for caring for the former's youthful criminals, the city paying what was deemed a proper equivalent for that service. Section 179 of the Constitution makes the same restrictions against a municipality's donating its money or loaning its credit that § 177 does concerning the state. In considering whether that was a loaning of its credit or donation of its property, the court said: "To hold that a branch of government, such as a county or city, could not exercise a governmental function required of it by the law by employing the service to be done,—such as the care of the smallpox patients in a hospital owned by a corporation other than the city,—or that it might not buy a supply of water for the public use from a corporation without the city having the means of furnishing it to the city, would be to place a narrow and restricted construction upon the section, not warranted by the evils existing at the time of its adoption, and which were manifestly sought to be cured by the convention, as well as to materially hamper municipal subdivisions of state in the exercise of necessary powers and discretion in government."

These authorities clearly settle that the vital point in all such appropriations is whether the purpose is public; and that, if it is, it does not matter whether the agency through which it is dispensed is public or is not; that the appropriation is not made for the agency, but for the object which it serves; the test is in the end, not in the means. The limitation put upon the state government by the people is as to what things it may collect taxes from them for, to which it may apply their property through taxation; not upon the means by which or through which it will do it. It may well and wisely be left to the legislature to say how it will dispense the state's charities. Varying conditions, improved methods of treatment, changing circumstances affecting the ability of the people to provide for such charges, all bear upon the legislative discretion, and doubtless find a proper application in the measures finally adopted by that body. Yet back of all that must exist the power to do the thing in question,—the power to make the provision. It is this power alone that the courts can deal with, and then only to the extent of determining whether it exists. Whether it is exercised, and how exercised, are manifestly matters of exclusive legislative discretion. What is this Kentucky Children's Home Society? A number of people in this state have organized a corporation of that name. It has no capital. It can make no profit to its stockholders or officers, and can declare no dividends. It has been already stated that it seeks out helpless, homeless children, cares for them, and places them in homes selected by the institution, and where the little ones may be adopted into suitable families. The last feature is the dominant and peculiar one of the society. There are many foundling asylums where dependent orphans of a limited class are cared for and educated for lives of usefulness by those peculiarly interested in them. The poorhouses of the state afford some sort of refuge to the utterly destitute, where the indigent, improvident, and frequently worthless are kept. Children reared amid such conditions of inertness and squalor have a poor chance, indeed, in life. This society has conceived a plan for taking these children who have this or no other chance, who have no claims upon other institutions maintained by certain voluntary organizations, such as lodges and churches, and to put them into homes that have no children. The world has had recently a most striking example of the probable influence of a home life upon a child taken from a public almshouse in Stanley, who gave the better part of a continent to the world, and, what is more, brought the possibilities of the world to a continent. How much of it he owed to the influences of the adopted home where his attainments were gained, and where his character was certainly very largely influenced, if not formed, it may be impossible to say. Judge Brewer, when a member of the Kansas supreme court, in passing upon an application for a writ of habeas corpus (Re Bullen, 28 Kan. 781), where it was sought to take a young orphan girl from a charitable institution, and to give her to her grandparent, in an opinion replete with wisdom and goodness had this to say: "Two principal reasons control in my mind: First, her life here would be a life in an institution; there, a life in a home. I need not stop to recount the numberless blessings which home gives to a child, especially a female child. The common judgment of all voices the truth that the best development of a young life is within the sacred precincts of a home. No institution, however cultured and refined its instructors, however pure its life, however faithful and devoted all its officers and teachers to the care, nurture, and education of the many children within its walls, will give that sweet, gentle, and attractive development to a young girl that comes from the personal and affectionate training of a home. There is something of the same difference as between hotel life and home life. There is more publicity to the one; more privacy to the other. There is something official, as it were, in one, and personal in the other." There can be no doubt that foundling institutions may be, and generally are, large blessings. But the belief voiced by the eminent judge quoted from in the advantages of home life as a beneficial influence in the formation of the most useful and independent characters may have had a place in the legislative mind. To accomplish such work, persons whose hearts are in it for simple charity's sake, not for the salary of a public office, are the best suited for it. May not the legislature avail itself of the offer and services of such persons in doing what it unquestionably has the right to do by state officers,—to care for the helpless and destitute children of the state?

But it is argued that, as the state does not appoint these officers, and cannot remove them for misfeasance or malfeasance, and cannot, therefore, control the application of the money appropriated, it amounts, after all, to the giving of that much money to the society. Without admitting the premise assumed, we turn to the investigation of the question whether the state has made such an unconditional appropriation. The proviso attached to the appropriation reads as follows: "Provided, no part of said appropriation shall be paid until there has been executed on the part of said society, a bond to the commonwealth of Kentucky, with good and sufficient security, stipulating and providing that all of said sums of money so appropriated shall be applied to the purposes of the charter of said society,—that is, to the care, support, and maintenance of homeless and destitute children in this commonwealth, and providing homes for same; and a failure to do so to be a forfeiture thereof. Said bond to be approved by the auditor of public accounts, and kept as a record in his office. If any part of said appropriation be not so applied then all of such part thereof as may be unexpended shall be returned to and covered into the state treasury. Said society shall, by its proper officers, make an annual verified statement and settlement with the auditor of public accounts, showing when, where, and how said funds or appropriations have been applied and disbursed." From the foregoing it is seen that the state has taken the precaution to insure that every dollar of its appropriation is expended directly for the benefit of homeless and destitute children of this commonwealth. The requiring of the report under oath of the officials of the home to the auditor of public accounts reserves to the state the power of enforcing the proper application of its appropriation,—the power of visitation, a power which in this country is by the government itself, through the medium of courts of justice. 2 Kent, Com. 240. The language of the act also disposes of the argument that the money of the state will be applied to objects of charity having no direct claim upon the state, a fear born of a statement in appellee's charter to this effect: "This corporation may adopt by-laws not inconsistent with the laws of Kentucky and these articles of incorporation, and in harmony with the constitution and by-laws of the Children's Home Society (National)." We read this provision to mean that the general scope and plan of operation by appellee within its chosen field. Kentucky, is to be formulated after a plan for placing homeless children in childless homes in use in a National Children's Home Society, not that the children of the National Home Society can have any part of Kentucky's provision for her own destitute children. The very language of the act precludes the imagined danger, because it says the by-laws must not be in conflict with the laws of Kentucky. This act restricts the appropriation made by it to the use of Kentucky children, and compels all money not so used to be covered into the state treasury. Besides, Ky. Stat. 1903, § 331c. makes it unlawful for any person to bring into this commonwealth destitute children, except they be his own, or nearly related to him, and with the intention of taking them into his own family. The act is not open to the objection that it is local or special legislation, prohibited by the Constitution. § 59. It is an act for the benefit of the homeless destitute children of this commonwealth generally. It selects one agency to apply the money so appropriated, which, from the nature of the case, calls for an act of appropriation applicable to it alone. This is allowed by subsec. 29 of § 59. Const. All appropriations must be made by the legislature. Const. §§ 230 and 58. Therefore an act of this character was the appropriate method of making this appropriation. Nor does this appropriation create an indebtedness against the commonwealth. It may be discontinued, reduced, or changed at the pleasure of the legislature, which could not be done if it were a debt. It is a gratuity, just as the present provision for the support of the insane and idiots is, which may be altered both as to the amount and manner of application at the pleasure of the lawmaking body.

We find nothing in the act violative of the Constitution. Its subject is one wholly within the sound discretion of the legislature. That its exercise may be abused is true of this act, as well as of many other matters committed by the Constitution to that branch of government. But even its abuse is not a matter for the courts to inquire into. The people alone can control that. They have reserved to themselves that power over their representatives in matters of legislation.

The judgment of the Circuit Court having been in conformity to these views, it is affirmed.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

George BEIDLER et al., Appts.,
v.
SANITARY DISTRICT OF CHICAGO.

(211 Ill. 628.)

1. The opening of canals for dockage

NOTE.—Right to improve navigability of stream.

I. Extent and limits of the right, 820.

II. Right as between state and Federal governments, 824.

III. Character of improvement, 827.

IV. Improvement companies, 828.

V. Booming and sorting logs, 839.

67 L. R. A.

purposes, leading out of a navigable river, and maintaining them for a period of twenty years, selling lots abutting upon them, establish a prescriptive right to use the water of the river to fill them; so that the level of the water in the river cannot be drawn down for purposes of public drainage in such a manner as to impair the value of

VI. Interference with private rights, 841.

VII. Exercise of power of eminent domain, 847.

VIII. Public rights in improvement, 848.

IX. Use of surplus water, 848.

X. Other matters, 849.

I. Extent and limits of the right.

Streams or bodies of water which are capable such canals for dockage purposes without making compensation, under a Constitution requiring compensation to be made in case private property is taken or damaged for public purposes.

2. The right of the public to improve navigation without liability for consequential injuries to riparian rights does not include the right to take the water of a navigable stream to supply an artificial channel or canal.
3. A public corporation organized to provide a drainage system cannot contest its liability to make compensation for injuries done to riparian owners by taking water from a navigable stream to supply its ditch, upon the ground that incidentally it has created a navigable channel, and that the public is not liable for injuries to riparian owners in consequence of the improvement of navigation.
4. Lowering the water of a navigable of useful navigation are public highways which may be used by the public to the extent of their capacity. See note to Willow River Club v. Wade (Wis.) 42 L. R. A. 305. Being highways, their condition and navigability are as much within the jurisdiction of the public as highways on land. Within their original limits the public may do anything which will facilitate the use of the water. The channel may be dredged and obstructions removed, or the depth of water increased by dams. The limit to this right is reached when it conflicts with the rights of the riparian owner. From the character of the property and the nature of the operations necessary to improve the navigation, there is much more liability to infringe upon the rights of the abutting owner than there is in the improvement of highways on land. Like the abutter on a land highway, the owner of land adjoining a water highway has a valuable advantage in his adjacency to it, and this advantage has been held to be property. See note to State ex rel. Denny v. Bridges (Wash.) 40 L. R. A. 593. Under constitutions protecting the right of property, this right of adjacency cannot be wholly destroyed by the removal of the channel of the stream to another locality. See note to Hutton v. Webb (N. C.) 59 L. R. A. 33. But it has been a serious question how far this right may be interfered with by the construction of levees or the changing of the water in the channel without infringing the rights of the riparian owner. Where the Constitution requires the payment of damages for property taken or injured for public benefit, it would seem that no material interference with the riparian owner's right of access to the navigable portion of the stream could be effected without paying him for the injury. But where the Constitution merely provides for the payment of damages for property taken, there is much doubt as to whether or not the riparian owner is entitled to compensation. As a matter of strict justice, it cannot be questioned that if the public, for its advantage or benefit, deprive an individual of valuable rights, the public should pay for them. But, on the other hand, the public is never swift to render to the individual more than he is by strict law entitled to, and if he has not provided, through the Constitution or legislative enactments, for compensation for a particular injury, it may safely be assumed that he has agreed to donate his individual loss for the public good. The cases decided under the Federal Constitution, and those from Pennsylvania, have, perhaps, gone farther in the direction of denying a recovery to the individual than those from other jurisdictions. See note to State ex rel. Denny v. Bridges (Wash.) 40 L. R. A. 593. In addition to the danger of interfering with the access of the riparian owner to the navigable part of the stream, is that of injuring his land by raising the height of the water so as to flood his land or render it wet and untillable by lack of drainage, or of changing the direction of the current so that it undermines or washes away portions of the embankment. The flooding of the land, if permanent, is, of course, an injury for which compensation must be made. See note to Avery v. Vermont Electric Co. (Vt.) 59 L. R. A. 817. Where, however, injury is merely the interference with drainage, or the changing of the current, there, again, arises the question whether this is a taking or destruction of property within the protection of the various constitutions. There is an obvious tendency to treat these injuries as merely consequential, and the courts are very much inclined to hold that no compensation need be made for merely consequential injuries.

5. Where riparian property has been injured by lowering the level of the water so as to interfere with access between the water and land, the measure of damages is the difference in value of the property before and after the injury was done, and not the cost of charges made to avoid the result of the change in conditions.
6. A defect in a declaration in claiming damages by an incorrect measure cannot be tested by a general demurrer.

(October 24, 1904.)

dividual loss for the public good. The cases decided under the Federal Constitution, and those from Pennsylvania, have, perhaps, gone farther in the direction of denying a recovery to the individual than those from other jurisdictions. See note to State ex rel. Denny v. Bridges (Wash.) 40 L. R. A. 593. In addition to the danger of interfering with the access of the riparian owner to the navigable part of the stream, is that of injuring his land by raising the height of the water so as to flood his land or render it wet and untillable by lack of drainage, or of changing the direction of the current so that it undermines or washes away portions of the embankment. The flooding of the land, if permanent, is, of course, an injury for which compensation must be made. See note to Avery v. Vermont Electric Co. (Vt.) 59 L. R. A. 817. Where, however, injury is merely the interference with drainage, or the changing of the current, there, again, arises the question whether this is a taking or destruction of property within the protection of the various constitutions. There is an obvious tendency to treat these injuries as merely consequential, and the courts are very much inclined to hold that no compensation need be made for merely consequential injuries.

Of course the state has a right to devote its own property to such improvements, so that a river improvement company which, by its charter, is given authority to build and maintain levees and embankments along the shores of a river, by implication has the right to use any lands owned by the state along the shores of the river; and a subsequent purchaser from the state would take the lands subject to the company's right. Black River Improv. Co. v. La Crosse Boom & Transp. Co. 54 Wis. 859, 41 Am. Rep. 66, 11 N. W. 443.

A statute providing for improving the channel of a stream, and making an appropriation of state swamp lands to aid the work, is not in conflict with that provision of the Michigan Constitution which forbids the state from engaging or being interested in a work of internal improvement. Sparrow v. State Land Office, 56 Mich. 567, 23 N. W. 315.

But an act authorizing the payment of the expense of improving a river over and above the value of swamp lands granted in aid of the work, and permitting the power of taxation to be exercised for that purpose, violates a consti-

APPEAL by plaintiffs from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Cook County sustaining a demurrer to the complaint in an action brought to recover damages for alleged interference with plaintiffs' riparian rights. Reversed.

Statement by Scott, J.:

This suit was brought in the circuit court of Cook county by George Beidler and others, who are owners as tenants in common of the lots hereinafter mentioned, against the Sanitary District of Chicago, to recover as damages the amount expended by plaintiffs in deepening or lowering the canals hereinafter referred to, and in repairing certain docks fronting on said canals and the south branch of the Chicago river, and for tutional provision forbidding the state from participating in works of internal improvement except by grants of land or other property. Wilcox v. Paddock, 65 Mich. 23, 31 N. W. 609.

The state of Michigan is forbidden by its Constitution from making any public works at its own expense; but the legislature may authorize corporations to improve waters that need improvement, and charge tolls for the use of the facilities provided. Manistee River Improv. Co. v. Sands, 53 Mich. 593, 19 N. W. 199.

An act providing for the levying of tolls on the commerce of a specified river in sufficient amount to pay within five years for improvements to its navigability is in conflict with a provision forbidding the state from carrying on any work of internal improvement except by the expenditure of grants made to the state therefor, nor is it material that the original act authorizing the improvement directed payment to be made from the internal improvement fund. Ryerson v. Utley, 16 Mich. 269.

The state of Texas has appropriated and set apart a special fund for the improvement of its navigable streams. Selman v. Wolfe, 27 Tex. 68.

The trustees of the internal improvement fund will be enjoined, at the instance of a bondholder, from appropriating it to clearing out a river channel, although acting under a subsequent act of the legislature, where the improvement act specifically appropriated it to the payment of interest on the bonds, but not to clearing the channel. Internal Improv. Fund v. Bailey, 10 Fla. 112, 81 Am. Dec. 194.

An act of the legislature providing for the appropriation by certain townships along a river of a portion of the state tax therein collected for the aid of such townships in improving the navigation of such river, and authorizing the tax collector to pay the same to the treasurer of a company incorporated for the purpose of such improvement, is unconstitutional and void as being in conflict with those provisions of the state Constitution prohibiting the commutation of state taxes of any taxing district therein or the inhabitants thereof, and requiring all taxes levied for state purposes to be paid into the state treasury. People v. Lippincott, 65 Ill. 548.

An appropriation by the legislature for the improvement of the navigation of a particular river of no importance, the sole purpose of permanent injury to said lots, the nature of which is not specified. The form of the action was trespass on the case. A declaration was filed, setting up the following facts as a cause of action:

More than twenty years prior to January 17, 1900, the South Branch Dock Company, a corporation, was the owner of a large tract of land, divided into lots, in Green's South Branch Addition to the city of Chicago. Some of these lots fronted on the south branch of the Chicago river, which is and was a natural navigable water course opening into Lake Michigan, but a large majority of them lay north of the lots which fronted on the river. The dock company had excavated and constructed a number of large canals through the property so owned by which is to save people living along its banks the expense of making a carry around a fall in it, is for a local purpose, within the meaning of a constitutional provision requiring such acts to have a two-thirds majority of the legislature to pass them. People ex rel. Adsit v. Allen, 42 N. Y. 378, Reversing 1 Lans. 248.

The courts will not take judicial notice of the character of the Bouquet river in the state of New York, its name not being found upon the general maps of the state, nor a description of it found in the general history of the country, nor its character in any way defined by any public statute, and it not being of such notoriety as to be known generally to the people of the state. People ex rel. Adsit v. Allen, 42 N. Y. 378.

All rights of the public may be required to give way to the improvement, in the discretion of the legislature.

The legislature may, under its power over the highways, authorize the deepening of the channel of a navigable stream to such an extent as to destroy the fords over the stream. Zimmerman v. Union Canal Co. 1 Watts & S. 346.

The state has such a title to the waters of a floatable stream that it can, as against the public desiring to use the stream, authorize their control by an improvement company, which shall use all the water within the channel so as best to float all the logs offered for transportation on the stream. Mullen v. Penobscot Log-Driving Co. 90 Me. 567, 38 Atl. 557.

A person may, by the King's license, raise locks upon a navigable river flowing through his land for the purpose of improving its navigation, and impose a toll upon vessels using the same. Juxon v. Thornhill, Cro. Car. 132.

But commissioners of sewers have no power to improve the navigability of a river by erecting locks, or other artificial methods. Queen v. Westham, 10 Mod. 159.

A state has the right to make improvements in its navigable waters for the more safe, convenient, and useful enjoyment of the common right of navigation in them. Moor v. Veazie, 32 Me. 343, 52 Am. Dec. 655.

The commonwealth has absolute power over the navigable streams for their improvement as great highways for the people. McKeen v. Delaware Div. Canal Co. 49 Pa. 424.

If, in the opinion of a state, greater benefit would result to her commerce by the improvement of a river than by leaving it in its nat-them, extending north from said river several hundred feet and connected therewith, and then so subdivided their property that each lot not fronting on the waters of the river would front on one of the canals. The canals opened into the river, which, in turn, emptied into Lake Michigan. The river supplied them with sufficient water to keep their depth at about 17 feet at all times. This was their only source of water supply. They varied in length, the longest extending back from the river 2,560 feet, and were wide enough to admit large barges, steamboats, ships, and other vessels, and such vessels passed to and from points within each of said canals into Lake Michigan by means of said canals and river, and conveyed lumber, goods, and merchandise to and from such points by means thereof. Plaintiffs' premises, fronting on the canals and on the river, contained valuable docks which were used in connection therewith for loading and unloading said vessels.

After constructing this system of canals, the dock company sold 66 of the lots belonging to it to Jacob Beidler, and at the latter's death the lots passed to plaintiffs by descent. Seven of these lots front on said south branch of the Chicago river. Each of the remaining lots fronts on one or another of the canals. The lots are leased to tenants, who use them for lumber yards and for dock purposes, under leases which provide that the lessors shall at all times keep a sufficient amount of water in said canals to furnish means of access for vessels to said premises.

ural state, it may authorize it, although thereby increased inconvenience and expense may result to the business of individuals. Huse v. Glover, 119 U. S. 543, 30 L. ed. 487, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 313.

The improvement of the navigation of a public river is a public purpose in contemplation of the law pertaining to eminent domain. Weaver v. Mississippi & R. River Boom Co. 28 Minn. 534, 11 N. W. 114.

The legislature is the exclusive judge of the propriety of an expenditure for the improvement of the canals or navigable rivers of the state. Waterloo Woolen Mfg. Co. v. Shanahan, 128 N. Y. 345, 14 L. R. A. 481, 28 N. E. 358.

If the stream is in fact floatable, the state may, for the purpose of developing the use of it, authorize dams and booms where their use will do more good than harm. Pound v. Turck, 95 U. S. 459, 24 L. ed. 525.

The state may grant to a log-driving company the right to the use of the water of a stream so that individuals on it will not be permitted to use any water of the stream for the driving of their own logs which will be needed by the company for driving the logs under its charge. Mullen v. Penobscot Log-Driving Co. 90 Me. 555, 38 Atl. 557.

The legislature may improve, at its discretion, the navigable rivers of the state, and authorize the construction of any works on them which shall not materially obstruct their navigability, such as the erection of a dam equipped with a lock or otherwise for the passage of boats. Spooner v. McConnell, 1 McLean, 337, Fed. Cas. No. 13,245.

A constitutional provision making navigable waters leading into the Mississippi common highways, forever free, applies only to the use thereof in their natural state, and does not prevent the legislature from authorizing the improvement of the navigation of parts of a river partially navigable, and the charging of tolls for the use of such improvement. Wisconsin River Improv. Co. v. Manson, 43 Wis. 255, 28 Am. Rep. 542.

The state possesses the power to authorize the formation of corporations for the purpose of improving by artificial means the navigability of rivers and streams within its borders, rendering them more useful and beneficial to the public, and to allow such companies compensation therefor by way of tolls or otherwise. East 67 L. R. A.

Hogquam Boom & Logging Co. v. Neeson, 20 Wash. 142, 54 Pac. 1001.

The legislature may authorize a corporation to improve the navigation of a public stream, and to collect toll for use of the improvement; and such a grant is primarily for public, and not for private, benefit. Bennett's Branch Improv. Co.'s Appeal, 65 Pac. 242; Tewksbury v. Schulenberg, 41 Wis. 584.

The state board of harbor commissioners has power to authorize a private individual to dig a new channel for the benefit of navigation, where the present one is shallow, narrow, and very crooked. Lane v. New Haven Harbor, 70 Conn. 685, 40 Atl. 1058.

Agents of the state having in charge the improvement of a navigable river do not find their power exhausted when a mistake has been made in the engineering or construction of dams or other works. McKeen v. Delaware Div. Canal Co. 49 Pa. 424.

The state, in granting lands upon the border of a tidal river, did not divest itself of the right of improving the navigation of the river; and it will not be liable for injuries to the adjoining property thereby caused. Hollister v. Union Co. 9 Conn. 436, 25 Am. Dec. 36.

So long as the riparian owner is not thereby deprived of his access to and use of a public river as a highway, the right of the commonwealth to make any erections in the river for its improvement as a highway is undoubted and unlimited. Tuncum Fishing Co. v. Carter, 61 Pa. 21, 100 Am. Dec. 597.

As against the unexercised right to wharf out, the state has the right to improve navigation by straightening old channels or digging new ones. Lane v. New Haven Harbor, 70 Conn. 685, 40 Atl. 1085; Lane v. Smith, 71 Conn. 65, 41 Atl. 18.

Certificates for work done on an improvement of the navigation of certain rivers, acknowledging that the indorser is entitled to receive a specified sum with annual interest at a specified rate, that the same are payable at a certain time and place, and that for the redemption thereof moneys received from sales of land granted by the United States in aid of the improvement of such rivers and the revenues of such improvement are pledged and appropriated,—do not constitute or create a debt not authorized by a constitutional provision that the state shall contract no debt for works of internal improvement, but that whenever grants

The lots fronting on the river extend to the middle thereof, and the ones fronting on the canals extend to the middle of such canals.

The defendant drainage district, which is a public corporation, on January 17, 1900, connected its drainage channel, constructed for sanitary purposes, with said branch of the Chicago river, and large quantities of water have ever since flowed from said river into said channel, which diminished the supply of water in the river and in each of the canals, lowering the water 6 feet, which made the canals too shallow for the large vessels to enter the canals or reach the premises of the plaintiffs which fronted on the canals. Plaintiffs were therefore compelled to excavate and deepen the canals to the extent that the water had been lowered therein which they did at a cost of $10,000. The docks along the canals and along the river were also rendered useless by reason of the water being lowered therein by the drainage channel, and plaintiffs repaired them at a cost of $15,000.

The defendant filed a general demurrer to the declaration, the demurrer was sustained, and judgment entered in favor of the defendant. Plaintiffs appealed to this court, claiming that there has been a taking of property without compensation, within the meaning of § 13 of article 2 of the Constitution of this state; that §§ 8 and 19 of the drainage act of May 29, 1889 (Starr & C. Anno. Stat. 1896, chap. 42, §§ 8, 19), under which appellate was created, gives them a right of action; and that they are entitled to recover of land or other property are made to a state, specially dedicated to works of internal improvement, the state may carry on such works and devote thereto the avails of such grants, and may pledge and appropriate the revenues derived from such works in aid of their completion; but merely evidence a debt already existing for work done on such an improvement to which the contractors are entitled, where there is no money to pay them, but there are lands yet unsold and revenues to be derived from the works. State ex rel. Resley v. Farwell, 4 Chand. (Wis.) 106.

II. Right as between state and Federal governments.

Under the provisions of the Federal Constitution giving Congress the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, and the power to regulate commerce, the power to improve waters which are subject to interstate commerce rests with Congress if it chooses to act; but, until it acts, the states may make such improvements as will not interfere with such commerce.

There is nothing in the ordinance of 1787 for the government of the northwest territory which prohibits a state formed therefrom from improving the navigation of its rivers. La Plaisance Bay Harbor Co. v. Monroe, Walk. Ch. (Mich.) 155.

The act of Congress of 1817, prescribing the free navigation of the Mississippi river and the navigable waters flowing into it, did not inhibit the power, inseparable from every sovereign or efficient government, to devise and execute measures for the improvement of the state, although such measures might induce or render necessary changes in the channel or courses of rivers within the interior of the state, or might be productive of a change in the valuation of private property. Withers v. Buckley, 20 How. 84, 15 L. ed. 816.

The provisions of the ordinance of 1787, and of the Constitution of the state of Michigan, securing to the public the free use of natural streams without tax, duty, or impost, do not prohibit the levy of tolls for the use of an improved stream. Such tolls are not taxes, duties, or imposts, but are imposed for the enjoyment of the benefits arising from expenditures giving a new value and increased navigability to the stream. Benjamin v. Manistee River Improv. Co. 42 Mich. 628, 4 N. W. 483.

A toll charged for the improvement of the navigation of a river is not prohibited by the provisions of the ordinance of 1787 declaring the navigable waters of the northwest territory to be common highways and forever free. Palmer v. Cuyahoga County, 3 McLean, 226, Fed. Cas. No. 10,688.

A provision in the law admitting a state into the Union, that its navigable streams be preserved for the use of the citizens of the different states free of toll, is not violated by a statute providing compensation to a boom company which receives, scales, and delivers logs cast into a river. The word "navigation," as used in treaties, constitutions, and statutes, does not mean the running of saw logs down a river. Duluth Lumber Co. v. St. Louis Boom & Improv. Co. 5 McCrary, 382, 17 Fed. 419.

The proviso in the act admitting Louisiana into the Union, that the navigable waters leading into the Mississippi shall be common highways and forever free from any tax, duty, impost, or toll forever, was not intended to prevent the state from improving and rendering navigable bayous and other streams only capable of imperfect navigation in times of floods. Boyd v. Shaffer, 13 La. Ann. 129.

The assent of Congress to a state statute incorporating a navigation company with the right to take toll on a navigable river in Alabama relieves the company from the disability to collect toll imposed by the provision of the ordinance adopted by the Alabama convention, that all navigable streams shall remain free for navigation without toll, tax, or duty, which is revocable only with the consent of the United States; and the assent of Congress to subsequent acts of the state legislature reviving and amending the company's charter, which do not affect the duration thereof or the amount of toll, is not necessary. Columbus v. Rodgers, 10 Ala. 37.

The state of Illinois has power, in its discretion, to construct locks and dams for the improvement of navigation upon the Illinois river, in the absence of congressional legislation forbidding it. Huse v. Glover, 11 Bls. 550, 15 Fed. 292.

Where Congress has not legislated as to the improvement of the water ways of a state, under its power conferred by the commerce clause of the Constitution of the United States, a state has power to improve such water ways by the removal of obstructions from their channels, and may authorize persons making the improvement to collect reasonable tolls for the in-under their common-law rights, as riparian owners, for a diversion of the water, whereby they have been injured.

Mr. William J. Lacey, for appellants:

Under § 13 of article 2 of the Constitution of the state of Illinois appellants are entitled to recover.

Kewanee v. Otley, 204 Ill. 402, 68 N. E. 388; Juvinall v. Jamesburg Drainage District, 204 Ill. 107, 68 N. E. 440; Aldis v. Union Elev. R. Co. 203 Ill. 567, 68 N. E. 95; Calumet & C. Canal & Dock Co. v. Morawetz, 195 Ill. 398, 63 N. E. 165; Chicago v. Jackson, 196 Ill. 496, 63 N. E. 1013, 1135; Wabash R. Co. v. Coon Run Drainage & Levee District, 194 Ill. 310, 62 N. E. 679; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Turner, 194 Ill. 575, 62

N. E. 798; Ginn v. Moultrie, C. & D. Drainage District, 188 Ill. 305, 58 N. E. 988; Payson v. People, 175 Ill. 277, 51 N. E. 588; Doane v. Lake Street Elev. R. Co. 165 Ill. 510, 36 L. R. A. 97, 56 Am. St. Rep. 265, 46 N. E. 520; Rigney v. Chicago, 102 Ill. 64; Plumleigh v. Dawson, 6 Ill. 544, 41 Am. Dec. 199; Evans v. Merriweather, 4 Ill. 492, 38 Am. Dec. 106; Angell, Watercourses, § 8, p. 11; Gould, Waters, § 204; Oary v. Daniels, 5 Met. 238; Crittenton v. Alger, 11 Met. 284; Stokoe v. Singers, 8 El. & Bl. 36; Yates v. Milwaukee, 10 Wall. 497, 19 L. ed. 984; Wadsworth v. Tillotson, 15 Conn. 366, 30 Am. Dec. 391; McCord v. High, 24 Iowa, 336; Baltimore v. Appold, 42 Md. 442; Shamleffer v. Council Grove Peerless Mill Co. 18 Kan. 24; Bealey v. Shaw, 6 East, 208;

creased facilities thus afforded to travel and transportation. Morris v. State, 62 Tex. 728.

A state has the power to improve the rivers exclusively within her territory so as to make the same navigable, and to charge tolls for their use; and, so long as no discrimination is made against citizens of other states in favor of her own, the exercise of this power is not in violation of the Federal Constitution, which gives Congress power to regulate interstate commerce and forbids any state, without the consent of Congress, to levy any duty of tonnage, where Congress has not enacted laws by virtue of these provisions, prohibiting the states from exercising such rights. McReynolds v. Smallhouse, 8 Bush, 477.

Where a river entirely within the limits of a state is for a portion of its course non-navigable, the state may grant the exclusive right to navigate it to one who, in consideration of such right, undertakes to improve it for the purpose of navigation. Veazie v. Moor, 14 How. 568, 14 L. ed. 545.

A state has the power to lease a navigable river within her territory to a corporation for the free navigation thereof by its boats, and with power to collect tolls at certain prescribed rates from all other boats navigating such river, upon condition that it keep extensive improvements previously made by the state in repair at its own expense, and allow the free navigation of such river by all other boats desiring that privilege upon payment of the prescribed tolls. Sinking Fund Comrs. v. Green & B. River Nav. Co. 79 Ky. 73.

A state may incorporate a company to convert an unnavigable into a navigable stream, and, with the express or implied consent of Congress, may authorize the corporation to assess and charge for the use of the stream all vessels which shall thereafter navigate it. Such a charge is not a charge of duty forbidden by the United States Constitution, but a compensation for labors performed by the corporation and availed of by the vessels. Carondelet Canal Co. v. Parker, 29 La. Ann. 430.

But a municipal corporation has no right to improve a navigable river over which the United States has assumed control, without first submitting the plan to, and obtaining the privilege of, the Secretary of War, as required by an act of Congress. Chicago v. Law, 144 Ill. 569, 33 N. E. 855.

The local improvement of the navigation of 67 L. R. A.

a river lying entirely within a state, and the removal of obstructions therefrom by a county under legislative authority, there being no interference with the operations, constructions, or improvements of the general government therein, are not in violation of any law of the United States. Stockton v. Powell, 29 Fla. 1, 15 L. R. A. 42, 10 So. 688.

A state can authorize any improvement of a river wholly within its limits which in its judgment will enhance its value as a means of transportation from one point of the state to another, if the free navigation of the river is not impaired, nor any system of improvement provided by the Federal government defeated. Sands v. Manistee River Improv. Co. 123 U. S. 288, 31 L. ed. 149, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 113.

In the absence of congressional action, a state has the power, either itself or through a corporation which it has chartered, to improve the navigation of one of its rivers by means of locks and dams, and to authorize the exaction of tolls for the use of such improvements. Monongahela Nav. Co. v. United States, 148 U. S. 312, 37 L. ed. 463, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 622.

The grant by a state of a franchise to a corporation authorizing it to improve a navigable river between a port of entry and a port of delivery established by Congress, and to exact tolls of vessels drawing an amount of water that would have prevented their using the river except for the improvement, does not conflict with the power of Congress to regulate commerce. Kellogg v. Union Co. 12 Conn. 7.

The establishment by Congress of a port of delivery on a navigable river does not constitute a regulation of navigation on such river, so as to deprive the state of the power to authorize a corporation to exact toll as a compensation for improving the same. Thames Bank v. Lovell, 18 Conn. 501, 46 Am. Dec. 332.

An act of the legislature authorizing a corporation to improve the navigation of a river, and exact toll of vessels of a description that were unable to navigate the river before the improvement, does not conflict with the right of Congress to regulate commerce. Ibid.

A state does not lay a duty upon tonnage in violation of the United States Constitution by charging tolls based upon the tonnage measurement of boats and cargoes for the passage and use of locks constructed by it in navigable rivers within its limits, where such charge is but fair and reasonable compensation for the use of the Tillotson v. Smith, 32 N. H. 90, 64 Am. Dec. 355; Gardner v. Newburgh, 2 Johns. Ch. 162, 7 Am. Dec. 526.

Appellants are entitled to recover under §§ 8 and 19 of the drainage act of May 29, 1889, under which the said Sanitary District of Chicago was created.

2 Starr & C. Anno. Stat. 2d ed. pp. 1493, 1496; Juvinall v. Jamesburg Drainage District, 204 Ill. 107, 68 N. E. 440; Wabash R. Co. v. Coon Run Drainage & Levee District, 194 Ill. 310, 62 N. E. 679; Ginn v. Moultrie, C. & D. Drainage District, 188 Ill. 305, 58 N. E. 988; Payson v. People, 175 Ill. 277, 51 N. E. 588; Kewanee v. Otley, 204 Ill. 402, 68 N. E. 388; Grey ex rel. Simmons v. Paterson, 60 N. J. Eq. 385, 48 L. R. A. 717, 83 Am. St. Rep. 642, 45 Atl. 995; Kellogg v. New Brit- ain, 62 Conn. 239, 24 Atl. 996; New York C. & H. R. R. Co. v. Rochester, 127 N. Y. 591, 23 N. E. 416; Seifert v. Brooklyn, 101 N. Y. 136, 54 Am. Rep. 664, 4 N. E. 321; Morse v. Worcester, 139 Mass. 389, 2 N. E. 694; Carmichael v. Tawarkana, 94 Fed. 561.

Appellants are entitled to recover under their common-law rights as riparian owners for a diversion of the water, whereby they have been injured.

Kewanee v. Otley, 204 Ill. 402, 68 N. E. 388; Juvinall v. Jamesburg Drainage District, 204 Ill. 107, 68 N. E. 440; Wabash R. Co. v. Coon Run Drainage and Levee District, 194 Ill. 310, 62 N. E. 679; Revell v. People, 177 Ill. 478, 43 L. R. A. 790, 69 Am. St. Rep. 257, 52 N. E. 1052; Payson v. People, 175 Ill. 277, 51 N. E. 588; Chicago v.

improved commercial facilities. Huse v. Glover, 11 Biss. 550, 15 Fed. 292.

Tolls exacted under authority of the state, by an improvement company as compensation for improving a navigable river, are not in the nature of tonnage duties. Thames Bank v. Lovell, 18 Conn. 501, 46 Am. Dec. 332.

A state may charge tolls based upon the tonnage measurement of boats and their cargoes, for the passage and use of locks constructed by it in navigable rivers, and such charge is not inconsistent with U. S. Const. art. 1, § 8, prohibiting states from laying any duty upon tonnage without the consent of Congress. Huse v. Glover, 11 Biss. 550, 15 Fed. 292.

A municipal corporation, having improved the navigation of a river at its own expense, can, without subjecting itself to the charge of improperly interfering with interstate or foreign commerce, exact of vessels using the river in its improved condition a reasonable compensation for the improved facilities thus afforded. Harmon v. Chicago, 140 Ill. 374, 29 N. E. 732.

It is within the constitutional jurisdiction of Congress, under its power to protect and improve navigable rivers in the interest of commerce, to authorize the construction of an apron of planked timber over the crest of a falls to prevent the wasting away of the underlying rock. United States v. Mississippi & R. River Boom Co. 1 McCrary, 601, 3 Fed. 548.

The United States, as owner of the works erected for the improvement of the navigation of a river, is entitled to control the surplus water power thereby created, and not the state within which the stream is located. Green Bay & M. Canal Co. v. Patten Paper Co. 172 U. S. 58, 43 L. ed. 364, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 97.

The Secretary of War has power to authorize private individuals to dig a new channel for the benefit of navigation where the present one is shallow, narrow, and very crooked. Lane v. New Haven Harbor, 70 Conn. 685, 40 Atl. 1058.

The United States may bring in the proper circuit court a bill for an injunction to protect improvements being made in navigable waters under the authority of Congress from threatened injury by the construction of a canal and the diversion of water therein under state authority; and in such case, when the danger or injury threatened is of a character which cannot be easily remedied if the injunction is refused, and there is no denial that the act charged is contemplated, a temporary injunction 67 L. R. A.

should be granted, unless the case made by the bill is satisfactorily refuted by the defendant. United States v. Duluth, 1 Dill. 469, Fed. Cas. No. 15,001.

A state may permit the United States government to enter its courts as a suitor to acquire by eminent domain property necessary to enable it to improve navigation. Re United States, 96 N. Y. 227.

The government of the United States may exercise its right of eminent domain within a state for the purpose of constructing a canal and locks around the cascades of a navigable river. United States v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. 9 Sawy. 61, 16 Fed. 524.

If the national government, for the purpose of improving the navigation of a river, condemns and takes possession of a lock erected under state authority in the stream, it must pay for the franchises to take tolls which the state had given to its owner in consideration of the construction and maintenance of the lock. Monongahela Nav. Co. v. United States, 148 U. S. 312, 37 L. ed. 463, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 622.

A state bordering on a navigable stream cannot prevent the closing of a channel on its side of an island in the stream for the improvement of the channel on the other side of the island under authority of Congress, and such closing is not an unlawful preference given to the ports of the state on the other side of the river. Ibid.

By appropriating Federal funds to the dredging of a public stream, the United States does not assume control over it, similar to an assumption of ownership, and to the diminution of a municipality's control under the statutes. Savage v. Philadelphia, 16 Phila. 174.

Improvement of a navigable river, when undertaken by the general government, is exclusively under its control; and where an appropriation is made by Congress for any such improvement, and the execution of the work is intrusted to the War Department, the engineering officer, subject to the approval of the Secretary of War, prosecutes the work in such manner as in his judgment he deems best. United States v. Rum River & M. Boom Co. 1 McCrary, 397, Fed. Cas. No. 16,206.

Federal improvements of navigable waters may be protected by injunction. United States v. Duluth, 1 Dill. 469, Fed. Cas. No. 15,001; Chicago Harbor Improvement, 17 Ops. Atty Gen. 279.

Van Ingen, 152 Ill. 624, 43 Am. St. Rep. 285, 38 N. E. 894; Dwight v. Hayes, 150 Ill. 273, 41 Am. St. Rep. 367, 37 N. E. 218; McCartney v. Chicago & E. R. Co. 112 Ill. 611; Chicago & P. R. Co. v. Stein, 75 Ill. 44; Brazon v. Bressler, 64 Ill. 489; Washington Ice Co. v. Shortall, 101 Ill. 52, 40 Am. Rep. 196; Ensminger v. People, 47 Ill. 384, 95 Am. Dec. 495; Chicago v. Laflin, 49 Ill. 176; Bliss v. Kennedy, 43 Ill. 68; Rudd v. Williams, 43 Ill. 386; Illinois & M. Canal v. Haven, 11 Ill. 557; People v. St. Louis, 10 Ill. 370, 48 Am. Dec. 339; Plumleigh v. Dawson, 6 Ill. 544, 41 Am. Dec. 199; Middleton v. Pritchard, 4 Ill. 510, 38 Am. Dec. 112; Evans v. Merriweather, 4 Ill. 492, 38 Am. Dec. 106; Slattey v. Harley, 58

Neb. 575, 79 N. W. 151; Woodin v. Wentworth, 57 Mich. 278, 23 N. W. 813; Pettibone v. Smith, 37 Mich. 579; Welton v. Martin, 7 Mo. 307; Gardner v. Newburgh, 2 Johns. Ch. 162, 7 Am. Dec. 526; Platt v. Johnson, 15 Johns. 213, 8 Am. Dec. 233; Colrick v. Swinburne, 105 N. Y. 503, 12 N. E. 427; Colburn v. Richards, 13 Mass. 420, 7 Am. Dec. 160; Hilliker v. Coleman, 73 Mich. 170, 41 N. W. 219; Koch v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 54 N. J. L. 401, 24 Atl. 442; Halsey v. Lehigh Valley R. Co. 45 N. J. L. 26; Tillotson v. Smith, 32 N. H. 90, 64 Am. Dec. 355; Emporia v. Soden, 25 Kan. 588, 37 Am. Rep. 265; Clement v. Gould, 61 Vt. 573, 18 Atl. 453; Kimberly & C. Co. v. Hewitt, 79 Wis. 334, 48 N. W. 373; Clark v. Pennsylv.

III. Character of improvement.

Under a charter authorizing a city to deepen and cleanse a navigable stream within its limits, it may remove wrecked vessels which constitute obstructions therein. Buffalo Union Iron Works v. Buffalo, 1 Sheldon, 244.

By a public act passed in the reign of Henry VIII., the corporation of the city of Exeter was empowered to remove obstructions to navigation of the River Exe, upon paying compensation to the owners of the soil where the obstructions are situated. Exeter v. Devon, L. R. 10 Eq. 232, 18 Week. Rep. 879.

A statutory provision authorizing log owners to construct chutes in connection with any dam, and to construct booms upon payment of damages to landowners, does not authorize the condemnation of an easement to float logs and timber down the stream, and to make improvements by the removal of obstructions therein, and of a strip of land on the shore for a distance of 10 feet back from high-water mark. Re Thomson, 86 Hun, 405, 33 N. Y. Supp. 467.

It is a "deepening of the channel" of a river, within the meaning of a statute authorizing corporations to undertake such improvements and to collect tolls therefor, where obstructions in the bed are removed or cut through, and the water is thereby confined to the channel. Benjamin v. Manistee River Improv. Co. 42 Mich. 628, 4 N. W. 483.

In Callis on Sewers, p. 262, the case of Hall v. Mason is cited, in which it was held that the commissioners of sewers could not destroy any ancient weir, although it interfered with navigation.

No recovery can be had for damages to a dock and filled land, caused by digging for the purpose of clearing, restoring, and making passable a water highway dedicated to and accepted by the public, within the limits of which such land is filled in and dock constructed. Yates v. Judd, 18 Wis. 118.

Where a city maintains a sewer which empties into a navigable river, and which deposits sand and other substances in the river bottom, and the city digs in and excavates the bottom of the river around and near piles on which a building rests, whereby the piles are undermined, and the city makes the excavation for the purpose of providing a settling basin, and thereby saving the expense of the frequent removals of the matters emptied by the sewer, so that such matters will not obstruct navigation, the owner of the building may recover against the city for damages sustained. The excavating by the city in such a case is not the legitimate dredging which it might be entitled to do for the improvement of navigation, and the owner of the building is not precluded from recovery on the ground that the city had a right to improve navigation, and that he had no remedy if the land on which the piles were placed was deprived of its lateral support. Pomeroy v. Granger, 18 R. I. 624, 29 Atl. 690.

Riparian proprietors entitled by statute to have half an acre of submerged land on their water front set off to them for oyster culture, but who have each staked out territory 216 acres in extent, have not such a title to the locations claimed by them as entitles them to compensation on the ground that their property is taken for private use, where the oyster beds are destroyed by the lawful action of the government in dredging the channel of the river. Richardson v. United States, 100 Fed. 714.

Equity will not interfere at the instance of a riparian owner to restrain the dredging and removing of sand from the bed of a navigable lake opposite his property where such acts do not injure his property by causing increased erosions of the shore, and do not prevent accretions from forming upon his shore line. Blatchford v. Chicago Dredging & Dock Co. 22 Ill. App. 376.

When a river improvement company is authorized by charter to close up any chutes or side cuts for the purposes of such improvement, if the state has riparian rights as owner of the banks of any such chutes or side cuts the corporation has the right, without making compensation, to destroy such rights by closing them, and all subsequent purchasers from the state will take subject to the company's right. Black River Improv. Co. v. La Crosse Boom & Transp. Co. 54 Wis. 659, 41 Am. Rep. 66, 11 N. W. 443.

The Black Snake river in Wisconsin, through which a part of the waters of the Black river diverge from the main channel, flowing through the bottom lands of the latter river and reuniting with the waters thereof in a lake further down, may be considered a "slough" into which the waters flow through a "chute" or "side cut," within the meaning of a statute granting an improvement company the power, in aid of the navigation of Black river, to close up chutes leading from such river into the vania R. Co. 145 Pa. 438, 27 Am. St. Rep. 710, 22 Atl. 989.

If the property of a riparian proprietor is taken or damaged for a public purpose, his right to compensation under the Constitution is not limited to cases of illegal trespass, but may extend to acts which are legal.

Calumet & C. Canal & Dock Co. v. Morawetz, 195 Ill. 398, 63 N. E. 165; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Turner, 194 Ill. 575, 62 N. E. 798; Chicago v. Jackson, 196 Ill. 496, 63 N. E. 1013; Dwight v. Hayes, 150 Ill. 273, 41 Am. St. Rep. 367, 37 N. E. 218; Aldis v. Union Elev. R. Co. 203 Ill. 567, 68 N. E. 95; Rigney v. Chicago, 102 Ill. 64.

The diversion of the water by the sanitary district was a taking of property, so the loss was different in kind from that suffered by bottom lands thereof and into sloughs, although such river is a navigable stream. Ibid. In that case it was held that a riparian owner cannot recover damages for the diversion of the waters of the stream by a corporation under authority of the legislature for the purpose of improving the public navigation. It is said the doctrine of the Delaplaine Case. 42 Wis. 230, cannot be extended to a case where the state places obstructions in the navigable waters of the state for the purpose of improving the navigability of the stream.

The legislature may authorize the construction of flooding dams without making compensation to the owners of mills who are injured by the interruption of the flow of the water. Falls Mfg. Co. v. Oconto River Improv. Co. 87 Wis. 134, 58 N. W. 257.

The legislature may authorize the construction of flooding dams to facilitate the floating of logs on a river, although the effect is to interfere with the flow of the water so as to diminish the value of the stream for steamboat navigation. Heerman v. Beef Slough Mfg. Co. 2 Biss. 334, Fed. Cas. No. 6,320. 1 Fed. 145.

But, under a power to erect a dam to improve the floatability of a stream, a splash dam cannot be erected the use of which will deprive a lower riparian proprietor of a reasonable use of the stream, by being withheld to create a sufficient head and then let down in a flood. Finney v. Somerville, 80 Pa. 59.

Under a statute authorizing the owner of timber to prepare a river for the running of logs by the removal of obstructions and the construction of chutes and such piers, booms, or other works as may be necessary, the log owner is not entitled to create storage dams and let the water out in large quantities for the purpose of floating timber. Brewster v. J. & J. Rogers Co. 42 App. Div. 343, 59 N. Y. Supp. 32.

The owner of a flooding dam authorized by the legislature for the improvement of a river between designated points only will be liable for injury caused by his raising the stream so as to overflow land farther down the stream. Hackstack v. Keshena Improv. Co. 66 Wis. 439, 29 N. W. 240.

The flooding of lands many miles below the lowest point of improvement of a river authorized by the legislature, by the wilful and unnecessary act of an improvement company in discharging waters from its flooding dam, cannot be considered damnum absque injuria as an 67 L. R. A.

the general public. The damages, though not a taking of property, differ in kind from those suffered by the general public.

Keewanee v. Otley, 204 Ill. 402, 68 N. E. 388; Aldis v. Union Elev. R. Co. 203 Ill. 567, 68 N. E. 95; Chicago v. Jackson, 196 Ill. 496, 63 N. E. 1013, 1135; Calumet & C. Canal & Dock Co. v. Morawetz, 195 Ill. 398, 63 N. E. 165; Wabash R. Co. v. Coon Run Drainage & Levee District, 194 Ill. 310, 62 N. E. 679; Payson v. People, 175 Ill. 267, 51 N. E. 588; Elmore v. Drainage Comrs. 135 Ill. 269, 25 Am. St. Rep. 363, 25 N. E. 1010; Ginn v. Moultrie, C. & D. Drainage District, 188 Ill. 305, 58 N. E. 988; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Turner, 194 Ill. 575, 62 N. E. 798; McCoombs v. Akron, 15 Ohio, 481.

Appellants are riparian proprietors.

Incidental or consequential result of the improvement. Ibid.

The digging of a new channel through tide-water flats under the authority of the state or the United States government is not a taking of property so as to entitle the adjoining proprietor to compensation. Lane v. New Haven Harbor, 70 Conn. 685, 40 Atl. 1058; Lane v. Smith, 71 Conn. 65, 41 Atl. 18.

Under Texas Rev. Stat. art. 722, which provides for the condemnation of land for the purpose of constructing deep-water channels from the Gulf of Mexico to the main land for the purposes of navigation and transportation and for the accommodation of ships and their cargoes, the consent of the Secretary of the Treasury is not necessary before lands can be condemned. The government might interfere in the construction of the channel, but, in the absence of any protest, the owner of the land is not in a position to insist that such consent must be obtained. Crary v. Port Arthur Channel & Dock Co. 92 Tex. 275, 47 S. W. 967.

The proprietors of the navigation of a river are not authorized to make a channel or passage in the river to a new wharf, the court saying that their authority is limited only to what the owners were formerly bound to do. Partherliche v. Mason, 2 Chitty, 658.

Although a court may not have the power to review an award of damages for flowage caused by a state dam, if there was no authority for the award the error may be corrected. Delaware Div. Canal Co. v. McKeen, 52 Pa. 117.

IV. Improvement companies.

The cost of the improvement of streams is at times so great, and the benefit from it is so likely, in many instances, to be purely local, that the consent of the legislature to make the improvement at public expense cannot be secured. In addition to this, many of the state Constitutions have forbidden the state from entering upon works of internal improvement. The consequence is that, in order to secure the improvement of particular streams, it must be done by private enterprise. For this purpose, charters are granted to improvement companies authorizing them to take possession of the stream, make the necessary improvements, and recover their compensation by the exaction of a toll upon transportation obtaining the benefit of the improvement.

Although there is a dictum in Nelson v.

St. Anthony Falls Water-Power Co. v. Minneapolis, 41 Minn. 270, 43 N. W. 56; Reading v. Althouse, 93 Pa. 400; Weatherby v. Meiklejohn, 56 Wis. 73, 13 N. W. 697; Lawson v. Mowry, 52 Wis. 235, 9 N. W. 280; Townsend v. McDonald, 12 N. Y. 381, 64 Am. Dec. 508; Sutcliffe v. Booth, 9 Jur. N. S. 1037; Wood v. Waud, 3 Exch. 748; Coulson & F. Waters, 247-261; Adams v. Manning, 43 Conn. 477; Campbell v. Talbot, 132 Mass. 174; Cowell v. Thayer, 5 Met. 253, 38 Am. Dec. 400; Tootle v. Clifton, 22 Ohio St. 247, 10 Am. Rep. 732; Smith v. Musgrove, 32 Mo. App. 241; Nininger v. Norwood, 72 Ala. 277, 47 Am. Rep. 412; Ford v. Whitlock, 27 Vt. 265; Shepardson v. Perkins, 58 N. H. 354.

Appellants have acquired riparian rights

Cheboygan Slack-Water Nav. Co. 44 Mich. 7, 38 Am. Rep. 222, 5 N. W. 998, that an act to transfer to voluntary organizations the control of navigable streams with power to levy burdens upon commerce at discretion is inoperative, yet such practice has now become too general to be declared unlawful.

The Crown may grant a franchise to construct locks and sluices on the land of the grantee for the purpose of making continuously navigable a river which before had been navigable only from milldam to milldam, and confer upon the grantee the exclusive right of navigation, under which it will be the grantee's duty to take reasonable tolls and keep the locks and sluices in proper working order. Atty. Gen. v. Simpson [1901] 2 Ch. 671. In rendering judgment in this case, Stirling, L. J., in reply to the argument that the Crown could not grant the exclusive right of navigation in a river in which the public had previously enjoyed the partial navigation,—that is, the navigation from milldam to milldam,—said that he was unable to find any case in which a similar charter had been the subject of decision by the courts, but compared it with the King's prerogative to grant ferry franchises in non-tidal streams, and said that the right closely resembled that of a ferry, and that he could see no reason why it could not be in the power of the Crown to create it; that the exercise of the right would impose on the grantee similar obligations to those of the ferryman.

An act of legislature leasing to a company incorporated by such act for that purpose the right for a term of years to navigate a river with its boats, which had previously been made navigable by a large expenditure of money by the state, by means of locks and dams, the duty to keep which in repair is imposed upon such company with the right to collect certain prescribed tolls, not exorbitant so as to amount to a prohibition of navigation, from all other boats using such locks, is not in violation of any provision of the Constitution of Kentucky, and is valid. McReynolds v. Smallhouse, 8 Bush. 447.

An act of the territorial legislature granting the exclusive privilege of using for the floatage of logs and timber that portion of a river between designated points, on compliance with the provisions therein for the improvement thereof between such points by the grantees or their assigns, is valid. Carson River Lumbering Co. v. Bassett, 2 Nev. 249. 67 L. R. A.

in the canals and in said river by prescription.

Murchie v. Gates, 78 Me. 300, 4 Atl. 698; Shepardson v. Perkins, 58 N. H. 354; Mathewson v. Hoffman, 77 Mich. 420, 6 L. R. A. 349, 43 N. W. 879; Townsend v. McDonald, 12 N. Y. 381, 64 Am. Dec. 508; Messinger's Appeal, 109 Pa. 285, 4 Atl. 162; Reading v. Althouse, 93 Pa. 400; Weatherby v. Meiklejohn, 56 Wis. 73, 13 N. W. 697; Lawson v. Mowry, 52 Wis. 235, 9 N. W. 280; Sutcliffe v. Booth, 9 Jur. N. S. 1037; Wood v. Waud, 3 Exch. 748; Coulson & F. Waters, 244-261; Adams v. Manning, 48 Conn. 477; Campbell v. Talbot, 132 Mass. 174; Cowell v. Thayer, 5 Met. 253, 38 Am. Dec. 400; Tootle v. Clifton, 22 Ohio St. 247, 10 Am. Rep. 732; Smith v. Musgrove, 32 Mo. App. 241; Ninin-

A statute providing for the construction of dams in a stream is not unconstitutional as giving the right to take tolls solely for the private gain of the grantees; but the construction thereof is clearly intended to be in aid of navigation, although there is no express declaration therein that such is the object, where it requires the building of suitable slides therein for running logs over the same, and requires them to be kept in repair and open during the driving stage, unless necessary to hold the water back for the purpose of flooding or driving logs; and further providing for compensation by tolls on logs "driven by aid of such dam or dams," and in view of the necessity of such dams on many streams in the lumber regions. Tewksbury v. Schulenburg, 41 Wis. 584.

A statute providing for the improvement of navigable rivers is fatally defective where it does not provide for the appointment of commissioners to condemn lands, except by reference to a statute providing for their appointment in the construction of plank roads, the requirements of which are not applicable. Clay v. Pennoyer Creek Improv. Co. 34 Mich. 204.

An act providing for the incorporation of slack-water navigation companies for the improvement of rivers in specified counties does not conflict with a constitutional requirement that corporations be formed under general laws. Such requirement does not prohibit the passage of a special act to enable operations to be carried on in specific localities, and which could not be carried on elsewhere. Atty. Gen. ex rel. Nelson v. McArthur, 38 Mich. 204.

A special act of incorporation conferring a right to improve the navigation of a public stream and charge toll for its future navigation is void if passed as "An Act to Incorporate the Manufacturers' Improvement Company." Rogers v. Manufacturers' Improv. Co. 109 Pa. 109, 1 Atl. 344.

A flooding dam association, organized under a statute authorizing a corporation formed thereunder to improve a stream when it "shall have taken prior possession of such stream for that purpose," has no right to improve a stream and charge toll for the use of such improvement where such stream had been previously taken possession of by a river improvement company, thus rendering it impossible for it to comply with the condition of the statute as to the taking of prior possession, which requires a taking possession of the entire stream. Black River ger v. Norwood, 72 Ala. 277, 47 Am. Rep. 412; Ford v. Whitlock, 27 Vt. 265; Angell Watercourses, § 206, p. 353; Gould, Waters, p. 443, § 225; Ballard v. Struckman, 123 Ill. 636, 14 N. E. 682; Vail v. Mix, 74 Ill. 127; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Bloomington, 167 Ill. 9, 47 N. E. 318; Totel v. Bonnefoy, 123 Ill. 653, 5 Am. St. Rep. 570, 14 N. E. 687.

The sanitary district, when it purchased the land whereby it connected its drainage canal to the said south branch of the Chicago river, became a riparian owner, and entitled to a reasonable use of the water; but it could take no more water than one owner was entitled to, having due regard for the rights of others, and, when it lessened the supply of water to which every riparian owner was entitled, it thereby became liable in damages for all injuries resulting.

Flooding-Dam Asso. v. Ketchum, 54 Wis. 313, 11 N. W. 551.

The grant of a franchise by a statute providing that any person who, or corporation which, shall have improved a river at a certain cost and in a certain manner may charge tolls upon logs put into the stream, is void for uncertainty, and the franchise fails for want of a grantee. Sellers v. Union Lumbering Co. 39 Wis. 523.

Under a statute providing that upon the non-completion of works within two years by a company incorporated for the purpose of constructing them its corporate powers shall be forfeited, the noncompletion of dams, slides, booms, etc., within the required period, by a company incorporated for the purpose of constructing them, does not ipso facto forfeit the charter, but only affords grounds for proceedings to have a forfeiture declared. Hardy Lumber Co. v. Pickereel River Improv. Co. 29 Can. S. C. 211.

The provisions of a statute authorizing the formation of companies to improve river navigation do not authorize the formation of corporations to improve any but navigable streams; nor do they contemplate the creation of navigable rivers out of non-navigable creeks or streams. East Branch Sturgeon River Improv. Co. v. White & F. Lumber Co. 69 Mich. 207, 37 N. W. 192.

Duty of improvement company.

One constructing locks for the purpose of making a nontidal river navigable, under a grant from the Crown giving him an exclusive right of navigation, thereby entitling him to receive public tolls from the public using the navigation, is subject to the obligation of maintaining and working the locks. Atty. Gen. v. Simpson [1901] 2 Ch. 671.

Where an act of incorporation prescribed no definite time within which a new channel of a river should be constructed, it will be presumed that a reasonable time was intended. Spring v. Russell, 7 Me. 273.

When a navigation corporation is given control of the entire course of a river, and authorized to collect toll for its use, it is liable for damage from any obstruction remaining in the stream, even though it is not in one of its artificial channels. Phelps v. Grand River Nav. Co. 12 U. C. Q. B. 245.
67 L. R. A.

28 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 978, 979; Wright v. Howard, 1 Sim. & Stu. 190; Ewing v. Colquhoun, L. R. 2 App. Cas. 839; Colburn v. Richards, 13 Mass. 420, 7 Am. Dec. 160; Cook v. Hull, 3 Pick. 269, 15 Am. Dec. 208; Anthony v. Lapham, 5 Pick. 175; Hilliker v. Coleman, 73 Mich. 170, 41 N. W. 219; Pettibone v. Smith, 37 Mich. 579; Welton v. Martin, 7 Mo. 307; Gardner v. Newburgh, 2 Johns. Ch. 162, 7 Am. Dec. 526; Platt v. Johnson, 15 Johns. 213, 8 Am. Dec. 233; Van Hoesen v. Coventry, 10 Barb. 518; Colrick v. Swinburne, 105 N. Y. 503, 12 N. E. 427; Koch v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 54 N. J. L. 401, 24 Atl. 442; Tillotson v. Smith, 32 N. H. 90, 64 Am. Dec. 355; Sham-leffer v. Council Grove Peerless Mill Co. 18 Kan. 24; Thayer v. Brooks, 17 Ohio, 489, 49 Am. Dec. 474; Canfield v. Andreu, 54 Vt. 1,

But when a corporation has been chartered to make improvements in certain parts of a river and collect toll for the use thereof, it cannot be held responsible for the navigability of the stream at other places. James River & K. Co. v. Early, 13 Gratt. 541.

A corporation authorized to collect toll on the navigation of a stream which it is to improve as a condition precedent may exercise its discretion as to the expenditure of its funds and the improvements to be made. Its franchise to collect tolls will vest when the stream has been put in a reasonable state of improvement. Carman v. Clarion River Nav. Co. 81 Pa. 412.

Unpaid trustees created by statute as conservators of a river are not liable for injuries to a vessel striking on submerged piles, though authorized and empowered to remove all obstructions and impediments to the navigation, as they are acting for a public purpose without pecuniary benefit, and the duty imposed upon them is discretionary, and not compulsory. Forbes v. Lee Conservancy Board, L. R. 4 Exch. Div. 116, 48 L. J. Exch. N. S. 402, 27 Week. Rep. 688.

A dam company collecting a toll for the use of its improvements on a navigable stream in derogation of the public right must yield its whole resources to that end and purpose, and its liability to the public can be neither increased nor diminished at the will or desire of any stockholder, and it is immaterial who the stockholders are. Lewiston Steam Mill Co. v. Richardson Lake Dam Co. 77 Me. 337.

The right to exercise the privilege of digging and trenching in and channelling out the bed of a river at a certain place under a contract with the owners of the land at that point is not dependent upon the performance of other acts therein provided for, which are not burdens imposed upon the grantee of the easement, the performance of which is required by the contract, but merely other privileges which he is given the right to exercise, and which can be accepted or refused at his option; and interference by the grantors of such privilege with the exercise thereof will be enjoined. Stuart v. Ft. Scott Water Co. 32 Kan. 405, 4 Pac. 844.

Noncompliance by the owner of a franchise to improve the navigation of certain rivers, create water power, etc., with a condition im-

41 Am. Rep. 828; Kimberly & C. Co. v. Hewitt, 79 Wis. 334, 48 N. W. 373; Clark v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 145 Pa. 438, 27 Am. St. Rep. 710, 22 Atl. 989; Woodin v. Wentworth, 57 Mich. 278, 23 N. W. 813; Rudd v. Wilkins, 43 Ill. 386; Batavia Mfg. Co. v. Newton Wagon Co. 91 Ill. 230; Doud v. Guthrie, 11 Ill. App. 194; Evans v. Merriweather, 4 Ill. 494, 38 Am. Dec. 106.

The declaration is correct on the measure of damages.

Hartford Deposit Co. v. Calkins, 186 Ill. 104, 57 N. E. 863; Abend v. Terre Haute & I. R. Co. 111 Ill. 202, 53 Am. Rep. 616; Toledo, P. & W. R. Co. v. Pindar, 53 Ill. 447, 5 Am. Rep. 57; Illinois C. R. Co. v. McClelland, 42 Ill. 355; State ex rel. Rice v. Powell, 44 Mo. 436; Lloyd v. Lloyd, 60 Vt. 288, 13 Atl. 638; Loker v. Damon, 17 Pick. 284; Chase v. New York C. R. Co. 24 Barb. 273; Simpson v. Keokuk, 34 Iowa, 568; Mather v. Butler County, 28 Iowa, 259; Hoehl v. Muscatine, 57 Iowa, 444, 10 N. W. 830; Sutherland, Damages, pp. 152, 154; 1 Sedgw. Damages, p. 166; Beach, Contrib. Neg. § 19; 2 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. 5th ed. § 741, p. 1271.

Diversion of water is a cause of action without proof of actual damage, so that the declaration is good so far as the damages are concerned.

Plumleigh v. Dawson, 6 Ill. 544, 41 Am. Dec. 199; New York Rubber Co. v. Rothery, 132 N. Y. 293, 28 Am. St. Rep. 575, 30 N. E. 841; Webb v. Portland Mfg. Co. 3 Sumn. 189, Fed. Cas. No. 17,322; Gould, Waters, § 401; Parker v. Griswold, 17 Conn. 288, 42 Am. Dec. 739; Corning v. Troy Iron & Nail Factory, 40 N. Y. 191; Rochdale Canal Co. v.

posed upon it to complete the improvement of a certain portion of one river within a specified time, by an amendment to its charter passed after other portions of the river had been improved by it, is cause for forfeiture of the entire franchise, where the same is entire in its character, embracing the whole improvement as contemplated in the original charter, and is not separable or capable of being divided into separate independent franchises, one as to the completed portion of the improvement below, and the other as to the incomplete portion, to which latter only was the condition annexed; but the additional requirement upon the acceptance by the company of the amendment imposing it became an express condition to the grant of the franchise conferred, which the company must perform to entitle it to a continuance of its franchise. People ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Kankakee River Improv. Co. 103 Ill. 491.

The court will enter a judgment of ouster from its franchise to improve the navigation of certain rivers, etc., as being demanded for the public good, and will not assess a mere fine for omission of duty, where the company failed to construct the improvements on a certain portion of a river so as to make the same navigable within a specified time as required by its charter, the performance of which goes to the object for which the corporation was created, and is essential to the accomplishment of the enterprise contemplated by the charter. The court will exercise its discretion to assess a fine only when the omission of duty is of minor importance. Ibid.

A lease by a state to a company of the slack-water improvements of a navigable river will be rescinded and determined, and possession restored to the state, where, by the terms of such lease, said company covenanted to keep the locks and dams in good repair, which it failed to do to such an extent that one or more of such locks and dams was in great and imminent danger of being washed out and destroyed; and it not only was not making any attempt to repair and preserve the same, but was hopelessly insolvent, and altogether unable to repair and preserve them as provided in the lease. Kentucky River Nav. Co. v. Com. 13 Bush. 435.

Minnesota Gen. Stat. 1878, chap. 32, title 8, relating to sluice dams for logs, gives the county commissioners no authority to take a bond from the licensee of the sluice dam requiring him to conduct or drive logs, timber, or lumber through the sluiceway; and if they should take a bond containing such a condition it would not be a statutory condition, and hence would be void, and would not inure to the benefit of third persons, or give them any right of action for its nonperformance. Anderson v. Munch, 29 Minn. 414, 13 N. W. 192.

The owner of a sluice dam across a stream erected, maintained, and operated under a license granted by the board of county commissioners pursuant to Gen. Stat. 1878, chap. 32, title 8, is not required by statute to perform the labor of conducting or driving logs, timber, or lumber through the sluiceway. This is no part of the "operation" of the dam within the meaning of the statute. Ibid.

A company authorized by its charter, upon payment of the damages suffered by owners of property, to improve a navigable river within specified limits in order to facilitate the running of logs, is not thereby excused from liability for injuries occasioned by such improvements to property outside the prescribed location. Thompson v. Androscoggin River Improv. Co. 58 N. H. 108.

A board incorporated by the state of West Virginia, which by its charter is required to keep the channel of a river free from obstructions, may be sued by the owner of a vessel which is injured by an obstruction in the channel, although all the property under the control of the board is owned by the state, as such suit is not against the state within the meaning of the Constitution, which declares that the state of West Virginia shall never be made defendant in any court of law or equity. It will not be presumed that the state created such a board without liability to be sued, since, says the court, without such liability the board would be a legalized despot, trespassing upon the rights of citizens, who would be powerless to protect themselves. Tompkins v. Kanawha Board, 19 W. Va. 257.

A navigation corporation erecting a dam as part of a navigable highway cannot convert it into a mere receptacle of the dirt washed down from the country above to the injury of riparian inhabitants. Schuykill Nav. Co. v. McDonough, 33 Pa. 73.

A contract by a river improvement company to build certain public roads and keep them in repair "so far as they may be damaged from

King, 14 Q. B. 122; Wood v. Waud, 3 Exch. 748; Harrop v. Hirst, L. R. 4 Exch. 43; Branch v. Doane, 18 Conn. 233; Munroe v. Stickney, 48 Me. 462; Amoskeag Mfg. Co. v. Goodale, 46 N. H. 53; Tuthill v. Scott, 43 Vt. 525, 5 Am. Rep. 301; Graver v. Sholl, 42 Pa. 58; Casebeer v. Mourey, 55 Pa. 419, 93 Am. Dec. 766; Hendrick v. Cook, 4 Ga. 241; Stein v. Burden, 24 Ala. 130, 60 Am. Dec. 453; Stein v. Ashby, 24 Ala. 521; Scriven v. Smith, 100 N. Y. 471, 53 Am. Rep. 224, 3 N. E. 675; Crooker v. Bragg, 10 Wend. 264, 25 Am. Dec. 555; Garwood v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 116 N. Y. 649, 22 N. E. 396.

Mr. James Todd, with Messrs. Seymour Jones and William Beebe, for appellee:

Appellants are not entitled to recover under §§ 8 and 19 of the act under which the sanitary district of Chicago was created.

flooding" from a dam maintained by it, in consideration of the withdrawal of all pending suits and relinquishment of all prior claims for damages, is valid, and enforceable when it is shown that the town has sustained actual damage by failure to comply with the stipulation to repair. Levis v. Black River Improv. Co. 105 Wis. 391, 81 N. W. 405, 669.

Right of companies.

The legislature may properly grant exclusive privileges and emoluments to a company organized for the purpose of improving navigation. Yadkin Nav. Co. v. Benton, 9 N. C. (2 Hawks) 10.

The legislature may grant an exclusive franchise of navigation for twenty years on a stream which is to be improved by the grantee, and, so long as it does not determine that the grantee has not complied with the conditions, equity will restrain any person from violating that privilege. Moor v. Veazie, 31 Me. 360.

The legislature has no power to pass a repealing act annulling a contract or lease previously granted by it to a corporation whereby such corporation acquired the right for a term of years to navigate a system of rivers within that state, and to charge all others desiring that privilege tolls therefor at certain prescribed rates, in consideration of which such corporation bound itself by its bond to keep extensive locks and dams previously constructed by the state in order to make such rivers navigable in good repair, and to allow the free navigation thereof by all boats desiring that privilege upon payment by them of the prescribed tolls, all of which conditions have been fully complied with by such corporation. Sinking Fund Comrs. v. Green & B. River Nav. Co. 79 Ky. 73.

Under Minn. Special Laws 1881, chap. 222, the power of the board of county commissioners of Mille Lacs county to license persons to maintain sluice dams is special and limited, and to be strictly construed. No power is conferred by the act upon the commissioners to delegate to those licensed by them the authority to substitute other grantees in their place; that is to say, the license is a privilege to be exercised by the licensees, and is not authorized to run to their assigns. Mille Lacs Improv. Co. v. Rasset, 32 Minn. 375, 20 N. W. 363.

67 L. R. A.

Aldrich v. Metropolitan West Side Elev. R. Co. 195 Ill. 456, 57 L. R. A. 237, 63 N. E. 155; New River Co. v. Johnson, 2 El. & El. 435; Corrigan Transp. Co. v. Sanitary District, 125 Fed. 611.

The police power of the state may be delegated to the various municipalities throughout the state, and may be extended beyond the limits of the municipality.

Chicago Packing & Provision Co. v. Chicago, 88 Ill. 221, 30 Am. Rep. 545; Gundling v. Chicago, 176 Ill. 340, 48 L. R. A. 230, 52 N. E. 44; Harmon v. Chicago, 110 Ill. 400, 51 Am. Rep. 698.

The property of plaintiffs not adjacent to the Chicago river is not riparian property, and the owners thereof have no riparian rights.

Gould, Waters, pp. 300, 301; Joliet &

The fact that log drivers suffer their logs to be sluiced through a dam which the licensee has sold and assigned the license to maintain will not preclude him from questioning the assignee's authority to collect the tolls fixed by the act under which the license was issued, and cannot raise an assumption on his part to pay such tolls. Ibid.

A corporation authorized to construct booms and other works to be used by the public generally in a stream chiefly navigable for logs, to the use of which such structures are necessary, is a quasi-public corporation,—the agent of the state for the improvement of the river,—and its franchises are granted for a public use. Cohn v. Wausau Boom Co. 47 Wis. 314, 2 N. W. 546.

A charter to establish lock navigation on a public stream is a contract. A charter to execute a public work which can only be accomplished by the state or an agent acting by its authority is essentially a contract between the state and the agent. Monongahela Nav. Co. v. Coon, 6 Pa. 379, 47 Am. Dec. 474.

The grantee of a Pennsylvania navigation franchise on a public stream has the right to use for navigation and water-power purposes all the water of the stream,—at least the ordinary, usual, and natural flow and volume and quantity of water in the river. Lehigh Coal & Nav. Co. v. Pocono Spring Water Ice Co. 7 Northampton Co. Rep. 350.

A state having leased a navigable river to a corporation for a certain term in consideration of its keeping the river in condition for navigation, and given it authority to collect tolls, cannot resume control of such river before the expiration of the term, except by exercising its power of eminent domain and compensating the company. Sinking Fund Comrs. v. Green & B. River Nav. Co. 79 Ky. 73.

Where the grantee under a franchise to construct locks for the purpose of improving the navigation of a river has neglected to construct the same although more than twenty years have expired since the granting of the franchise, such grantee is not in the possession of, or enjoying, its franchise so as to be entitled to an injunction against a company about to construct a canal and locks under an infringing franchise. Enfield Toll Bridge Co. v. Connecticut River Co. 7 Conn. 28.

A navigation corporation may temporarily or

C. R. Co. v. Healy, 94 Ill. 416; Fox River Flour & Paper Co. v. Kelley, 70 Wis. 287, 35 N. W. 542; 2 Kinkead, Torts, § 682, p. 1312; Penrhyn Slate Co. v. Granville Electric Light & P. Co. 84 App. Div. 92, 82 N. Y. Supp. 547; Hayden v. Long, 8 Or. 244; Lake Superior Land Co. v. Emerson, 38 Minn. 406, 8 Am. St. Rep. 679, 38 N. W. 200; Delaplaine v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 42 Wis. 214, 24 Am. Rep. 386.

Private individuals cannot acquire pre-scriptive rights against the public.

Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Hoag, 90 Ill. 339; Quincy v. Jones, 76 Ill. 231, 20 Am. Rep. 243; Stone v. Mississippi, 101 U. S. 814, 25 L. ed. 1079; Boston Beer Co. v. Massachusetts, 97 U. S. 25, 24 L. ed. 989; Parker v. People, 111 Ill. 581, 53 Am. Rep. 643.

The true measure of damages is the difference in the value of the property before and after the improvement is completed. There can be no recovery for the money expended in dredging the slip and in reconstructing the docks.

Springer v. Chicago, 135 Ill. 560, 12 L. R. A. 609, 26 N. E. 514; Eberhart v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 70 Ill. 349; Elgin v. Eaton, 83 Ill. 535, 25 Am. Rep. 412; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Hall, 90 Ill. 45.

The rights of the plaintiffs in the waters of the south branch of the Chicago river are held subject to the paramount authority of the state to make any and all improvements to facilitate navigation.

People v. St. Louis, 10 Ill. 351, 48 Am. Dec. 339; Mississippi River Bridge Co. v. Lonergan, 91 Ill. 508; Cummings v. Chicago, 188 U. S. 410, 47 L. ed. 525, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep.

permanently increase the height of its dams if necessary for the improvement of navigation, when, without its negligence, the dam becomes filled with debris, and the expense of removing it is excessive and unreasonable. Fehr v. Schuykill Nav. Co. 69 Pa. 161.

The power to erect such a dam across a navigable stream as may be necessary to improve navigation is not exhausted when acted upon, but includes the right to raise the dam first erected if found insufficient, and to keep it in repair. McKeen v. Delaware Div. Canal Co. 49 Pa. 424.

It is not necessary for a navigation corporation to have taken possession of a whole stream in order that its franchise to take toll may vest, when the law requires that the corporation "shall have taken prior possession of such stream, or any considerable portion thereof, upon which portion no other person or corporation has erected any dams or other improvements, and which may have needed improvement for that purpose." Northwestern Improv. & Boom Co. v. O'Brien, 75 Minn. 335, 77 N. W. 989.

A navigation company has, by inference at least, the right to insist that no unlawful interference with the headwaters of its stream shall do harm to the rights it may exercise below. Lehigh Coal & Nav. Co. v. Scranton Gas & Water Co. 6 Pa. Dist. R. 291.

Under a statute incorporating a navigation company and vesting in it the river or stream to be made navigable, a new species of statutory property and interest in the water is created and vested in it, and it can maintain an action against persons diverting the water for the purpose of supplying certain county buildings, although no actual damage to the navigation is inflicted. Medway Nav. Co. v. Romney, 9 C. B. N. S. 575, 30 L. J. C. P. N. S. 236, 7 Jur. N. S. 846.

The sufficiency and suitability of improvements in a public stream prior to the vesting of an exclusive franchise of navigation are questions to be settled by the legislature, if it thinks proper, by directing proceedings to vacate the charter, and not by an individual, as numerous and conflicting verdicts would thereby be made possible. Moor v. Veazie, 31 Me. 360.

Where a city is granted a franchise for the construction of a channel for the purpose of navigation and it authorizes individuals to construct and operate the channel, and it is provided by a city ordinance that, in case the channel is obstructed or allowed to shoal up, the right to collect tolls shall be suspended until the obstructions are removed or the channel made of the required dimensions, the state legislature, in declaring that ordinance valid, where no statutory causes of forfeiture are prescribed, waives the right of forfeiture of the franchise on account of a temporary failure to maintain the channel with the required dimensions. State ex rel. Gussett v. Morris, 73 Tex. 435, 11 S. W. 392.

Texas Rev. Stat. art. 722, providing for the condemnation of land for the construction of deep-water channels from the Gulf of Mexico to the main land for the benefit of transportation and navigation, and for the accommodation of ships and their cargoes, conferred a privilege, and did not place a restriction upon corporations building such channels; and it is not necessary that the corporation should show that a condemnation of property is necessary to enable it to reach a place of safety for its docks. Crary v. Port Arthur Channel & Dock Co. 92 Tex. 275, 47 S. W. 967.

A river improvement company, forever ousted on quo warranto from the further exercise of the franchises and privileges conferred by its charter, has no power afterwards to sell an easement acquired by it to overflow lands adjacent to its improvements. Wilmington Water Power Co. v. Evans, 166 Ill. 548, 46 N. E. 1083.

A lease by a state to a navigation company of the slack-water improvements of a river, which provides for a forfeiture thereof unless such company, within sixty days after the date thereof, commence in good faith the extension of slack-water improvements on such river, required by the terms of such lease to be made, is not forfeited where the company actually and in good faith began such improvements within the specified time, although it failed to prosecute the work with proper diligence after having commenced it, and never completed the improvements agreed by it to be made. Kentucky River Nav. Co. v. Com. 12 Bush, 8.

A corporation having authority by law to improve a public stream in a prescribed manner, for the consideration of taking toll on the lumber and logs floated thereon, will not lose its franchise because the improvement is in 472; Brooks v. Cedar Brook & S. C. River Improv. Co. 82 Me. 17, 7 L. R. A. 460, 17 Am. St. Rep. 459, 19 Atl. 87; Escanaba & L. M. Transp. Co. v. Chicago, 107 U. S. 678, 27 L. ed. 442, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 185; Gibson v. United States, 166 U. S. 269, 41 L. ed. 996, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 578; Eldridge v. Trezevant, 160 U. S. 452, 40 L. ed. 490, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 345; Ruch v. New Orleans, 43 La. Ann. 275, 9 So. 473; Scranton v. Wheeler, 179 U. S. 141, 45 L. ed. 126, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 48; Slingerland v. International Contracting Co. 169 N. Y. 60, 56 L. R. A. 494, 61 N. E. 995; Homochitto River v. Withers, 29 Miss. 21, 64 Am. Dec. 126; Morgan v. Reading, 3 Smedes & M. 366.

There can be no recovery for damages resulting from the proper exercise of the police power for preserving and safeguarding the public health; and § 13 of article 2 of the Constitution has no application.

Wilson v. Genseal, 113 Ill. 403, 1 N. E. 905; 22 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 922. 938; Tiedeman, Pol. Power, 444, 445; Chicago v. Netcher, 183 Ill. 104, 48 L. R. A. 261, 75 Am. St. Rep. 93, 55 N. E. 707; Stone v. Mississippi, 101 U. S. 814, 25 L. ed. 1079; Rc Cheesebrough, 78 N. Y. 232; Brown v. Keener, 74 N. C. 714; State v. Wheeler, 44 N. J. L. 88; Frazer v. Chicago, 186 Ill. 480, 51 L. R. A. 306, 78 Am. St. Rep. 296, 57 N. E. 1055; Bancroft v. Cambridge, 126 Mass. 438; Elgin v. Elgin Hydraulic Co. 85 Ill. App. 182; Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. ed. 77; Boston Beer Co. v. Massachusetts, 97 U. S. 25, 24 L. ed. 989; Frost v. People, fact not beneficial, there being no such condition prescribed, and the legislature having determined that question in granting the charter. Bennett's Branch Improv. Co.'s Appeal, 65 Pa. 242.

Conservators with the duty of keeping a river navigable may, under a statute providing for a certain toll for the reimbursement of expenditures made by them, and a subsequent act providing for an additional toll to meet a special expenditure, at their option receive a toll not exceeding the full amount authorized to be taken by the two acts. Rex v. Tone Conservators, 1 Barn. & Ad. 561.

No contract is impaired when the state draws water for improvements from a navigable stream, although to the injury of the previously vested franchise of a navigation corporation. McKeen v. Delaware Div. Canal Co. 49 Pa. 424.

The state having granted a franchise to one corporation to erect dams and locks on a tributary to rivers, and to collect tolls, does not, by afterward granting a franchise to another corporation to collect higher tolls on the river itself than had been collected before, and thus injuring the former corporation's business, become liable in damages to such corporation, an enabling act having been passed to allow it to sue; nor does it by such act elect to purchase the dams and locks of the first corporation and pay their value, such election being allowed by the term of the franchise to the first corporation. Com. v. Stevens, 3 Ky. L. Rep. 165.

A corporation authorized to build locks and take tolls may leave some of its works, or even cause some of them to be built with the understanding with the contractor that he shall be permitted to reimburse himself from the receipt of the tolls arising from the same. Boykin v. Shaffer, 13 La. Ann. 129.

Persons authorized by act of Parliament to make certain rivers navigable, and to do all things necessary for making and maintaining a navigable passage, and to charge toll for the use of the river, have a mere easement in the land over which the river flows, and are not occupiers of it within the meaning of a statute making occupiers of land ratable to the poor. Rex v. Mersey & I. Nav. Co. 9 Barn. & C. 95, 4 Mann. & R. 84, 7 L. J. M. C. 70; Rex v. Thomas, 9 Barn. & C. 114, 4 Mann. & R. 23.

Where, under an act of Parliament authorizing persons to make a certain river navigable, they had but an easement in the land over which 67 I. R. A.

the river flowed, a subsequent statute vesting the legal estate and interest in the navigation of the river in trustees, and authorizing them to mortgage the navigation, vested in them only an incorporeal right in the bed of the river, and no title to the soil passed so as to make them ratable to the poor as occupiers of land. King v. Aire & C. Nav. Co. 9 Barn. & C. 820.

Limited improvement of the navigation of a river under a provision of a charter for the improvement thereof that the corporation shall not be entitled to any benefit, privilege, or advantage under the act, and that all its interest shall be forfeited and cease, unless the improvement is completed within a designated time for vessels drawing 1 foot of water, does not prevent the subsequent, further, and more extended improvement thereof under a provision of the charter giving the company the power to cut canals and construct such other work as it shall judge necessary for improving and extending the navigation from place to place and from time to time in such manner as it shall think fit, where such improvement was recognized and considered as a work of great public utility intended to connect the Atlantic states with the country west of the Alleghany mountains, so that there could have been no intention to limit the broad power necessary fully to secure such object by the provision as to such limited improvement; but such requirement must be deemed to have been intended only to secure a partial use of the river within a reasonable time. Chesapeake & O. Canal Co. v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 4 Gill & J. 1.

A boom company is entitled to an injunction restraining the placing of obstructions in the river lower down for the purpose of aiding in the running of logs, interfering with the beneficial use of its works constructed on a slough formerly constituting the main channel of the river, where it is lawfully in possession of such slough and works, under a statute authorizing corporations organized for booming and improving purposes and owning both shores to improve rivers by clearing and straightening channels and closing sloughs, because such statute authorizes it so to improve its slough across a bend in the river as materially to straighten the river, and make such slough the main channel, so dedicating it to public use, and to treat 193 Ill. 635, 86 Am. St. Rep. 352, 61 N. E. 1054; Meadowcroft v. People, 163 Ill. 56, 35 L. R. A. 176, 54 Am. St. Rep. 447, 45 N. E. 303; Charleston v. Werner, 38 S. C. 488, 37 Am. St. Rep. 776, 17 S. E. 33; Munn v. People, 69 Ill. 80; State v. Schlemmer, 42 La. Ann. 1116, 10 L. R. A. 135, 8 So. 307.

Scott, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellants are the owners of sixty-six lots, all of which they claim were damaged by the act of the Sanitary District of Chicago in lowering the general level of the water in the south branch of the Chicago river. Seven of these lots front or abut on this branch of the river. The others front on canals leading from the south branch at right angles to the general course of the stream. It is contended by appellee that appellants have no riparian rights appurtenant to those lots which do not abut on the river, and this presents the first question for our determination.

At the time the canals were excavated, the real estate through which they extend was all property of one owner. More than twenty years intervened the construction of the canals and the opening of the principal channel of the sanitary district, the opening of which reduced the level of the water. After the canals were opened the owner of the land subdivided the same into lots facing or abutting upon the canals, except a few immediately contiguous to and fronting upon: the the disused bend of the former channel as a slough. Stevens Point Boom Co. v. Rellly, 44 Wis. 295.

An improvement company sustaining loss of tolls by reason of the obstruction of a navigable stream by a dam may maintain a suit in equity to restrain and prevent the completion and maintenance thereof. Wisconsin River Improv. Co. v. Lyons, 30 Wis. 61.

The lessee from the state of the "Green & Barren river line of navigation" acquired thereby no peculiar right in the navigation of those streams not common to the public, but merely the exclusive proprietorship, during the lease, of the locks, dams, and other improvements made by the state previous to the leasing; and the grant to a railroad company of the right to erect a bridge across the streams "so as not unreasonably to obstruct navigation" is not void as impairing the obligation of contract existing between the state and such lessee by virtue of such lease. Green & B. River Nav. Co. v. Chesapeake, O. & S. W. R. Co. 88 Ky. 1, 2 L. R. A. 540, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 515, 10 S. W. 6.

Where a corporation was directed to purchase the stock of a channel company for $2,000, and to expend $3,000 in improving the channel of a river during a stated period, and to expend after that time the sum of $500 annually, a further provision that, if the tolls received be more than sufficient to defray the annual expenses, said excess shall be first applied to refund the sums which shall have been expended beyond the amount of tolls received, allowing interest on all expenditures for the purpose aforesaid, it being provided that said principal sum of $3,000 and the amount that shall be paid for the channel stock shall not at any time be refunded,—was construed as entitling the company to interest on the annual expenditures only, and not on the original expenditure of $5,000. Thames Bank v. River Thames, 22 Conn. 198.

Tolls.

The exaction of tolls under a statute for the improvement of a water way is not an unconstitutional deprivation of property. Sands v. Manistee River Improv. Co. 123 U. S. 288, 31 L. ed. 149, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 118.

An alleged power to collect toll on a public stream will be construed strictly in favor of the public, and will not vest until all the statutory conditions are met. Northwestern Improv. & 67 L. R. A.

Boom Co. v. O'Brien, 75 Minn. 335, 77 N. W. 989; St. Louis River Dalles Improv. Co. v. C. N. Nelson Lumber Co. 51 Minn. 10, 52 N. W. 976.

One who has erected locks in a bayou, thereby rendering it navigable, will not be required to destroy or remove them; but he cannot charge toll unless such a franchise has been conferred upon him by the sovereign power. Boykin v. Shaffer, 13 La. Ann. 129.

The mere fact that a company has improved a stream does not give it the right to collect tolls upon logs of persons driving on the stream, who use their own forces and appliances. Washougal River Improv. & Log Driving Co. v. Skamania Logging Co. 23 Wash. 89, 62 Pac. 450.

The right to impose tolls as a consideration for the improvement of navigation on a public river is a right of government, to which individual inconveniences must yield. Bennett's Branch Improv. Co.'s Appeal, 65 Pa. 242.

Under the Ontario act, tolls can be charged for use of improvements in a floatable stream when they are made for the express purpose of facilitating the floating of logs, lumber, and timber, and a milldam is not such an improvement. Re Dam & Slide on Little Bob River, 23 Ont. App. 177.

Subject to a paramount authority of the nation under the power granted to Congress to regulate commerce between the states, a state may impose tolls upon boats and cargoes passing through locks constructed by it to improve the navigation of rivers. Huse v. Glover, 11 Bliss. 550, 15 Fed. 292.

That a navigable stream was capable of use in its natural condition does not deprive a navigation company of the right to collect tolls from one who uses the improved water way, and whose commerce is facilitated by it. Nelson v. Cheboygan Slack-Water Nav. Co. 44 Mich. 7, 38 Am. Rep. 222, 5 N. W. 998.

A navigation improvement company is entitled to charge tolls pursuant to its charter, when it has expended money in putting the stream into a reasonable state of improvement. Carman v. Clarion River Nav. Co. 81* Pa. 412.

The state has a right to provide for improving waters that need improvement, and may levy tolls on property for use of the improvements. Such tolls are not taxes or invasions of property rights, but a fixed compensation for the advantageous use of that which has river. These lots the owner sold from time to time without any reservation.

Under the law of this state, the owner of lots on each side of a river, such as the Chicago river, is also the owner of the bed of the stream to the center of the stream (McCartney v. Chicago & E. R. Co. 112 Ill. 611), subject only to the right of the public to the free and undisturbed navigation of the river (Chicago & P. R. Co. v. Stein, 75 Ill. 41). A riparian owner has the right to use the water in the stream. This includes the right to take a reasonable quantity of the water for his own purposes. The limitation and extent of the use of the water is that it shall not interfere with the public right of navigation, nor in a substantial degree diminish and impair the right of use of the water by other riparian owners. Washington Ice Co. v. Shortall, 101 Ill. 46, 40 Am. Rep. 196.

These canals had been continuously supplied with water for more than twenty years prior to the opening of the sanitary channel. This court has on several occasions held that the right to have water flow in an artificial channel, and to flood land which it would not overflow naturally, may be acquired by prescription. Vail v. Mix, 74 Ill. 127; Bailard v. Struckman, 123 Ill. 636, 14 N. E. 682; Total v. Bonnefoy, 123 Ill. 653, 5 Am. St. Rep. 570, 14 N. E. 687. In other states it has been frequently held that one who, by an artificial channel or waterway, has taken water from the original channel, and who has continued to divert and enjoy it for a pe-value. They are collected on the same principle as turnpike tolls or railway or wharfage charges. Manistee River Improv. Co. v. Sands, 53 Mich. 593, 19 N. W. 199.

A statute authorizing a navigation corporation to collect toll from persons using the stream for floating lumber "across" its waters, when the whole purpose of the law relates to descending navigation, cannot be held to relate merely to crossing from one bank to the other. Bennett's Branch Improv. Co.'s Appeal, 65 Pa. 242.

Where a city, which has a franchise to construct a channel for the purposes of navigation and to collect tolls, grants the same to individuals upon the condition that they shall maintain the channel at a specified depth and width, reserving the right to suspend tolls in case the channel shall not be so maintained and until it shall be made of the said dimensions, a boat owner, when sued for tolls, may defend on the ground that the tolls had been so suspended under the contract between the city and the grantee at the time the boats of the defendant passed through the channel. Morris v. The Leona, 67 Tex. 303, 3 S. W. 281.

Where a city is granted a franchise by the state to erect an artificial channel for the purpose of navigation, and to take tolls, and the city grants the franchise to individuals, reserving the right to suspend the tolls during any time when the channel is not maintained with specified dimensions, the city may suspend the tolls by giving notice to the grantee and by passing an ordinance, in case the channel is maintained in a shoaled condition, and not of the dimensions specified in the grant. The grantee cannot successfully contend that the right to collect tolls can only be suspended by a direct proceeding on the part of the state to forfeit the franchise. Ibid.

Where the charter of a corporation organized for the purpose of improving a river authorized it to exact toll at a specified rate, and fixed the duration of the company at sixty years, its right to charge toll after the expiration of fifteen years is not forfeited, in the absence of a direct proceeding to forfeit its charter, by its failure to comply with a provision of its charter that it shall have the right to charge such tolls for and during the term of fifteen years, and at the expiration of said fifteen years it shall submit to the legislature a statement of its accounts, to the end that the legislature 67 L. R. A.

may reduce the rate of toll if the profits have exceeded a specified amount. Kellogg v. Union Co. 12 Conn. 7.

Payment of the tolls fixed by the board of control for river-improvement companies cannot be resisted on the ground that the rates fixed are too high, or that the board has been imposed upon by fraudulent representations, since their action is not subject to review by the courts. Manistee River Improv. Co. v. Lamport, 49 Mich. 442, 13 N. W. 810.

The franchise of a navigation corporation to collect toll on a public stream after its establishment of an artificial navigation does not include the right to recover that toll after the artificial navigation has been destroyed and the corporation has neither reconstructed nor elected to reconstruct it. Lehigh Coal & Nav. Co. v. Brown, 100 Pa. 338.

A company which has improved a navigable river is not entitled, in the absence of express contract, to recover tolls from log owners for the use of the improvements, where the rate of tolls has not been fixed by the state board of control as required by How. Anno. Stat. § 3859. Osqueoc Improv. Co. v. Mosher, 101 Mich. 473, 59 N. W. 664.

A navigation company authorized to improve the navigation of a river and construct canals and cuts, and to charge tolls for the use of the same, may exact tolls from those using a portion of the river which has been improved by them, although the canals and cuts have not been constructed, where the statute under which they are operating provides that it shall be lawful for them from time to time, and at all times thereafter, to receive toll. Tamar Nav. Co. v. Wagstaff, 4 Best & S. 288, 32 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 295, 9 Jur. N. S. 132.

A navigation company cannot collect toll upon logs carried out of a stream by the owners upon a freshet, and without the use of its improvements, or which are rolled from the banks contrary to the direction of their owner, under authority to collect tolls for driving logs upon a stream when improved, when the driving is done either at the request of the log owners, or, without such request, when such logs lie in such a position as to impede or obstruct its own drive. Washougal River Improv. & Log Driving Co. v. Skamanla Logging Co. 23 Wash. 89, 62 Pac. 450.

A lumber owner can maintain assumpsit to recover back the excess tolls collected by a har-riod beyond the statute of limitations as to real actions, acquires by prescription the right to use the water in that particular manner and to continue the diversion of it in the same way. Murchie v. Gates, 78 Me. 300, 4 Atl. 698; Mathewson v. Hoffman, 77 Mich. 420, 6 L. R. A. 349, 43 N. W. 879; Townsend v. McDonald, 12 N. Y. 381, 64 Am. Dec. 508; Weatherby v. Meiklejohn, 56 Wis. 73, 13 N. W. 697; Cowell v. Thayer, 5 Met. 253, 38 Am. Dec. 400; Campbell v. Talbot, 132 Mass. 174; Belknap v. Trimble, 3 Paige, 605; Shepardson v. Perkins, 58 N. H. 354; Meessinger's Appeal, 109 Pa. 285, 4 Atl. 162; Reading v. Althouse, 93 Pa. 400; Adams v. Manning, 48 Conn. 477. It is suggested by appellee that these cases all involve the relative rights of private parties, and that no such right can be acquired by prescription against the public. The right of the public in this stream is the right to navigate it. No right can be acquired by prescription which will interfere with this right of navigation. It does not appear from the declaration in this case that filling these canals with water from the river interfered in any wise with navigation. In view of the length of the canals and the amount of water necessarily required to fill them to the level of the river, the diversion of the waters to the canals was an appropriation of the water adverse to the rights of other owners of abutting property, and, as the appropriation did not violate the public right of navigation, the owner of each lot fronting upon either of these canals acquired by prescription the bor company, being the difference between the tolls specified in a special contract and the regular tolls. Marsh v. Port Hope Harbour Co. 6 U. C. Q. B. O. S. 100.

A statute authorizing improvement of the navigation of a river by three flooding dams, and providing that when such dams shall have been erected or acquired the owner shall be authorized to collect tolls, does not authorize the collection of tolls when but two dams have been acquired or constructed. Sauntry v. Laird, Norton Co. 100 Wis. 146, 75 N. W. 985.

A statute authorizing the construction of three dams across a stream within the space of a few miles for the purpose of improving the navigation of the stream will entitle the grantee to toll on all logs entering the stream at any point above the next lower improvement dam, although no water from his dams facilitates their drive, and the statute gives him a right to collect tolls on logs sluiced or driven through or by the aid of one of the dams or by the aid of waters collected therein. Ibid.

The right of a boom company to charge tolls on logs passing through its limits does not depend upon its improvement or service having been actually beneficial to the log owner in the particular instance. St. Louis Dalles Improv. Co. v. C. N. Nelson Lumber Co. 43 Minn. 130, 44 N. W. 1080.

The right of a river improvement company which has improved a river for the driving of logs to collect tolls upon logs passing through its limits depends, not only upon the construction, but on the maintenance, of the improvements. St. Louis River Dalles Improv. Co. v. C. N. Nelson Lumber Co. 51 Minn. 10, 52 N. W. 976.

The right of a state or its lessees to charge toll for the navigation of a river exists by reason of the facilities afforded those who by passing through locks are able to navigate a river not otherwise navigable; but where navigation is unobstructed, and the use of locks and dams is unnecessary, such river is free for all purposes of navigation. Green & B. River Nav. Co. v. Palmer, 83 Ky. 646.

A corporation to whom the state leased a river with the right to charge tolls for the use of the locks and dams thereof by all boats, rafts, etc., navigating such river, in consideration of the construction by it of such locks and dams so as to make such river navigable in low water, is not entitled to toll from the owner 67 L. R. A.

of boats who navigates such river during high water when such locks and dams are not necessary and are not used by him. Ibid.

The right of a navigation company to take toll cannot be defeated by proof of the bad condition of the river at the time it was demanded, in the absence of any report of the commissioner appointed by the governor to supervise the same declaring it not to be in such repair as to permit of the easy and safe descent of boats, and until the repairing of which the statute declares no toll shall be taken by the company, as such report is the only matter which can defeat the right to take toll. Duke v. Cahawba Nav. Co. 10 Ala. 82, 44 Am. Dec. 472.

The improvements for facilitating the transportation of logs and lumber in a public stream are the consideration for granting a boom company a franchise under which it collects toll on all such transportation. Swift River & B. B. Improv. Co. v. Brown, 77 Me. 40.

A boom company which has expended a large sum of money in improving a stream which before was not capable of floating logs is entitled to collect a reasonable toll for driving and floating the logs of a riparian owner down the stream to tide water, and to a lien on the logs for that purpose, where such owner permitted his logs to float down the stream into the company's boom, where they mingled with other logs, and, failing to remove them upon request, the company was obliged to drive them with the others, under a statute authorizing such charges by boom companies without the owner's request in case of their logs lying in such position as to obstruct or impede the drive. East Hoquiam Boom & Logging Co. v. Neeson, 20 Wash. 142, 54 Pac. 1001.

An attempt to collect tolls under a franchise granted for the improvement of a public stream may be defeated if the improvements which are a condition precedent have not been made. Carman v. Clarion River Nav. Co. 81* Pa. 412.

A franchise to collect an increased toll because of the expense of the erection of a dam will be effective from the time of its acceptance, if a postponement is not more plainly expressed; but, having accepted it, the grantee cannot omit to perform the correlative duty. Susquehanna Boom Co. v. Dubois, 58 Pa. 182.

When an act makes an appropriation for riparian improvements, but provides that "no charges or tolls shall be collected on any other same riparian rights in the waters therein that he would have had if the canals had been natural water ways, and, under the authorities above cited, his title extended to the middle of the canal.

Section 13 of article 2 of the Constitution of the state provides, "Private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation," and the question is here presented whether the damages sustained by appellants are within this language of the Constitution.

Section 19 of the act for the creation of sanitary districts (2 Starr & C. Anno. Stat. 1896, chap. 42) provides: "Every sanitary district shall be liable for all damages to real estate within or without such district which shall be overflowed or otherwise damaged by part of the river on any commerce on said river which originates above" said works, the appropriation is not contingent upon the abandonment of franchises to collect such tolls. Monongahela River Improvement, 18 Ops. Atty. Gen. 481.

A cut constructed by drainage commissioners along the channel of a navigable river which is thereby straightened and reconstructed assumes the character of the river as a navigable stream, and goods transported over it are not exempt from toll, under a statute providing that turnpike trustees shall make use of any public or parish drain leading to or near its roads without payment of toll. Coulton v. Ambler, 18 Mees. & W. 403, 14 L. J. Exch. N. S. 11, 3 Railway Cas. 724, note.

The right of a navigation improvement company to exact tolls under its charter granted by the state is not terminated by a subsequent appropriation of money by Congress, which is expended for additional improvements in the same river. Thames Bank v. Lovell, 18 Conn. 501, 46 Am. Dec. 332.

Equity will not restrain the exercise of a franchise to collect tolls on a navigable river until its forfeiture has been declared by proper proceedings in law. Pixley v. Roanoke Nav. Co. 75 Va. 320.

Where a corporation is authorized to collect tolls from those navigating a river, and is bound to keep the river in navigable condition, it is not an insurer of the goods shipped on the river, and is only liable for losses which may occur by reason of its negligence in failing to maintain the river in a navigable condition. Tompkins v. Kanawha Board, 21 W. Va. 224.

A river company which has a franchise to collect tolls after prescribed improvements in navigation have been made will not be liable for injury sustained by one navigating the stream before the works are completed or the company charges toll, and thus vouches for the navigability of the stream as contemplated by its charter. James River & K. Co. v. Early, 13 Gratt. 541.

Where a corporation authorized to collect tolls of those navigating a river has imposed upon it by law the duty of keeping the chutes free from obstruction, proof that a log was in a chute in the river shows negligence in the corporation; and, in an action against it by one whose boat was injured by running against the log, such proof casts the burden on the corporation. L. R. A.

reason of the construction, enlargement, or use of any channel, ditch, drain, outlet, or other improvement under the provisions of this act."

In the case of Kewanee v. Otley, 204 Ill. 402, 68 N. E. 388, we held (p. 417, 204 Ill. p. 393, 68 N. E.), referring to Gardner v. Newburgh, 2 Johns. Ch. 162, 7 Am. Dec. 526, and Grey ex rel. Simmons v. Paterson, 60 N. J. Eq. 385, 48 L. R. A. 717, 83 Am. St. Rep. 642, 45 Atl. 995: "It is the right of every owner of land over which a stream of water flows to have it flow in its natural state and with its quality unaffected. The right to a stream of water is as sacred as a right to the soil over which it flows. It is a part of the freehold, of which the owner cannot be dispossessed except by due process of law, and poration to show that it used due diligence to discover and remove the obstruction. Tompkins v. Kanawha Board, 21 W. Va. 224.

Liability for injuries.

If it appears in evidence in a suit to recover because land is flooded by reason of the log jams caused by piers and booms of a boom company, that a certain boom is so constructed as to need protection by a cushion of 10,000,000 feet of logs, notwithstanding which it breaks, letting its contents down upon the sorting works below, whereby they are put in danger, the jury is warranted in finding that the works of the boom company are not properly built, or managed with due care. Doucette v. Little Falls Improv. & Nav. Co. 71 Minn. 206, 73 N. W. 847.

The mere fact that, after the raising of a dam to aid in floating logs injury was done to lower land which did not occur before, is not sufficient to render the owner of the dam liable for the injury caused thereby, where it is not shown that the land injured was above high-water mark, or the dam owner was guilty of negligence. Ramgren v. McDermott, 73 Minn. 368, 76 N. W. 47.

A riparian owner may maintain case for damages caused by a river-improvement corporation without authority of law, and therefore not subject to the special statutory remedy provided for it. White Deer Creek Improv. Co. v. Sassaman, 67 Pa. 415.

The Pennsylvania court applied the erroneous doctrine originating in a dictum of Lord Holt (see note to Mayer v. Thompson-Hutchinson Bldg. Co. [Ala.] 28 L. R. A. 433), to the effect that a servant was not liable to strangers for his negligent acts, in holding that the servants of a navigation corporation are not liable for the damage done by the works they construct for their employers, for respondent superior. Woodward v. Webb, 65 Pa. 254.

But the officers and agents of a navigation company are not protected from prosecution for wilful injury to a milldam by the floatage of logs because done while in the prosecution of the corporation's business, where the corporation had not complied with the terms of the act upon compliance with which its right to the control of the navigation of the river thereunder depended. Olive v. State, 86 Ala. 88, 4 L. R. A. 33, 5 So. 653.

One engaged in improving the navigation of the pollution of a stream constitutes the taking of property, which may not be done without compensation."

Now, if the owners of the various lots abutting on the canals in question have acquired by prescription the same right to the enjoyment of the use of the water in these canals at the ordinary level that they would have, had these canals been natural and not artificial water ways, it is apparent that it is their right to have the water flow into these canals to the same height that it did prior to the opening of the drainage district channel.

It is urged in opposition to this view that the title of the riparian owner is subordinate to such use of the water as may be consistent with or demanded by the public right of navigation, and that the rights of the plaintiffs are subject to the paramount authority of the state to make any and all improvements to facilitate navigation; and it is argued that, as § 24 of the sanitary district act declares that the drainage channel is a navigable stream, consequently, reducing the level of the water in the Chicago river for the purpose of filling the sanitary channel was in the interest and for the purpose of navigation, and that, as the rights of plaintiffs were subject to the rights of the public to make any and all improvements to facilitate navigation, the damages inflicted are not of a character for which recovery may be had. To this there are two answers: While it is true that the rights of the plaintiffs are subject to the public right of navigation, a tidal river under contract with the United States government is not liable for injury to property on the shore 3,000 feet away, caused by vibration of the earth or air because of blasts fired in the prosecution of the work. Benner v. Atlantic Dredging Co. 134 N. Y. 156, 17 L. R. A. 220, 31 N. E. 328, Reversing 58 Hun, 359, 12 N. Y. Supp. 181.

It is difficult to see on what theory that decision can be upheld. Surely a mere government contract does not absolve the contractor from liability for his negligent acts, and it would seem that injury to property at such a distance from the work as shown in that case would per se be evidence of negligence. As to liability for acts within scope of authority, see infra, VI.

Validity of acts.

A navigation company cannot alter the flow of the stream farther than is necessary for the purposes of its charter. Schuykill Nav. Co. v. McDonough, 33 Pa. 73.

A lock and sluice company, having been chartered to make improvements in a public stream, will be presumed to have acted lawfully. A riparian owner who has leased lands to the company for fowage and the erection of works will not, through failure to sue for the statutory damages, acquire title to the said works upon the expiration of the lease; and a grant of the fee to such lands so leased will be subject to the easement. Ginn v. Hancock, 31 Me. 42.

It is presumed that state agents improving the navigation of a river do their duty, and that a dam erected by them across its mouth is necessary to its successful operation. McKeen v. Delaware Div. Canal Co. 49 Pa. 424.

The board of commissioners of a county will render the county liable to a mill owner whose mill power is destroyed by the erection of a dam in the stream above his mill under authority of a void law which authorized the improvement of the stream and lake of which it is the outlet for navigation purposes, if the county insists on maintaining the dam. Schussler v. Henepin County, 67 Minn. 412, 39 L. R. A. 75, 70 N. W. 6.

Rules for use.

A navigation company is not authorized to make a by-law closing the navigation on Sunday and imposing a penalty upon any person navigating the same on such day, under a statute empowering it to make by-laws for the good government of the company and for the good and orderly using of the navigation. Calder & H. Nav. Co. v. Pilling, 14 Mees. & W. 75, 3 Railway Cas. 735, 14 L. J. Exch. N. S. 228, 9 Jur. 377.

V. Booming and sorting logs.

Acts which are not strictly improvements of the navigability of the stream, but which are convenient aids to the floating of logs therein, are found in provisions for the booming and sorting of timber. As to the right to place booms in streams, see note to Miller v. Hare (W. Va.) 39 L. R. A. 491.

The Mississippi river is, among other things, a public highway for the running of logs, and a boom may properly be regarded as an improvement of the highway, the purpose and effect of which are to render the highway more valuable for the running of logs, for which the taking of private property may be regarded as a taking for public use. Cotton v. Mississippi & R. River Boom Co. 22 Minn. 372; Weaver v. Mississippi & R. River Boom Co. 28 Minn. 534, 11 N. W. 114.

The right of a person to run logs in a stream is not interfered with by a legislative permission to a boom company to erect a boom which will detain all logs running in the stream, and hold them while logs of other persons are being sorted out. Osborne v. Knife Falls Boom Corp. 32 Minn. 412, 50 Am. Rep. 590, 21 N. W. 704.

So far as the charter of a boom company authorizes it to enter upon or occupy lands before making compensation, it is unconstitutional and void. Weaver v. Mississippi & R. River Boom Co. 30 Minn. 477, 16 N. W. 269.

When a boom company is authorized to erect booms in a river for the sorting of logs floating in the stream at that point, and to exact tolls for its services; and where the sorting is necessary because, from the nature of the stream, the logs must be floated loose, and those of the various owners are unavoidably mixed, the company may exact tolls from those owners whose logs pass below the boom, whose logs would reach their destination more quickly without the boom, and who are not aided by the boom. Osborne v. Knife Falls Boom Corp. 32 Minn. 412, 50 Am. Rep. 590, 21 N. W. 704.

A boom company is not entitled to collect gation, and that damages resulting in consequence of any work by the public for the purpose of improving navigation are damages for which no recovery can be had, still it must be manifest that the right of navigation and the right of improvement for purposes of navigation, which are superior to the rights of plaintiffs, must be the right to navigate the south branch of the Chicago river and to improve navigation in that branch, or some stream or lake whose waters naturally flow into that branch, or into which that branch naturally flows. Here the waters were taken and their general levels reduced for the purpose of making navigable an artificial channel, and not for the purpose of facilitating the navigation of the south branch of the Chicago river, or any stream or body of water naturally emptying into it, or any stream or lake into which it naturally empties.

Again, it is evident, from an examination of the act for the creation of sanitary districts, that the primary and principal purpose of their creation under the statute is to provide for the preservation of the public health by improving the facilities for the final disposition of sewage, and by supplying pure water. The fact that a navigable water way may be created is a mere incident, and not one of the purposes for which a sanitary district is created.

Appellee cites a large number of cases in which it has been held that there can be no recovery for damages resulting from a proper exercise of the police power for preserving boomage charges upon all logs that pass down the river through its boom merely because it has constructed it across the same, when it performs no service in connection with such logs, by virtue of a statute authorizing such companies improving streams to charge tolls to sluice, sack, and drive all logs placed in such streams upon the owners' request, and without such request in case of logs lying in such position as to obstruct and impede the drive; since that act authorizes charges to be made only in cases where requested by the owners, and without such request only when they permit their logs to lie in such position as to impede the company's drive. Gray Harbor Boom Co. v. McAmant, 21 Wash. 465, 58 Pac. 573.

A boom company given statutory authority to retain logs for sorting may be made liable for unreasonable detention of them. Mississippi & R. River Boom Co. v. Prince, 34 Minn. 71, 24 N. W. 861.

The right conferred by public authority to maintain a boom in a stream which is declared a highway, and to collect tolls for its use, is a privilege and franchise. Chehalis Boom Co. v. Chehalis County, 24 Wash. 185, 63 Pac. 1123.

The right to exercise a booming franchise cannot be defeated by objections which deny the necessity of the franchise or call in question the degree of perfection or the improvements made by the company preliminary to the vesting of the franchise. Genesee-Fork Improv. Co. v. Ives, 144 Pa. 114, 13 L. R. A. 427, 22 Atl. 887.

It is competent for the state to authorize boom companies to charge compensation at rates, or within limitations, fixed by the legislature for the use of their improvements of streams and for their services. Underwood Lumber Co. v. Pelican Boom Co. 76 Wis. 76, 45 N. W. 18.

A statute authorizing a boom company to erect booms at a certain point on a river, and receive, scale, and deliver to the owners all logs floating on the stream at that place, charging a toll for its services, is not in violation of a constitutional provision and enabling act providing that the river shall be "forever free . . . without any tax, duty, impost, or toll therefor," as the boomage is not charged for the use of the river, but as compensation to the boom company for services in facilitating the separation of the logs floating on the stream. 67 L. R. A.

Osborne v. Knife Falls Boom Corp. 32 Minn. 412, 50 Am. Rep. 590, 21 N. W. 704.

The fact that it becomes necessary that logs destined for points in a river below a fall, because of United States government works for the preservation of the fall, shall pass over it through a sluice provided for that purpose, does not impose any additional duty upon a boom company maintaining a boom above the fall, whose charter prescribes its duties with reference to such logs. Mississippi & R. River Boom Co. v. Prince, 34 Minn. 79, 24 N. W. 861.

When logs which were boomed in the river above the limits fixed by the statute for an improvement company which had improved the river to facilitate the passage of logs were broken from the boom by a great freshet and floated through the limits of the improvement company, and when, before their passage, the works of the improvement company were destroyed by the flood, it is not authorized to collect tolls on the logs. St. Louis River Dalles Improv. Co. v. C. N. Nelson Lumber Co. 51 Minn. 10, 52 N. W. 976.

The obligation of a boom company to assume control of and drive through the limits "all logs that may be driven" down the river, and allowing tolls to be charged therefor, under Minn. Special Laws, chap. 48, prevails concerning logs which were retained in booms above the part of the river where it had made improvements for driving logs, and not intended to be floated further down the stream, but which were carried out of the boom and down the river by a great freshet. St. Louis Dalles Improv. Co. v. C. N. Nelson Lumber Co. 43 Minn. 130, 44 N. W. 1080.

The fact that a boom company consents to receive the rate of boomage for its services fixed by a statute passed subsequent to its charter, fixing a rate less than the charter rate, raises an estoppel to preclude its denying the obligation of the later enactment. Mississippi & R. River Boom Co. v. Prince, 34 Minn. 79, 24 N. W. 361.

A law authorizing boom companies making improvements in rivers to make a reasonable charge for sluicing, sacking, and driving down the stream, without the owner's consent, all logs placed therein, in case such logs are permitted to lie in such a position as to obstruct or impede the driving, is constitutional. East Hoquiam Boom & Logging Co. v. Neeson, 20 Wash. 142, 54 Pac. 1001.

and safeguarding the public health, and argues that the declaration herein does not state a cause of action, as the channels of the sanitary district were constructed for the purpose last mentioned under and by virtue of the police power of the state. This doctrine is applicable where compensation is claimed for taking property, or for damaging property not taken, where the damages result from some direct physical injury to the corpus of the property itself, or from the fact that the law prescribes some particular manner in which the property shall be used, or some particular manner in which it shall not be used, and where the character or condition of the property, whether taken, or damaged without being taken, is such that it is necessary that it should be taken or damaged for the purpose of preserving the public health, or for some other purpose which sets in motion the police power; as where a slaughterhouse or a soap factory, located in a city, is abated under regulations in reference to nuisances; where the erection of buildings of combustible material is prohibited within certain limits; the seizure and destruction of intoxicating liquors under prohibitory statutes; the seizure and destruction of gambling implements and apparatus under laws authorizing that course; or where the law requires the property owners to fill open cesspools in use by them upon their property.

In the case at bar, however, there was nothing in the condition or character of the property of the plaintiffs which rendered it

The effect of Minn. Special Laws 1872, chap. 106, authorizing a boom company to erect booms at a certain point in a river and receive, scale, and deliver all logs floating on the stream at that point, is to constitute the boom company a public agent,—a representative of the state,—charged with directing the use of the river within certain limits to the common advantage of those who may float logs upon it. Osborne v. Knife Falls Boom Corp. 32 Minn. 412, 50 Am. Rep. 590, 21 N. W. 704.

One who, in pursuance of statute, has cleared a stream from obstructions caused by the logs of another, and seeks to recover from such owner the cost and expenses of the work, may maintain an action in assumpsit against him therefor, and is not limited to the enforcement of the lien conferred by subsequent sections of the act. Chapman v. Keystone Lumber & Salt Mfg. Co. 20 Mich. 358.

The legislature may authorize an individual to take charge of a section of a river valuable for floating logs, but which, on account of the obstructions, is difficult of navigation, and keep the channel free from jams, and collect and sort the logs, and recover a toll from every log owner, even against the latter's consent. Duluth Lumber Co. v. St. Louis Boom & Improv. Co. 5 McCrary, 382, 17 Fed. 419.

A state statute empowering a corporation to receive, control, scale, and deliver all loose logs coming down the river from above, and which are found within the specified townships, and authorizing it to retain some of the logs as compensation for its service, is not unconstitutional. Ibid.

The charge for boomage on logs which are destined for points below the sorting boom is not alone for turning them loose, but to compensate the boom company for its outlay in maintaining booms, and for its quasi-public services in receiving, handling, driving, and assorting logs coming within its jurisdiction. Mississippi & R. River Boom Co. v. Prince, 34 Minn. 79, 24 N. W. 361.

An action to collect charges for the use of booms in a river will not lie where it appears that defendant supposed that, in consideration of repairs to be made by him, he was to be allowed to pass his logs free, and that the plaintiff by his course of conduct for a number of years had led the defendant to believe that the party who made the repairs had the use of the 67 L. R. A.

booms free. Ball v. McCaffrey, 20 Can. S. C. 319.

VI. Interference with private rights.

The question how far private rights may be interfered with in the improvement of navigation is one which has caused the courts much trouble. Theoretically it is of easy solution, but practically the decisions upon it are in hopeless conflict. On the one hand, under the Constitutions the property of the riparian owner cannot be taken for public use without compensation. On the other, the Federal government, under the commerce clause of the United States Constitution, has the right to improve the navigation of streams which come under its jurisdiction, and the states have the same power by right of their sovereignty. There is no necessary conflict in these respective rights. The riparian owner cannot object to, or interfere with, any improvement which the government may undertake. He only can complain when there has been a taking of his property. Mere inconvenience, or, as it is generally termed, consequential injury, gives him no cause of action. As to these general principles there is no controversy.

Riparian ownership is subject to the obligation to suffer the consequences of the improvement of navigation in the exercise of the dominant right of the government in regard to such improvement. Gibson v. United States, 166 U. S. 269, 41 L. ed. 996, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 578.

In the hands of the state or of the state's grantees, the bed of a navigable river remains subject to an easement of navigation which the general government can lawfully enforce, improve, and protect. Hawkins Point Light-House Case, 39 Fed. 77.

The whole bed of a public stream is a highway, and may be improved or be made to contribute to an improvement of the rest. The rights of a riparian owner below his high-water line are contingent, and recede before the development of the rights of navigation. Improvement of Navigable Waters, 18 Ops. Atty. Gen. 64.

The United States, in the improvement of riparian navigation, may place its jetties even to ordinary high-water mark without interfering with the riparian proprietor's qualified rights to soil between high and low water marks. Improvement of Navigable Waters, 17 Ops. Atty. Gen. 109.

either necessary or desirable that it should be taken or damaged in the exercise of the police power. It is evident that lowering the level of the water obstructed ingress to and egress from the lots in question, and, following the reasoning of this court in Chicago v. Jackson, 196 Ill. 496, 63 N. E. 1013, 1135, we hold that such obstruction is a damage to private property for public use, within the meaning of § 13 of article 2 of the Constitution of this state, for which compensation may be recovered from the sanitary district under and by virtue of § 19 of the act authorizing the creation of the district.

It appears from the declaration herein that, when the level of the water was reduced, plaintiffs deepened the various canals passing their property, so that there would be the same depth of water at their docks that there was before the opening of the sanitary district channel, and made such changes in the construction of their docks as were necessitated by deepening the canals; and they seek to measure their damages by the expense of making these excavations and changes, and contend that they cannot recover for damages to their property from acts which they permit to continue without making reasonable efforts to prevent them, and that it was their duty to make the excavations and changes, and thereby lessen any damage that would be occasioned by interference with their business consequent upon the inability of vessels to land at their docks.

Where the plaintiff, by the exercise of rea-

In the improvement of navigation, the United States may place wing dams in the river without the consent of the adjoining riparian proprietor. Ibid.

The rule that a state is not liable for consequential injuries inflicted upon private property by the improvement of the navigation of a river is based upon the principle that the improvement of the navigation is part of the state's governmental duties; that the work which is done towards such improvement is done in the discharge of the governmental powers of the state; that the land of the riparian proprietor within the state is subject to the just exercise of this power; and that, when the state undertakes to exercise its governmental power, the public good is paramount to the consequential injury to land which is incidentally and naturally affected by the improvement. Holyoke Water Power Co. v. Connecticut River Co. 52 Conn. 570.

The rights of the public are limited to waters which are navigable by nature. These it may improve.

But any attempt to create navigable capacity at the expense of private interests can be justified only on the payment of compensation. Thunder Bay River Boom Co. v. Speechly, 31 Mich. 336, 18 Am. Rep. 184.

The state has not the right, without making compensation, to take or destroy the property of riparian owners in making a water course navigable when it is not so by nature, or in appropriating such water course to the public use by artificial erections or improvements. Weaver v. Mississippi & R. River Boom Co. 28 Minn. 534, 11 N. W. 114.

And BEIDLER v. SANITARY DISTRICT has made a distinct contribution to the law of the subject by holding that the right of the public to improve navigation without liability for consequential injuries to riparian rights does not include the right to take water to supply an artificial canal. This decision would seem to be based on sound principles, although, as will be seen by reference to the note to Smith v. Deniff (Mont.) 50 L. R. A. 737, it reaches a different conclusion from that reached in some cases which hold that the state is the owner of the waters of navigable streams, and may make such use of them as it chooses. There is no difference of opinion upon the proposition that compensation must be made for property taken, but that there is no liability for consequential injuries. The difficulty arises in determining what is private property, and what constitutes a taking of it. First, it may be stated that since Pumpelly v. Green Bay & M. Canal Co. 13 Wall. 166, 20 L. ed. 557, it is not necessary that the government should actually take possession of the property and appropriate it to its own use to constitute a taking. It is sufficient if the public improvement necessitates the destruction of the private use of the property.

A municipal corporation cannot, by dredging, so change the channel of a navigable river within its limits as to render private wharves constructed and maintained for more than twenty years by the riparian owners on the banks of such river an obstruction to navigation, and require their removal without compensation, where they were no obstruction before such change, even if the state has delegated its rights in that respect to such municipality; since the state cannot exercise that right without first making compensation to the individuals injured thereby. Chicago v. Ladfin, 49 Ill. 172.

The situations which have led to the most conflict and uncertainty are those where improvements have cut off those rights which may be included in the generic term "access;" those where the water level has been raised so as to submerge the land or render it cold and wet; and those where the improvement has resulted in washing away the banks or shores. The right to have the subsurface water retain its natural level so far as it is affected by adjacent streams is a property right, as is also the riparian right of access to the stream. See notes to Avery v. Vermont Electric Co. (Vt.) 59 L. R. A. 817, and State ex rel. Denny v. Bridges (Wash.) 40 L. R. A. 593, where the cases are fully collected; so that they will be noticed here only so far as is necessary to show the conflicting views and the reasons therefor.

Interference with access.

In Yates v. Milwaukee, 10 Wall. 497, 19 L. ed. 984, it was said that the riparian owner has a right of access to the navigable part of the stream, which is valuable and property, and can be taken for the public good only when due compensation is made.

In Sage v. New York, 154 N. Y. 61, 38 L. R. A. 606, 61 Am. St. Rep. 592, 47 N. E. 1096, however, the court of appeals of New York, by sonable diligence, prevents or lessens damage which his property would otherwise sustain through the negligence of another, no doubt the expenditures that he has made in so doing may be considered in ascertaining the amount of his damages; but where property has been damaged, though not taken, by a public improvement, and the damages are of such a character that recovery may be had, the measure of damages is the difference in the value of the property before the improvement was constructed and the value of the property after the improvement was completed.

"Where an action is brought to recover damages, where no part of the plaintiff's property has been taken, but merely damaged by a public improvement, the law is a dictum, announced the doctrine that this right was not property as against the governmental right to improve navigation. The case involved a right under the grant of the inhabitants and freeholders of New Harlem of land bounded by the Harlem river. The court, in the course of the opinion, demonstrated that the rights under this grant had been made subordinate to the subsequent grant to the city of New York of a strip of land under the water around the island; so that no riparian rights existed in the case. But the court, in treating the claimed right exclusive of that fact, says that, although, as against individuals or the unorganized public, riparian owners have special rights to the tide way that are recognized and protected by law as against the general public as organized and represented by government, they have no rights that do not yield to commercial necessities. The judge says: "I think that the rule rests upon the principle of implied reservation, and that in every grant of lands bounded by navigable waters where the tide ebbs and flows, made by the Crown or the state as trustee for the public, there is reserved by implication the right to so improve the water front as to aid navigation for the benefit of the general public, without compensation to the riparian owner." Sage v. New York, 154 N. Y. 61, 38 L. R. A. 613, 61 Am. St. Rep. 592, 47 N. E. 1096. When it is considered that in that case the improvement consisted of solid wharves and docks which completely cut the riparian owner off from access to the water, the scope of the dictum will be apparent. It is as though the court had held that in a public grant of land bordering on a highway the right to erect a solid fence along its edge, which would completely destroy the right of the abutting owner to use it, was reserved. The principle of that dictum was adopted in a Federal case in which a wall was constructed along the water front of the riparian owner so as to cut off his access to navigable water, the court saying: Under the principles of the Federal Constitution, the states held the soil beneath their navigable rivers under a high public trust to preserve them forever free as public highways, subject only to the power of Congress to regulate commerce among the states. The title which they bestow upon riparian owners is subject to the same public trusts, and therefore subject to the rights of navigation, and subordinate to the power of Congress to control and use the soil 67 L. R. A.

well settled that a recovery cannot be had unless the property claimed to be damaged has been depreciated in value by the construction of the public improvement. In other words, if the fair market value of the property is as much immediately after the construction of the improvement as it was before the improvement was made, no damage has been sustained, and no recovery can be had." Springer v. Chicago, 135 Ill. 552, 12 L. R. A. 609, 26 N. E. 514, Citing Elgin v. Eaton, 83 Ill. 535, 25 Am. Rep. 412; Chicago & P. R. Co. v. Francis, 70 Ill. 238; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Hall, 90 Ill. 42; St. Louis, V. & T. H. R. Co. v. Haller, 82 Ill. 208; St. Louis, V. & T. H. R. Co. v. Capps, 67 Ill. 607; Eberhart v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 70 Ill. 347; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Maher, whenever the interests of commerce and navigation demand it. Scranton v. Wheeler, 6 C. C. A. 585, 116 U. S. App. 152, 57 Fed. 808.

By a similar process of reasoning it might be held that every public grant contained the implied reservation that it was subject to the public needs. Of course, neither court would take such a position if the land of the riparian owner had actually been invaded. Neither court would hold that the constitutional provision requiring compensation for property taken for public use was subordinate to the right of the state or general government to regulate commerce. The court, in United States v. Lynah, 188 U. S. 471, 47 L. ed. 549, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 349, says, if any one proposition can be considered as settled by the decisions of this court, it is that, although the government may appropriate property, it cannot do so without being liable to the obligation placed upon it by the 5th Amendment, of paying just compensation.

And the Kansas court, in State v. Smiley, 65 Kan. 240, 69 Pac. 206, says that the idea that one clause of the Constitution is subordinate to another is the very madness of unreason.

It being conceded that the right of access is a property right for all purposes except when it conflicts with the governmental right to improve navigation, it is difficult to see how the court can hold that it is not a property right for the purpose of relieving the government from the duty of making compensation when it destroys it. The public right of improvement without making compensation extends only so far as property rights are not infringed, and to say that a right which is universally recognized as a property right for all other purposes ceases to be such when the government is asked to make compensation for destroying it must result from failing to see that the constitutional provision applies equally to incorporeal as to corporeal property. That the court did not have in mind, when these decisions were made, the fact that incorporeal property was within the protection of the Constitution, and that its failure of memory is in part responsible for these decisions, appears from the opinion rendered in the Scranton Case in the Supreme Court of the United States (179 U. S. 164, 45 L. ed. 137, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 48). The contention was there directly made that the right of access was a property right; but the court does not seem to be able to treat it as an incorporeal right incident to the land, but beyond 91 Ill. 312; Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Loeb, 118 Ill. 203, 59 Am. Rep. 341, 8 N. E. 460; Chicago & P. R. Co. v. Stein, 75 Ill. 41; Page v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 70 Ill. 324.

The defect in the declaration arising from the fact that damages were claimed by an incorrect measure is one which cannot be reached by a general demurrer, which is the only method by which this pleading was tested. This declaration states a good cause of action, notwithstanding it does not adopt a correct measure for determining the amount of compensation to which the plaintiffs are entitled. The judgment of the circuit court will be reversed, and the cause remanded with directions to overrule the demurrer.

Reversed and remanded.

and superior to the soil itself, and which is in and of itself a property right within the protection of the Constitution, regardless of physical interference with the land. It states that, if the riparian owner cannot enjoy access to navigability because of the improvement of navigation by the construction of public works, away from the shore line, there is not, within the meaning of the Constitution, a taking of private property for public use, but only a "consequential injury to a right which must be enjoyed in due subjection to the rights of the public." There certainly is not a consequential injury to the right of access, because it is destroyed, so the court must have had in mind the effect on the land itself; and this supposition is strengthened by the conclusion that "plaintiff had no such right of property in the submerged lands" as entitled him "to be compensated for any loss of access between upland and navigability." But the question then arises: Is there no right to compensation for the property which the riparian owner had in the right of access itself?

If, as shown by the note to State ex rel. Denny v. Bridges (Wash.) 40 L. R. A. 593, the right of access is in and of itself property, it is protected by the Constitution, and the duty to make compensation cannot be avoided by holding that it is subject to public use, or that its destruction is a mere consequential injury to the upland.

In Gibson v. United States, 166 U. S. 269, 41 L. ed. 990, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 578, the right of access was merely impaired, and therefore that case cannot be regarded as authority upon the question of the right to compensation for its destruction.

Injury to embankment.

The failure of the court to remember that incorporeal property is within the protection of the Constitution is well illustrated by the recent case of Salliotte v. King Bridge Co. 65 L. R. A. 620, 58 C. C. A. 460, 122 Fed. 378. In that case the dredging of a channel for navigation turned the current directly against the bank so that a considerable quantity of land was torn away. The court said that there could be no recovery unless the injury constituted an appropriation of the land, or a taking thereof; that, as a riparian proprietor, plaintiff was subject to all the injury, not amounting to a taking of his land, which might result from the lawful improvement of the navigation of the stream. It then asks: Has there been any appropriation of plaintiff's land by anyone?—and answers this question by saying that the injury has not been by flooding, or any sort of possession, but simply by the natural effect of the flow of the current upon the bank against which it has always flowed. The incidental injury was one which might have been guarded against by a protecting line of piles, or by a sea wall, 67 L. R. A.

and the question at last is, whose duty it was properly to protect a river bank exposed to waste by the increased volume and force of the current to which it is exposed. The court concludes: "That such a consequential injury is a taking or appropriation, we cannot agree." In that case the right of the riparian owner to have the current of the stream follow its ancient course, and not to flow upon his property, was a property right, and its destruction was just as much a taking of property as would be the appropriation of the land itself.

The Massachusetts court had made a similar ruling. It held that the legislature may authorize the erection of embankments in tidal rivers so as best to secure public convenience, and if, in doing so, some damage is done to riparian proprietors by the changing of the current so as to require the construction of protecting walls to preserve the land, it is damnum absque injuria. Fitchburg R. Co. v. Boston & M. R. Co. 3 Cush. 58.

The Massachusetts Constitution, however, gives the legislature unusual powers, and does not protect private property rights to the same extent as do those of other states.

The Connecticut court also hold that injuries inflicted upon an adjoining proprietor in improving the navigation of a river by erecting piers in such a way that his land is washed away do not amount to a taking of property within the meaning of the constitutional provision inhibiting the taking of private property for public use without compensation. Hollister v. Union Co. 9 Conn. 436, 25 Am. Dec. 36.

In Hooker v. New Haven & N. Co. 14 Conn. 146, 36 Am. Dec. 477, where the plaintiff claimed that the flowage of his land by the discharge from a wastewell of the defendant's canal amounted to a taking of property, the defendant cited the case of Hollister v. Union Co. 9 Conn. 439, 25 Am. Dec. 36, as conclusive against the plaintiff's contention. In the latter case the court held that the gradual wearing away of plaintiff's land as the result of straightening the river by an improvement company did not amount to a taking of property. In deciding the canal case in favor of the plaintiff's contention, the court made the distinction that, the river being a natural stream, the sovereign power had a right to improve its navigation, and that, where the lands on the bank were granted, they were subject to that condition, and the owners, and not the public, were bound to protect them; while the canal was an artificial highway similar to a turnpike. To this view of the case, Sherman and Waite, JJ., dissented, holding that the cases were analogous.

If a dam erected under authority of the legislature for the raising of a head of water to float logs causes the carrying away of the banks and widening and deepening of the channel, the riparian owner has no cause of action, it being damnum absque injuria. Brooks v. Cedar Brook & S. C. River Improv. Co. 82 Me. 17, 7 L. R. A. 460, 19 Atl. 87.

The above decision would seem to conflict with the rule that one attempting to use a navigable stream is liable for injuries caused by exceeding its capacity.

Injury from flooding.

As will be seen by a reference to the cases collected in the note to Avery v. Vermont Electric Co. (Vt.) 59 L. R. A. 817, the government has no right to raise the level of a navigable body of water for the purpose of improving it, so as to flood adjoining property, without making compensation. That rule was settled by the Supreme Court of the United States in Pumpelly v. Green Bay & M. Canal Co. 13 Wall. 166, 20 L. ed. 557.

Uncertainty was thrown upon the doctrine by the case of Mills v. United States, 12 L. R. A. 673, 46 Fed. 738. The general claim in that case was for damages because of a change in the canals used to convey water onto and off from the property for rice cultivation, made necessary by the improvement. So far as that change was concerned, it was doubtless a consequential injury for which no recovery could be had, and, but for other holdings in the case, the decision would not be remarkable. But it further appeared that, although the property was below high tide, it was above low tide, so that it could readily be reclaimed and made valuable. The plaintiff alleged that the government improvement had raised both the high and low water levels so as to make it necessary to raise the levees around the property to prevent flooding at high water. The habit of water is peculiar in this,—that to maintain its level at a particular point there must be a retaining wall to keep it there. Unless an artificial wall is provided, it will provide one for itself by saturating or spreading over the adjoining land far enough back from the reservoir to find an impervious barrier. The saturation of abutting property by this water, and using it as a part of the retaining wall of the reservoir, are a taking of just so much of the property as is saturated as completely as though the water stood on the surface. The abutting owner is entitled to have the property in its natural condition, and is not bound to construct barriers to keep the water out of or off from it, and, if the government raises the water so as to saturate the soil and render it unfit for cultivation, it thereby takes the property. This the court in the Mills case denied, holding that all the right plaintiff had in the ebb and flow of the tide was subordinate to the control of the government over the stream for its free navigation by the public and it held that reclaimed land, which would be covered by the ordinary flow of the tide, is held subservient to the right of the government to change such flow for the purposes of navigation; and the owner cannot recover damages for a resulting overflow of the land during high water. Mills v. United States, 12 L. R. A. 673, 46 Fed. 738.

This part of the decision must be regarded as overruled by United States v. Lynah, 188 U. S. 445, 47 L. ed. 530, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 349. The circumstances were similar in the two cases, and the Supreme Court attempts to distinguish the Mills case without overruling it. But the 67 L. R. A. distinction went merely to the feature involving drainage canals. The Supreme Court held that the fact that the land was reclaimed land lying below high tide was immaterial, and that since, because of the improvement, the water percolated through the levees and flowed over the top so that it stood upon the surface of the ground, there was a taking; the court saying that what was a valuable rice plantation has been permanently flooded, wholly destroyed in value, and turned into an irreclaimable bog, and holding that this was a taking.

Riparian owners who, with their ancestors, have for nearly one hundred years used the waters of a stream for flowing their rice plantations, have acquired an easement therein which constitutes property within the protection of the 5th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and are entitled to compensation, where the government, in the improvement of navigation, diverts such waters so that they are no longer available, thereby destroying the plantations. Lowndes v. United States, 105 Fed. 838.

From these decisions it is apparent that the Supreme Court of the United States does not seem disposed to take any such radical ground as that suggested in Sage v. New York, 154 N. Y. 61, 38 L. R. A. 606, 61 Am. St. Rep. 592, 47 N. E. 1096, to the effect that private property rights are held subject to the governmental right to improve navigation, but that it will give effect to the constitutional provision which requires compensation to be made when property is taken. Its apparent departure from the rule in the Scranton and Gibson Cases seems to have resulted from its momentary failure to perceive that the right of access is in and of itself property, although incorporeal, and that it is, therefore, within the protection of the Constitution.

Other rulings.

The right of the Federal government to make improvement in aid of commerce is paramount to the right of the individual whose property may be taken or injured upon payment of just compensation. Avery v. Fox, 1 Abb. (U. S.) 246, Fed. Cas. No. 674.

But the rights of a riparian proprietor upon a navigable stream should not be taken or destroyed in the construction of a public improvement in aid of commerce until compensation is actually made, so that the burden of seeking or pursuing expensive remedies may not be imposed upon the property owner. Ibid.

A statute providing for the rendering navigable of a non-navigable stream, and which requires mill owners, who have, prior thereto, constructed their mills on such streams under legislative authority, to build and maintain locks through their dams, which will interfere with their water power and be practically prohibitive of the continuance of the dams by reason of the great expense thereby entailed; and declaring that, on failure to construct such locks through any dam, such dam shall be a nuisance and shall be abated, thrown down, and destroyed, without provision for compensation to the owner,—is unconstitutional and void. Crenshaw v. Slate River Co. 6 Rand. (Va.) 245.

But a riparian owner cannot recover damages to his mill privilege on which he has legally erected a dam and mill because of the exercise of a subsequently granted franchise to institute lock and slack-water navigation on the river, the title to which is in the state, as the state is never presumed to have parted with one of its franchises in the absence of conclusive proof of such an intention. Susquehanna Canal Co. v. Wright, 9 Watts & S. 9, 42 Am. Dec. 312.

So, a dam having been authorized in a public stream, although to the damage of the occupant of an adjoining mill privilege, he can give no notice which would avail to affect the corporation in building the dam. Woodward v. Webb, 65 Pa. 254.

But a navigation corporation whose charter requires it to make compensation for injuries inflicted must pay for damages caused by its works to a mill and privilege, although erected under a mere license from the state. Ibid.

A state grant to a navigation corporation of the use and control of waters in a public stream rescinds all former licenses inconsistent therewith. Philadelphia v. Gilmartin, 71 Pa. 140.

While the owner of land taken for the purpose of improving the navigation of the river is entitled to compensation for the land actually taken, he is not entitled to compensation for any damage that may result from his loss of the water power caused by the improvement. Reg. ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Fowlds, 4 Can. Exch. 1.

A navigation corporation is not liable for damages purely consequential upon the erection of the authorized works, unless made so by law, since it is not liable in tort for its lawful deeds. Young v. Grand River Nav. Co. 12 U. C. Q. B. 75.

The rights of the riparian owner in Canada are not protected by constitutional guaranties.

A corporation is liable for consequential damages when its charter makes it liable for any damages done to lands or property. Monongahela Nav. Co. v. Coon, 6 Pa. 379, 47 Am. Dec. 474.

Everyone who buys property upon a navigable river purchases subject to the superior rights of the commonwealth to regulate and improve it for the benefit of her citizens. McKeen v. Delaware Div. Canal Co. 49 Pa. 424.

It is one of the incidents to holding property on one or both sides of a navigable stream that the party is subject to any inconvenience that may arise from deepening the channel, or otherwise improving the navigation of such stream, which is to be submitted to without any right to damages therefor, except as such improvement may flood or drown his lands. Zimmerman v. Union Canal Co. 1 Watts & S. 346.

A corporation having a franchise to institute lock and slack-water navigation on a public stream is not responsible for consequential damages further than is provided in its charter, as it is exercising powers of sovereignty. Monongahela Nav. Co. v. Coons, 6 Watts & S. 101.

A navigation franchise may confer far greater rights than those of a mere riparian proprietor; they may be paramount to the private riparian rights, and cannot be obstructed by such proprietor. Lehigh Coal & Nav. Co. v. Pocono Spring Water Ice Co. 7 Northampton Co. Rep. 350.

Consequential damages are never recoverable from a navigation corporation, except when expressly given, and on the terms on which they are allowed. Woodward v. Webb, 65 Pa. 254.

If a river navigation corporation is not liable for damages done under its original charter, when that charter is amended it is no injustice 67 L. R. A.

to the corporation to make it liable for damages both done and to be done. Monongahela Nav. Co. v. Coon, 6 Pa. 379, 47 Am. Dec. 474.

A company which has been authorized by statute to improve the floatage of a stream in its natural flow will be liable to a riparian owner in case it injures his property by floods, or by the jamming of logs. White Deer Creek Improv. Co. v. Sassaman, 67 Pa. 415.

The statute of 21 & 22 Vict. chap. 149, authorizing the Clyde navigation trustees to dredge and improve the bed of that river, does not require the consent of the owner of the foreshore over which the tide ebbs and flows to be procured before the soil of such foreshore is disturbed. Blantyre v. Clyde Navigation, L. R. 6 App. Cas. 273.

Where the right of eminent domain is available, benefits to the riparian proprietor cannot be urged and set off against damages sustained in clearing out a river at heavy expense, resulting in choking the river with booms of logs causing such damages. Watkinson v. McCoy, 23 Wash. 372, 63 Pac. 245.

A navigation company empowered to take tolls of those navigating the river is not bound to clear away weeds which, though injurious to the adjoining lands, are not detrimental to the navigation. Parrett Nav. Co. v. Robins, 10 Mees. & W. 593, 12 L. J. Exch. N. S. 81, 3 Railway Cas. 383.

The rule that a state has a right to improve the navigation of a river without liability for the remote and consequential injuries, not amounting to a taking of property, occasioned to the land of riparian proprietors, does not apply where the land or water rights injured are situated beyond the jurisdiction of the state. Holyoke Water Power Co. v. Connecticut River Co. 52 Conn. 570.

A statute authorizing any person desiring to float logs down a river to construct chutes in any dam and make other necessary changes in the river, doing no injury to the rights of riparian owners, and paying them such damages as they may sustain thereby, the amount of which, if the parties cannot agree, is to be determined by appraisers appointed by the court, is unconstitutional if treated as an act for the exercise of eminent domain, since the rights authorized to be acquired are not shown to be for the public use. Brewster v. J. & J. Rogers Co. 169 N. Y. 73, 58 L. R. A. 495, 62 N. E. 164.

It also provides arbitrary compensation, and fails to afford a landowner an opportunity to show its inadequacy. Ibid.

A riparian navigator is liable to the owner of a wreck for tearing it out when not necessary to enable him to pass without seriously endangering his own property, as he cannot act in the general interests of navigation. Gumbert v. Wood, 146 Pa. 370, 23 Atl. 404.

When the bed of a floatable stream is the property of the riparian proprietor as an incident of ownership of the upland, the soil therein cannot be interfered with without his consent; so that, if there be a boulder therein that interferes somewhat with the floating of logs, it cannot be removed without the riparian proprietor's consent. Watkins v. Dorris, 24 Wash. 636, 54 L. R. A. 199, 64 Pac. 840.

Fisheries.

Riparian owners who stake out for oyster culture an area of submerged land, the title of which is in the state, cannot claim a license for such territory acquired by possession under color of title, where the lands are occupied unlawfully; and are not entitled to compensation for the destruction of their oyster beds by the government while carrying out a public improvement. Richardson v. United States, 100 Fed. 714.

The digging of a new channel through flats designated for the cultivation of oysters does not constitute a taking of property, as such rights are held subservient to the right of public navigation. Lane v. Smith, 71 Conn. 65, 41 Atl. 18.

The destruction of an oyster bed due to the stirring up of the mud caused by the lawful action of the government in dredging the channel of a navigable river without invading the bed itself is a consequential injury for which compensation cannot be made. Richardson v. United States, 100 Fed. 714.

One who holds under the state submerged lands in a navigable river, and devotes them to the cultivation of oysters, takes the premises subject to the control of Congress over navigation and commerce, and cannot recover from the United States for damages suffered in consequence of the improvement of the river under an act of Congress. Ibid.

But one in possession, under a right derived from the state, of submerged land, which he uses for the cultivation of oysters, is entitled to compensation where the government takes possession of the property for the purpose of improving the navigation of a river, in the bed of which the lands are located. Brown v. United States, 81 Fed. 55.

VII. Exercise of power of eminent domain.

Under an act of Congress providing for river and harbor improvements on condition that lands acquired for the purpose shall be vested in the United States without charge, the United States has no power to obtain possession of the property by condemnation proceedings. Re Montgomery, 48 Fed. 896.

Act of Congress 1875, chap. 166, giving a right of action in the state courts against the United States to ascertain the amount of compensation for injuries to property by the improvement of a river, whereby the government pledges its faith to pay damages so ascertained, furnishes an adequate mode of obtaining compensation. Kimberly & C. Co. v. Hewitt, 79 Wis. 334, 48 N. W. 373.

The improvement of the navigation of a river is a public purpose, and the appropriation of land for such purpose is a proper exercise of the power of eminent domain. Kaukauna Water P. Co. v. Green Bay & M. Canal Co. 142 U. S. 254, 35 L. ed. 1004, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 173.

If the provision made by a statute for compensation for property taken for river improvement is retained for a reasonable time and then repealed, the riparian owners who have failed to take their compensation under the statute will be deemed to have waived it. Ibid.

In a proceeding instituted by the United States to condemn land for the erection of a lock and dam upon a navigable river in a state which has no statute respecting the condemnation of lands for such purpose, the compensation to be awarded must be determined upon the principles of the common law, and no allowance of consequential damages can be made. 67 L. R. A.

High Bridge Lumber Co. v. United States, 16 C. C. A. 400, 37 U. S. App. 234, 69 Fed. 320.

A statute providing for the acquirement of the right to use a non-navigable stream as a public highway for the floatage of logs where a landowner thereon does not consent thereto, and the acquirement of the right to the use of the banks necessary in the improvement and management thereof, where it cannot be purchased at a satisfactory price, is unconstitutional as a taking of private property without due process of law, where it makes no provision for notice to the landowner of the proceedings by viewers appointed thereunder to assess damages, and gives him no right to be heard except by an appeal from the order of the court approving the report of the viewers as to damages, which must be taken within twenty days after the order is made, and on which the right to be heard is confined to the question of damages alone. Hood River Lumbering Co. v. Wasco County, 35 Or. 498, 57 Pac. 1017.

When a statute provides for indemnity, not for acquiring the title, but for the loss of land cut away in the course of widening a river, the indemnity may be paid without transfer of the title to the land. Savannah River Improvement, 17 Ops. Atty. Gen. 455.

That an act of Congress, under which property is sought to be condemned for river and harbor improvements, fails to provide for the compensation of the owners of the property taken, does not necessarily invalidate it, since the good faith of the public is pledged for its payment, and the owner may call into action the resources of the taxing power of the government for raising the amount. Re Montgomery, 48 Fed. 896.

Navigation undertakers authorized to alter their dams and enter upon lands for that purpose, first making satisfaction to the owners as commissioners under the act shall direct, may enlarge such dams to the injury of adjoining land, though by the death of the commissioners, they not having appointed successors, the landowners are deprived of any means of obtaining compensation. Kennet & A. Canal Nav. Co. v. Witherington, 18 Q. B. 531, 21 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 419. From this Lord Campbell, Ch. J., dissented, holding that, the compensation clause having become incapable of execution by extinction of the commissioners, the powers which the act conferred upon the company to cause injury to other persons could no longer be exercised.

In proceedings to condemn lands for improving the navigation of rivers, the petition is jurisdictional, and must set forth all the facts necessary to show that the corporation is authorized to make the proposed improvement, before it can ask for the appointment of commissioners to condemn lands for such purpose. Clay v. Pennoyer Creek Improv. Co. 34 Mich. 204.

One entitled to tithes out of land taken for the purpose of improving navigation is not entitled to compensation under an act of Parliament providing for the payment or compensation of all persons who shall be seized, possessed, or interested in any lands, tenements, or hereditaments taken in the improvement of navigation, as his interests are in the crops, and not the lands. King v. Nene Cutfall, 9 Barn. & C. 875, 4 Mann. & R. 647, 8 L. J. K. B. 1.

In a suit to enjoin a riparian owner from removing water gates erected at the outlet of a lake and head of a river on his land, statutes authorizing the complainants, who were private parties at first, to remove obstructions, drift wood, etc., from the river to improve its navigability for running logs, and to make booms, and for these purposes to enter on the beds of the stream and its tributaries, and bank logs on the marginal lands of adjoining owners on paying or tendering damages, which, if not agreed upon, were to be fixed by local officials finally and subject to no appeal, and for the payment of which neither fund nor security was provided; and, by an amendatory act, to make, maintain, and control the gates in controversy, to save water in the lake not raising its level above the usual high-water mark, with no provision as to damages whatever in such case, none, in fact, being paid or tendered,—were declared unconstitutional because the provisions for compensation were inadequate, and the award of damages insufficient, to authorize the taking of private property, and because the acts done constituted a taking of private property for which compensation must be made at the time of the taking; and, besides, it is open to question whether such taking is for a public use; hence, the injunction prayed for was refused. Foster v. Stafford Nat. Bank, 57 Vt. 128.

VIII. Public rights in improvement.

One receiving a charter from the Crown to make a private river navigable and take toll from those navigating it does not thereby dedicate it to the public, unless he puts the charter into operation. Atty. Gen. v. Simpson [1901] 2 Ch. 671.

But a private river is dedicated as a common highway by acquiescence of the riparian proprietors in the construction of sluices for through navigation, accompanied by the user of the navigation by the public. Ibid.

One, upon applying for and putting in operation a charter from the Crown authorizing him to construct sluices and locks around a milldam in a private stream for the purpose of making continuously navigable a stream which had been previously navigable only from milldam to milldam, thereby dedicates the locks and sluices to the public use upon payment of a reasonable toll. Ibid.

A log owner has a right, independent of any contract or agency, to the use of the improved condition of the stream, to effect which the dam company was chartered; and the right cannot be interfered with except under unusual circumstances and necessities, by those having the right to exercise sound, legal discretion relative thereto. Toothaker v. Winslow, 61 Me. 123.

One wishing to use improvements made by an improvement company for the running of logs in a river has a right to the use of the stream in its improved condition equal to those of other persons similarly situated, for the interference with which by a third person he can maintain an action. Ibid.

While it is doubtless true that, in the exercise of any and all chartered privileges and powers which are in derogation or restriction of common rights, all due and reasonable care must be used to avoid any unnecessary or unreasonable abridgment of the public right, or injury to those who have occasion to exercise it, it must not be expected that such a construction of the act will be adopted as will make the legislative grant of a booming franchise nugatory, or deprive the privilege conferred thereby of its substantial value. Ibid.

tory, or deprive the privilege conferred thereby of its substantial value. Ibid.

The use of the improvement of a river for the floatage of logs without the permission or the consent of the owners thereof, who have the exclusive right to use such improved portion, is a trespass which cannot be waived, and therefore an action of assumpsit cannot be maintained for the use thereof. Carson River Lumbering Co. v. Bassett, 2 Nev. 249. The court further says that no promise can possibly be implied where the act constituting the cause of action is done in defiance of the plaintiff's rights.

An injunction will be granted to restrain log owners from taking possession, without the owner's permission, of a dam and other improvements designed to furnish artificial floods with which to drive logs. Hall v. Nester, 122 Mich. 141, 80 N. W. 982.

One who has suffered no special damage cannot maintain a bill against a navigation corporation to require it to repair its works after they have been damaged by a flood. Buck Mountain Coal Co. v. Lehigh Coal & Nav. Co. 50 Pa. 91, 88 Am. Dec. 534.

The Crown cannot be held liable as a common carrier for injury to the property of an individual passing his logs through a government slide, caused by the negligent and improper manner in which the passage of logs was performed by the person in charge of the slide, since no contract, express or implied, is created in such a case by the payment of the required tolls, as such slides are vested in the Crown only for the benefit of and in trust for the public. Queen v. McFarlane, 7 Can. S. C. 216.

If a person at his own charge makes his own private stream passable for boats by locks or cuts, so that the river, which was his own in point of propriety, becomes now capable of carriage of vessels, he may pull down his work and apply the stream to his own private use. For it shall not become a public stream unless it was done at a common charge or by a public authority, or the right to use which has been acquired by prescription. Hale, De Jure Maris, chap. 3.

The rights of the public in the waters of a private non-navigable stream are not increased because a riparian owner, by the expenditure of money, makes the stream navigable for his own personal convenience and accommodation. De Camp v. Thomson, 18 App. Div. 528, 44 N. Y. Supp. 1014.

IX. Use of surplus water.

If, in the erection of a dam for a public purpose, there is necessarily produced a surplus of water which may be used for manufacturing purposes, the state may retain to itself the power of controlling or dispensing such water as an incident of its rightfully making such improvement. Kaukauna Water Power Co. v. Green Bay & M. Canal Co. 142 U. S. 254, 35 L. ed. 1004, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 178.

A riparian owner on a stream on which works of public improvement have been constructed by state and Federal authority to improve navigation thereon, and incidental water power is created, is not entitled to have all the water flow past his land so as to prevent the diversion of the surplus power by grantees of the government, where he was given reasonable opportunity to obtain compensation for injuries sustained by the construction of the improvement. Green Bay & M. Canal Co. v. Patten Paper Co. 172 U. S. 58, 43 L. ed. 864, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 97, Reversing 90 Wis. 370, 28 L. R. A. 443, 61 N. W. 1121, 63 N. W. 1019, and 93 Wis. 283, 66 N. W. 601, 67 N. W. 432, which held that the state, or its grantees, has no right to divert the surplus water from a dam built to supply water to a canal past rapids in aid of navigation, from its natural channel to the injury of lower riparian owners, through the canal and sluiceways therefrom, although the statute authorizing such improvement declares that the title to any water power created by dams so constructed shall belong to the state.

A statute reserving to the state the surplus water power created by a river improvement over and above that necessary for navigation is not invalid as a taking of private property for private use, as such surplus water power is merely incidental to the improvement, the absolute control by the state or its grantees being necessary to the preservation and maintenance thereof. Green Bay & M. Canal Co. v. Kaukauna Water Power Co. 70 Wis. 685, 36 N. W. 828.

The state takes absolute ownership of the water power created, and not merely so much thereof as exists upon lands owned by it, under a statute providing that whenever any lands, water, or materials appropriated to the use of the improvement of navigation of designated rivers shall belong to the state, such lands, water, and materials, and so much of the adjoining land as may be valuable for hydraulic or commercial purposes, shall be reserved to the state; "and whenever a water power shall be created by reason of any dam erected or other improvements made on any of said rivers, such water power shall belong to the state." Ibid.

The state's control of the waters of a public stream is not impaired by the granting of rights to water power therefrom by a navigation corporation authorized thereto, if it be so done that it shall not at any time interrupt or impede navigation. McKeen v. Delaware Div. Canal Co. 49 Pa. 424.

One who takes water from the works of a navigation corporation in violation of public law is liable for resulting damages, although the corporation might also have been answerable. Philadelphia v. Collins, 68 Pa. 106.

One who tears down a dam built by the state to aid navigation, to the injury of a riparian owner who was using the surplus water therefrom, cannot question the right of such owner to take the water, to defeat his liability for the act, since the state alone can raise that question. Harris v. Thompson, 9 Barb. 350.

Grants of power to build dams and improve the water power of a river in such manner, or to such an extent, as shall be authorized by the directors of a corporation, are subject to the paramount rights of the state as trustee of the public to divert a portion of the waters for public use, and also to the rights of the general government in regard to navigation and commerce. St. Anthony Falls Water Power Co. v. St. Paul Water Comrs. 168 U. S. 349, 42 L. ed. 497, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 157.

X. Other matters.

Power and duty of municipality.

A provision in the charter of a city, that it may remove and prevent all obstructions in the waters which are public highways within the 67 L. R. A.

city, does not impose any obligation or duty upon the city, or render it liable to a boat injured by a collision with a sunken rock which was not removed because too firmly imbedded in the sand to be loosened. Goodrich v. Chicago, 4 Biss. 18, Fed. Cas. No. 5,542.

A state may delegate to a municipal corporation authority to deepen or otherwise improve a harbor and navigable river within its corporate limits, with power to pass ordinances for the preserving of such harbor and river and the regulation of vessels navigating the same. Harmon v. Chicago, 140 Ill. 374, 29 N. E. 732.

A city bound to remove obstructions from navigable channels within its limits is not liable for injury to a ship caused by a sunken wreck, where the owner contracted with a wrecking company to remove her, and the company prosecuted the work with diligence, but did not succeed because of the difficulty of the enterprise. McCauley v. Philadelphia, 108 Fed. 661.

Failure of the city to enforce its ordinance providing for the removal of obstructions in a navigable water within its limits will not render it liable to private individuals injured thereby. Coonley v. Albany, 57 Hun, 327, 10 N. Y. Supp. 512, Affirmed in 132 N. Y. 145, 30 N. E. 882.

Imposing upon a city the duty to dredge all tide-water creeks or estuaries which would be navigable for vessels of 20 or more tons' burden, and were formerly fed or supplied from fresh-water streams which the city had diverted to its own use, is a valid exercise of power for the protection of navigation. Cox v. New York, 26 Misc. 177, 55 N. Y. Supp. 74.

A grant to a municipal corporation of the right to improve a portion of land under tidal water for purposes of navigation may be resumed by the state at any time. People v. Vanderblit, 26 N. Y. 287.

Procurement of funds.

A municipal corporation has no power to raise money by special assessment for the widening of a navigable river within its corporate limits, merely by virtue of the power conferred upon it by its charter to deepen or widen such river, in the absence of express statutory authority so to do. Chicago v. Law, 144 Ill. 569, 33 N. E. 855.

Especially where other provisions of its charter give express authority to make such levy for certain specified improvements, thereby implying that particular authority is necessary for that purpose. Wright v. Chicago, 20 Ill. 252.

A statute imposing a direct tax upon certain townships to improve the channel of a river is within a constitutional provision forbidding the state from engaging in the work of internal improvement except by the grant of lands therefor. Anderson v. Hill, 54 Mich. 477, 20 N. W. 549.

A statute appropriating for the improvement of a river lands bid in by the state for delinquent taxes, and providing for the imposition of a tax for such improvement if the lands prove inadequate, is in conflict with a constitutional provision prohibiting the state from carrying on any work of internal improvement. Gibson v. State Land Office, 121 Mich. 49, 79 N. W. 919.

That a property owner already has a channel in the river opposite his premises suitable and adequate for all his purposes does not relieve him from liability for assessment for a dredging improvement when the public interests require a wider channel than that provided by the property owner; nor is he entitled to credit for work done by him, where the assessment represents the benefits derived by him from the improvement as a whole, and is made in the same proportion as that placed upon the other property benefited. Delaware & H. Canal Co. v. Buffalo, 39 App. Div. 333, 56 N. Y. Supp. 976.

The improvement of the navigation of a river and the removal of obstructions therefrom within the county under an act authorizing the improvement and the issuance of bonds in aid thereof is a county purpose, within a constitutional provision for legislative authority to the several counties to assess and impose taxes for county purposes, although the commerce on the river local to the county is small, and the river is used as a public highway for commerce far beyond the county limits. Stockton v. Powell, 29 Fla. 1, 15 L. R. A. 42, 10 So. 688.

Property in a stream above the point where the stream is dredged and deepened cannot, as matter of law, be said not to be benefited by the improvement, so as not to be subject to assessment therefor, when, by the removal of obstructions at a comparatively small expense, the navigation will extend to such land. People ex rel. Lehigh Valley R. Co. v. Buffalo, 147 N. Y. 675, 42 N. E. 344.

The widening by a municipal corporation of a navigable river within its limits, over which the United States has assumed jurisdiction, and upon which it has expended money, being one of the channels over which the commerce of the country passes, for the purpose of improving the navigation thereof, is not a "local improvement" within the meaning of that term as used in a general act authorizing cities, etc., to make local improvements by special assessment; and such municipal corporation has no power to assess the cost thereof by special assessment upon the property fronting on the river. Chicago v. Law, 144 Ill. 569, 33 N. E. 855.

Under a statute authorizing a city to clear obstructions and keep a stream within its limits in navigable condition, and cause not less than one half the expense to be assessed upon the property benefited, the city may remove wrecked vessels and assess one half the cost upon adjacent riparian owners, although the wrecks were caused by the negligence of the city, and might have been abated by it as a nuisance. Buffalo Union Iron Works v. Buffalo, 1 Sheldon, 244.

An act authorizing the improvement of the river, bay, and harbor of Mobile, and providing for a county tax to pay for such improvement, is not a taking of property for public use without due compensation, where the taxation is not so excessive as to deprive it of that character, and, in view of the immediate benefits accruing to the county, not so restricted as to induce the imputation of compelling a single district to assume and discharge a state obligation. Revenue Comrs. v. State, 45 Ala. 399; Slaughter v. Mobile County, 73 Ala. 134.

The legislature has no power to confer upon the probate judge of a county authority to appoint a commissioner to superintend the work of improving a river, where the improvement extends along its course into another county, and to assess taxes for benefits upon lands in such latter county. It is an unconstitutional encroachment upon the right of local self-government. Wilcox v. Paddock, 65 Mich. 23, 31 N. W. 609.

67 L. R. A.

That assessors took into consideration the frontage of property benefited by a dredging improvement to aid them in determining what part of the cost should be levied upon it does not indicate that the assessment was not made according to benefits, when the assessors acted in entire good faith. Delaware & H. Canal Co. v. Buffalo, 39 App. Div. 333, 56 N. Y. Supp. 976.

The location, value, and accessibility to the channel of each parcel of land should be considered in determining the assessment levied for a dredging improvement. The fact that property on one side of the river is assessed at a higher rate per foot front than other property does not establish the fact that the assessment is erroneous. Ibid.

An assessment of the benefits derived by riparian owners by provision for the maintenance of the permanent height of water in a navigable lake is invalid unless provision be made for compensating such owners for injuries resulting from the maintenance of a height of water in the lake permanently above its ordinary stage. Re Minnetonka Lake Improvement, 56 Minn. 513, 58 N. W. 295.

Money paid on a judgment rendered against real estate for nonpayment of a special assessment levied thereon for the cost of widening and deepening a river cannot be recovered back on the ground that such assessment was void, and therefore the judgment, because the city had no authority under its charter to levy assessments for the deepening of that river, where the money was paid voluntarily and not under process, for an object such landowner had helped originate, with a full knowledge of all the facts of the case and in ignorance only of his legal rights, the accomplishment of which benefited his estate,—especially as such judgment is valid, at least in so far as the assessment upon which it was based was for the cost of widening such river, for which purpose such city had the power to levy assessments, and therefore, the court having jurisdiction, could not be attacked in a collateral proceeding. Elston v. Chicago, 40 Ill. 514, 89 Am. Dec. 361.

Use of stream as canal.

The use of a navigable stream, and the appropriation of its bank for a towpath as part of a canal system to connect the waters of another stream with Lake Erie, are not a violation of the ordinance of 1787, if they result merely in the improvement of the stream within the limits of the state, and in no way interfere with navigation and commerce. Carpenter v. State, 12 Ohio St. 457.

Remedies.

A Federal court will, at the suit of the government, grant an injunction to protect and secure the safety of such public structures as are made to improve the navigation of rivers and to facilitate commerce. United States v. Rum River & M. Boom Co. 1 McCrary, 397, Fed. Cas. No. 16,206.

When a special remedy is provided for the recovery from a navigation corporation of damages caused by the exercise of its franchise, it must be strictly pursued, and the corporation will only be liable to suit by common-law process when damages have been incurred by its negligence. Fehr v. Schuykill Nav. Co. 69 Pa. 161.

H. P. F.

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

D. J. FAIR et al., Plffs. in Err.,
v.

CITIZENS' STATE BANK of Sterling.

(.....Kan.....)

- *1. An affidavit of a renewal of a chattel mortgage in favor of a corporation after it is received and filed by the register of deeds of the county is not void, so as not to impart constructive notice of the lien of the mortgage, by reason of the fact that the affidavit is sworn to by an officer of the corporation before a notary public, who is an officer and stockholder in said corporation.
2. The act of the notary public in administering the oath in such case is ministerial, and not judicial, and is at most voidable, not void.
3. A chattel mortgage regular upon its face, duly filed for record, and accompanied by an affidavit of renewal, filed in proper time, and regular upon its face and regular in fact, except for the latent defect that the notary public who administered the oath was a stockholder in the mortgagee corporation, imparts notice as fully as if such defect did not exist.

(January 7, 1905.)

ERROR to the District Court for McPherson County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to enforce a chattel mortgage. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Frank Doster and Prigg & Williams, for plaintiffs in error:

The affidavit of renewal of plaintiff's mortgage was verified before an officer disqualified by his interest to administer the oath, and was, therefore, void.

Warner v. Warner, 11 Kan. 121; Docking v. Frazell, 34 Kan. 29, 7 Pac. 618; Carr v. Hooper, 48 Kan. 256, 29 Pac. 398; Wills v. Wood, 28 Kan. 411; Davis v. Beazley, 75 Va. 491; Wilson v. Traer, 20 Iowa, 231; City Bank v. Radtke, 87 Iowa, 363, 54 N. W. 435; White v. Connelly, 105 N. C. 65, 11 S. E. 177; Turner v. Connelly, 105 N. C. 72, 11 S. E. 179; Stevenson v. Brasher, 90 Ky. 23, 13 S. W. 242; Beaman v. Whitney, 20 Me. 413; Goodhue v. Berrien, 2 Sandf. Ch. 630; Hogans v. Carruth, 18 Fla. 587; Groesbeck v. Seeley, 13 Mich. 329; Laprad v. Sherwood, 79 Mich. 520, 44 N. W.

*Headnotes by SMITH, J.

NOTE.—As to validity of acknowledgment taken by officer of corporation which is one of the parties, see cases in note to Havemeyer v. Dahn, 33 L. R. A. 337, and the later cases in this series of Cooper v. Hamilton Perpetual Bldg. & L. Asso. 33 L. R. A. 338, and Read v. Toledo Loan Co. 62 L. R. A. 790. 67 L. R. A.

943; Hubble v. Wright, 23 Ind. 322; Hammers v. Dole, 61 Ill. 307; Baater v. Howell, 7 Tex. Civ. App. 198, 26 S. W. 453; Rothschild v. Daugher, 85 Tex. 332, 16 L. R. A. 719, 34 Am. St. Rep. 811, 20 S. W. 142; Wasson v. Connor, 54 Miss. 351; Long v. Crews, 113 N. C. 256, 18 S. E. 499; Green v. Abraham, 43 Ark. 420; Hainey v. Alberry, 73 Mo. 427; 21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law. 2d ed. p. 569.

An instrument acknowledged before a disqualified officer is not entitled to record, and its record does not impart constructive notice.

Smith v. Clark, 100 Iowa, 605, 69 N. W. 1011; Blackman v. Henderson, 116 Iowa, 578, 56 L. R. A. 902, 87 N. W. 655; Withers v. Baird, 7 Watts, 227, 32 Am. Dec. 754, and note; Wasson v. Connor, 54 Miss. 352.

Messrs. Samuel Jones, Ansel R. Clark, and John D. Milliken, for defendant in error:

The affidavit was merely voidable. A voidable instrument is not subject to collateral attack.

Scearingen v. Houser, 37 Kan. 126, 14 Pac. 436; Carr v. Hooper, 48 Kan. 257, 29 Pac. 398; Horkey v. Kendall, 53 Neb. 522, 68 Am. St. Rep. 623, 73 N. W. 953; Keene Guaranty Sav. Bank v. Lawrence, 32 Wash. 572, 73 Pac. 681; Bierer v. Fretz, 32 Kan. 336, 4 Pac. 284; Cooper v. Hamilton Perpetual Bldg. & L. Asso. 97 Tenn. 285, 33 L. R. A. 338, 56 Am. St. Rep. 795, 37 S. W. 12; Reed Fertilizer Co. v. Thomas, 97 Tenn. 478, 37 S. W. 220; Stevens v. Hampton, 46 Mo. 404; Titus v. Johnson, 50 Tex. 224; Bancks v. Ollerton, 26 Eng. L. & Eq. 508; Dobry v. Western Mfg. Co. 57 Neb. 228, 77 N. W. 656; Read v. Toledo Loan Co. 68 Ohio St. 280, 62 L. R. A. 790, 96 Am. St. Rep. 663, 67 N. E. 731; Ferguson v. Smith, 10 Kan. 404; Re Huron, 58 Kan. 154, 36 L. R. A. 822, 62 Am. St. Rep. 614, 48 Pac. 574; 1 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 530; Ogden Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Mensch, 196 Ill. 554, 89 Am. St. Rep. 330, 63 N. E. 1052; Banking House of A. Castetter v. Stewart (Neb.) 98 N. W. 34; Horbach v. Tyrrell, 48 Neb. 514, 37 L. R. A. 434, 67 N. W. 485; Bank of Woodland v. Oberhaus, 125 Cal. 320, 57 Pac. 1070; Bank of Benson v. Hove, 45 Minn. 40, 47 N. W. 449; Stevens v. Hampton, 46 Mo. 408; Heilbrun v. Hammond, 13 Hun, 480; Titus v. Johnson, 50 Tex. 224; National Bank v. Conway, 1 Hughes, 37, Fed. Cas. No. 10,037; Dussaupe v. Burnett, 5 Iowa, 103; Webb, Record of Title, §§ 65, 67; Rousain v. Norton, 53 Minn. 560, 55 N. W. 748; Noerenberg v. Johnson, 51 Minn. 75, 52 N. W. 1069.

Smith, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On November 16, 1896. one H. L. Sturgeon was indebted to the Citizens' State Bank of Sterling, Kansas, in the sum of $858.33, and gave his note to said bank therefor, due on or before April 1, 1897. To secure the payment of this note he gave the said bank a chattel mortgage on 12,000 bushels of corn, a portion of which was described as having been gathered and cribbed, and the remaining was to be gathered and cribbed on lot 280 Broadway street, Sterling, Kansas. This chattel mortgage was filed for record in the office of the register of deeds of Rice county, Kansas, in which county the parties thereto resided, and in which the mortgaged property was located, on the day following its execution. On October 26, 1897, a renewal affidavit in regular form, sworn to by Thomas Atkinson, the cashier of said bank, was filed in the office of the register of deeds of said county. This affidavit was sworn to before Curtis A. Stubbs, a notary public, who, it is admitted, was assistant cashier of, and was a stockholder in, the defendant in error corporation at the time he administered the said oath. Said lot 280 Broadway and lot 282 Broadway are in the same block, and said two lots were in the same inclosure, and evidently contiguous; and the corn for which judgment was rendered was cribbed on lot 282, and not 280, as described in the mortgage. There was no corn cribbed on lot 280. There is also some question as to the particular tract of land upon which the corn was raised.

We have examined the evidence with some care, and think that the mortgage is not void for uncertainty of description of the mortgaged property. It seems evident that a third person having the description given in the chattel mortgage, by the aid of such inquiries as the chattel mortgage itself suggests, could identify the corn which was mortgaged. Mills v. Kansas Lumber Co. 26 Kan. 574. A portion of the corn cribbed on said lot 282 was shelled by said Sturgeon, and sold to plaintiffs in error about September 1, 1898. This action was brought in the district court of Rice county by the defendant in error to recover from the plaintiffs in error the value of the corn so bought of said Sturgeon to the amount remaining unpaid on said note and mortgage to the bank. After one mistrial and a second trial, which resulted in a judgment in favor of the plaintiffs in error, and which judgment was reversed in this court (66 Kan. 761, 71 Pac. 1125), a third trial has resulted in a judgment in favor of the defendant in error. To reverse this last judgment the plaintiffs in error bring the case here again for review. 67 L. R. A.

The plaintiffs in error in their brief make twenty assignments of error, but seem to urge only a few of them. The first and most difficult question presented is, Was the renewal affidavit void by reason of the fact that the notary public who administered the oath was at the time an officer and stockholder of the corporation which was the mortgagee? It is a question upon which the authorities differ. Some of the authorities, by analogy, at least, hold it void; others that it is voidable only. Some authorities reason that such act of an officer interested would be void or voidable, according as the transaction is or is not tainted with fraud, or even undue advantage. That one who is of counsel, or is related to either party, or is otherwise interested in the event of an action, should be barred, even in the absence of our statutory provision, is too evident for discussion. Even administering the oath to an affidavit in a judicial proceeding by an officer interested in establishing the facts sworn to, especially as the officer may also write the affidavit, apparently gives opportunity for undue advantage, and the act of the officer savors more of a judicial proceeding. In the case at bar the statute by implication makes the filing of the chattel mortgage or a copy of it in the office of the register of deeds of the proper county notice of the rights of the mortgagee under the mortgage for the period of one year from the date of the mortgage, and if within thirty days prior to the expiration of the year an affidavit is filed setting forth the required facts, such notice is by implication extended for another year. The affidavit proves no fact upon which any tribunal or person has to pass; in fact the statute expressly provides (differing from most other records) that a duly certified copy of same shall be received as evidence of no other fact except that "the affidavit was received and filed according to the indorsement." It simply allows the warning to creditors, subsequent purchasers, and mortgagees to stand for another year. It is not apparent how anyone other than the mortgagee could be prejudiced by even a false statement in the affidavit, unless it should state an exaggerated or fictitious amount due on the mortgage to shield the property of the debtor from the other creditors who might look to it to satisfy their claims. If such a case should arise, a remedy could be found. The instrument in question is "a written declaration under oath, made without notice to the adverse party." It was sworn to before an officer authorized by law to administer oaths. It states the facts required by statute to be stated in a renewal affidavit. It is sufficient in all respects to continue the life and notice of the mortgage lien, unless it is absolutely void by reason of the interest of the notary public who administered the oath. The weight of authority seems to be that it is not void, but at most only voidable. In Swearingen v. Howser, 37 Kan. 126, 14 Pac. 436, an affidavit in a judicial proceeding sworn to before a notary public who was the attorney of record of the affiant in the proceeding was held to be at most only voidable, and the reasons for holding the affidavit void in that case seem much stronger than in this case. That decision has not been reversed. The case of Wills v. Wood, 28 Kan. 411, is not in point. This case decides that an interested party was incompetent to take an acknowledgment to a conveyance of an estate, it being a quasi-judicial proceeding. In such case the officer conclusively determines and certifies to a fact, and his certificate of the same is taken as evidence thereof the civilized world over. Not so in this case. The case of Wills v. Wood was decided before Swearingen v. Howser, 37 Kan. 126, 14 Pac. 436, yet was not mentioned in the latter case, as it probably would have been if this court had considered it conflicting, or that it deserved to be distinguished. In this case the notary public simply administered the oath and certified to that fact. He determined nothing. His act was purely ministerial, and at most only voidable by reason of his interest, and we do not decide that it was voidable even.

We have examined the other assignments of error in this case, and do not find any unsettled questions of law to elaborate. We do not think the court erred in overruling the demurrer to plaintiff's evidence, nor that it committed any material error in admitting or excluding evidence or in giving or refusing to give instructions.

The judgment of the District Court will be affirmed.

All the Justices concur.

WEST VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

Edgar D. TURNER, Appt.,

v.

William McCORMICK.

(.....W. Va.....)

- *1. An acceptance in writing of a formal and carefully prepared option of sale of land, within the time allowed by it for acceptance, using the formal words, "according to terms of the option given me," to which there is added, by the conjunction "and," a request for a departure from its terms as to the time and place of performance, is unconditional, and converts the option into an executory contract of sale.
2. A mere request by one of the parties thereto for an alteration or modification of a fully accepted proposed contract, which by acceptance has been wrought into a blinding contract, is not a breach thereof, giving right of rescission thereof or action thereon. Neither does it effect such alteration, unless assented to by the other party.
3. Such request relates to performance of the contract, and is not an element in the making thereof, although written and connected as aforesaid, with the acceptance, on a single sheet of paper, so as to make of the acceptance and request a compound sentence.

(November 1, 1904.)

*Headnotes by POFFENBARGER, P.

NOTE.—As to rights conferred by "refusal" or "option," including question of what constitutes an acceptance, see also note to Litz v. Goosling, 21 L. R. A. 127; and the later case in this series of Dyer v. Duffy, 24 L. R. A. 839. 67 L. R. A.

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Monongalia County sustaining a demurrer to a bill seeking specific performance of contracts for the sale of coal. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. H. L. Robinson and Moreland & Glascock, for appellant:

The law draws a very clear distinction between matters made material and essential to the making or coming into existence of a contract and matters material to its proper performance. If not essential terms of the contract, a collateral arrangement as to these matters, or a proposal by either party of such an arrangement, not inconsistent with the contract, cannot be held to have interfered with the meeting of the minds of the parties completely and fully on the terms contained in the original proposal where that is unequivocally and unconditionally accepted.

Watson v. Coast, 35 W. Va. 463, 14 S. E. 249; Valpy v. Gibson, 4 C. B. 864.

An acceptance may be complete though it express dissatisfaction at some of the terms, if the dissatisfaction stops short of dissent, so that the whole thing may be described as a "grumbling assent."

3 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 854, note; Matteson v. Scofield, 27 Wis. 671; Fitzhugh v. Jones, 6 Munf. 83; Neufville v. Stuart, 1 Hill, Eq. 159.

Mr. Henry M. Russell, for appellee:

The notice was not a plain and unconditional acceptance of the options, but it was an attempted acceptance incorporating conditions with respect to time and place which did not constitute a proper acceptance within the established rules.

Weaver v. Burr, 31 W. Va. 736, 3 L. R. A. 94, 8 S. E. 743; Barrett v. McAllister, 33 W. Va. 738, 11 S. E. 220; Dyer v. Duffy, 39 W. Va. 148, 24 L. R. A. 339, 19 S. E. 540; Potts v. Whitehead, 23 N. J. Eq. 512; Sawyer v. Brossart, 67 Iowa, 678, 56 Am. Rep. 371, 25 N. W. 876; Corcoran v. White, 117 Ill. 118, 57 Am. Rep. 858, 7 N. E. 525; Coffin v. Portland, 43 Fed. 411; Larned v. Wentworth, 114 Ga. 208, 39 S. E. 855.

Mr. W. S. Meredith, also for appellee:

In unilateral contracts, called options, the time fixed for the acceptance is of the essence of the contract.

Dyer v. Duffy, 39 W. Va. 148, 24 L. R. A. 339, 19 S. E. 540.

If to the acceptance a condition be fixed, or any modification or change in the offer be requested by the party to whom the offer is made, this, in law, constitutes a rejection of the offer.

Weaver v. Burr, 31 W. Va. 744, 3 L. R. A. 94, 8 S. E. 743; 1 Benjamin, Sales, § 39; 1 Parsons, Contr. 475, 476; 1 Chitty, Contr. 15, 16; 1 Story, Contr. § 502; Ocean Ins. Co. v. Carrington, 3 Conn. 357; Hamilton v. Lycoming Mut. Ins. Co. 5 Pa. 339; Boston & M. R. Co. v. Bartlett, 3 Cush. 225; Eliason v. Henshaw, 4 Wheat. 225, 4 L. ed. 556; Robinson v. Weller, 81 Ga. 704, 8 S. E. 449; Northwestern Iron Co. v. Meade, 21 Wis. 475, 94 Am. Dec. 557; Egger v. Nesbitt, 122 Mo. 667, 43 Am. St. Rep. 596, 27 S. W. 385; 1 Beach, Modern Law of Contracts, 51.

Poffenbarger, P., delivered the opinion of the court:

In this case the circuit court sustained a demurrer to a bill praying the specific performance of two alleged contracts for the sale of the Pittsburg vein of coal, underlying two separate tracts of land in Monongalia county. The owner of the land executed two options of sale to the plaintiff, each of which provided that it should be accepted within a certain time, and, if not so accepted, it should be void. The demurrer was sustained upon the theory that what is relied upon in the bill as constituting acceptance is insufficient, because it sought to introduce a new element into the proposed contract, and make, not the contract originally proposed, but a new and different contract. The first option bears date December 31, 1901; was executed by William McCormick, as party of the first part, and E. D. Turner, as party of the second part; 67 L. R. A.

covers the coal in a tract of about 150 acres at the price of $50 per acre, one third to be paid in cash on delivery of deed, and the balance in two equal annual payments; and provides, as to acceptance, that "the party of the first part agrees that the party of the second part shall have until the 1st day of March, 1902, to accept the coal herein described as the same may be determined by the county surveyor. . . . And, if the party of the second part does not give notice of such acceptance by said date, this contract shall be void, and of no further effect." The other option, executed by the same parties, is dated February 2, 1902: covers the Pittsburg vein of coal in and underlying a tract containing about 104 acres, at the price of $41 per acre, one third to be paid in cash on delivery of deed, and the balance in two equal annual payments; and provides, as to acceptance, that "if the second party, heirs, or assigns, fails to notify said first party in writing, on or before the 1st day of March, 1902, that he or they elect to purchase said coal, then this agreement is to be considered as rescinded, null and void, and neither party to be bound thereby or liable in any way." As to performance and the consummation of the proposed sale, the written option provided as follows: "The first party shall and will, within ninety days, after the notice in writing that the said second party, his heirs or assigns, elect to purchase said coal at his own proper cost and charge, make, execute, and deliver to the said second party, his heirs or assigns, a good and sufficient deed or deeds for said coal and mining rights, in fee simple, clear of all encumbrances, with clause of general warranty," etc. The first option does not require acceptance in writing, nor performance within ninety days after notice of acceptance. The second does impose these conditions. Besides alleging a verbal acceptance of both of these options on the 21st day of February, 1902, the bill avers an acceptance and notice thereof in writing, and sets out a copy of the notice of acceptance, which reads as follows:

Morgantown, W. Va., Feb. 21, 1902.

William McCormick:—

I hereby notify you that your coal will be accepted according to terms of the option given to me on same and respectfully request you to make delivery of deed, with abstract of title, to me, in Morgantown, W. Va., on Saturday, June 28th, 1902, hour and place to be decided later.

Yours truly,

E. D. Turner.

Two objections to the written acceptance are urged. One of these relates to the first clause, and is that its language relates to the future, and imports a promise to accept, and not to notice of a completed acceptance. The other objection is that the request that deed be made on June 28, 1902, in Morgantown, at an hour and place thereafter to be decided, superadded to the alleged notice of acceptance, made it conditional, and not absolute, by attempting to introduce new terms into the proposed contract. Acceptance of the first option gave the right to have immediate performance, and allowed no time to the vendor in which to perform thereafter. Absolute acceptance of the second option would have included, as one of the terms thereof, an agreement that the vendor should have ninety days within which to tender the deed. As it required acceptance on or before the 1st day of March, 1902, and performance within ninety days thereafter, the request or condition in the notice that the deed be delivered on the 28th day of June, 1902, named a date more than ninety days after the 1st day of March, the limit for acceptance, and one more than ninety days after the notice of acceptance.

The first objection overlooks the substantial and legal meaning of the terms, and amounts to a mere criticism of the phraseology. By turning this weapon upon the appellees themselves, their contention is completely overthrown. The language is not that the option will be accepted, but that the coal will be accepted in the future; and the contract itself contemplates performance in future, and after acceptance of the option. It is in the very nature of a contract that it shall be first made, and then performed. Moreover, the language of the acceptance, in strictness, more nearly conforms to the language of the contract than that which it is said should have been used. The provision of the option as to notice of acceptance uses this language: "That he or they elect to purchase said coal." It requires notice of intention and election to do a thing in the future. Hence it may be said, without doing any violence to the language of the option, that notice of an election to purchase according to the terms of the option should be understood and deemed to carry with it, by necessary implication, prior or contemporaneous acceptance of the terms of the option. Acceptance of the coal according to the terms of the option could not take place without a full accession to all the terms of the option. To this it may be added that it is not usual to refer to the instrument by its date or otherwise, and merely say it is accepted or its terms agreed to. Thus, in Watson v. Coast, 35 W. Va. 47 L. R. A.

463, 14 S. E. 249, the vendee had telegraphed as follows: "Will take the property. Meet me at Toronto first train. Answer." Another telegram responding to another proposal was: "Will accept your proposal." No substantial distinction between these forms of acceptance was discovered. In both instances the future tense was used. In Barrett v. McAllister, 33 W. Va. 738, 11 S. E. 220, there was a verbal notice in which the plaintiff told the defendant, after looking over the land, he was satisfied with it, and was ready to pay the money when the deed should be made. Then a day or two afterwards he wrote a letter in which he said: "I am here at your place of business ready to take the land and pay the money whenever the deed is made." In these instances the language, with one exception, related to performance, and it never occurred to anybody to question its sufficiency on that ground. In the same case, at page 745, 33 W. Va. and page 222, 11 S. E. Judge Brannon took this view. He said: "Why talk about the execution of a deed if the land was not satisfactory? Why talk about a deed if Barrett had not accepted the option? The fact that they so talked about a deed proves that Barrett had accepted the option and informed McAllister of it. Indeed, this conversation about a deed is of itself acceptance."

But it is further urged that the reference to the future in the first clause coupled with the request in the second clause, bears out the theory of a promise to accept in the future, and precludes the view that the writing conveys notice of a prior or contemporaneous acceptance. It has already been pointed out that the declaration of intent to take the coal in accordance with the terms of the option presupposes and necessarily implies present or past acceptance of the terms. The notice does not say, "I will take the coal according to the terms of the option on the 28th day of June," or "if you will deliver the deed on the 28th day of June." Its terms are positive. The notice is that the coal will be accepted according to the terms of the option given. This is followed by a request, not a condition, that the deed be delivered on the 28th day of June, instead of at an earlier date. To couple the two clauses in the manner suggested would be to depart from the plain, common-sense meaning of the notice. It would do violence, also, to the grammatical construction of the notice. No reason is given why the latter clause limits and qualifies the former. It is not pointed out, nor even suggested, that the rules of grammatical construction require it, nor that the two clauses have such logical connection. The copulative conjunction used simply makes grammatical connection of the two clauses. It does not make them mutually dependent, nor the former conditional.

Yielding the first contention for the purpose of argument, counsel for appellee say that if the first clause, standing alone, would amount to unconditional acceptance, converting the option into a contract binding upon both parties, the addition of the request that delivery of the deed be made on the 28th day of June,—a date more than ninety days after acceptance, and after the time in which acceptance could be made,—renders the notice insufficient. They say this request does not relate to performance of the contract after the making thereof as proposed, and that the insertion thereof in the written notice was an attempt to ingraft upon the contract proposed conditions or terms not embodied in the original proposition; and, as the bill does not show any acceptance in writing of this new condition, the effort to change the original proposition has failed, and no contract has been made. If this last clause of the deed thus qualified the first, it would work a change as to the time of payment of the purchase money and delivery of the deed. It would also designate a place of payment as to which the options are silent. The bill avers, as the reason for requesting delivery on the 28th day of June, that the plaintiff had similar options upon the coal underlying several other tracts of land in the neighborhood of those owned by the defendant, and desired to close them all on the same day; it being his purpose to obtain an aggregate of 1,000 or 1,200 acres of coal in a body. While this averment is not important, it well illustrates the fact that such a request may be added to an acceptance for a good purpose, and it does not necessarily indicate an intention to change the terms of the proposed contract. The plaintiff desired the land, and was willing to take it and pay for it. He preferred to close all the options on the same day, and therefore added this request. Suppose he had on one day put the first part of the notice in writing, and sent it to the defendant. That would have closed the contract undoubtedly. Then suppose on the next day he had written a request that the performance be delayed until the 28th of June. That would not have been a repudiation of the contract. It would have been a mere request for an extension of time. The defendant could not have treated the contract as broken for that reason. He could have enforced it notwithstanding this request. The mere fact that the acceptance and the request are in juxtaposition, standing in the same sentence, united by a conjunction, does not change their character or legal sense.

The contention of counsel for appellee, is unsupported by authority. "If an offer is accepted as made, the acceptance is not conditional, and does not vary from the offer, because of inquiries whether the offerer will change his terms, or as to future acts, or the expression of a hope or suggestions, etc." 9 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 269. "Plaintiff answered a proposition to lease, 'I will accept your offer to lease to you at $200 per year for three or five years as you choose.' Defendant answered, 'Make out lease for place for five years at $200 per year.' He also said in this letter that he would like to build on a cookroom, with privilege to remove it. Plaintiff recognized that a lease for five years existed. Held, these letters made a lease and the request as to the cookroom did not attach a condition to defendant's acceptance." Culton v. Gilchrist, 92 Iowa, 718, 61 N. W. 384. In Phillips v. Moor, 71 Me. 78, the court held that an acceptance coupled with a request for a modification is an absolute and unconditional acceptance, and closes the contract. In that case the subject of the contract was a lot of hay. The defendant offered $9.50 per ton for part of it, and $5 for the balance. The plaintiff sent him a postal card in reply saying he had hoped the defendant would pay him $10 for his hay of the best quality, and closed by saying, "But you can take the hay at your price, and when you get it hauled in, if you can pay the $10.00 dollars, I would like to have you do it, if the hay proves good enough for the price." The defendant, having received this card on Friday morning, made no reply, and Sunday morning the hay was burned in the barn. The court held that there was a contract, and that, under the peculiar circumstances dispensing with actual delivery, which ordinarily is necessary to the passing of title, the defendant was liable for the price of the hay. In Stevenson v. McLean, L. R. 5 Q. B. Div. 346, the principle is well illustrated. The defendant had certain warrants for iron. He wrote to plaintiffs, asking whether they could get him an offer for them. After some correspondence the defendant fixed a net cash price of 40 shillings per ton, the offer to hold good until the following Monday. On the morning of that day, at 9:42, plaintiffs telegraphed this request: "Please wire whether you would accept forty for delivery over two months, or if not, longest limit you could give." No answer having been received, the defendant, after receipt of this telegram and without having replied to it, sold the warrants, and at 1:25 P. M. telegraphed to the plaintiffs that he had done so. Before the sending of this telegram, the plaintiffs found a purchaser for the iron, and at 1:34 P. M. telegraphed the defendant, stating that they had secured his price. The defendant refused to deliver the iron, and thereupon the plaintiffs brought an action against him for nondelivery, and recovered. The court held that the inquiry as to whether the defendant would modify the terms of his offer was not a rejection of the offer, and, he not having withdrawn the offer before the sale was effected, a binding contract was effected by the acceptance of the plaintiffs upon finding the purchaser at 1:00 P. M., twenty-five minutes prior to the sending of defendant's telegram. The ruling in that case is a very strong adjudication against the contention of the appellee here. The request or suggestion for modification of the offer made before its acceptance might well have been regarded as an indication of a purpose not to accept. Here the acceptance precedes the request for a modification.

Among the cases relied upon as authority sustaining the action of the court in dismissing the bill is that of Potts v. Whitehead, 23 N. J. Eq. 512. The report of the case in that volume does not set out the fact fully. They are given at length in 20 N. J. Eq. 55. There it is shown that the offer was such that an unqualified acceptance of it would not have constituted a contract, for the offer and acceptance would have left open to further negotiation important elements of the contract. In that case the defendant signed a paper embodying an offer to sell certain land in consideration of $20 per acre; $500 of the price to be paid on the execution of a deed, and the balance to be secured by a mortgage on the land, with interest at 6 per cent. When the deferred payments of the purchase money should become due was not stated, and this paper and the alleged acceptance did not fix any time. If the latter had, it would not have been binding, unless assented to by the defendant. This was one ground of the decision of the chancellor, holding that there was no contract. The alleged acceptance said: "Have twice attempted the tender of the first payment of $500.00 upon the agreement made between us on the 7th of December last. I will meet you, . . . when I shall be ready to make tender of the money and execute the proper agreements thereupon." This acceptance did not say, as does the one under consideration here, that the plaintiff would take the property in accordance with the terms of the agreement. He said he would pay $500 upon the agreement and execute the proper agreement thereupon. There is scarcely a resemblance between the two papers. What was meant by "proper agreement," the court had no means of knowing. He might have meant such agreements as were just and fair, or such as the offer indicated. The paper was indefinite and ambiguous. Respecting it, the chancellor said: "It doubtless might fairly be inferred from this letter that the complainant intended to accept the offer in some way, and expected to enter into an agreement for the purchase of this property, at the price fixed, but he did not bind himself so to do."

Another case relied upon is Sawyer v. Brossart, 67 Iowa, 678, 56 Am. Rep. 371, 25 N. W. 876. In that case the defendant, a resident of Los Angeles, California, offered for sale, by letter, two business rooms in Iowa City, saying to the plaintiff: "You can have that building for thirty-five hundred dollars, or the two for $5,000. Let me hear from you at once." The alleged acceptance was by telegram from Iowa City, saying: "Accept your offer for two buildings at five thousand dollars. Money at your order at First National Bank here." The court held that the defendant "was entitled, under his offer, to have the money paid to him at his place of residence, and to deliver the deed there, and that, as the acceptance of plaintiff was not an acceptance of the offer as made, it did not bind B.," the plaintiff. It is to be noted here that the plaintiff did not request permission to pay the money into the bank to the defendant's credit at Iowa City, but said, in effect, that the money had been paid there to his credit. Therefore the payment into the bank at Iowa City was made a part of the acceptance. By such payment and notice, plaintiff attempted to add a new condition to the contract proposed, which was silent as to the place of payment, and therefore, in law, contemplated payment at Los Angeles. It was not an unqualified acceptance, coupled with a request for permission to pay at Iowa City. Corcoran v. White, 117 Ill. 118, 57 Am. Rep. 858, 7 N. E. 525, does not support the position taken by the appellee. The letter purporting to be an acceptance said the party would accept the offer, provided the title was perfect. It further said: "I will call at your office Monday at 10 o'clock, at which time I can get the abstract and have it examined." The common sense of this letter was that the writer had not accepted, and would not accept if he did not find the title perfect. In Coffin v. Portland, 43 Fed. 411, relating to an attempted sale of bonds, the letter said: "We will take your . . . bonds . . . at par, you to furnish us written opinion of your city attorney as to legality of bonds, certified copy of council proceedings and ordinance, certified statement of your city debts, assessed value of your taxables, probable real value, the amount of your debt, and your present [approximate] population." After putting upon its minutes an acceptance of this proposition to purchase, the council passed a resolution rescinding what the resolution called a contract, and accepted the proposition of another person for the same bonds. The court says in its opinion: "It is more reasonable to regard the proposition of the plaintiffs in this respect as being conditional, and the acceptance of it as being upon the same condition. This being so, the plaintiffs, of course, have no right of action." What is meant by this is that there had not been, in fact, any proposition to buy, or acceptance of such proposition. The plaintiffs were simply considering the advisability of purchasing, and, in the exercise of prudence, desired to examine all the proceedings relating to the issue before making an unqualified proposition to buy. There is nothing in that case that seems to have any bearing upon the question under consideration here.

Three cases referred to in one of the briefs for the appellee are, in all material respects, alike. They are Robinson v. Weller, 81 Ga. 704, 8 S. E. 449; Northwestern Iron Co. v. Meade, 21 Wis. 475, 94 Am. Dec. 557; and Egger v. Nesbitt, 122 Mo. 667, 43 Am. St. Rep. 596, 27 S. W. 385. They enunciate the proposition that an acceptance of an offer to sell land, but fixing a different place for the delivery of the deed and payment of the money than the residence of the offerer, or the place named in the offer, is not an unconditional acceptance, so as to bind the seller. This is asserted by several cases. Gilbert v. Baxter, 71 Iowa, 327, 32 N. W. 364; Langellier v. Schaefer, 36 Minn. 361, 31 N. W. 690. But they are all cases arising upon loose, informal correspondence, making it necessary to look to the whole of each paper to ascertain the true meaning and intent of the parties. None of the letters relied upon as acceptances said an offer was accepted in accordance with its terms, or that the property would be taken according to the terms of the letter of proposal. In none of them was the word "request" used, after language of unequivocal and definite acceptance, as in this case. In Robinson v. Weller the reply said: "Offer accepted. Money ready; send deeds at once." In Northwestern Iron Co. v. Meade, the letter said: "If this is the very best offer you can make, you may properly execute the within deed," etc. In Egger v. Nesbitt the reply said: "I will accept your proposition, with the understanding that you will deliver to me all papers," etc. Owing to the distinctions pointed out, these precedents are not regarded as applicable or controlling in the present case.

Moreover, the reasoning in some of these cases is not entirely satisfactory. Nor does it seem to accord with principles announced in Watson v. Coast, 35 W. Va. 463, 14 S. E. 249. If a man says, "I accept your offer," that makes a contract. It assents to all the terms of the offer. What more is necessary? There is a complete aggregatio mentium. The acceptance conforms to the offer in every particular. How can a mere request, relating, not to the making of the contract, but to its performance, be deemed to change it? Would the acceptor be permitted to excuse himself from performance on the ground of such request? No precedent of that kind has been found. They are all cases in which the proposer, desiring to escape from the consequences of his offer, because somebody else has proposed a higher price than the first asked, seeks to repudiate the transaction and sell to the other party. Property rights are sacred, and should be well guarded by the law; but, when a man has deliberately made a fair contract of sale, he ought not to be permitted to avoid it on some flimsy pretext, in order to avail himself of a better bargain. Time and place of payment, when not mentioned in an accepted offer, are fixed by law, and are matters of performance, carrying out the contract,—a thing wholly distinct and separate from the making of the agreement. If, contemporaneously with or subsequent to the making of the contract, either party suggest, request, or propose a time, place, or mode of performance different from that agreed upon, that does not of itself effect such change, nor does it cause a breach, giving right of action or rescission to the other party. Swiger v. Hayman (decided at this term) 48 S. E. 839. Either can compel the other to perform the contract as made. He may ignore the suggested, requested, or proposed alteration of or deviation from the contract, as to the performance thereof. Watson v. Coast, 35 W. Va. 463, 14 S. E. 249. But if the suggested departure in performance is not accompanied by a declaration of unqualified and unconditional acceptance of the offer, it would be otherwise, of course. Some of the cases here referred to disclosed such acceptance, and others did not. The former do not harmonize with the principles enunciated by this court, and the latter do.

As much weight is accorded to the use of the word "request" here, and some of the books say that, if a request for a modification be made, it is deemed a rejection of the proposal, a case illustrating this rule will be noticed. It is Burmester v. Phillips, 25 Fed. 805. Burmester & Company, of Charleston, South Carolina, on the 14th day of March, 1885, wrote Phillips & Company, of Fredericksburg, Virginia, as follows: "On receipt of letter [you] can ship us a cargo of 10 to 15,000 bushels choice dry Rappahannock white corn at 51 cents, free on board, freight 7 cents a bushel." Phillips & Company did not have the corn, but on the 16th of the same month they replied that they were endeavoring to get it. On the 20th they wrote that they could get it at the price, and were then endeavoring to secure a vessel to carry it at 7 cents. On March 23d, Burmester & Company wrote that they hoped Phillips & Company would succeed in getting a vessel promptly, and gave some directions about ship's papers. On the 30th Phillips & Company wrote that they hoped to succeed in getting a vessel, and, if so, would observe the directions about ship's papers. On April 4th Phillips & Company notified Burmester & Company by wire that they had succeeded in getting a vessel, and that as soon as she arrived at the landing they would advise, and that they would send a letter giving particulars. To this Burmester & Company replied by letter of April 4th that they were awaiting letter's arrival as to particulars. On April 9th Phillips & Company reported that the vessel had arrived, and would be ready to receive the cargo on the following Saturday, and that they would draw for the cargo at sight, without grace, etc. To this Burmester & Company made no reply. On April 11th Phillips & Company telegraphed as follows: "Not hearing from you, we have resold the cargo of corn." Burmester & Company telegraphed back that they had not canceled the order, and would expect cargo as ordered. Burmester & Company afterwards sued, and the court held as follows: "The letter and telegram of the 4th of April were a new proposal, and that the failure of the Charleston house to answer before the 11th prevented the meeting of minds necessary to a contract, so that there was no contract, and defendants were at liberty to resell." In the opinion the court applied general principles, expressed as follows: "If a condition be affixed by the party to whom the offer is made or any modification or change in the offer be requested, this constitutes, in law, a rejection of the offer, and a new proposal, equally ineffectual to complete the contract until assented to by the first proposer." In the light of the facts in that case as above stated, the proposition is sound and applicable.

Instead of accepting Burmester & Company's proposition for an immediate shipment, Phillips & Company announced their inability to do so, and made a counter proposition to obtain and ship the corn later. This was a request for a new contract, different from the one first proposed. The court held that to be a rejection of the first proposition. It being a new proposal on the part of Phillips & Company, not accepted by Burmester & Company, but treated with silence, there was no contract between the parties. There was no pretense of an acceptance of the original proposal of purchase.

This somewhat lengthy review of the authorities bearing upon the question seems to establish the following propositions: First, a request for a change or modification of a proposed contract, made before an acceptance thereof, amounts to a rejection of it; second, a mere inquiry as to whether the proposer will alter or modify its terms, made before acceptance or rejection, does not amount to a rejection, and, if the offer be not withdrawn before acceptance made within a reasonable time, the offer becomes a binding contract; third, a request, suggestion, or proposal of alteration or modification, made after unconditional acceptance, and not assented to by the opposite party, does not affect the contract put in force and effect by the acceptance, nor amount to a breach thereof, giving right of rescission; fourth, acceptance of a formal and carefully prepared option of sale of land, within the time by it allowed, and according to its terms, although accompanied by a request for a departure from its terms as to the time and place of performance, is an unconditional acceptance, and converts the option into an executory contract of sale, provided the request be not so worded as to limit or qualify the acceptance.

The bill alleges a verbal acceptance of both options at the time of delivery of the acceptance in writing, and a verbal agreement extending the time of performance until June 28th. These allegations have provoked a good deal of argument on the subject of extensions of time of performance and alterations of written contracts by parol agreement. The conclusion above indicated renders it unnecessary to go into these questions, or to examine the authorities cited as bearing upon them.

Our conclusion is that the acceptance in writing of the second proposal is unconditional, and converts the proposal into a binding contract. The other option does not require the acceptance to be in writing.

It was verbally accepted, and that is sufficient, when the option does not require a written acceptance. Weaver v. Burr, 31 W. Va. 736, 3 L. R. A. 94, 8 S. E. 743; Watson v. Coast, 35 W. Va. 463, 14 S. E. 249; Barrett v. McAllister, 33 W. Va. 745, 11

S. E. 220; Creigh v. Boggs, 19 W. Va. 240; Capehart v. Hale, 6 W. Va. 547.

For the foregoing reasons, the decree complained of is reversed, the demurrer overruled and the cause is remanded for further proceedings.

WYOMING SUPREME COURT.

John A. JONES et al., Plffs. in Err.,
v.

Margaret H. BOWMAN.

(.....Wyo.....)

1. Religious belief will not, in the absence of statutory requirement, be taken into consideration in determining the proper custodian for an infant.
2. A guardian appointed for an infant by a court in one state will not, on the ground of comity, be given custody of the child, against its best interests by the courts of another state into which the child has been taken, although the child was removed from the state where the guardian was appointed contemporaneously with, and possibly for the purpose of escaping the effect of proceedings for, the guardian's appointment.
3. In determining the question of the proper custody of an infant, that disposal should be made, if possible, which will keep the family together.

(July 6, 1904.)

ERROR to the District Court for Johnson County to review a judgment in favor of petitioner in a habeas corpus proceeding instituted to restore the custody of Ida May Bowman to her legally appointed guardian. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Parmelee & Hill, for plaintiffs in error:

The removal from the county deprived the probate court of that county of jurisdiction; and an appointment made without jurisdiction is void.

State ex rel. Giroux v. Giroux, 19 Mont. 149, 47 Pac. 800.

The authority of Miss Bowman as guardian was at all events local, and her power over the ward confined to the state of Minnesota.

Story, Conf. L. § 499.

While acting as guardian under proper authority, the custody of the child by Mr.

Jones could not in any sense be said to be unlawful.

Woerner, Guardianship, p. 159.

A demand is necessary before bringing legal proceedings, and no demand was made. 9 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 242.

The welfare of the child is the paramount consideration, and must control the custody, even as against the legal guardian.

Woerner, Guardianship, 159; Re Welch, 74 N. Y. 299; Wilcox v. Wilcox, 14 N. Y. 576; People ex rel. Pruyn v. Walts, 122 N. Y. 238, 25 N. E. 266; Church, Habeas Corpus, § 446; Re Bullen, 28 Kan. 781; Hochheimer, Custody of Infants, §§ 44, 46.

Even if Miss Bowman had been at the time the legal guardian of the child, and the plaintiffs in error had forcibly taken her away, it does not follow that she should be restored to Miss Bowman.

Foster v. Alston, 6 How. (Miss.) 406; Hochheimer, Custody of Infants, § 18.

In selecting a custodian of a child a preference will be given to one of the same lineage with the parents.

Re Doyle, 16 Mo. App. 159.

Mr. John W. Lacey also for plaintiffs in error.

Mr. Gibson Clark, for defendant in error:

A determination by a court or judge of habeas corpus proceedings is not a final order upon which proceedings in error may be predicated, because it does not affect a "substantial right," nor does it "determine the action."

21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 129; Miskimins v. Shaver, 8 Wyo. 392, 49 L. R. A. 831, 58 Pac. 411; 11 Enc. Pl. & Pr. p. 820; 9 Enc. Pl. & Pr. p. 1072; Ex parte Thompson, 93 Ill. 89.

The state statute extends the appellate jurisdiction of the supreme court to "a judgment rendered, or a final order made, by the district court," not to a judgment or final order by a district judge.

NOTE.—For other cases in this series as to right to custody of child, see Sheers v. Stein, 5 L. R. A. 781; Weir v. Marley, 6 L. R. A. 672; Whalen v. Olmstead, 15 L. R. A. 593; Re Lally, 16 L. R. A. 681; Van Walters v. Children's Guardians, 18 L. R. A. 481; Kelsey v. Green, 38 L. R. A. 471; Stringfellow v. Somers, 67 L. R. A.

ville, 40 L. R. A. 623; Anderson v. Young, 44 L. R. A. 277; Prieto v. St. Alphonsus Convent of Mercy, 47 L. R. A. 656; Hibbette v. Balna, 51 L. R. A. 839; Stapleton v. Poynter, 53 L. R. A. 784, and State ex rel. Lasserre v. Michel, 54 L. R. A. 927.

Hammond v. People, 32 Ill. 446, 83 Am. Dec. 286.

Appellate procedure was never invented to review matters lying in the judicial discretion.

Elliott, App. Proc. § 598; Powell, App. Proc. p. 322.

The determination in question is a matter of discretion.

Church, Habeas Corpus, § 389; Jenkins v. Clark, 71 Iowa, 552, 32 N. W. 504; People ex rel. Brush v. Brown, 103 N. Y. 684, 9 N. E. 327; Re Welch, 74 N. Y. 299; State ex rel. Lembke v. Bechdel, 38 Minn. 278, 37 N. W. 338; People ex rel. Pruyn v. Walts, 122 N. Y. 238, 25 N. E. 266; State v. Noble, 70 Iowa, 174, 30 N. W. 396.

The boy Oscar, being a minor, could not change his own domicil, much less that of his sister.

The domicil of the children is that of the father.

10 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 112.

Upon the death of the father and mother the children became wards of the probate court having jurisdiction over said domicil, and that court is the one to appoint a guardian over such children.

Jenkins v. Clark, 71 Iowa, 552, 32 N. W. 504; Wells v. Andrews, 60 Miss. 373; Re Hubbard, 82 N. Y. 90; Lewis v. Castello, 17 Mo. App. 593; Montgomery v. Smith, 3 Dana, 600; Allgood v. Williams, 92 Ala. 551, 8 So. 722; Woerner, Guardianship, § 26; 9 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 94; 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 33; De Jarnett v. Harper, 45 Mo. App. 415.

As the aforesaid court appointed Marguerite Bowman as guardian for the child, the district court of Johnson county, Wyoming, could not have had the power to act on the subject-matter before it in that instance, as neither the residence, property, or domicil of said minor lay within its jurisdiction.

The doctrine of comity between states allows the foreign guardian to recover her ward.

Woodworth v. Spring, 4 Allen, 324; Church, Habeas Corpus, § 457d; Taylor v. Jeter, 33 Ga. 195, 81 Am. Dec. 202; Warren v. Hofer, 13 Ind. 167; Townsend v. Kendall, 4 Minn. 412, 77 Am. Dec. 534, Gil. 315; People ex rel. Allen v. Allen, 105 N. Y. 628, 11 N. E. 143.

Knight, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant in error, Margaret Bowman, plaintiff below, under the habeas corpus act by petition alleged that Ida May Bowman, at that time—May, 1900—of the age of 67 L. R. A.

five years, was unlawfully restrained of her liberty by J. A. Jones and Ella Jones, plaintiffs in error here, at their residence in the town of Buffalo, in Johnson county, Wyoming, without legal justification, they having caused said Ida May Bowman to be forcibly abducted and spirited away from said petitioner. Margaret Bowman, in the city of St. Paul, Minnesota, on or about February 15, 1900, said petitioner being at the time the qualified and acting guardian of said Ida May Bowman, an orphan, and the child of her brother, John J. Bowman, who on his deathbed gave said child into her charge: and that subsequently and within a few days thereafter said petitioner was duly appointed the guardian of said child by the probate court of Ramsey county, state of Minnesota. In obedience to a writ of habeas corpus, the defendants there, John A. Jones and Ella Jones, his wife, brought the child, Ida May Bowman, into the district court of Johnson county, Wyoming, where the testimony of witnesses then present and the depositions of others then absent was heard at great length, and the court found for the petitioner, Margaret Bowman, awarding to her the custody of said child, Ida May Bowman, and gave its judgment to that effect, and for costs. To that judgment plaintiffs in error, John A. Jones and Ella Jones, his wife, duly excepted, and come here on error.

It seems to be necessary and proper to say, to start with, that it is evident throughout this case that most of the difficulties and disagreements have arisen from differences in religious opinions, and as the statutes of this state not only fail to make any distinction as to religious belief, but absolutely prohibit any distinction being made on account thereof, we cannot and will not give such evidence the slightest weight in our decision, which will be an attempt to decide what shall be best for the welfare of the child, Ida May Bowman, independent thereof, as we fully believe we are authorized to do by all the authorities, when not otherwise directed by statute. We say this because in discussing the facts as shown it might, without this statement, appear that this unfortunate condition might have some consideration in our determination, especially since some reputable courts, by reason of local statutes, have considered such differences of religion. The facts appear to be substantially as follows: John J. Bowman, prior to his death on February 5, 1900, had sought to remove the child, Ida May Bowman, from the care, control, and influence of his sister, Margaret Bowman. Evidence of this fact is beyond dispute, and prior to his death he charged his son Oscar to carry out this wish. Immediately after the funeral the petitioner, Margaret H.

Bowman, informed the boy Oscar that if he and the other relatives insisted on interfering with her care and custody of his sister, Ida May Bowman, she would take her away where he would not see her again; and he says that, believing she would keep her word good, and remembering his promise to his father, he took counsel of a witness, produced by deposition, and was told that the court should order otherwise; he had as much right to care for his little sister as had her aunt; and on the 15th day of February he took the child to his mother's sister, and related to her his promise given his father, and the child was brought to Wyoming by another sister of the mother, and he and a younger brother followed; and the plaintiff in error Ella Jones, and her husband, J. A. Jones, are presented and declared to have illegally received the child, and assisted her little brother Oscar in carrying out the wishes of his dead father, as he had promised to do.

On the 16th of February letters of guardianship were issued to Margaret H. Bowman out of the probate court of Ramsey county, Minnesota, but the child had been, or was being, taken out of the state of Minnesota when these letters of guardianship were issued. The father, John J. Bowman, just before his death, had requested one William F. Beck, who was his friend, to act as guardian of his three children, which included the little girl, Ida May; and the little boy Oscar, in his distress, appealed to Mr. Beck, who, on the 14th day of February, 1900, filed his petition to be appointed the guardian of said Ida May Bowman and of her brothers, J. Oscar Bowman and Charles D. Bowman; and the brother Oscar testifies that, relying on this petition, and upon the advice of the attorney, as above recited, he took the child to his aunt, his mother's sister, as aforesaid. A letter from this little boy to his other aunt, the plaintiff in error here, explains her action in receiving the child Ida May Bowman, and is in evidence:

Dear Aunt Ella:—

Papa died Monday morning. We buried him yesterday. Aunt Marguerite had all the money in the house and wouldn't let us telegraph you. I went to work and Chas to school and just got home about half an hour before he died. Just before I went to work Aunt Marguerite went to get breakfast and I was left alone with Papa. He asked me to remember what he had told me about taking care of Ida and said don't let Aunt Marguerite bring her up. You know I do not wish it and Mama wouldn't like her to. I don't know what to do. I must get her away from Aunt Marguerite and am going to ask Cousin Ida to take care of her. Cousin Eugene can get me a job I think. I haven't made any plans yet but I must have some one else appointed Guardian. I may bring her out there. I wish you were here. for I know mama would like you to have Ida. With love to all I remain.

Your nephew Oscar Bowman.

P. S. Please excuse the pencil as I was in a hurry.

2/8/1900

O. B.

Upon receipt of the above letter, as shown by the evidence, and without information of any action of any court, the plaintiff in error Ella Jones proceeded to the assistance of the boy Oscar, who had already interested his cousin Ida Saunders to take the child Ida May, and save her from being taken where he could never see her again. It is not necessary to recount all that was done. The boy Oscar bravely kept his promise made his father, and, if any further wrong could be done him and his young sister than that already received in this case, it would be for this court to affirm the decision rendered herein, and separate them, which we find the law will not permit us to do.

Margaret H. Bowman, who seeks the custody of this child, is, by her own evidence, without a home, and entirely dependent upon her needle for support; a maiden lady past middle age; and she admits the possibility of her return to Pennsylvania. Upon reaching Wyoming with the child here in controversy, and her brothers Oscar and Charles having followed, plaintiff in error John A. Jones, the husband of Ella Jones, the child's aunt, was duly appointed guardian of the child Ida May Bowman by the district court of Johnson county, Wyoming, and the evidence discloses him to be a man of means, and willing and able to perform the duties thereof. The foregoing statement of facts by no means includes all, but it is sufficient to show that the interest of the child Ida May Bowman should be the sole consideration here. And, while other questions were raised by defendant in error in the brief, it was admitted that the sole question should be that above stated. The trial court seems to have been of the opinion that the action of the probate court in Ramsey county, Minnesota, where Margaret Bowman was appointed guardian of the child Ida May Bowman, precluded the making of the appointment of John A. Jones as her guardian in his court after the child had been brought into the jurisdiction of his court, and at first that question was urged here; but the authorities do not support such a contention.

A leading case in point, and one which calls attention to many others, is found in Re Stockman, 71 Mich. 180, 38 N. W. 876, and in that case the court says, among other things: "Guardians for infants may be appointed by the last will of the parent, instead of by the court, in which case the court will recognize their authority and their control of the ward so long as it is right and proper, and for the best interest of the ward. The powers of a testamentary guardian are just the same precisely as are those of a guardian appointed by the court, and are allowed to be exercised or withheld for the same reasons. Who shall or may be appointed guardian is within the discretion of the court. Relatives of the infant are usually selected, and those nearest of kin are usually preferred when otherwise competent, and as between those entitled the question is to be determined in making the selection is, and always should be, What will be for the best interest of the ward under all the circumstances? It should control everything else." And again, in the same case, the court says: "Comity cannot be considered in a case like this, when the future welfare of the child is the vital question in the case. The good of the child is superior to all other considerations. It is the polar star to guide to the conclusion in all cases of infants, whether the question is raised upon a writ of habeas corpus or in a court of chancery."

The Missouri court of appeals, in the case Re Delano, 37 Mo. App. 185, says: "It has become a settled principle in the jurisprudence both of England and America that the interest of the child . . . is the paramount consideration." In Townsend v. Kendall, 4 Minn. 412, 77 Am. Dec. 534, Gil. 315, Justice Flandrau says: "When a foreign guardian or anybody else attempts to exercise any restraint over the person of anyone within this state, the writ of habeas corpus or any other appropriate remedy will always be effectual to inquire into the propriety of such attempted restraint, and upon such inquiry the proper court can make such order or judgment as the case may require. If the facts stated in the answer in this case had been interposed as a return to a writ of habeas corpus, and nothing else had been made to appear, there can be very little doubt that they would have been a good answer to a discharge under the writ. The courts of this state have full powers to investigate the whole subject of the guardianship, and may, upon a proper showing, refuse the guardian the custody of his ward, or restore him to such custody." In New York the question is, how much importance should be placed upon foreign judgments where the welfare and interests of children are under consideration; and in the 67 L. R. A. case of the People ex rel. Allen v. Allen, 105 N. Y. 628, 11 N. E. 143, the court says: "We dismiss this appeal for the reason that the courts below, upon a view of all the existing facts relating to the welfare and interests of the infants, exercised their discretion in awarding to the mother the custody of the children, and in so doing gave to the Illinois decree, not the force of an estoppel, or the conclusive effect sometimes due to a judgment, but simply regarded it as a fact or circumstance bearing upon the discretion to be exercised, without dictating or controlling it."

An interesting case, and one in point here, is that of Woodworth v. Spring, 4 Allen, 321, and from the opinion of Chief Justice Bigelow we quote: "If the right to the possession and control of the person of the child depended on his domicile, the right of the petitioner to claim the custody of his person would be indisputable. But we are unable to see that the facts that the child was born in another state, and that he has never by an act or election of his own or of his guardian obtained a new home here, have a decisive bearing on the question at issue in the present case. He is now lawfully within the territory, and under the jurisdiction of this commonwealth, and has a right to claim the protection and security which our laws afford to all persons coming within its limits irrespective of their origin or of the place where they may be legally domiciled. Every sovereignty exercises the right of determining the status or condition of persons found within its jurisdiction. The laws of a foreign state cannot be permitted to intervene to affect the personal rights or privileges even of their own citizens while they are residing on the territory and within the jurisdiction of an independent government. Effect may be given by way of comity to such laws by the judicial tribunals of other states and countries; but, ex proprio vigore, they cannot have any extraterritorial force or operation. The question whether a person within the jurisdiction of a state can be removed therefrom depends, not on the laws of the place whence he came, or in which he may have his legal domicile, but on his rights and obligations as they are fixed and determined by the laws of the state or country in which he is found." Further on in this same opinion this court says: "An administrator appointed under the laws of a foreign state cannot act as such in this commonwealth. Nor, for like reasons, can a guardian appointed by virtue of the statutes of another state exercise any authority here over the person or property of his ward. His rights and powers are strictly local, and circumscribed by the jurisdiction of the government which clothed him with the office. Story, Conf. L. § 499; Morrell v. Dickey, 1 Johns. Ch. 153; Kraft v. Wickcy, 4 Gill & J. 332, 23 Am. Dec. 569; Johnstone v. Beattie, 10 Clark & F. 42, 113, 145. So far, therefore, as the claim of the petitioner to the custody of the child in the present case rests on a supposed rightful authority to control his person in this commonwealth by virtue of his appointment as a guardian in the state of Illinois, it is not supported either on principle or authority. He cannot assert his tutorial power de jure in our courts or within our territory. . . . But the decree of the probate court does not deprive this court of the power to adjudicate and determine the question of the proper custody of the child as between a domestic guardian and one appointed in the place of the domicil of the infant. The jurisdiction of this court to decide, on habeas corpus or other proper process, concerning the care and custody of infants, is paramount, and cannot be taken away by any decree of an inferior tribunal. Com. v. Briggs, 16 Pick. 203. The result is that neither of the parties to the present proceeding can assert or maintain an absolute right to the permanent care and custody of the infant who is now before the court. But it is for this court to determine, in the exercise of a sound judicial discretion, having regard to the welfare and permanent good of the child as a predominant consideration, to whose custody he shall be committed." While in this case it was admitted by the respective counsel that the consideration that should govern the court is that of the welfare of the child, we are unable to return this case for final determination without references to some of the rulings on that subject, and to some showing that the courts have always held that, where it is possible, a family, or those remaining, should be kept together; and this latter consideration becomes of great importance in the case here under consideration for the reason that the plaintiff in error John A. Jones has shown by undisputed evidence that during the lifetime of John J. Bowman, the father of the child, 67 L. R. A.

he assisted with money in the care of his family; that he has the means to support and educate the child, and is willing to keep the family together, not only because they are the children of his wife's sister, but because it was the wish of their dead father. We will refer to only a few of the authorities in point: Bennett v. Byrne, 2 Barb. Ch. 216; Holley v. Chamberlain, 1 Redf. 333; Watson v. Warnock, 31 Ga. 718; Albert v. Perry, 14 N. J. Eq. 540; Com. v. Addicks, 5 Binn. 520; Underhill v. Dennis, 9 Paige, 202; English v. English, 32 N. J. Eq. 738; Lusk v. Lusk, 28 Mo. 91; Com. v. Addicks, 2 Serg. & R. 174; Coffee v. Black, 82 Va. 587; Taylor v. Jeter, 33 Ga. 195, 81 Am. Dec. 202; Warren v. Hofer, 13 Ind. 167; Markicell v. Perseles, 95 Wis. 406, 69 N. W. 798; Re Doyle, 16 Mo. App. 159; Schiltz v. Roenitz, 86 Wis. 31, 21 L. R. A. 483, 39 Am. St. Rep. 873, 56 N. W. 194; Oosine v. Horn, 1 Bradf. 143; Rust v. Vanocater, 9 W. Va. 600. But the case which would seem to more than sustain the argument of counsel for plaintiff in error, and appeal to the human feelings of any court, and where the rule that the interests of the child must be found and followed, is that of Re Bullon, 28 Kan. 781.

And this court, under the authorities cited and others too numerous to set out (while it may appear that we practically annul an appointment made by the court in Minnesota, not because of its illegality, but because of the interests of the child, under the evidence submitted), believe that we can make a wiser arrangement, and one authorized by law, and direct that this case be remanded to the district court of Johnson county, Wyoming; that the appointment of Margaret Bowman, so far as she has been appointed in this state, be annulled; and that John A. Jones be appointed guardian of Ida May Bowman, subject to the further order of that court; and that the plaintiffs in error, John A. Jones and Ella Jones, have judgment for their costs herein expended.

Corn, Ch. J., and Potter, J., concur.

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

John A. BRASIE, Appt.,
v.
MINNEAPOLIS BREWING COMPANY
et al., Respts.

(87 Minn. 456.)

- *1. The legal title to property alleged to have been transferred with intent to hinder, delay, and defraud creditors is in the fraudulent grantee, the fraudulent character of the transfer not appearing upon its face; and the title continues in such grantee, notwithstanding a sale of the property by a creditor on execution against the grantor, until the fraud is exposed, and the transfer set aside in some judicial proceeding.
2. The title of a fraudulent grantee is protected by the statute of limitations, and, unless defrauded creditors effect

*Headnotes by BROWN, J.

NOTE.—Effect on legal title of a conveyance of land in fraud of creditors.

- I. Scope of note, 863.
- II. As to creditors.
 - a. Conveyance executed by debtor, 863.
 - b. Land purchased and paid for by debtor, but conveyed to another, 882.
- III. Title of fraudulent grantee as to parties not creditors, 889.
- IV. Title of bona fide purchaser from fraudulent grantee, 891.
- V. Title conveyed by bona fide purchaser to one having knowledge of the fraud, 893.
- VI. When title is in fraudulent grantee as to his creditors, 899.
- VII. Rights of purchaser other than judgment creditor at execution sale, 900.
- VIII. Conclusion, 900.

I. Scope of note.

The discussion of the above subject will be limited strictly to those cases which involve conveyances of real property by a debtor in fraud of his creditors, and will not be extended to cases of fraudulent sales of personal property with a like intent and for the same purpose, although the latter are not infrequently cited and sought to be applied in the attempts by the courts to define the rules governing the former. It will also be confined to creditors, although from necessity some cases will be included in which the question of conveyances fraudulent as to bona fide purchasers has been brought in, to illustrate, either by analogy, or contradistinction. It will also be restricted to those cases which have arisen and been decided at common law and the rules of equity jurisdiction, and under the statute 13 Ellz., chap. 5, and the statutes of similar import of the several states, and no account will be taken of those special statutes of some of the states on the subject, in which, in applying the creditor's remedy for the fraud, the proceeding is as though the legal title was in the fraudulent grantor, when in reality it is not, except as is a cancellation thereof in some appropriate action brought within six years from the discovery of the fraud, his title becomes absolute and unassailable.

3. The defrauded creditor may cause the property so transferred to be sold on execution against a fraudulent grantor, and then maintain ejectment to recover the possession of the same, but can recover only upon establishing that the transfer was in fact fraudulent as to him; and that question must be tried and determined in accordance with the rules of law, statutory and otherwise, applicable to litigated questions generally. If it appear, either from the pleadings, or from the evidence in cases where the pleadings do not disclose the source of title, and no opportunity is presented to plead the statute, that six years elapsed from the discovery of the fraud before the commencement of the action, his right to have the transfer set aside is barred by the statute of limitations, and he cannot recover. He cannot stated in the introductory remarks contained in II., a, infra.

II. As to creditors.

a. Conveyance executed by debtor.

The question as to what is the effect of a conveyance of land made in fraud of the creditors of the grantor upon the legal title to the land is one which has given rise to a variety of opinion and a large amount of discussion. While the statute 13 Ellz., chap. 5, is generally acknowledged to be the source of judicial decision, not only as to when a conveyance is fraudulent, but as to what effect upon the legal title such a conveyance will have when thus declared fraudulent, yet it is said by nearly every court which has considered the question at all to have been declaratory, and to have done nothing which the common law would not have done without it; and in Clark v. Douglass, 62 Pa. 408, Sharswood, J., at page 16, remarks that we must at least receive it as a true and accurate declaration of what the law is, and, as stated by Swayne, J., in Moore v. Clements (Clements v. Nicholson) 6 Wall. 209, 18 L. ed. 786, that it was remarked by Lord Mansfield in Cadogan v. Kennett, 2 Cowp. 432, that the common law, without the statute, would have worked out the same results. Statements substantially to the same effect are made in Hamilton v. Russell, 1 Cranch, 300, 2 L. ed. 118; Meeker v. Wilson, 1 Gall. 419, Fed. Cas. No. 9,392; by Spencer Ch. J., in Sands v. Hildreth, 14 Johns. 493; Carter v. Castleberry, 5 Ala. 277; O'Ferrail v. Simplot, 4 Iowa, 381; Rice v. Burnett, Speers, Eq. 579, 42 Am. Dec. 336; Goshorn v. Snodgrass, 17 W. Va. 717.

It must be borne in mind that conveyances of land in fraud of creditors are of two kinds or characters. In the one the fraudulent debtor, having the legal title to the land, himself conveys the same to another for the purpose of divesting himself of that title and putting the land beyond the reach of his creditors. Under such circumstances it is believed that the general rule is, that the legal title to the land for all purposes, except the satisfaction of his credavoid the statute by bringing an action in ejectment, instead of an action to remove a cloud from his title.

4. In cases where the creditor levies upon and sells the property on execution, the statute of limitations commences to run from the date of sale, unless it be made to appear that the creditor did not discover the fraud until some later time.

(Start, Ch. J., dissents.)

(November 21, 1902.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from an order of the District Court for Wright County denying a new trial after a dismissal of an action brought to recover possession of certain real estate. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

itors of their debts, passes from the fraudulent grantor to the fraudulent grantee (it may be here said that there would appear to be no question but that the grantee in such a conveyance must be a participant in the fraud in order to make it fraudulent as to creditors, as, if he is a bona fide purchaser for a valuable consideration, he will take the title free from the claim of the creditors); but that, so far as creditors are concerned, and for the purpose of enabling them to overcome the attempt to defraud them of the payment of their just debts, in the absence of special statutes on the subject, the title still remains in the fraudulent grantor, and may be pursued in the same manner as though the conveyance had not been made. This is not only so, but the creditor is given by equity tribunals relief in rendering the legal title that he or any other purchaser at a legal sale may recover and obtain, clear and free from the encumbrance of the fraudulent conveyance.

The mere rendering and docketing of a judgment do not change the legal title to land of the judgment debtor, whether that land is in his name or has been previously conveyed in fraud of creditors. It merely establishes a lien, which the judgment creditor can reduce to a legal title by the levy of an execution issued upon the judgment and a sale thereunder, and consequent sheriff's deed to the purchaser.

And a sale of land upon an execution issued upon a judgment rendered after the judgment debtor has conveyed his land in fraud of creditors will ordinarily convey to the purchaser at such execution sale the legal title which was originally in the judgment debtor, and which, as to all persons except creditors of the latter, passed to his fraudulent grantee.

And statutes which declare conveyances made in fraud of creditors void as to them operate, not only upon conveyances directly from the debtor, made with such fraudulent intent, but also upon transfers whereby his title and ownership are passed to another for the like dishonest purpose through the agency of a judicial sale. Lynch v. Burt, 132 Fed. 417; Haas v. Haas, 35 La. Ann. 885; Decker v. Decker, 108 N. Y. 128, 15 N. E. 307; Burt v. C. Gotzian & Co. 43 C. C. A. 59, 102 Fed. 937; Watson v. Bonfils, 53 C. C. A. 535, 116 Fed. 157. See also Dobson v. Erwin, 18 N. C. (1 Dev. & B. L.) 569, infra, 11. b.

The following are cases of the class mentioned, i. c., where the debtor, having in himself the legal title to the land, conveys the same in fraud of his creditors:

Mr. James C. Tarbox, for appellant:

The statute of limitations—"actions can only be commenced within the periods prescribed in this chapter"—uses the word "actions" in its technical sense.

Baker v. Kelley, 11 Minn. 480, Gil. 358; Goleher v. Brisbin, 20 Minn. 453, Gil. 407.

It is always a matter of discretion on the part of the plaintiff whether he will plead his title in general terms or allege the specific links which constitute his chain of title.

Bracket v. Wilkinson, 13 How. Pr. 102; Wade v. Rusher 4 Bosw. 537; Jones v. Cohen, 82 N. C. 75.

The wording of the statute of limitations—"an action for relief on the ground of fraud"—applies only to an action the obtioned, i. c., where the debtor, having in himself the legal title to the land, conveys the same in fraud of his creditors:

In an action of ejectment, where the plaintiff claimed under a deed from his father, and the defendant claimed that such deed was in fraud of the creditors of the father, and offered in evidence a judgment, ieri facias, and sale subsequent to the conveyance, in an action against the grantor in the deed, and that the cause of action originated before the date of the deed, and the land was sold under the ieri facias to the party under whom the defendant claimed title, the court instructed the jury that, if the deed was made with intent to hinder, delay, and defraud the creditors of the grantor, the defendant was entitled to recover; and there was a verdict for the defendant. Middleton v. Sinclair, 5 Cranch, C. C. 409, Fed. Cas. No. 9,534.

In Carver v. Castleberry, 5 Ala. 277, the court said that it was unable to perceive any reason why, if a deed fraudulent as to creditors could be avoided in equity, because the statute of frauds has declared it void, it is not alike void at law.

In High v. Nelms, 14 Ala. 350, 48 Am. Dec. 103, the court said that there is no principle better settled than that a person indebted cannot make a valid gift of his property to the prejudice of his creditors, who may, under ordinary circumstances, after having obtained judgment, proceed and sell the property, disregarding the gift. In this case, where it appeared that a father, being indebted at the time, had made a voluntary conveyance of land to a child, such conveyance being void as to existing creditors, a charge of the court that the deed being absolutely void, the sheriff might sell, notwithstanding the fraudulent grantor was not in possession at the time the judgment was obtained, or when the sheriff levied on the land, was affirmed.

A judgment creditor may, at law, proceed to the sale under execution of lands which his debtor has fraudulently aliened; and the purchaser may, in ejectment, recover them of the fraudulent donee. Flewellen v. Crane, 58 Ala. 627.

In Smith v. Cockrell, 66 Ala. 64, the court said: "If the property of a debtor has been conveyed by him with intent to delay, hinder, and defraud his creditors, it remains, as to his debts, as if no attempt had ever been made to ject or gravamen of which is relief on the ground of fraud, e. g., the cancelation of a fraudulent conveyance.

Helms v. Green, 105 N. C. 251, 18 Am. St. Rep. 893, 11 S. E. 470; Potter v. Adams, 120 Mo. 118, 46 Am. St. Rep. 478, 28 S. W. 490; Rogers v. Brown, 61 Mo. 187; Hunter v. Hunter, 50 Mo. 445; Jackson v. Holbrook, 36 Minn. 494, 1 Am. St. Rep. 683, 32 N. W. 852.

The judgment creditor may rest exclusively upon his rights and remedies at law, without invoking the aid of a court of equity.

Jackson v. Holbrook, 36 Minn. 494, 1 Am. St. Rep. 683, 32 N. W. 852.

If the party has a right to several actions, convey it. As to creditors, and those claiming under them and in their right, the legal title remains in the judgment debtor until the sale and conveyance by the sheriff, and then it passes to the purchaser. This, because the fraudulent conveyance is treated as a nullity,—as if it had never been. The purchaser's title is legal, or it is nothing. If the debtor's conveyance, in defiance of which he purchased, is fraudulent, then his title acquired at the sheriff's sale is legal, without a semblance of an equitable title entering into it. So, if the debtor's conveyance is not fraudulent, the purchaser has no title, legal or equitable." Approved and followed in Pettus v. Glover, 68 Ala. 417.

The lien of a judgment operates and binds, not only the property subject to its mandate, which is in possession of the judgment debtor, or the title to which stands in his name, but it operates equally on all such property, with the title to which he has parted for the purpose of hindering, delaying, and defrauding his creditors, until there is the coming in of a bona fide purchaser, without notice, and for a valuable consideration, from the fraudulent grantee or donee having possession. A conveyance or transfer of the property, though it may be valid between the parties, is invalid—it is void—as to creditors; and they may disregard it entirely, and proceed to levy and sell the property under legal process. Mathews v. Mobile Mut. Ins. Co. 75 Ala. 85.

The existence of the right of a judgment creditor at law to proceed to the sale under execution of lands which his debtor has fraudulently aliened does not interfere with the right to resort to a court of equity for the vacation of the fraudulent conveyance, as an obstacle in the way of the full enforcement of the judgment, and a cloud on the title to the property. Flewellen v. Crane, 58 Ala. 627.

While creditors may disregard entirely a conveyance made by their debtor in fraud of their rights, and proceed to levy and sell the property under legal process, they may also proceed, in a court of equity, to remove the conveyance or transfer, as an obstacle to the advantageous enforcement of their legal rights; as, whichever is the remedy they elect to pursue, it is but a remedy for the enforcement of the lien of the fieri facias. Mathews v. Mobile Mut. Ins. Co. 75 Ala. 85.

In Rountree v. Marshall (Ariz.) 59 Pac. 100, the court, in affirming a judgment which declares a conveyance of the property which had been sold to the plaintiff on an execution after a conveyance fraudulent as to the creditors of the grantor, who was the judgment debtor in the execution, had been made, said, in answer to the claim on the part of the transferee that, until the transaction should be attacked for fraud, and such transfer be vacated or set aside, the legal title would be in the transferee, and beyond the reach of legal process against the judgment debtor and grantor, and that, therefore, the levy on and sale of the grantor's title to, and interest in, the property after such deed, and before any proceedings for the cancelation thereof, conveyed nothing to the purchaser at the execution sale,—that, if the transaction was voidable, that doctrine would apply, but that a deed in fraud of the rights of creditors is absolutely void, and conveys no legal interest; and approved the doctrine which it was stated was the rule in California, that under the statute of that state, which was almost identical with that of Arizona, the attempted transfer by a fraudulent grantor was ineffectual to divest him of the legal title, and vest such title in the grantee, and therefore did not place the grantor's title beyond the reach of legal process invoked in aid of a bona fide creditor of such fraudulent grantor, but that, such conveyance being void, a creditor ignoring the ineffectual attempt of the fraudulent grantor to make such transfer, could levy upon and sell the property as if no conveyance had ever been made by the debtor.

Lamb v. Clark, 5 Pick. 193; Ivey v. Owens, 28 Ala. 641; Angell, Limitations of Actions, 6th ed. § 72; Stewart v. Thompson, 32 Cal. 260; Currier v. Studley, 159 Mass. 25, 33 N. E. 709; Amaker v. New, 33 S. C. 28, 8 L. R. A. 687, 11 S. E. 386.

Messrs. Cobb & Wheelwright, for respondents:

A judgment creditor seeking relief against prior fraudulent conveyances of land has the choice of three remedies: He may sell the debtor's land upon execution, or, secondly, he may bring an action in equity to remove the fraudulent obstruction to the enforcement of his lien, or thirdly, he may, on the return of an execution undered, declare a conveyance of the property which had been sold to the plaintiff on an execution after a conveyance fraudulent as to the creditors of the grantor, who was the judgment debtor in the execution, had been made, said, in answer to the claim on the part of the transferee that, until the transaction should be attacked for fraud, and such transfer be vacated or set aside, the legal title would be in the transferee, and beyond the reach of legal process against the judgment debtor and grantor, and that, therefore, the levy on and sale of the grantor's title to, and interest in, the property after such deed, and before any proceedings for the cancelation thereof, conveyed nothing to the purchaser at the execution sale,—that, if the transaction was voidable, that doctrine would apply, but that a deed in fraud of the rights of creditors is absolutely void, and conveys no legal interest; and approved the doctrine which it was stated was the rule in California, that under the statute of that state, which was almost identical with that of Arizona, the attempted transfer by a fraudulent grantor was ineffectual to divest him of the legal title, and vest such title in the grantee, and therefore did not place the grantor's title beyond the reach of legal process invoked in aid of a bona fide creditor of such fraudulent grantor, but that, such conveyance being void, a creditor ignoring the ineffectual attempt of the fraudulent grantor to make such transfer, could levy upon and sell the property as if no conveyance had ever been made by the debtor.

Under the statutes of California, as construed in Hager v. Shindler, 29 Cal. 47, a conveyance of real estate, made in fraud of the creditors of the grantor, passes no title to the grantee, and a sale upon execution issued upon a judgment against the grantor rendered subsequent to the fraudulent conveyance will pass the title to the purchaser at the execution sale. In this case the court said that, in an action to have certain deeds of land executed by a debtor, fraudulent and void as against the plaintiff, a purchaser of the land at an execution sale upon a judgment against the debtor rendered after said fraudulent conveyance, set aside, there was no necessity to allege the insolvency of the judgment debtor; but, without the allegation or proof of that fact, the action might be maintained to set aside and eradicate from the record the fraudulent conveyance as being a cloud upon the title which was in the satisfied, bring an action in the nature of a creditor's bill, to have the conveyance adjudged fraudulent and void.

Jackson v. Holbrook, 36 Minn. 494, 1 Am. St. Rep. 683, 32 N. W. 852; Lane v. Innes, 43 Minn. 137, 45 N. W. 4.

The deed which is claimed to have been fraudulent is not void, but voidable, and stands as a valid conveyance until declared void by some court of competent jurisdiction; so that plaintiff's execution sale in itself confers no title.

Cogel v. Raph, 24 Minn. 190; 14 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 312; Merrill v. Dearing, 47 Minn. 137, 49 N. W. 693; Stuart v. Lourry, 49 Minn. 96, 51 N. W. 662; Freeman v. Brewster, 70 Minn. 203, 72 N. W. 1068; Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Walker, 77

Minn. 440, 80 N. W. 618; Duxbury v. Boice, 70 Minn. 113, 72 N. W. 838.

The right of recovery is not based upon any legal title. It is only by the exercise of equitable powers that the court could decree possession to plaintiff. If the court could not exercise such equitable powers in a direct action brought to set aside the deeds, why should it do it in this case where the same powers must be exercised in order to grant to plaintiff the possession which he demands in his complaint.

McMillan v. Cheeney, 30 Minn. 519, 16 N. W. 404.

There was in law a delivery of the deed as against all the world.

Crowley v. C. N. Nelson Lumber Co. 66 Minn. 400, 69 N. W. 321; Conlan v. Grace.

plaintiff as the purchaser at the execution sale. That in such a case the plaintiff, by his purchase at the execution sale, is owner in judgment of law; but, though he sues as owner, still he is clothed with the rights of the creditor, and stands in his place so far as may be necessary for the protection of his own title.

In a similar action to remove a cloud upon the title of the purchaser at an execution sale on the ground that the conveyance constituting such cloud was in fraud of the creditors of the grantor, the court, after approving Hager v. Shindler, 29 Cal. 47, said, further, that the fraudulent deed was void as to the creditor,—an absolute nullity,—and for this reason was not in his way; and that, after obtaining his sheriff's deed on the sale on the execution, he was in a position to recover possession of the land, notwithstanding the fraudulent conveyance, without first procuring its cancellation in equity; that he could protect himself against it at law, and there was no necessity for going into equity for a remedy. The only substantial remedy to him, requiring relief in equity, was, therefore, that, being upon the record, the void deed was a cloud upon the title to the creditor and those claiming under him, and that that was the real ground of the relief sought in the action. Stewart v. Thompson, 32 Cal. 260.

In Re Beadle, 5 Sawy. 351, Fed. Cas. No. 1,155, the statement is made by the court that by the law of California it appears to have been settled, ever since the case of Hager v. Shindler, 29 Cal. 47, that a conveyance in fraud of creditors may be treated by the judgment creditor as absolutely void ab initio, and as if nonexistent. That in that case it was held that the purchaser of land at a sheriff's sale may maintain a bill to set aside and annul as a cloud upon the title a deed of the land given before the judgment by the judgment debtor without consideration and to defraud his creditors; and that that decision had been followed or approved in numerous subsequent cases.

The doctrine of Hager v. Shindler, 29 Cal. 47, was also approved in Bull v. Ford, 66 Cal. 176, 4 Pac. 1175; Judson v. Lyford, 84 Cal. 505, 24 Pac. 286; and First Nat. Bank v. Maxwell, 123 Cal. 360, 69 Am. St. Rep. 64, 53 Pac. 980. In the last case the court said that Re Estes, 6 Sawy. 459, 3 Fed. 134, 5 Fed. 60, infra, appeared to sustain a contrary view; but that, as the point was conclusively settled by 67 L. R. A.

California decisions, it was not necessary to review it.

The purchaser of the undivided interest of one of three tenants in common of a parcel of land conveyed such undivided interest to a son, which conveyance was fraudulent as to his creditors. Thereafter the then three tenants in common (the son and the two other original common tenants) made the same partition among themselves that the law would, and executed each to the other quitclaim deeds to effectuate the same. It was held that a judgment creditor of the father, who had made the conveyance of his undivided interest to his son in fraud of creditors, might treat the partition as legal, as having been made by the defendant, through the agency of the son, by means of his deed, although at the same time insisting that it was void so far forth as it was designed to defraud the defendant's creditors, and of this the defendant had no right to complain. Staples v. Bradley, 23 Conn. 167, 60 Am. Dec. 630. The judgment creditor had levied upon the land so set off to the son of the defendant as the property of the latter, and caused the same to be set off to him, the plaintiff and judgment creditor; and this was an action of ejectment brought to recover possession. On the trial the plaintiff had offered evidence to prove that the deed of the defendant to his son was fraudulent and void, as against the creditors of the defendant, of whom the plaintiff was one. To the reception of this evidence the defendant objected, upon the ground that the plaintiff, by the levy of his execution, had acquired no title to the demanded premises, and the trial court had excluded the evidence. The supreme court held that the testimony should have been received, and granted a new trial. It would seem that the effect of the decision was that the plaintiff had, by the levy and extension of his execution, secured such a legal title to the land as would enable him to maintain the ejectment action.

In a voluminous opinion in Colquitt v. Thomas, 8 Ga. 258, in considering the effect of what was claimed to be a vendor's lien, the question as to subjecting the land under consideration to a judgment being also under consideration, the court, in stating all that might be proved under the brief issue arising where one claimed real property levied upon by an execution, said: "Prima facie, the property belongs to the defendant at the date of plaintiff's judgment, and 36 Minn. 276, 30 N. W. 880; Thompson v. Easton, 31 Minn. 99, 16 N. W. 542.

Brown, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Action to recover the possession of real estate, which was dismissed on the trial in the court below, and plaintiff appealed from an order denying a new trial.

The complaint alleges substantially the following facts: On December 3, 1888, one Austin Knights was the owner of the real estate in question, and was then indebted to plaintiff in the sum of $160. That on or about January 1, 1889, he executed and caused to be recorded a deed of the property to Michael Knights, his brother. That the deed was without consideration, and was executed and recorded for the sole purpose of placing the property beyond the reach of the creditors of Austin Knights, and to hinder, delay, and defraud them. Though it was claimed on the argument that the deed was never in fact delivered, the facts stated in the complaint show a delivery, beyond any serious doubt. It is alleged that the deed was executed and recorded pursuant to a conspiracy between the two Knights, and for the purpose of hindering and defrauding creditors. Clearly, they intended the title to pass from one to the other, and the delivery of the deed is sufficiently shown. The complaint further alleges that on the 23d day of May, 1890, in an action brought by plaintiff in the district court of Wright county against Austin Knights, plaintiff the lien attachés, and the claimant is driven to show whatever he can show, to remove the presumption, and to displace the lien. But if the title to the claimant be older than the date of the judgment, . . . then the plaintiff may proceed to show, notwithstanding that fact, that the property is the property of the defendant in execution, and liable to his judgment. For example, he may show that the conveyance of the property, by the defendant in execution, was with intent to delay, hinder, and defeat him, as a creditor, and that the claimant had notice of such intention, and claim thereby the protection of the statute 13 Elizabeth." The decision is not of particular force upon the subject under consideration, but it would indicate that, in the mind of the judge who wrote the opinion at least, there was such a title in the claimant, which it was necessary to demolish as fraudulent in order to retain the lien of execution and secure the title by a sale under it.

Where an attachment had been issued and levied upon land previously conveyed by the attachment debtor in fraud of his creditors, whenever there has been a final judgment ascertaining the indebtedness, the judgment lien relates back to the date of the levy, upon the attachment, as against the judgment debtor and his fraudulent grantee, or as against anyone purchasing the real estate as the property of the judgment debtor subsequent to the attachment; and the title of the purchaser at a sale under the judgment dates, as against such parties, from the date of the levy of the attachment. McClellan v. Solomon, 23 Fla. 437, 11 Am. St. Rep. 381, 2 So. 825.

But in Gormerly v. Chapman, 51 Ga. 421, where a judgment creditor had levied upon certain real property which was claimed by another, and in the issue which, under the provisions of the statutes of Georgia, may be raised under such circumstances, the jury had found that the conveyance from the judgment debtor to the claimant was made with intent to delay and defraud his creditors, and that such intention was known to the claimant at the time, the court held that, the conveyance of the land to the claimant being void as to the creditors of the judgment debtor, they had the right to levy on it in satisfaction of their debts, even though the judgment debtor had other land.

An assignment or transfer by a debtor, insolvent at the time, of any kind or character of property, when any trust or benefit is reserved to the assignor, is fraudulent and void. Ga. Civ. Code, § 2695. Being void, such transfer or assignment may be attacked by a party interested, in either a direct or collateral legal proceeding, when it is sought to be set up. If an assignment or transfer of this character is made to a named trustee with power of sale, an execution of the power conveys no title to the purchaser, and a deed purporting to convey to him any part of the property so transferred is likewise void and the property is subject to the execution of a creditor. Coleman & B. Co. v. Rice, 115 Ga. 510, 42 S. E. 5.

As to creditors, a conveyance made in fraud of their rights is absolutely void, and a creditor of the grantor in such a deed may levy upon the land thereby attempted to be conveyed and sell the same, and, after receiving the sheriff's deed, may maintain a suit in equity to have such fraudulent deed set aside as a cloud upon his title. Gould v. Steinburg, 84 Ill. 170.

Under the statute of Illinois, in order to render a judgment a lien upon land fraudulently conveyed by a judgment debtor, an execution must be issued on the judgment, and the lands subjected to a sale in payment of the judgment, before an action in equity may be maintained to set aside the fraudulent conveyance; as such suit could not be sustained if the judgment was not a lien upon the land, and no lien would exist unless an execution had been issued within a year. Wels v. Tierman, 91 Ill. 27.

Under the statute which provides that fraudulent conveyances shall be held void as against creditors, creditors have the right to treat such conveyances as void, and may levy attachments specially on the land thus fraudulently conveyed as the property of the judgment debtor, the grantor in the fraudulent deed, and such attachments become a lien against the lands with the same effect as if the fraudulent conveyance had never been made; and so, where one creditor of such a fraudulent grantor had thus caused writs of attachments to be levied specially upon the lands sought to be conveyed by the fraudulent deed, and thereafter another creditor recovered judgment against the grantor and caused execution to be issued and levied upon the same lands, and they thereafter filed their bill in equity against the judgment debtor and his grantee, seeking to have the conveyance made by the former set aside as made in fraud recovered a judgment for the indebtedness due him, which judgment was duly docketed as required by statute. Thereafter an execution was duly issued upon such judgment, and the property in question levied upon, and on April 15, 1893, sold by the sheriff; plaintiff being the purchaser at the sale. It further alleges that on May 31, 1897, Michael Knights, the alleged fraudulent grantee of Austin Knights, conveyed the property to one Carroll; that on February 11, 1899, Carroll conveyed it to defendant in this action; and it also alleges that Carroll and this defendant had notice prior to their purchase of the fraudulent character of the deed from Austin to Michael; that defendant is in possession of the property; and the prayer for relief is that such possession be awarded to plaintiff. Plaintiff does not, in his demand for relief, ask to have the alleged fraudulent conveyance set aside, or the record thereof canceled, but simply demands judgment for the possession of the premises. This action was commenced September 25, 1899,—more than ten years after the date of the alleged fraudulent conveyance, and more than six years after the sale on execution. The complaint does not allege when plaintiff discovered the alleged fraudulent character of the conveyance from Austin to Michael. The answer of defendant denies that the conveyance was fraudulent; alleges that it was made in good faith; that defendant was a purchaser of the property for a valuable consideration; sets up certain improvements under of creditors, and to subject the land to sale under their judgments, the attaching creditor, by virtue of the lien thus acquired, obtained a priority over the subsequent judgment creditor; and his claim is entitled to be first satisfied out of the land in question. McKinney v. Farmers' Nat. Bank, 104 Ill. 180.

In Hallorn v. Trum, 125 Ill. 247, 17 N. E. 823, it was held that, where a debtor has conveyed his land prior to a recovery of judgments against him with a fraudulent intent to defeat the rights of his creditors, there is nothing upon which the lien of such judgments can attach, and no importance is to be attached to the fact that one was rendered prior to the rendition of the other, and, the legal title having passed from the judgment debtor before the rendition of either judgment, by a valid deed as between him and his grantee, the judgments did not become liens on the lands conveyed, in the order of their rendition; and in order, therefore, to determine the priority of liens between the two contesting creditors, the court must look to the proceedings in equity instituted by them to remove the fraudulent conveyance, and subject the lands to the satisfaction of their judgments.

These two cases would seem to indicate that, while a judgment becomes a lien generally on all real property, the title to which is in the judgment debtor, it would not be a lien upon the property which he had, previous to the rendition thereof, conveyed in fraud of creditors; yet an attachment against the specific property thus fraudulently conveyed will in Illinois be treated with the same consideration in favor of the priority of the creditor procuring it as though he had brought an equity action either after a sale of the specific property on execution to set aside the fraudulent deed as a cloud upon his title, or to set aside the deed as to him as fraudulent after the return of an execution nulla bona.

In Talcott v. Grant Wire & Spring Co. 131 Ill. 248, 23 N. E. 403, the court, in deciding another question, enunciated the doctrine laid down in Hallorn v. Trum, 125 Ill. 247, 17 N. E. 823.

The same doctrine was held in Union Nat. Bank v. Lane, 177 Ill. 171, 69 Am. St. Rep. 216, 52 N. E. 361, and in that case the court remarked upon the difference in the position of a creditor who simply issued an execution upon his judgment, and the sheriff indorsed a levy upon the execution and a certificate of such levy was filed for record in the recorder's office but no sale made thereunder, and that of a creditor who had elected to treat the land fraudulently conveyed by his debtor as the property of the latter, levied on it, had it sold, and obtained a sheriff's deed therefor, and then brought his bill to remove the fraudulent conveyance; and said it was not necessary to determine at what step of such proceedings, made effective by the sheriff's deed, the lien would attach, for the reason that in this case the creditor did not pursue this remedy, but, after making the levy, and after another creditor had filed bills to set aside the conveyance, filed its bill.

Where an attachment had been levied upon land which had been previously conveyed by the attachment debtor to another in fraud of his creditors, and the attachment suit had proceeded to judgment, and at a sale under an execution issued upon such judgment another judgment creditor had bid upon the lands an amount sufficient to satisfy both judgments, it was permissible to the judgment creditor, who had made such bid, to decline to complete the bid by payment of the amount thereof, for the reason that the title to the land did not stand in the attachment debtor (and judgment creditor), and such title was not affected by the sale, and there was no actual satisfaction of the judgment in attachment, or that in favor of the judgment creditor making the bid, which would preclude the latter from thereafter proceeding in equity to set aside the fraudulent transfer in order that his execution might be levied on the land. Scott v. Aultman Co. 211 Ill. 612, 71 N. E. 1112.

A judgment creditor has a right to sell lands under execution, notwithstanding they may have been fraudulently alienated. Such creditor has a right to treat the fraudulent deed as a nullity, and hold the property to levy and sale under execution the same as if such transfers had not been attempted. Willard v. Masterson, 160 Ill. 443, 43 N. E. 771. The court said that in such a case the creditor may treat the debtor as the owner of the property, and pursue his proper remedy at law as if the title was unembarrassed by the pretended deed, and approved and affirmed a statement in Gallman v. L'errle, 47 Miss. 131, that the jurisdiction of a court of equity is ample, either before or after a sale under a judgment, to set aside a the occupying claimant's act; and pleads the statute of limitations. Plaintiff, in reply, puts in issue the new matters alleged in the answer, but does not set forth any facts to obviate defendant's plea of the statute of limitations. No attempt is made to bring the case within any of the exceptions preventing the running of the statute.

At the trial the court dismissed the action, upon defendant's motion, on the ground that, upon the face of the pleadings, plaintiff's cause of action, if any he had, was barred by the statute of limitations, the same not having been commenced within six years after the discovery of the fraud complained of; and this order dismissing the action is the only error complained of by appellant. The position of appellant is that the question of the statute of limitations has no application to this case. It is insisted that, though the complaint sets out all the facts,—those upon which plaintiff relies to establish his title to the property, and those upon which he relies to impeach defendants' title,—the action is one in ejectment, pure and simple, and that the question whether the conveyance from Austin to Michael Knights was fraudulent, and made for the purpose of hindering and defrauding creditors, and therefore void as to them, is merely incidental to the relief he demands, which he insists may be determined without reference to the statute of limitations.

Where property is transferred by an insolvent debtor for the purpose of placing it beyond the reach of creditors and defrauding deed made in fraud of creditors,—before sale, in order that the creditors may realize the full value of the property by offering an unembarrassed title to bidders; after sale, so that the clouds which obscure, and which, if permitted to remain, might endanger it, may be put away.

Real property conveyed by a husband pending an action of divorce against him by his wife, in which action he was restrained by an order of the court from conveying such property, all of which was known to the grantee at the time of the conveyance, makes the same fraudulent; and the purchaser at the sale under an execution issued upon a judgment for alimony in the divorce action will take a good title as against the fraudulent grantee. Frakes v. Brown, 2 Blackf. 295.

Under the statutes of Indiana providing that a judgment shall be a lien upon real estate and chattels real, liable to execution, and that lands fraudulently conveyed with intent to delay or defraud creditors shall be liable to all judgments and attachments, and to be sold on execution against the debtor, a judgment against one who had made a fraudulent conveyance of his real estate previous to the docketing thereof becomes a lien and charge upon such real estate. Re Lowe, 19 Fed. 589.

If the deed of a debtor to his land is actually fraudulent, then his execution creditor may disregard it, and, without attacking it, levy his execution upon and sell it for his debt. As against the fraudulent transferee, the creditor may seize the property as that of the fraudulent debtor; and the title that may be thus acquired is not a mere equity or right to control the legal title, and have the fraudulent sale vacated by an appropriate proceeding, but it is the legal title itself against which the fraudulent transfer is no transfer at all, as the legal title remains in the debtor, as to his creditors, notwithstanding the fraudulent transfer, and the possession of the fraudulent transferee may properly be regarded as that of the debtor; and, where such a judgment creditor has levied his execution previous to the commencement of an action in equity by another judgment creditor, in which action the fraudulent transfer is declared to be such, the purchaser at the execution sale will be given a priority over the plaintiff in the equity action. Scott v. Scott, 85 Ky. 385, 3 S. W. 598, 5 S. W. 423.

67 L. R. A.

A fraudulent deed passes no title, and land fraudulently conveyed by a debtor may be levied upon by his creditor. Snapp v. Orr, 4 Ky. L. Rep. 355.

By the statutes of Maine a levy may be made upon the land fraudulently conveyed by a debtor, i. e., land of which the debtor had the legal title before the conveyance, and by another statute all real estate liable to be thus taken in execution may be attached on mesne process; and by such attachment the creditor acquires a lien upon the property which is preserved and perfected by the levy, so as to be good against any intervening conveyance. In Hall v. Sands, 52 Me. 355, the court said that the statutes 13 Eliz., chap. 5, and 27 Eliz., chap. 4, although entirely distinct, had often been connected, for the reason that a voluntary conveyance by an insolvent debtor is also presumed to have been fraudulent, with the reservation of a secret trust for his own benefit; and that, such a conveyance being void for one reason as to one class of persons, and void for another reason as to another class, some confusion had resulted in the judicial decisions.

If a debtor had the legal title to land levied upon when the debt was contracted upon which the judgment was rendered, execution issued, and levy made, if a conveyance from the debtor to his wife, and from her to another previous to such judgment, is in fraud of the creditors of the grantor, a creditor thus defrauded may levy his execution on the land fraudulently conveyed, and then proceed to perfect his title by bill in equity. Wyman v. Fox, 59 Me. 100; Wyman v. Richardson, 62 Me. 293.

A deed fraudulent as to the creditors of the grantor is good as between the parties, but void as against creditors, and, when dealing with the property in behalf of creditors, the law treats it as if no deed had been made; as to them it is no deed at all. And a creditor whose judgment is subsequent to the deed may levy upon and sell the land; and the purchaser takes all that the grantor owned in the property at the time of the conveyance, and is substituted by law in the place of the judgment debtor. Spindler v. Atkinson, 3 Md. 409, 56 Am. Dec. 735.

Under the statute of Massachusetts, if an execution on a judgment be levied and extended upon lands the lands are appraised at their true value, and the creditor holds the land in fee, subject to redemption by his debtor in one them, the defrauded creditor has the election of one of three remedies: First, he may place his demand in judgment, levy upon the property alleged to have been fraudulently transferred, cause the same to be sold under execution, and leave the purchaser at the sale to contest the validity of the fraudulent grantee's title; second, he may bring suit against the grantor, and, upon the recovery of judgment against him, bring an action in equity to remove the alleged fraudulent conveyance as an obstruction to the enforcement of his lien, and await the result of the action before selling the property; or, third, he may, on the return of his writ of execution unsatisfied, bring an action in the nature of a creditors' bill to have the conveyance adjudged fraudulent and void as to his judgment, and in the absence of redemption within that time absolutely forever. Gore v. Brazler, 3 Mass. 523, 3 Am. Dec. 182.

In holding that, in order to avoid a deed as made without consideration and fraudulent as to creditors, a creditor of the grantor must not only levy upon the land, but must have the same appraised and extend the execution thereon before he can have a right to a writ of entry as against the fraudulent grantee, the court, in Leonard v. Bryant, 2 Cush. 32, said: "If any creditor of the grantor would avoid the deed, as made without consideration, and therefore fraudulent as respects creditors, he must do so by an extent upon the land by a levy duly made, which would avoid such voluntary deed of the debtor." To the same effect, Foster v. Durant, 2 Gray, 538.

A judgment creditor may, notwithstanding a conveyance of his real estate by the judgment debtor, made with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud creditors, levy upon and sell the real estate, because as to the creditor, to defraud whom the conveyance is made, it is void. Campbell v. Jones, 25 Minn. 155.

A judgment creditor seeking relief against prior fraudulent conveyances of land has the choice of three remedies. He may sell the debtor's land upon execution issued on his judgment, and leave the purchaser to contest the validity of the defendant's title in an action of ejectment; or, secondly, he may bring an action in equity to remove the fraudulent obstruction to the enforcement of his lien by execution, and await the result of the action before selling the property; or, thirdly, he may, on the return of an execution unsatisfied, bring an action in the nature of a creditor's bill, to have the conveyance adjudged fraudulent and void as to his judgment, and the land sold by a receiver or other officer of the court, and the proceeds applied to the satisfaction of the judgment, as in the case of equitable interests the debtor's assets are reached and applied. In the first two classes the creditor will have enforced his judgment at law, and the sale upon execution must necessarily be subject to prior statutory liens. The purchaser in such case succeeds to such title only as the debtor had, treating the debtor's fraudulent transfer as void. As to cases falling within the second class, the object of the equitable suit is to make the legal remedy more effective. In such case no trust is created in respect to the property, but the creditor falls back upon his legal remedy, and, instead of bringing his equitable suit before the sale, he may, if necessary, maintain it after sale in the form of an action to remove a cloud from his title. The court said it was not necessary to determine whether, if the proceedings had fallen within the third class above mentioned, and the sale had been made by a receiver, and the senior judgment creditors had not been brought in, the rule would have been otherwise, but that it was held in Chautauque County Bank v. Risley, 19 N. Y. 369, 75 Am. Dec. 347, that it would not, and that the soundness of the conclusion in that case, that a statutory lien upon real estate cannot be divested by the court in proceedings to which the holder is not a party, can hardly be questioned. Jackson v. Holbrook, 36 Minn. 494, 1 Am. St. Rep. 683, 32 N. W. 852.

Just what these cases hold as to where the legal title to land conveyed in fraud of creditors resides, seems to have been the contention between the majority of the court in BRASIE v. MINNEAPOLIS BREWING COMPANY, and the dissenting chief justice, the prevailing opinion containing the statement that that court had never held that the act of the creditor in causing the property alleged to have been fraudulently transferred to be levied upon and sold on execution against the fraudulent grantor operated to vest the absolute title to the property in the purchaser at the sale; while the dissenting justice stated that that was exactly what was decided in Campbell v. Jones and Jackson v. Holbrook.

Under the Mississippi statute which condemns a fraudulent conveyance to be null and void as to the creditor, he has precisely the same extent of right against the property embraced in it as though it had never been made. In effect, the debtor owns the property with the same extent of interest as though he never had conveyed, and the creditor has a lien under his judgment, quite as controlling over the title as though the fraudulent deed had never been executed, and may treat his debtor as owner of the property and may pursue his process for satisfaction as if the title were unembarrassed by the fraudulent deed. Thomason v. Neeley, 50 Miss. 310; Shaw v. Millsaps, 50 Miss. 380.

In the latter case it was said that a sale of the property under the execution would pass a good title, quite as available as though the fraudulent deed had not been executed.

made in good faith, with honest motives, and for a valuable consideration. The burden was upon plaintiff to prove to the contrary, and, manifestly, until he established that fact, and obtained a judicial determination of it, the legal title to the property remained in the alleged fraudulent grantee. Transfers of property made for the purpose of hindering and defrauding creditors are not absolutely void. They are only voidable, at the election of the creditors defrauded. While the statutes pronounce such transfers void, the word "void," as there used, is construed by all the courts to mean voidable. 14 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 280, and cases cited. They are valid between the parties, and operate to transfer the title to the grantee, subject to being impeached at the suit of creditors. Spooner v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 76 Minn. 311, 77 Am. St. Rep. 651, 79 N. W. 305; Hathaway v. Brown, 22 Minn. 214. The mere election by the creditor to treat the conveyance as fraudulent and void, by levying upon and selling the property under execution, cannot have the effect of canceling or annulling it, as a matter of law. The creditor must procure its cancellation in some judicial proceeding instituted for that purpose. As remarked in Wait, Fraud. Conv. § 60: "The seizure of the property on [execution in cases of this kind] subjects the creditor to the peril incident to proving that the transfer was fraudulent." If the creditor fails to do so, the transfer becomes effectual as to all the world. The logical conclusion, therefore, is that prima facie

Under the statute of Mississippi which denounces absolute nullity, upon every gift, grant, and conveyance made with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud creditors, so far as a judgment creditor is concerned, a conveyance made in fraud of the rights of creditors is as though the same had never been made and the title is still in the debtor, the fraudulent grantor; so that, notwithstanding that conveyance, the property is open to creditors, and they can reach it as though that deed had never been made. Pennington v. Seal, 49 Miss. 518; Pulliam v. Taylor, 50 Miss. 551.

Where a judgment debtor has made a fraudulent conveyance, the creditor may sell the property under execution, and afterwards go into chancery and set aside the deed made by his debtor in fraud of creditors, so that the clouds which obscure the title, and which, if permitted to remain, might endanger it, may be put away; or he may bring his action in equity before the sale, in order that he may realize the full value of the property by offering an unembarrassed title to bidders. Gallman v. Perrie, 47 Miss. 131; Partee v. Mathews, 53 Miss. 140.

In case of a fraudulent conveyance by a judgment debtor he, by force of the statute, remains owner, for the deed is declared by the statute to be utterly void as to creditors; so that the judgment imposes a lien upon the property, and the aid administered in chancery is to put out of the way the embarrassment to the title by reason of the erroneous deed. Partee v. Mathews, 53 Miss. 140.

And where a debtor had conveyed lands to one creditor in consideration of his debt to that creditor and an agreement on the part of the latter to convey a certain portion of the land back to the wife and children of the debtor, the court, distinguishing Carlisle v. Tindall, 49 Miss. 229, II., b, infra, said this came under the head of a fraudulent conveyance by the debtor, but that in the case just mentioned the execution debtor had never had any title to the property attempted to be sold under execution, and it was, for that reason, held not to be vendible thereunder. Johnson v. Ingram (Miss.) 9 So. 822.

A deed made in fraud of the rights of the creditors of the grantor is void as to them, and a creditor who has sold the property upon an execution issued upon his judgment, and become the purchaser, may maintain an action against the debtor and his fraudulent grantee 67 L. R. A.

to set aside the conveyance, as the fraud renders the deed absolutely void as to creditors, and the creditor, who has become the purchaser, is entitled to recover the property and its rents as though no such fraudulent deed had ever been made. Allen v. Berry, 50 Mo. 90.

Where a debtor had fraudulently conveyed his real property, and a creditor had thereafter obtained judgment against him and levied his execution upon the land, and thereafter another creditor had brought an attachment and levied the same on the same property, and after the levy of such attachment the land was sold upon the execution, the trial court held that a judgment is not a lien upon property fraudulently conveyed prior to its rendition, and that such a transfer is not void, but only voidable as against creditors, and that the levy of the attachment created a superior lien to the supposed lien of a judgment thus rendered, and decreed the title in the attachment creditor, but this was reversed by the supreme court, which held, as it had in former cases, that the judgment was a lien; that, as the conveyance was under the statute absolutely void as to the judgment creditor, the judgment became a lien at the time of its rendition, which was previous to the attachment, and by the levy and sale the judgment creditor took the same title and as of the same time that he would had no such conveyance been made, and therefore his title was superior to that of the attaching creditor. Slatery v. Jones, 96 Mo. 216, 9 Am. St. Rep. 344, 8 S. W. 554; Woodard v. Mastin, 106 Mo. 324, 17 S. W. 308.

In the last case it was said that the land might be sold as if no such conveyance had ever been made, and the purchaser, upon proof of the fraud, is entitled to a decree vesting the title in him.

Where a debtor holding the legal title to land makes a conveyance thereof in fraud of his creditors, the purchaser at a sheriff's sale made by virtue of a creditor's judgment may sue in ejectment, and in such a suit he may defeat the fraudulent conveyance by proof of its fraudulent character. The fraudulent deed being thus declared void from the beginning, the sheriff's deed carries the title. Potter v. Adams, 125 Mo. 118, 46 Am. St. Rep. 478, 28 S. W. 490.

Where a debtor had made a fraudulent conveyance of land, and the creditor had obtained his judgment and sold the property on his execution, and received the sheriff's deed, and the legal title to property alleged to have been transferred with intent to defraud creditors is in the fraudulent grantee. the fraudulent character of the transfer not appearing on its face; and this continues, notwithstanding a sale of the property by a creditor on execution against the fraudulent grantor, until the fraud is exposed and the transfer set aside. Plaintiff in this action was not, therefore, strictly speaking, the holder of the legal title to the property in question, and could not recover the possession thereof without first obtaining a judicial determination that the transfer was in fact fraudulent and void. Perhaps his contention in this respect would be sound if the invalidity or fraudulent character of the deed appeared upon its face. In that case no judicial proceedings would be necessary to cancel or set it aside. It would not constitute a cloud upon the title, and plaintiff would be the legal owner and entitled to the possession. But in a case like that at bar, where extrinsic evidence is necessary to show the invalidity of the alleged fraudulent transfer, an action of some nature must be brought, wherein that question may be litigated in the usual way; and that, too, before the title of the fraudulent grantee becomes fully vested by operation of the statute of limitations.

But it is urged that the question may be determined in this action,—one to recover the possession of the property,—and that plaintiff is entitled to prove the fraudulent character of the conveyance, and thus defeat thereafter had commenced his action to be relieved from the fraudulent conveyance, it was held that the creditor had obtained a full and complete title to the land, and that the trial court had no authority to make a conditional judgment providing that, in case the fraudulent debtor paid the full amount of the plaintiff's claim and costs and charges and expenses, the complaint should be dismissed, and a judgment to that effect was reversed, the court holding that the judgment creditor's title to the land through the sheriff's deed was full, ample, and complete. Kinealy v. Macklin, 2 Mo. App. 241.

All a judgment creditor of one who has conveyed his land in fraud of creditors is entitled to is, that his judgment should constitute a lien upon the property of his debtor, and that upon his claim being satisfied his title to the land obtained by sale on execution shall be surrendered. Smith v. Vreeland, 16 N. J. Eq. 198, infra.

By a statute of New Hampshire it is provided that an execution may be levied and extended upon any real estate of the judgment debtor, and that all such real estate levied upon shall pass by the levy against all persons whatsoever if the levy is recorded on or before the return day of the execution. In Russell v. Dyer, 33 N. H. 186, judgments had been recovered against one who had previously transferred the same to another in fraud of his creditors; the transferee had leased the property, and thereafter the judgment creditor levied upon the property upon executions issued upon his judgments, and caused them to be extended and received, and selsin was delivered and accepted thereon. He also caused the right of the judgment debtor to redeem to be sold on one of the executions, and thereafter compelled one holding under a lease from the fraudulent transferee to attorn to him, and received money from such tenant. The action was brought by the fraudulent transferee against the judgment creditor thus holding the land to compel him to pay over the money thus received. In giving judgment for the defendant, the court held that, upon all the provisions of the statute, it was clear that the judgment creditor acquired by the levy an absolute estate of inheritance in the land, subject to the defeasance, and that, while in possession under the levy, he is seised of a freehold, and his estate is as perfect and complete as if he were the absolute, unqualified owner.

Advancements in the shape of conveyances of land to his children, by one who was liable upon a guaranty for the payment of a judgment against another, are fraudulent in law, and void as against the debt due by the guaranty; and, a judgment having been rendered upon the bond against the father, and an execution issued by virtue thereof, and the premises so fraudulently conveyed sold at auction, the purchaser may successfully maintain ejectment to recover possession of the same. Jackson ex dem. Van Wyck v. Seward, 5 Cow. 67.

The judgment in this case was afterwards reversed in 8 Cow. 408, but upon other grounds.

In Codwise v. Gelston, 10 Johns. 522, it was held that, where one executes a fraudulent conveyance, and afterwards becomes a bankrupt, a judgment against him intervening the conveyance and bankruptcy will be a lien upon his land, and entitled to a priority over subsequent judgments or liens (the bankruptcy act of Congress makes it a lien ahead of the bankruptcy proceedings), as to hold otherwise would be contrary to the established principles, as to the right of creditors, and operate as a discouragement to the attentive and vigilant creditor.

That fraud in a conveyance of land by a judgment debtor would be proof in an action of ejectment to rebut the defense of title in the defendant, who was the fraudulent grantee in a fraudulent conveyance of the same land, seems to have been conceded by all parties, and taken for granted by the court in Jackson ex dem. Hooker v. Mather, 7 Cow. 301. The land had been sold under an execution issued upon a judgment rendered subsequent to the fraudulent conveyance, and the purchaser had taken the sheriff's deed and then brought ejectment to recover the land, and the action was sustained.

Where a father made a conveyance in fraud of creditors to his son; and thereafter one of his creditors recovered judgment for a debt existing at the time of the conveyance, and issued an execution thereon, and sold the land thus fraudulently conveyed, and received a sheriff's deed for the same, and thereafter filed a bill to set aside the conveyance as fraudulent and void, and to obtain possession of the land and premises in question and for an account of the rents and profits thereof,—it was held that the defendants must deliver up the possession

it. The authorities sustain the proposition that the question may be determined in an action of ejectment, but it is clear, upon principle, that it must be tried as all other issues and questions are tried, and determined and judged by the rules of law, statutory and otherwise, applicable generally to litigated questions. In this action plaintiff made the fraudulent character of the transfer, by his complaint, an affirmative issue in the action; and the burden was upon him to establish all the material allegations there set forth, to warrant a recovery in his favor. The situation with respect to the trial of this particular question would be the same, however, if the allegations of the pleadings were general, alleging title in the respective parties in general terms. In that case no opportunity would be given to plead the statute of limitations (they were pleaded in this case), and advantage could be taken thereof upon the fact appearing from the evidence offered on the trial. 13 Enc. Pl. & Pr. p. 187; Dreutzer v. Baker, 60 Wis. 179, 18 N. W. 776; Emory v. Keighan, 88 Ill. 482; Fairbanks v. Long, 91 Mo. 628, 4 S. W. 499. The authorities are very uniform, wherever the question has been presented, to the effect that the title of a fraudulent grantee is protected by the statute of limitations; and if creditors do not, by proper judicial proceedings, effect the cancellation of his title within the statutory period, it becomes final and conclusive. Bump, Fraud. Conv. 571; Porter v. Cooke, Mart. & Y. 264; Reeves v. Dougherty, 7 of the premises to the complainant. Mohawk Bank v. Atwater, 2 Paige, 54.

The opinion is not very luminous on the subject under consideration, but, as the equity action was based upon legal sale under the execution, it would seem as if the effect of it must be practically to decide that such a legal title, so far as the creditor was concerned, remained in the fraudulent grantor as might be levied upon under the judgment.

In Chautauque County Bank v. Risley, 19 N. Y. 369, 75 Am. Dec. 347, the court of appeals, after stating the equitable remedy which a judgment creditor has for relief in equity against a conveyance of his debtor fraudulent as to creditors, further said: "But no creditor having a statutory lien by judgment can be compelled to take the equitable remedy. He may, if he prefer, stand upon his lien and the means which the law has given him of enforcing it. If his debtor has made a prior fraudulent conveyance, he may, nevertheless, sell upon his execution, and the purchaser will have the right and will take the risk of impeaching such conveyance." Approved and followed in Bergen v. Carman, 70 N. Y. 146; Smith v. Reld, 134 N. Y. 568, 31 N. E. 1082; O'Brien v. Browning, 49 How. Pr. 113; Erickson v. Quinn, 15 Abb. Pr. N. S. 168; Morss v. Purvis, 5 Thomp. & C. 140.

Where a judgment debtor has conveyed his land in fraud of his creditors, judgment creditors who have not issued executions and sold the title of their judgment debtor to the land are not entitled to distribution in the surplus moneys arising from a sale by a receiver in an action brought by another judgment creditor to set aside the conveyance as fraudulent, where they did not become parties to that action. Warden v. Browning, 12 Hun, 497. The respondent in this case was the receiver appointed in the action of O'Brien v. Browning, 49 How. Pr. 113, and claimed the surplus moneys arising from a sale of the mortgaged premises under the judgment in that action. The court distinguished Chautauque County Bank v. Risley, 19 N. Y. 374, 75 Am. Dec. 347, and said that the judgment creditors could have done here what was done there, but that they did neither of the things that was done in that case, but rested upon a mere docketing of the judgment, and that the creditors here had passive, not active, liens, because they had not adopted any steps to make their liens effective, either by execution or action.

67 L. R. A.

Where a judgment has been recovered before other creditors have instituted proceedings in equity to set aside a fraudulent conveyance made previous to the rendition of the judgment, nothing in the course or in the result of those equity proceedings can affect the rights of the judgment creditor. Chautauque County Bank v. Risley, 19 N. Y. 369, 75 Am. Dec. 347; Shand v. Hanley, 71 N. Y. 319; White's Bank v. Farthing, 101 N. Y. 344, 4 N. E. 734; Scouton v. Bender, 3 How. Pr. 185.

Where a debtor has made a fraudulent conveyance of his real estate, a subsequent judgment creditor may proceed to sell under his execution, and the purchaser will have the right to impeach the conveyance, in an action at law to recover the premises. Bergen v. Snedeker, 8 Abb. N. C. 50, 79 N. Y. 146, Reversing 18 Hun, 335.

That the effect of a judgment is to impress upon the real estate of the judgment debtor a lien, not only as to such as is then actually held by him, but as to any that had been transferred by him in fraud of his creditors, is a proposition which is too firmly fixed by the decisions of the courts of New York to be now questioned. Hillyer v. Le Roy (N. Y.) 72 N. E. 237. The court, citing and following Chautauque County Bank v. Risley, 19 N. Y. 369, 75 Am. Dec. 347, and kindred cases, said that the property of a debtor, which had been transferred by him in fraud of creditors, still remains, as to them, the debtor's property, and the lien of the creditor's judgment attaches to the real estate; and that the judgment creditor may enforce his judgment by a sale of the land under execution, or he may bring an action to remove the obstruction caused by the debtor's fraudulent act, and proceed to enforce his judgment by a sale of the land, unembarrassed by the cloud of the transfer.

A debtor had conveyed his land in fraud of creditors, and thereafter the land had been levied upon and sold upon judgments against him rendered subsequent to the conveyance, and it was held that one having a sheriff's deed of the land upon such sale could not maintain an action to have the fraudulent conveyance brought in and canceled upon the ground of removing a cloud from his title. The reason for the decision was that the purchaser already had the legal title to the land under the sheriff's deed, and that there was no ground for him to come into a court of equity and ask for that

Yerg. 222, 27 Am. Dec. 496; Blantin v. Whitaker, 11 Humph. 313; Lockard v. Nash, 64 Ala. 385; Osborne v. Wilkes, 108 N. C. 651, 13 S. E. 285; Strutton v. Young, 15 Ky. L. Rep. 657, 25 S. W. 109. Nor is the fraudulent grantee precluded from invoking the statute by the fact that he is, in law, held as a trustee for the benefit of creditors; for he is so held against his will. Musselman v. Kent, 33 Ind. 452; Bobb v. Woodward, 50 Mo. 95; Sims v. Gray, 93 Iowa, 38, 61 N. W. 171. This court, in Lane v. Innes, 43 Minn. 137, 45 N. W. 4, recognized the necessity of bringing an action to cancel a fraudulent conveyance after the sale on execution; for it there said, speaking in reference to the different remedies creditors have in such cases, that a judgment creditor may bring an action to remove the obstruction caused by a fraudulent conveyance before selling the property, or "he may acquire title by execution sale, and then bring his action." Of necessity, such an action must be brought, or at least the question as to the fraudulent character of the conveyance must be determined, in some proceeding, and in accordance with the rules of law applicable to all controverted questions. So long as it remains undetermined, the legal title to the property remains in the fraudulent grantee, and becomes final and conclusive after the lapse of six years from the discovery of the fraud by creditors. The question as to the fraudulent character of the conveyance is not a mere incidental fact, but a vital and con-which he already had. Thigpen v. Pitt, 54 N. C. (1 Jones, Eq.) 49.

In an action to recover land, where the plaintiff showed the title in a judgment debtor, and an execution issued upon the judgment and levied upon the land in question, and a sale thereunder, and the purchase by the plaintiff; and the defendant showed a conveyance from the judgment debtor to himself previous to the rendering of the judgment,—it was held that the plaintiff might, in reply, prove that the deed offered by the defendant was fraudulent and inoperative. Helms v. Green, 103 N. C. 251, 18 Am. St. Rep. 893, 11 S. E. 470.

Where a debtor previous to the rendering of a judgment executed a deed of trust to secure the payment of a certain amount of debts, which deed was fraudulent as to creditors; and the trustee thereunder, by a fraudulent transfer, thereafter sold the lands (and other property) to irresponsible persons for the benefit of the judgment debtor; and, after the return of an execution against property nulla bona the judgment creditor secured the arrest of the judgment debtor upon a ca. sa.; and after his arrest the judgment debtor executed another deed of trust to a trustee, in which he conveyed, for the benefit of his creditors, nearly all of the property which he had previously conveyed to the former trustee, and which the latter had pretended to sell under the deed of trust to him.—it was held that the title to the property remained in the judgment debtor notwithstanding his original deed to the first trustee, and that, consequently, he could convey it bona fide to his creditors or to a trustee for them, and that would be good against the judgment creditor if done when he had no lien by execution on it, which was the case here, for the fieri facias had been returned, and the debtor was under arrest on the ca. sa. King v. Trice, 38 N. C. (3 Ired. Eq.) 568.

The effect of the statute of North Dakota is that, as to creditors, the title and ownership of the property transferred with intent to delay or defraud creditors remains in the grantor, and is subject to levy and sale on execution at law against him, as fully as though no transfer had been attempted. Lynch v. Burt, 132 Fed. 417.

Under the statutes of North Dakota, conveyances made to defraud creditors are void as to them (while valid between the parties) at their election; and the levy of a writ of attachment upon the property conveyed is deemed to be a declaration by the creditor of his election to treat the conveyance as void. Salomonson v. Thompson (N. D.) 101 N. W. 320.

If a debtor alienates land with the intent and for the purpose of defrauding his creditors, such alienation, as against such creditors, is void, and the estate is considered as remaining in the debtor for all purposes beneficial to the creditors. It may be attached if the debtor absconds; it is subject to the lien of a judgment; and is in every way liable to be appropriated to the payment of the creditors in the same manner as if no conveyance had been made. Barr v. Hatch, 3 Ohio, 527.

A conveyance from a father to a son in fraud of creditors is to be treated as a nullity, and the lien of a judgment subsequent thereto attaches to the land from the date of its entry, and continues to the day of sale; the consequence of which is that a purchaser at the sheriff's sale takes a title which cannot thereafter be gained by the fraudulent trustee. Miner v. Warner, 2 Grant, Cas. 448.

Where land has been conveyed with the intent to hinder, delay, or defraud the creditors of the grantor, if a creditor seeks to recover the estate from the fraudulent grantee, he may levy upon and sell it, if his judgment is against the personal representatives (without notice to the widow and heirs, for they are strangers to the contest), and may maintain ejectment against the one in possession to recover the whole. Drum v. Painter, 27 Pa. 148.

Where the owner of land encumbered with liens makes a conveyance which is fraudulent as against creditors, a sheriff's sale, under a judgment subsequently obtained against him, does not disturb the liens existing before the conveyance, and therefore they should not be discharged out of the proceeds of the sale, as what is sold, and what a purchaser obtains at such a sale, is the right which the defrauded creditors had, to contest or avoid the conveyance. Byrod's Appeal, 31 Pa. 241; Fisher's Appeal, 33 Pa. 294; Hoffman's Appeal, 44 Pa. 95.

Where the title of a wife is disputed, and the creditor of the husband has a right to proceed against the property to test her title, the fraudulent concealment of the title of the husband in the name of the wife lies at the bottom of such cases, while on the surface her title may be apparently good; and, where one having a judgment against the husband proceeds to sell trolling issue between the contending parties.

Gen. Stat. 1894, § 5136, provides that an action for relief on the ground of fraud shall be brought within six years from the discovery of the fraud; and it has been held by this court that an action to set aside a conveyance alleged to have been executed for the purpose of defrauding creditors comes within the meaning of that statute. McMillan v. Cheeney, 30 Minn. 519, 16 N. W. 404; Duxbury v. Boice, 70 Minn. 113, 72 N. W. 838. The complaint in the case at bar contains no allegations as to when plaintiff discovered the fraud complained of; but, presumably, it was discovered by him at the time of the levy upon the property under his execution, for he now insists that he then elected to treat the transfer as fraudulent. This being the fact, his right of action to have the conveyance set aside is barred by the lapse of six years from that time. The statute must run from the date of the sale on execution, and not, as suggested by plaintiff's counsel, from the expiration of the period of redemption. Whatever title plaintiff acquired under his execution became vested at the time of sale, subject to being defeated by redemption. Curriden v. St. Paul & N. P. R. Co. 50 Minn. 454, 52 N. W. 966. So that, immediately upon the completion of the sale and the execution of the sheriff's certificate, plaintiff was in position to maintain an action of this kind, and the statute must run from that date.

Statutes of limitations, affecting as they land thus situated, he will not be enjoined in equity at the suit of the husband and wife from levying and selling the land and thereafter contesting the title of the wife. Winch's Appeal, 61 Pa. 424.

Where two judgments were recovered against the debtor subsequent to his fraudulent conveyance of land to his wife, it was held that, as the fraudulent conveyance was no conveyance, the judgment first recovered was entitled to the priority in the moneys received from a sale of the lands under an execution issued upon the second judgment. Jacoby's Appeal, 67 Pa. 434.

In Girard Nat. Bank v. Magulre, 15 Phila. 313, it was held that where a debtor had conveyed his land, which conveyance was fraudulent as to creditors, the remedy of a creditor thereafter obtaining a judgment against the grantor was to issue execution upon the judgment, levy upon the land, and by a venditioni exponsa sell the same, and thereafter he or any purchaser at the sheriff's sale could test the character of the alleged fraudulent conveyance in an action of ejectment; and that a suit in equity would not lie because of this adequate remedy at law.

A sale on a judgment which is a lien upon land prior to the fraudulent conveyance thereof will pass the grantee's title, honest or not, for it takes the title against which the lien was created, and not the changed or vitiated one. A sale on a judgment subsequent to the fraudulent transfer of land passes only the right to contest the grantee's title for fraud; it passes the quantity of interest that was fraudulently conveyed and subject to the same lien,—that is to say, it passes the title of the fraudulent grantee, because it is fraudulent, and its purpose and effect are to take away such title. Fidler v. John, 178 Pa. 112, 35 Atl. 976.

Where a judgment creditor seeks to remove a fraudulent encumbrance out of the way of his execution he may, where the judgment is by statute made a lien upon the real estate of the judgment debtor, file his bill as soon as he obtains his judgment, or, where a levy is necessary to establish a lien in his favor, as soon as he obtains his judgment and levy. The reason for this is that equity is resorted to in aid of the law, to enable the creditor to sell the property to better advantage. McKenna v. Crowley, 16 R. I. 364, 17 Atl. 354.

The difference between such a case and one where the creditor is seeking to reach some equitable estate of the debtor which is not liable to a levy and sale under an execution at law is that in the latter he must exhaust his remedy at law by obtaining judgment and getting execution returned nulla bona before he can come into a court of equity for the purpose of reaching the equitable estate of the defendant. And, to the same effect, see Stone v. Westcott, 18 R. I. 517, 28 Atl. 662.

And in First Nat. Bank v. Randall, 20 R. I. 319, 78 Am. St. Rep. 867, 38 Atl. 1035, the court said that the strict application of the rule above stated has been so far relaxed in McKenna v. Crowley, 16 R. I. 364, 17 Atl. 354, as to hold that, after a creditor has secured a lien by attachment upon property fraudulently conveyed, and has recovered a judgment against the grantor, upon which execution is to issue, the court in equity has the independent and auxiliary jurisdiction to set aside the conveyance in order to clear away a cloud upon the title, so that the interest of the debtor may be sold to better advantage for both his and his creditor's benefit, the jurisdiction being quite distinct from that of a creditor's bill to reach equitable assets: and that the court there remarked that "it is a levy of the execution giving a lien, and not its return unsatisfied, which is the prerequisite to it."

The court had previously said that in that case it was alleged that the transfer was fraudulent and void as to the creditor, and that, as to such creditor, the debtor retained his interest in the property, notwithstanding the conveyance, and that it could, therefore, be attached in an action at law. The reasoning throughout these cases indicates very clearly that the rule in Rhode Island is that, as to the creditor, what remains in the debtor after his conveyance of land in fraud of creditors is the legal title, and not a mere equitable interest.

Where one recovered a judgment for breach of promise of marriage against one who had, previous to the commencement of the suit for such breach of promise, made an agreement for the sale of his land, which was fraudulent as to creditors, she may, notwithstanding such agreement, levy upon and sell the land under an execution upon the judgment, and the purchaser will take a valid legal title under the sheriff's deed. Lowry v. Pinson, 2 Ball. L. 324, 23 Am. Dec. 140.

Where a deed is set aside as interfering with the rights of creditors, it is as to those cred-do legal remedies only, are universally regarded with favor by the courts, as statutes of repose, and are construed liberally. They fix periods within which controversies and disputes with respect to rights and liabilities must be brought to an end, and beyond which courts will not lend their aid to litigants. The courts do not volunteer their enforcement when not insisted upon by the parties, nor refuse to apply them when properly invoked to do so; neither will the courts aid or facilitate parties in their attempt, by "mere strategy in judicial proceedings," or by circuitous route of action, to avoid and escape their consequences. Such statutes are applied alike to all. Yet to adopt the contentions of appellant would result in permitting him to accomplish that which he could not accomplish in any other form of action, viz., avoid the statute. Had he brought an action direct for the express purpose of procuring a decree of the court canceling the alleged fraudulent conveyance, he could not have maintained it, because of the bar of the statute; and there is no sound logic or reason in permitting him to effect that result in this indirect manner. The cases cited in his behalf from Massachusetts, which seem to sustain him, are illogical, and were, no doubt, influenced to some extent, at least, by the old judicial prejudice against the statute of limitations. The case of Jackson v. Holbrook, 36 Minn. 494, 1 Am. St. Rep. 683, 32 N. W. 852, cited and relied upon by plaintiff, is not in point, except that it tends to sustain the position of the litigant as if it had never existed, and the effect of setting aside the deed is to leave the creditors to enforce their claims and obtain satisfaction according to their legal priorities, as the court will not disturb legal liens. Gracey v. Davis, 3 Strobb. Eq. 55, 51 Am. Dec. 663.

An existing creditor who wishes to subject property to the payment of his debt, which has been conveyed by his debtor, by a voluntary deed to another, before judgment obtained, has two remedies, to either of which he may resort, to wit: He may disregard the conveyance as fraudulent and void, and proceed to sell the property under his execution, leaving the validity of the deed to be determined in an action of the purchaser at such sale to recover possession of the land; or he may, by an action on the equity side of the court, have the deed set aside on the ground of fraud, and the land conveyed by it subjected to the payment of his debt. Amaker v. New, 33 S. C. 28, 8 L. R. A. 687, 11 S. E. 386.

In Shepherd v. Woodfolk, 10 Lea. 593, it was held that where a creditor has acquired a specific lien upon the property, and an obstruction in the form of a fraudulent conveyance by the judgment debtor is interposed, which prevents a sale at a fair valuation, the creditor has a right to come into equity to remove the obstruction that he may obtain a full price for the property; and he must therefore proceed at law until he obtains such lien, in the case of land a judgment alone being commonly sufficient.

A judgment creditor may cause his execution to be levied on land fraudulently conveyed by the debtor, and, if he himself becomes the purchaser at the execution sale, he may then bring his suit to have the fraudulent conveyance set aside and recover the land. Lynn v. Le Gierse, 48 Tex. 138.

In some respects a conveyance intended to defraud creditors is not void, but voidable only, at the instance of the creditor. As between the parties to the deed it conveys the legal title, which is good, also, as against the creditor until he pursues his remedy as such creditor, and acquires a lien upon or interest in the land. When he has done this, the deed is void as to him, and may be treated by him in the prosecution of his remedies as creditor as absolutely void in law as well as in equity. And so the essential rights of the parties may be fully and definitely established, and a fraudulent deed as fully and effectually set aside in an action of 67 L. R. A.

ejection by a court of law as upon a bill in a court of equity. Cleland v. Taylor, 3 Mich. 201.

In Trask v. Green, 9 Mich. 358, it was said that where a debtor has conveyed land for the purpose of defrauding his creditors, the right of creditors to levy and sell rests upon the ground that, the deed being void as to creditors, the legal title, as to them, still remains in the debtor, as if no conveyance had been made; and the land may therefore be sold on execution at law, without invoking the aid of a court of equity; and the purchaser may, if he chooses, try the question of fraud in an action at law. In this case the creditor had issued an attachment, recovered judgment, and an execution had been issued thereon and a levy made upon the lands, and this was a suit in equity to aid of the execution; but this is by virtue of the statute of Michigan, which provides that real estate of a debtor, fraudulently conveyed, shall be subject to the payment of his debts, and may be sold on execution.

In Messmore v. Huggard, 46 Mich. 558, 9 N. W. 853, where a judgment creditor had levied his execution upon land upon which there was a previous mortgage, and purchased the land at the execution sale, and taken a deed from the sheriff, it was held that he could not thereafter maintain an action to set aside the mortgage as fraudulent, and that he should have levied his execution and then filed his bill to aid thereof; the reason being that a court of equity would not sanction the action of a judgment creditor, who, with knowledge of a fraudulent mortgage, purchased at a sale under his judgment in competition with others having no knowledge of the fraud, saying "that, if the judgment creditor could bid with the secret assurance that he was to have an unencumbered title, when others must suppose they were buying subject to the mortgage, this assurance gave him an advantage in bidding to the full amount of the mortgage, and practically put competition entirely out of the question."

And in Cranston v. Smith, 47 Mich. 189, 10 N. W. 194, it was held that an execution creditor, after levying upon and selling land which had been previously conveyed by a judgment debtor to his wife, could not levy his execution upon such land and purchase the same at the sheriff's sale and thereafter bring an action in equity to set aside the conveyance from the husband to the wife as fraudulent; the same reason being given as in Messmore v. Huggard.

defendants. In that case it appeared that an insolvent debtor conveyed his property for the purpose of hindering and defrauding creditors, and that subsequent to the conveyances several judgments were obtained against him upon debts and obligations existing at the time of the conveyance. Some of the junior judgment creditors brought an action to set aside the conveyances as fraudulent, and were successful. They then caused the land to be sold under executions, from which no redemption was ever made, and they subsequently conveyed the title thus acquired to a third person. Thereafter, and within ten years from the entry of his judgment, the plaintiff in the judgment first entered caused an execution to be issued on his judgment, and the property levied upon and sold, from which the purchaser from the junior judgment creditors redeemed. He then brought that action to recover against the junior judgment creditors for breach of the covenant of quiet enjoyment contained in the deed from them to him. All the court decided in that case was that the senior judgment creditor had the right to proceed as he did,—to cause the land to be sold on execution, without first applying to equity to cancel the alleged fraudulent conveyance. No action was brought by such senior judgment creditor to cancel the conveyance, but his right to do so had not expired at the time of the redemption from his execution sale. The court stated at the close of the opinion that his right to bring such an action did not accrue

46 Mich. 558, 9 N. W. 853, and also, that he prevented any person from bidding against him, as purchasers under the levy made and interest sold could not have moved to have the conveyance declared void, and that he should have filed his bill after the levy and in aid of his execution, so that a fair sale of the premises could have been had.

In Orendorf v. Budlong, 12 Fed. 24, the court, reviewing the cases of Trask v. Green, 9 Mich. 358; Maynard v. Hoskins, 9 Mich. 485; Messmore v. Huggard, 46 Mich. 558, 9 N. W. 853; Cranson v. Smith, 47 Mich. 189, 10 N. W. 194; and also Cleland v. Taylor, 3 Mich. 201,—approved the distinction made by Mr. Justice Cooley in Messmore v. Huggard, between the case of an absolute and entire conveyance of the judgment debtor's land fraudulently, and a mortgage of the same which was not absolute, but left an equity of redemption in the judgment debtor; and, conceding and approving that rule, said that it seemed that the case of Cranson v. Smith, so far from being in affirmance of it, was a clear departure from it, and that there was no authority which supports the principle announced in that case.

In Wagner v. Law, 3 Wash. 500, 15 L. R. A. 784, 28 Am. St. Rep. 56, 28 Pac. 1109, 29 Pac. 927, it was held that a judgment creditor's issuing execution and levying upon and selling land which his judgment debtor has previously conveyed by a deed voidable as to him because of fraud renders the conveyance absolutely void and vests the legal title in the purchaser at the execution sale; and that a purchaser at such sale can maintain a suit to set aside the prior fraudulent conveyance by the execution debtor; and that the judgment creditor, by becoming the purchaser at such sale, does not waive his right to relief in equity. The court said that in Alabama, North Carolina, and Louisiana the other doctrine had been announced by the courts, some of them on general propositions, and others, especially in Louisiana, by reason of the provisions of local statutes; and that Cranson v. Smith, 47 Mich. 189, 10 N. W. 194, was a case exactly in point, which holds squarely the opposite doctrine to that held in this case. The court also called attention to the fact that in Cranson v. Smith, Messmore v. Huggard, 46 Mich. 558, 9 N. W. 853, had been cited as authority, and that on a motion for a rehearing the court had reaffirmed its reliance on that case; but a consideration of the opinion 67 L. R. A.

rendered by Judge Cooley in that case convinced the court that the decision had been misunderstood, or at least misinterpreted, in Cranson v. Smith, as that case was not an absolute conveyance, but a mortgage; and that Judge Cooley had distinguished Messmore v. Huggard, from Cleland v. Taylor, 3 Mich. 202, by saying that, where the judgment debtor had conveyed away his whole interest, any offer to sell on an execution against him necessarily attacked his conveyance, and that the judgment creditor, his grantee, and all persons who should be inclined to become bidders at the sale, would understand it, and all would stand on equality with the judgment creditor in making bids. There would be more force in this reasoning were it not for the fact that Judge Cooley concurred in the judgment in Cranson v. Smith.

The court further said that, as between creditor and fraudulent conveyancer, the conveyance is void; and, conceding that it is only voidable, and that something has to be done by the creditor to change it from a voidable into a void conveyance, that something will have been done if the judgment creditor issues execution and levies upon and sells the land by virtue thereof, as the property of the judgment debtor; and, if it was a fraudulent conveyance it then becomes absolutely void, and the legal title and right to the land become vested in the purchaser, and, having such right and title, he has a right to the interposition of a court of equity to remove any cloud that interferes with the free and perfect enjoyment of his rights. Ibid.

Thereafter came the case of Sawtelle v. Weymouth, 14 Wash. 21, 43 Pac. 1101, in which it appeared that, after a conveyance of community real property by the husband to the wife, a judgment was rendered against the husband upon a community debt existing at the time of the conveyance, and afterwards the wife and her husband conveyed the property in distinct parts to two prior creditors, and an action was brought by the judgment creditor to set aside these conveyances. The court held that the action could not be maintained because the conveyance from the husband to the wife was in form legally sufficient to pass all of the title and interest of the husband to the land; and that, as between the parties, the conveyance was absolute and good as against the grantor, and no interest, legal or equitable, remained in the grantor upon until his purchase at the execution sale. The statute of limitations, as applied to this particular case, was not there involved, though the court intimates strongly that the statute bars the right to have a transfer of the kind set aside.

This court has never had occasion to pass upon the precise question involved in this action; nor have we ever held that the act of the creditor in causing property alleged to have been fraudulently transferred to be levied upon and sold on execution against the fraudulent grantor, wholly ex parte and nonjudicial in its nature, operates ipso facto to cancel the alleged fraudulent conveyance, and vest the absolute title to the property in the purchaser at the sale. The farthest we have gone in that direction is to sanction and approve such proceedings; and the most that can be deduced from the decisions is that the sale in such cases places the creditor or purchaser, as the case may be, in position to attack the conveyance. The result of the decisions is that the creditor may bring an action to set aside the alleged fraudulent conveyance before sale on execution, and then make the sale, or he may make the sale, and then bring the action. In either case he must get rid of the alleged fraudulent conveyance.

Our conclusions from these considerations are that, without regard to the form of the action, the question as to the fraudulent character of a transfer such as that here complained of must be judicially determined within the period covered by the stat-which a lien of a judgment subsequently rendered against him could attach; that the legal title to the land was in the wife and not in the husband, the judgment debtor, and hence no lien attached to the land as a consequence of the judgment, and the subsequent conveyance by the wife and husband to the creditors prior to any proceedings taken by the judgment creditor attacking the transfer from the husband to the wife was sufficient, and must be upheld.

The combined effect of these two decisions would seem to be that the judgment itself, rendered after the making of a fraudulent conveyance, is ineffectual to change or pass the legal title to the land, but that when the judgment creditor, by virtue of his judgment, levies upon and sells the land, the fraudulent conveyance as to the purchaser becomes absolutely void, and the legal title becomes vested in the purchaser.

In Preston-Parton Mill. Co. v. Dexter, H. & Co. 22 Wash. 236, 79 Am. St. Rep. 928, 60 Pac. 412, Sawtelle v. Weymouth, 14 Wash. 21, 43 Pac. 1101, was approved, and it was held that a conveyance of land, although fraudulent as to the creditors of the grantor, is yet good between the parties, and passes the legal title, so that a creditor thereafter obtaining a judgment does not thereby acquire any lien on the lands so conveyed, for the reason that no title or interest upon which a judgment can be a lien remains in the grantor after the conveyance.

Judgments are no liens on lands which had been deeded by the judgment debtor before the judgments were obtained, although the deed was in fraud of creditors. Miller v. Sherry, 2 Wall. 249, 17 L. ed. 880. In this case the court said that, the legal title having passed from the judgment debtor before its rendition, by a deed valid as between him and his grantee, it could not be a lien on the premises by operation of law.

A judgment is not a lien on lands which the judgment debtor has previously conveyed, though with intent to defraud creditors, under Sandels & Hill's Dig. § 4204, which provides that judgments shall be liens on lands of the judgment debtors, and § 3049, which provides for the sale on execution of lands of which the judgment debtor, or any person for his use, is seized in law or equity. Doster v. Manistee Nat. Bank, 67 Ark. 325, 48 L. R. A. 334, 77 Am. St. 37 L. R. A.

Rep. 116, 55 S. W. 137; Parrott v. Crawford (Ind. Terr.) 82 S. W. 688.

In Howland v. Knox, 59 Iowa, 46, 12 N. W. 777, the court made the broad statement that in its opinion the defendant in a judgment has no such interest, equitable or otherwise, in real estate which he has conveyed to defraud his creditors as is the subject of a lien in favor of the judgment creditor.

A judgment obtained by a creditor against his debtor after the latter has made a conveyance fraudulent as to creditors of his real estate is not a lien upon the land; but it may be made a lien thereon by an action in equity, provided the land would have been subject thereto if the title had remained in the debtor. Joyce v. Perry, 111 Iowa, 567, 82 N. W. 941.

By the laws of Louisiana, where there has been a judicial sale of the succession by a probate judge, a creditor of the estate, who obtains a judgment, cannot levy an execution upon the property so transferred, upon the ground that the sale was fraudulent and void; but he should first bring an action to set the sale aside. Ford v. Douglas, 5 How. 143, 12 L. ed. 89.

Where a conveyance of land is alleged to be fraudulent as to creditors, and the grantee is in possession thereunder, which conveyance is not void upon its face, the question of fraud cannot be inquired into collaterally, by commencing with a seizure; and the complaining creditor must resort to the revocatory action. Trahan v. McMannus, 2 La. 209; Childress v. Allen, 3 La. 477; Burland v. Carrollton Bank, 14 La. 189; Barbarin v. Saucier, 5 Mart. N. S. 361; Kirkland v. New Orleans Gaslight & Bkg. Co. 1 La. Ann. 300; Holmes v. Barblin, 13 La. Ann. 474; Keller v. Blanchard, 19 La. Ann. 53; Collins v. Shaffer, 20 La. Ann. 41; Payne v. Graham, 23 La. Ann. 771; Currie v. Pierce, 27 La. Ann. 268; Theurer v. McGibbon, 28 La. Ann. 29; McAdam v. Soria, 31 La. Ann. 864; Johnson v. Kingsland & F. Mfg. Co. 38 La. Ann. 248; Lawler v. Cosgrove, 39 La. Ann. 488, 2 So. 34; Weathers v. Pecot, 52 La. Ann. 932, 27 So. 538; Burg v. Rivera, 105 La. 144, 29 So. 482.

In Willis v. Scott, 33 La. Ann. 1026, where immovable property, which had been sold by a conveyance valid on its face, accompanied by a delivery and continuous possession by the transferee as owner, had been seized by a creditor in disregard of the transfer, and such seizure ute of limitations, or it ripens into full title as against creditors and all others, and that, as it conclusively appears from the pleadings in this action that the plaintiff's right to have the fraudulent conveyance set aside is barred by the statute, the court below rightly dismissed the action, and the order denying a new trial is affirmed.

Start, Ch. J., dissenting:

I dissent for the reason that the majority opinion, in effect, overturns, as it seems to me, well-settled principles which have become rules of property. This action is one at law to recover possession of real estate, and not one in equity for relief on the ground of fraud; or, in other words, it is an action of ejectment, in which the plaintiff stands had been enjoined by the transferee, it was decided that, where the third person enjoining held under such a conveyance, fraudulent simulation could not be sustained as a defense to an action to enjoin the seizure, but the creditor must resort to a direct action, revocatory, or en declaration de simulation; citing most of the authorities above. In the view of the court it would seem that the question as to whether it was a fraudulent simulation was the test as to whether the creditor could seize the property upon the execution without bringing an action for the purpose of having the conveyance set aside. The court, in answer to the claim of the defendant that this was such a case, said that it had examined the authorities referred to by the defendant's counsel, in which the doctrine that in cases of simulation the creditor might seize notwithstanding the apparent transfer, and, if enjoined, might plead and show the simulation on trial of the injunction, and that in all of the cases cited it appeared that the claimant had never had possession, and that it could not find any case distinctly holding that immovable property held under a title, translatable of property, valid on its face, and accompanied by actual delivery and continuous possession and control as owner, could be directly seized by a creditor of the transferrer.

And in Emswiler v. Burham, 6 La. Ann. 710, the court said that an action is necessary to annul a real transfer of property, but for a fraudulent purpose simulation does not transfer the property at all, and it is not necessary to annul the mere paper pretense of title. That simulated transfers of property may be made for a lawful purpose, as to give credit to the vendee to enable him to raise money, or other purposes rendering the property liable to third persons, while it is perfectly understood between the parties, that it remains the property of the vendor.

A judgment creditor, who resorts to a direct action to annul an outstanding title made by his debtor to a third person, cannot disregard such title during the pendency of his action, and proceed by seizure and sale of the property. A judgment perpetuating an injunction until the determination of the direct action of nullity will be maintained, although the judgment of nullity has been pronounced in the direct action. Ulrich v. Duson, 36 La. Ann. 989.

Where a debtor assumes to convey land to another, who thereafter conveys the same to upon his legal rights. It is true that the complaint unnecessarily alleges evidentiary facts which are the proof of the plaintiff's title. It appears from such allegations that on December 3, 1888, the plaintiff was a creditor of Austin Knights, who then owned the real estate which is the subject-matter of this action, and who on January 1, 1889, made a fraudulent conveyance thereof to his brother Michael, which was recorded on the same day; that on May 23, 1890, the plaintiff recovered judgment, which was duly docketed on that day, upon his debt against the fraudulent grantor; that execution was issued thereon, and the land sold thereunder to the plaintiff on April 15, 1893, and was never redeemed; and that the defendant brewing company is in possession of the his wife, but the judgment debtor never loses dominion or control of the property, but the same is at all times physically and really in his possession, a judgment creditor has the right to make a direct seizure of the property as that of his judgment debtor. Cochrane v. Gilbert, 41 La. Ann. 735, 6 So. 731.

In holding that the issue of an execution upon a judgment against one who had fraudulently conveyed his land to defeat the rights of his creditors was not necessary before commencing an equity action to set aside such conveyance, the court, in Dunham v. Cox, 10 N. J. Eq. 437, 64 Am. Dec. 460, said that when a creditor has established his debt by a judgment, by the statute he acquires a lien upon all the real estate of his debtor to satisfy his debt; and the judgment constitutes a lien upon the land, and there is no necessity of compelling the creditor, as a mere matter of form, to incur the further expense at law of issuing an execution.

In Cook v. Johnson, 12 N. J. Eq. 51, 72 Am. Dec. 381, the court said that it was true that a judgment creditor might sell the interest of his judgment debtor in property that he had fraudulently conveyed previous to the judgment "as it now stands with the legal title in the trustee;" but that he was not obliged to sell it with this fraudulent conveyance covering it and run the risk of it being satisfied, as he had a right to have the title cleared up before the sale; and that a court of equity was the only one that could do that.

In Smith v. Vreeland, 16 N. J. Eq. 198, the plaintiff had proceeded on the theory that the conveyance made by his judgment debtor was null and void, and had accordingly proceeded to a sale under his execution at law, and had become the purchaser at such sale for a very inadequate price, and in this action he asked the court to declare the previous conveyance fraudulent and thus confirm his title. The defendant was also a judgment creditor, and the court found that the property was sufficient to satisfy both judgments; and it was held that all that the complainant could ask in equity was that his debt should be paid, and that, if his legal rights were more extensive, they must be enforced at law, without the aid of a court of equity, and the fact that the defendant judgment creditor had been in complicity with the judgment debtor and his wife in effecting the fraudulent conveyance did not alter the case, as the legal fraud imputed to him involved no land through mesne conveyances from the fraudulent grantor, but with full notice of the original fraudulent conveyance. This action was commenced September 25, 1899, and was dismissed by the trial court because the complaint did not state facts constituting a cause of action, in that it did not appear therefrom that the action was brought within six years after the discovery of the fraud. The allegations of the complaint, for the purposes of this appeal, must be taken as true; hence the defendant is not a bona fide purchaser, but stands in the shoes of the original fraudulent grantee, and we must consider the case as if it were between the creditor and such grantee. It may be conceded at the outset that the title of a fraudulent grantee is protected by the statute of limitations. But if a party has two remedies, and one is barred, it by no means follows that he may not avail himself of the other. If the creditor avails himself of the equitable remedy which he has of bringing an action to set aside a fraudulent conveyance, the limitation is six years from the time he discovers the fraud: but, as I understand the decisions of this court, if he pursues his other remedy, and stands upon his legal rights,—recovers judgment, and seizes and sells the land on execution,—and never brings any equitable action to cancel the fraudulent conveyance, his action of ejectment to recover possession of the land can only be barred by fifteen years' adverse possession. The creditor, although he seizes and sells the land on execution.

moral turpitude. The latter statement was made by the court in view of the particular circumstances of the case which would not apply to every case, but the court was very positive and prompt in declaring that all the complainant could demand was that his judgment should constitute a lien upon the property of his debtor, and that upon that claim being satisfied his title to the property should be surrendered.

The contrary doctrine would seem to prevail in Missouri. Kinealy v. Macklin, 2 Mo. App. 241, supra.

In Mulford v. Peterson, 35 N. J. L. 127, it was contended by the counsel for the defendants that a deed fraudulently made with intent to defraud the creditors of the grantor could not be avoided in a court of law, but that the remedy was exclusively in equity; but the court held that this was not so, that the practice in the circuits had always been to admit evidence of fraud against creditors, in actions of ejectment, to overcome title made under fraudulent deeds of conveyance. That the statute of New Jersey was a re-enactment of the statute 13 Eliz. chap. 5, which made such conveyance "utterly void, frustrate, and of no effect."

Under the provisions of the Oregon Civil Code, providing that from the date of the docketing of a judgment such judgment shall be a lien upon all the real property of the defendant within the county or counties where the same is docketed, or which he may afterwards acquire therein, during the time an execution may issue thereon; and that an execution may be levied upon the real property belonging to the judgment debtor on the day when the judgment is docketed in the county, or at any time thereafter; and that all property, or right, or interest therein of the judgment debtor shall be liable to an execution.—a judgment is not a lien upon land which had been previously conveyed by the judgment debtor to another in fraud of creditors, as the operation of the lien is, by the statute, limited to all the real property of the defendant from the time the judgment was docketed. Re Estes, 6 Sawy. 459, 3 Fed. 134, 5 Fed. 60.

In Oregon a conveyance of real property which is fraudulent and void as to creditors nevertheless passes the title to the grantee, so that judgment creditors procuring their judgments after the execution of the fraudulent conveyance obtain no lien upon such real property; but the judgment creditor who first proceeds to have the fraudulent conveyance set aside will be given priority from the time of bringing his suit for that purpose. Neal v. Foster. 36 Fed. 20.

The word "void," in § 2320, Wis. Rev. Stat., relating to fraudulent conveyances of property by debtors, means "voidable." French Lumbering Co. v. Theriault, 107 Wis. 627, 51 L. R. A. 910, 81 Am. St. Rep. 856, 83 N. W. 927.

See also cases in VII., infra.

b. Land purchased and paid for by debtor, but conveyed to another.

The second class of conveyances in fraud of creditors is where land is purchased for a valuable consideration which is paid by the debtor, but, in order to deprive his creditors of their rights, the legal title is taken in the name of another.

The rule at common law was that, if lands were conveyed to one person, the consideration for which was paid by another, a trust resulted in favor of the person who paid the price. But such a trust was not the subject of levy and sale under execution, because no legal title upon which an execution could fasten was in the person who had paid the price. In New York, however, it was held that such a trust was not within the statute of frauds, and by the former statute of uses of that state the interest of the cestui que trust could be seized and sold as a legal estate on execution against him. In Walt v. Day, 4 Denio, 439, it was held that these rules existed under the present Revised Statutes, but the proposition was denied by the court of chancery in Brewster v. Power, 10 Paige, 562, infra, 11, b. and in Garfield v. Hatmaker, 15 N. Y. 475, where the special and general term had both followed Walt v. Day, that decision was overruled by the court of appeals, and it was held that, whenever the statutes of a state had provided, in substance, that when a grant for a valuable consideration shall be made to one person, and the consideration thereof shall be paid by another, no use or trust shall result in favor of the person by whom such payment shall be made, but the title shall vest in the person named as the alienee in such conveyance, but subject to the further provision that every such conveyance shall be deemed fraudulent as against the creditors, at the time of the person paying the consideration; such a statute abolishes the trust, which, by the rule of the com-may, if he so elects, resort to equity to secure a cancelation of the fraudulent transfer; but he is not bound to do so. He may take his chances on being able to prove the conveyance fraudulent whenever his title is challenged. He acquires by the execution sale the legal title to the lands, and in an action at law by him to recover possession thereof, or in an action against him if he be in possession, he may, as against the fraudulent grantee and all persons claiming under him with notice, prove that the conveyance to such grantee was fraudulent. He may prove such fact precisely as he may any other fact which is a necessary link in his chain of title, as a matter of strict legal right, without first appealing to a court of equity to set the fraudulent conveyance aside. See Tupper v. Thompson, 26 Minn. 385, 4 N. W. 621; Furman v. Tenny, 28 Minn. 77, 9 N. W. 172; Cumbey v. Lovett, 76 Minn. 230, 79 N. W. 99. If, however, the pleading of his adversary discloses the source of his alleged title (that is, the fraudulent transfer), the creditor must confess and avoid it by alleging in his answer or reply, as the case may be, the fact that the transfer was fraudulent, and prove such fact as a part of his evidence on the trial. Proving on the trial such fact, which is a necessary link in the creditor's title, must not be confounded with an action to cancel the fraudulent transfer. The conclusion that the legal title passes by the execution sale necessarily follows from the rule, which is well settled in this state, and in nearly mon law, resulted therefrom to the fraudulent debtor, and it follows, therefore, that in place of that trust and of the common-law principles upon which it depended, the statute has declared a presumption of fraud, and, through the fraud, a resulting trust, not in favor of the debtor, but of the creditor only. There is no interest, legal or equitable, in the debtor, and therefore nothing to which a judgment and execution can attach; but, instead of this, there is a pure trust in favor of the creditor, which the statute impresses upon the legal estate in the hands of the grantee in the conveyance, and which can be enforced in equity only. It results in favor of the creditors, not so as to vest the title in them, or to the extent of the entire property, but only "to the extent that may be necessary to satisfy their just demands." And these words plainly imply that the legal title is not transferred by operation of the statute, either to the person paying the consideration, or to his creditor; but the estate vests in the assignee, and is made subject to the just claims of the creditor.

And in Massachusetts, where formerly, instead of selling the land under an execution issued upon a judgment, the execution was extended upon the land of the judgment debtor until the same was satisfied, and it was formerly held that when any real estate, or right, or interest therein, should be purchased by any debtor, or the purchase money therefor directly or indirectly paid by him, and the title to the same either retained in the vendor, or conveyed to any other person with the design and for the purpose of defrauding a creditor of such debtor, the real estate, or right, or interest therein, of the judgment debtor could not be levied upon by his judgment creditor, and, after the execution had been extended upon the land which had been so paid for by the debtor and the title to which had been fraudulently taken in the name of another, such judgment creditor could not maintain a writ of entry to recover the possession of the land from the grantee in the fraudulent conveyance. This was upon the theory that as to the legal-paper title such as would be subject to levy the judgment debtor clearly had none, as he never was a grantee from anyone having or claiming title to the premises. Howe v. Bishop, 3 Met. 26; Hamilton v. Cone, 99 Mass. 478. But by a subsequent statute it is provided that the right or interest of such debtor under the circumstances mentioned may be attached on mesne process, or taken in execution in the same manner and to the same effect as real estate, the legal title to which is in such debtor.

In Clark v. Chamberlain, 18 Allen, 257, the court held that the statute mentioned, by its own terms, declares and creates the interest which it empowers the creditor to take, and that to hold that it only applied to lands to which the debtor had a title would render it senseless and absurd; citing Livermore v. Bouteille, 11 Gray, 217, 71 Am. Dec. 708; Mill River Loan Fund Assn. v. Clafin, 9 Allen, 101.

A statute of Michigan provides that "when a grant for a valuable consideration shall be made to one person, and the consideration therefor shall be paid by another, no use or trust shall result in favor of the person by whom such payment shall be made; but the title shall vest in the person named as the assignee in such conveyance, subject only to the provisions of the next section." The next section provides that "every such conveyance shall be presumed fraudulent, as against the creditors of the person paying the consideration, and, when a fraudulent intent is not disproved, a trust shall result in favor of such creditors to the extent that may be necessary to satisfy their just demands." In Maynard v. Hoskins, 9 Mich. 435, it was held that the trust here reserved in favor of creditors can only be reached by a bill filed by a judgment creditor after an execution has been taken out and returned, on or after the return day, unsatisfied in whole or in part.

It has not been deemed advisable to go through all the special statutes on the subject in the different states; but it is enough to say that wherever in any state the legislature thereof has arbitrarily condemned an interest which would not otherwise be liable to execution, to such liability by arbitrary law, there the decisions under the Massachusetts statutes will naturally apply, but, where the common-law rule has not been interfered with, or where, as in the case of New York and Michigan, the local statute expressly provides that there shall be no resulting trust in the fraudulent debtor who pays for land and takes the legal title in the name of another, but such a trust shall result to his creditors, such land will not be liable to levy and sale on execution, but the creditor must resort to his action in equity.

In Gilbert v. Stockman, 81 Wis. 602, 29 Am. St. Rep. 922, 51 N. W. 1076, 52 N. W. 1045, it all of the states of the Union having statutes similar to our own (Gen. Stat. 1894, § 4222), that the title of the fraudulent grantee in such cases is, as to the creditor, a nullity, and his judgment a valid lien at law upon the land attempted to be fraudulently conveyed, which may be enforced in the same manner and with precisely the same effect as if there had been no such conveyance. It is true that a fraudulent conveyance is voidable, not void, in that it is good as between the parties to it; and, if the fraudulent grantee conveys the land to a bona fide purchaser before the creditor seizes the land on execution, it would destroy the lien of the judgment, and the title of the purchaser would be good. But as Mr. Freeman, in his work on Judgments, aptly says: "As against the fraudulent transferee, the creditor may seize the property, whether real or personal, as that of the fraudulent vendor, and may proceed to sell it under execution. The title transferred by such sale is not a mere equity,—not the right to control the legal title, and to have the fraudulent transfer vacated by some appropriate proceeding. It is the legal title itself." 2 Freeman, Judgm. § 350. The effect of a fraudulent transfer of land on the rights of a creditor has never been more clearly or tersely stated than it was by Chief Justice Gilfillan in the opinion of the court in the case of Campbell v. Jones, 25 Minn. 155. He said: "That a judgment creditor may, notwithstanding a conveyance of his real estate by the judgment debtor, was held that, under the statute of Wisconsin, before an action could be maintained to set aside a conveyance made by a debtor of his land to another in fraud of his creditors, an execution must have been issued and returned nulla bona. The decision was by a divided court, and seems to have been based upon the theory that there was no real distinction between such a case and one where a debtor not owning real property purchases and pays for land and takes the title in another's name for the purpose of defrauding his creditors. This would seem to be opposed to all the decisions on the subject, as, almost without exception, they make a clear distinction between the two cases for the reason generally given, that, in one case the title is originally in the fraudulent debtor and grantor, and that, while the conveyance as to him and his fraudulent grantee and their privies is good, as to creditors it is absolutely void, and, so far as they are concerned, the title remains in him, and is subject to his debts as though the conveyance had not been made, whereas, in the other case the title never was in the fraudulent debtor; but land which is paid for by him, and taken in the name of another person in fraud of his creditors, is subjected to the claim of the creditor upon the ground that the consideration paid by the fraudulent debtor for the property belonged to the creditor, and should have been used in paying his debt, and therefore the land will be subjected to the same debt. The reasoning of the dissenting opinion appears to be the stronger, and, as is well said there, the majority decision is right in the face of Eastman v. Schettler, 13 Wis. 325, infra, VII., and is opposed to the reasoning of the Pennsylvania cases and to the decision in Chautauque County Bank v. Risley, 19 N. Y. 369, 75 Am. Dec. 347.

This case was followed by French Lumbering Co. v. Theriault, 107 Wis. 627, 51 L. R. A. 910, 81 Am. St. Rep. 856, 83 N. W. 927, in which it was stated that in Gilbert v. Stockman, 81 Wis. 602, 20 Am. St. Rep. 922, 51 N. W. 1076, 52 N. W. 1045, notwithstanding strong judicial opposition, as indicated by the able and exhaustive dissenting opinion, the early view of the law declared in Hyde v. Chapman, 33 Wis. 391, was adhered to, and that it, having been undisturbed for twenty-five years or more, should not be changed by a mere judicial declaration, but that the court must follow the maxim, Stare decisis et non quicquid movere. Considering the three cases of Hyde v. Chapman, Gilbert v. Stock- man, and French Lumbering Co. v. Theriault, it may be said that the feature common to all of them is that a judgment against one who has conveyed his property in fraud of his creditors previous to the entry of the judgment is not of itself a lien, but only becomes so when an execution is levied upon the property so conveyed, or is returned unsatisfied, and that not until such execution has been so levied or returned may an action to relieve the land from the conveyance and subject it to the judgment be maintained.

The statutes of Indiana provide that "lands, tenements, and hereditaments, fraudulently conveyed with intent to defeat, delay, or defraud creditors," and such as are "holden by anyone in trust for, or to the use of, another," shall be liable to be sold on execution. In Tevie v. Doe, 3 Ind. 129, the court said that, if the land which was the subject of litigation had been contracted to be purchased by the judgment debtor, and nearly all of the purchase money paid by him, and, four days after the rendition of the plaintiff's judgment, the land was conveyed to another party by the procurement of the judgment debtor with intent to defraud the judgment creditor out of his judgment, and the grantee in the deed was a party to the fraud, then, without regard to the question of the payment of the consideration, the land was subject to an execution on the judgment.

Under the Iowa statute in reference to conveyances made in fraud of the rights of creditors, and also in reference to the lien of a judgment, a judgment is a lien upon the real estate of the defendant, by which is meant, all right thereto and interest therein, equitable as well as legal; and the equitable interest of a defendant in land or real estate, is as much subject to execution and sale as a legal interest or estate; and the creditor has his election, in the first instance, to levy upon and sell either; and does not in fact need the aid of a court of equity to enable him to subject the equitable estate to his judgment. If he elects to proceed with his execution and sell the property, he purchases at his own risk whatever interest the defendant may have in the property. And, when he seeks to draw to the equitable interest so purchased the outstanding legal title, if he shall fail he must ordinarily suffer the consequences. The court said that it thought he might, after the judgment, file his bill and have the title set-made with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud creditors, levy upon and sell the real estate, there is no question. As to the creditor, to defraud whom the conveyance is made, it is void (Gen. Stat. 1878, chap. 41, § 18; Gen. Stat. 1894, § 4222), and is of no effect whatever in the way of passing the title. The title, for the purpose of enabling creditors to enforce their debts against the real estate, still remains in the grantor, as though the conveyance had not been made; and it is equally clear that the creditor who has proceeded to enforce his debt against the real estate, or anyone claiming through such proceedings, may show the conveyance to be void, as against such proceedings, whenever anyone shall claim under such conveyance, and in opposition to the creditor's proceedings, or the title derived through them." The last case cited was approved in Jackson v. Holbrook, 36 Minn. 494, 1 Am. St. Rep. 683, 32 N. W. 852, in which it was directly held that the judgment of a creditor, recovered against his debtor who has made a prior fraudulent conveyance of real estate, which is void as to him, is a valid lien at law thereon, and that the creditor may rest exclusively upon his rights and remedies at law, without invoking the aid of a court of equity. This well-settled rule of this court that a creditor cannot be deprived of his legal right to enforce his judgment against the land of his debtor fraudulently conveyed prior to the entry thereof, that his judgment is a legal lien thereon, that the purchaser at the execution sale thereof acquires titled, before selling, but that he was not bound to settle it in advance, but might sell under his execution, become the purchaser, and if there was no redemption, then file his bill and quiet his title. But the court said further that, when the creditor had thus levied, the person holding the legal or adverse title might, without doubt, file his bill and enjoin the creditor from interfering with his property until the title was settled. Harrison v. Kramer, 3 Iowa, 543.

But in Bridgman v. McKissick, 15 Iowa, 260, it was held that, where an elder judgment creditor sold the equitable title to real property of his judgment debtor, who had fraudulently taken the legal title to the same in the name of his wife, and a junior judgment creditor had commenced an action alleging the fraudulent conveyance and asking that the title in the wife of the fraudulent debtor, whereby the process of the court had been obstructed, might be removed, and making the elder judgment creditor a party, and claiming a priority over him as he had taken no steps in equity to remove the legal obstruction to the title of such real estate; and the elder judgment creditor answered and filed a cross bill claiming to have acquired a prior right by virtue of his attachment judgment and purchase at the execution sale,—the elder judgment creditor, filing his cross bill as an answer to the plaintiff's equity suit, was subsequent in point of time in the commencement of his chancery proceeding, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to the priority. This was under the provisions of chap. 127 of the Revision of 1860, in relation to equitable actions supplemental to execution. The court said that these provisions had been added to the law since the decision in Harrison v. Kramer. In answer to the suggestion, very naturally made after the decision in the above case, that, when it is conceded that a judgment is a lien upon any interest which the debtor may have in real estate, legal or equitable, this concession must determine the question of priority in favor of the oldest lien holder, and change the rule as it exists at common law, in the chancery practice, in regard to the rewards of vigilance,—the court said that, plausible as this proposition would seem, it was nevertheless to be received, at least, with some qualifications; that, in the first place, the general assembly of the state had legislated on the subject, and expressly provided for the method of reaching the debtor's equities, by an equitable action and attachment, whereby a lien is created in favor of the party instituting such proceeding; that the implication is apparent that, in the judgment of the law-giving power, the lien which the creditor obtains by virtue of his judgment upon some interest or equities other than those which amount to a legal right is not available at law. The court reasoned further, that the elder judgment creditor got nothing by his levy, sheriff's sale, and purchase, as in this case the judgment debtor never had the legal title. He paid the price to an innocent grantor, and, for the purpose of defrauding his creditor, took the title in the name of his wife.

In Hershy v. Latham, 42 Ark. 305, a question arose whether, where a debtor in failing circumstances had bought property and had fraudulently taken the title in the name of his wife, he had such an interest as could be reached by the levy of an execution, or whether the creditor would be forced to go into equity to uncover the property; and it was stated that at common law the husband's interest could not be sold under execution, because he never owned the legal title, and to treat the conveyance to the wife as void would leave the title in the wife's grantor, and this would be of no benefit to the creditor; but, as the statute of Arkansas subjects to execution all real estate whereof the defendant, or any person for his use, was seized in law or equity on the day of the rendition of the judgment, or at any time thereafter, the husband, having paid the consideration on it, had an estate in the land by way of a resulting trust, and the wife, who had paid nothing, held the formal legal title, and would have no actual interest, and so the creditor of the husband, who had furnished the purchase money, could take the land in execution through the resulting trust, although, if it were a device to defeat creditors, no court would aid the cestui que trust for his own sake.

Stix v. Chaytor, 55 Ark. 116, 17 S. W. 707, approves and follows Hershy v. Latham, 42 Ark. 305, and holds, further, that the purchaser at the execution sale will take, "not only the beneficial interest in the lands, but also the legal title."

Where a creditor had seized, under a judgment against his debtor, property originally bought by the judgment debtor and paid for with his money, but the title to which he had caused to be made to a woman who lived with the legal title thereto, and that he is not bound to pursue his equitable remedy to have the fraudulent transfer set aside, is sustained by the great weight of judicial authority. The following are some of the leading cases in other states which support the rule: Chautauque County Bank v. Risley, 19 N. Y. 369, 75 Am. Dec. 347; Bergen v. Carman, 79 N. Y. 153; Smith v. Reid, 134 N. Y. 568, 31 N. E. 1082; Thomason v. Neeley, 50 Miss. 310. It has, however, been held by several able courts that the creditor's judgment is not a legal lien on land of a debtor who has made a prior fraudulent conveyance thereof; hence the legal title thereto does not pass to the purchaser by a sale on execution, but simply an equitable title, which gives him the right to control the legal title, and have the fraudulent transfer set aside by a direct equitable action. The leading case in support of this conclusion is Doster v. Manistee Nat. Bank, 67 Ark. 325, 48 L. R. A. 334, 77 Am. St.

Rep. 116, 55 S. W. 137. The opinion, which was by a divided court, repudiates the rule that judgments in such cases are valid liens at law, and, after quoting from the opinion in Jackson v. Holbrook, contains this statement: "Those states which hold, under statutes similar to ours, that a judgment is a lien upon property fraudulently conveyed prior to its rendition, may very properly and consistently adopt the first of the above-named remedies, to wit, to sell the debtor's land upon execution, and leave the purchaser to contest the validity of the defendant's title in an action of ejectment,"—and then proceeds to criticize the proposition that the judgment is a lien as an egregious fallacy.

The majority of the court in this case, it seems to me, have fallen into the fundamental error of assuming as their premises that the plaintiff's judgment was not a legal lien upon the land attempted to be as to him fraudulently conveyed by his debtor.

him, and she executed and signed a counter letter acknowledging a simulation and that the real title was in the judgment debtor, which letter had been stolen and destroyed by her; and it also appeared that the judgment debtor continued to administer the property, to rent it and collect revenues, and, while he assumed to act as agent of his transferee generally, did not in all cases observe even such precaution,—the court after stating the rule laid down in Willis v. Scott, 33 La. Ann. 1020, supra, II., a, held that this was a case of pure simulation; that the counter letter, establishing, as it did clearly, the simulation of the transfer, utterly destroyed its effect between the parties, and made it as if it had never been passed, and took away all the reasons which support the general rule laid down in Willis v. Scott. Carter v. Farrell, 39 La. Ann. 102, 1 So. 270.

An execution upon a judgment having been levied upon the land of the judgment debtor, he furnished the money to his daughter, and she purchased at the sheriff's sale, and the land was conveyed to her. Thereafter another execution creditor of the same judgment debtor levied upon the land and sold the same on his execution. It was held that the first sale, although the sheriff knew nothing about the fraud, was a fraudulent one and conveyed no title, and that the legal title still remained in the judgment debtor, upon which the second judgment creditor might legally, lawfully, and properly levy, and the purchaser on such sale took a good legal title as against one claiming under the fraudulent purchaser at the previous sale. Dobson v. Erwin, 18 N. C. (1 Dev. & B. L.) 569.

Where a debtor is entitled to the conveyance of the legal title to land, but abstains from receiving it, under an agreement with the person in possession of it that it shall remain in him in order that it may not be made subject to the payment of existing debts of the debtor, the land may be regarded as conveyed with intent to defraud, and be subject to execution, under the statute providing that "lands fraudulently conveyed with intent to delay or defraud creditors" shall be so subject. Pennington v. Clifton, 11 Ind. 162.

By a statute of Missouri it is provided that all real estate whereof the defendant, or any person for his use, was seized at law or in equity, may be subjected to sale on execution, and under this provision the supreme court of that state has held that where a debtor purchased land with his own money, and took the paper title thereto in the name of another in order to defraud his creditors, there was a resulting trust to the debtor in favor of the creditors, which was subject to sale under execution. Rankin v. Harper, 23 Mo. 579; Dunnic v. Coy, 24 Mo. 167, 69 Am. Dec. 420, 28 Mo. 525, 75 Am. Dec. 133.

In the last case the court said that in Rankin v. Harper, 23 Mo. 579, the creditor "obtained a judgment vesting the legal title in him." See also Eddy v. Baldwin, 23 Mo. 588; Herrington v. Herrington, 27 Mo. 560; Bobb v. Woodward, 50 Mo. 95.

Previous to the Revised Statutes, if a person purchased real estate and paid for it with his own means, and took a conveyance of the legal title in the name of another, there was in equity a resulting trust in favor of the one who paid the money, except where it satisfactorily appeared that the purchase was intended as a gift or advancement to the person in whose name the conveyance of the legal title was taken. But such an equitable interest in land, where the legal title was in the person in whose name the conveyance was taken, could not be sold by the sheriff, upon execution against the cestui que trust, previous to the statute, 29 Car. II., chap. 2, § 10, which statute was adopted as a part of the law of New York, and continued in force there until the Revised Statutes went into effect, January 1, 1830. By that statute, where the judgment debtor took the whole beneficial interest in the land by virtue of a resulting trust, a sale by virtue of an execution against such debtor operated to vest the legal title in the purchaser, under the sheriff's deed. Brewster v. Power, 10 Paige, 562.

Where a judgment debtor pays the purchase and that, as purchaser at the execution sale, he acquired only an equitable title to the land, the legal title remaining in the fraudulent grantee, which gave him the right to control the legal title by having the transfer set aside by bringing an action to be relieved from the fraud by canceling the fraudulent transfer and vesting the legal title in him. If the premises are correct, it is plain sailing to the conclusion reached. But, unless I have misconceived the decisions of this court, the premises are not correct, for, if the conveyance was fraudulent as against the creditor, the judgment was a lien, and the legal title passed to the plaintiff on the execution sale. The cases cited in the opinion to support the proposition that the creditor must, by a proper judicial proceeding, effect a cancellation of the fraudulent transfer before he can acquire the legal title, are not, if I have read them correctly, in point. All of them, save one, were actions in equity to cancel such a transfer, or to charge the fraudulent grantee as a trustee; and it was correctly held that such actions were for relief on the ground of fraud, and must be brought within the time limited after discovering the fraud. The excepted case was an action of ejectment, and it was rightly held that the creditor's title was barred by adverse possession of the land by the fraudulent grantee. The case of McMillan v. Cheeney, 30 Minn. 519, 16 N. W. 404, cited by defendants' counsel, is clearly not in point, for that was a case where the legal title to real property was obtained by the alleged fraud of the grantee, and the grantor had no remedy except an action for relief on account of the fraud. Such is not this case. It may be that the rule adopted by the majority of the court is wiser, more logical and just, than the old rule established by this court; but, if a change is to be made, it ought not to be by a retroactive decision which may cloud, if not unsettle, titles to real estate.

money for land, and has the title thereto taken in the name of a third person to whom it is claimed he is indebted, the question of the validity of the transaction depends upon that fact. If the relation of debtor and creditor in fact exists the conveyance will be good, but if it does not then the deed will be considered to have been made in fraud and hindrance of creditors, and such an interest will result to a judgment creditor as may be seized and sold on execution within the statute. Arnot v. Beadle, 111 & D. Supp. 181.

This would appear not to be in line with Garfield v. Hatmaker, 13 N. Y. 475, supra, and so must be overruled by that case.

By the Pennsylvania statute of fraudulent conveyances a purchase by one indebted, in the name of a natural child, being intended to hinder and delay creditors, the title is, as against the creditors, utterly void, and a purchaser at a sheriff's sale under a subsequent judgment and execution against the father will take a good title. Kimmel v. McRight, 2 Pa. St. 38.

An insolvent debtor having a bond for title of land surrendered it and procured the party from whom he was entitled to execute a deed to his children. Under the statutes existing at the time of the decision in Russell v. Stinson, 3 Hayw. 1, the insolvent debtor had such a use as was then liable to execution. Shute v. Harder, 1 Yerg. 3, 24 Am. Dec. 427; Smith v. Gray, 1 Humph. 401, 34 Am. Dec. 664; Thomas v. Walker, 6 Humph. 93.

Where a judgment creditor had levied, upon an entry of land made by the judgment debtor, who thereafter assigned the plat and certificate to his son, who assigned the same to his sisters, in whose name, before the levy a conveyance was taken, and after the levy and order of sale they sold to another defendant, all parties having notice of the facts in the case; and the land was thereafter sold by virtue of the execution,—in an action by the judgment creditor to have his title perfected, it was held that, by his purchase, he acquired an equitable title, and, he having thereafter died, the purchaser from the sisters holding the legal title held the same as trustee to the successors of the judgment creditor. Burrow v. Smith, 2 Sneed, 566.

It would seem as though the rule in Tennessee was changed by the act of 1847, § 191, which was substantially re-enacted in the Code, §§ 2990, 2996; and that, since the passage of that act, where lands are purchased by a debtor, and he procures the title to be taken in the name of his children with intent to defraud his creditors, he has no such title in the land as is subject to sale by execution at law. Smith v. Hinson, 4 Heisk. 250.

In Dockray v. Mason, 48 Me. 178, the court said that, under the Maine statute, a wife holding an estate conveyed to her by another, resulting from the payment of the consideration by her husband, held the same in trust, and the same was to be taken as his property in payment of his debts contracted before the purchase; and that, when a creditor cannot effectually reach real estate which is equitably that of the debtor, by reason of a fraud committed by the debtor and those who may hold the legal title, courts of equity will aid the creditor to enable him to obtain payment when the legal remedies have proved inadequate.

Where the owner of land previous to contracting a debt, and when, so far as appeared, he was free from debt, conveyed the land to another, and at an agreed price which was its full value, the purchaser giving his promissory note for the agreed price, the wife of the grantor joining in the conveyance; and thereafter, after the creditor's debt had been contracted and he had commenced an action against the husband and attached the real estate on mesne process, the transferee of the husband conveyed the land to the wife and received from her his note, upon which nothing had been paid, it was held that, though there was no evidence that the husband had given the purchaser of his land the note taken by him on the conveyance to the wife before the debt on which the levy was made was contracted, and therefore payment for the conveyance to the wife must be deemed to have been made with the husband's funds, still the creditor could not acquire title by his levy so as to enable him to maintain an action for the possession of the property, because neither the legal title, nor any remains of it, were in his debtor when the debt was contracted or when the attachment and levy was made; as it had passed from him by a bona fide conveyance before the debt to the plaintiff was contracted, and he had no more interest or estate in it than as if he had never owned it. And if the plaintiff desired to hold it in the hands of the wife, as having been paid for out of the husband's property, he must pursue his remedy in equity. Webster v. Folsom, 58 Me. 230.

Where a debtor purchases and pays for land, and procures the conveyance to be taken for his benefit in the name of another, while such a transaction is void as to creditors and may be declared so, it can only be done in equity, and is founded on a different principle from that which arises where the estate was once in the debtor, which is the right in equity to follow the funds of the debtor. Simply to set aside the conveyance in the last instance would leave the title in the original vendor, which would not serve the creditor's purpose at all; and so, after such fraudulent conveyance, the judgment debtor has no such title or interest in the land as can be sold on execution. Gowing v. Rich, 23 N. C. (1 Ired. L.) 553. To the same effect, Rhem v. Tull, 35 N. C. (13 Ired. L.) 57; Page v. Goodman, 43 N. C. (8 Ired. Eq.) 16; Parris v. Thompson, 46 N. C. (1 Jones, L.) 57; Jimmerson v. Duncan, 45 N. C. (3 Jones, L.) 537; Gentry v. Harper, 55 N. C. (2 Jones, Eq.) 177; Wall v. Fairley, 73 N. C. 464.

And in Harrison v. Hollis, 2 Nott & M'C. 578, it was held that where one purchased and paid for the land in question, but procured the title to be made to his son; and thereafter a creditor of the father obtained a judgment against him, and had the lands sold as his property, and purchased and took the sheriff's title for the same, and permitted his judgment debtor to live on the land as his tenant; and thereafter the son died, but previous to his death a judgment was recovered against him, and after his death the land was sold as his property to satisfy that judgment,—in an action by the purchaser at the last sale of trespass to try the title to the land it was held that the plaintiff should recover, as, it being an action at law, the defense of a resulting trust could not be interposed, as such a question belongs exclusively to a court of equity. To the same effect, Bauskett v. Holsonback, 2 Rich. L. 624.

Where a debtor in insolvent circumstances purchases real property, and procures the title to be taken in his minor son's name, there is no such legal title in such debtor as that a judgment creditor can levy upon the land and sell the same, and, if the same is attempted, the purchaser at such a sale will take no title to the land. Smith v. Ingles, 2 Or. 43.

In Mississippi the statute includes only those conveyances made by the debtor in fraud of his creditors, and where the land is purchased by and with the funds of the debtor, and the title is taken in the name of another, the debtor has no title which can be sold under execution, and a purchaser at such sale cannot maintain ejectment of a bill to cancel the outstanding fraudulent legal title. Carllie v. Tindall, 49 Miss. 229; Ferguson v. Bobo, 54 Miss. 121.
67 L. R. A.

Where a debtor purchased land, and took the deed in the name of his wife to prevent his creditors from subjecting the property to the payment of their claims against him, the legal title is not in him, and a sale of the land under an execution issued upon a judgment against such debtor will pass no title. Haggerty v. Nixon, 26 N. J. Eq. 42.

Where a debtor purchased and paid for land, and, for the purpose of defrauding his creditors, procured the title to be made to his father; and judgments were afterwards obtained against the debtor, and under them executions issued and levied upon the land, a purchaser at a sale upon such executions took no title to the land, as the only remedy of the judgment creditors in such case is an action in the nature of a bill in equity to subject the land to the payment of their debts. Everett v. Raby, 104 N. C. 479, 17 Am. St. Rep. 685, 10 S. E. 526.

Where a debtor purchased and paid for land, and caused it to be conveyed to his wife for the purpose of defrauding his creditors, he had no interest therein to which the lien of a judgment could attach, or which could be sold under an execution, the reason being that where land is purchased and paid for by one person, but conveyed to another, a trust results in favor of the person who paid the price; but it is a mere equitable interest, and cannot be seized or sold on execution. Silver v. Lee, 38 Or. 508, 63 Pac. 882.

In Buck v. Gilson, 37 Vt. 653, although the action was for a quantity of hay, yet the court, after saying that, in order to enable the plaintiff to maintain the action, he must have a title to the premises upon which the alleged trespass was committed, and that his title to the hay sued for depended upon his title to the land, said further, that in this case the land had been purchased and conveyed solely to the wife, so that the legal title was in her and not in the husband; but it was claimed that a part of the purchase money was paid in a note given by the husband. The court, after holding that this fact did not constitute in him an interest, continued: "But, if this were otherwise, and it were shown that he paid the whole consideration, and the deed was taken to his wife for the purpose of keeping it out of the reach of his creditors, the plaintiff did not, by his levy, acquire the legal title so that he could maintain either ejectment or trespass quare clausum upon it. If the defendant was the real owner of the land, and the title held by his wife was merely in trust for him, his interest was liable to be taken by his creditors by levy. But a levy and set-off of his equitable estate would convey to the creditor only the equitable estate, and the proper course must be taken to obtain the legal title, before an action at law can be supported upon the title."

A father had paid for a parcel of government land, and, being indebted, had taken the patent in the name of his infant son. The court said: "Here the infant, though the legal title was cast upon him by the fraudulent conduct of his father, had no right to the land against a creditor, or purchaser" from his father. Elhott v. Horn, 10 Ala. 348, 44 Am. Dec. 488.

Where one made a purchase of land, advanced the purchase money, and caused the conveyance to be made to his minor sons with intent to place the land beyond the reach of his creditors, the legal title is in the sons, and, while it is so, the equitable title of the father cannot be conveyed by a sale by virtue of an execution issued upon a judgment against him; as the statute of Oregon, which provides "that a judgment shall be a lien on real property of the judgment debtor . . . owned by him," intended to make a judgment a lien on the legal title of real property, and not on some hidden title, which could only be brought to light and made available by the extraordinary powers and proceedings of a court of equity. Smith v. Ingles, 2 Or. 43.

In an action to set aside as fraudulent a conveyance of land purchased by two debtors, but conveyed, at their suggestion, to their sons, who took and received the conveyance, and took possession of the property as trustees of their fathers, and for their sole interest, benefit, and behoof, the grantees in the conveyance paying nothing, where it was claimed that the conveyance so made and received was with the intent to cheat and defraud the creditors of the fathers, the court, in stating the case, said that the plaintiff had levied his execution upon the lands as their property, and thus become vested with all their equitable rights; "and that he comes into this court in order to obtain the legal title." The action was sustained, and the view of the court—or, at least, of the judge writing the opinion—was, that the whole transaction up to that point left in the plaintiff only an equitable title, and that the effect of the action would be to secure in him the legal title. Botsford v. Beers, 11 Conn. 369.

Where a person conveyed to a wife premises the consideration of which was paid by the husband, and the wife mortgaged the premises to another to secure the payment of a sum of money, a judgment previously recovered against the husband is not a lien upon the premises prior to the mortgage, as the title to those premises was not in the husband at any time, and the mortgage therefore became a valid lien on that property before the commencement of a creditor's suit to satisfy such judgment out of such property because of the fact that, the consideration of the land having been paid by the husband, the transaction was in fraud of his creditors. Reynolds v. Park, 5 Lans. 149.

Where a debtor having an equitable title to real estate procures the legal title to be transferred to another, judgment creditors of the debtor cannot levy upon the property as a legal estate in their debtor. All that they could do in such case would be to sue out their execution; and, upon its being returned nulla bona, on the institution of an equitable suit, an equitable lien in preference to other creditors would be created in favor of the plaintiff's right on any fund which might be found to arise from the fraudulent purchase. Hartshorn v. Eames, 31 Me. 93.

Where one who was insolvent and indebted furnished the consideration for the purchase of land, and procured the deed to be made to his wife with a fraudulent intent as to his creditors, and thereafter the wife in making a loan from a building and loan association mortgaged the land to the latter, the association having no notice of the fraud or indebtedness of the insolvent husband, but advancing its money in good faith to the wife upon the mortgage, such mortgage will not be held invalid at the suit of the creditors of the husband, as the title to the land embraced in the mortgage to the association was in the wife, and it did not appear that the name of the husband appeared anywhere in the chain of title. Allen v. Riddle (Ala.) 37 So. 680.

In Jefferson v. Morton, 2 Wms.' Saund. 11, a note states: "At the common law, if one man was seised of the legal estate . . . in trust for another, . . . against whom a judgment had been obtained these lands were not liable to execution upon the judgment;" citing Co. Litt. 374b. But the same was changed by the statute of frauds, 29 Car. II., chap. 3, § 10.

III. Title of fraudulent grantee as to parties not creditors.

The general rule is that a conveyance made for the purpose of defrauding the creditors of the grantor is good, not only as between the parties thereto and their privies, but as to everyone, except the creditors defrauded thereby; and that, except as to them, the legal title in the grantee is perfect.

Where a husband had made a conveyance of his real estate to his wife, which was afterwards adjudged to be fraudulent; and thereafter in a local court she had obtained a decree against him that he execute to her a mortgage on the same real estate, which he did, and she procured the same to be recorded, and by the local law the mortgage took effect from the date of the recordation of the same; and thereafter the conveyance by the husband to the wife was adjudicated to be fraudulent,—the wife took no title or lien by virtue of her mortgage, as, from the date of the fraudulent deed from her husband to her until the decree setting the same aside as fraudulent, the property stood in her name, and was hers to all the world except the creditors of her husband. Clafin v. Lisso, 27 Fed. 420.

A conveyance from a husband to his wife, without consideration and in fraud of creditors, is not absolutely void, but only voidable as to creditors. As between the parties, the conveyance is absolute and good as against the grantor, and no interest, legal or equitable, remains in the grantor upon which a lien of the judgment subsequently rendered can attach. Sawtelle v. Weymouth, 14 Wash. 21, 43 Pac. 1101.

The decision in Sawtelle v. Weymouth, 14 Wash. 21, 43 Pac. 1101, was afterwards accepted by the Federal district court as conclusive in a suit instituted by the United States against the owners of a tract of land for its condemnation for government uses, where a party had intervened claiming to be a judgment creditor of the former owner, who had conveyed the lands, as the intervener claimed, fraudulently, to those claiming the present title, the court saying that, the question being whether, under the laws of Washington, a mere equitable interest in real estate becomes impressed with the lien of the judgment against the owner of such equitable interests, that being concluded by the decision of the supreme court of the state in Sawtelle v. Weymouth, they must hold that it does not. United States v. Eisenbeis, 88 Fed. 4.

In Bell v. Wilson, 52 Ark. 171, 5 L. R. A. 370, 12 S. W. 328, which was an action of ejectment to recover land, plaintiff claiming under a sheriff's deed given upon a sale of the land upon execution under a judgment against the person who was the common source of title, it appeared that the judgment defendant had conveyed the lands described in the sheriff's deed, eleven years prior to the rendition of the judgment, to her grandson, under whom the defendant claimed. It also appeared that, in a suit by another person, a creditor of the person who was the common source of title, the conveyance aforesaid was a fraud upon the rights of such creditor, and the deed was in that action set aside and the lands ordered to be sold to pay his debt. It was held that the plaintiff in this case, being a stranger to that suit, took nothing by the decree, and could build no estoppel against the title of the grantee in the conveyance from the common source of title or his grantee, upon it. That the conveyance was good between the parties and against all the world except the creditors of the person who was the common source of title, who were in position to attack it for fraud. And that the decree showing that the deed had been adjudged a fraud upon the rights of another creditor in a suit in which the plaintiff in this action was not a party, did not prove that the conveyance was a fraud on his rights.

In Harris v. Taylor, 15 Cal. 348, the court, after deciding that the allegations of a petition which sought to reach certain funds, the proceeds of real property which had been sold in partition, claiming that the petitioner was a creditor of plaintiff's vendor, and seeking to defeat the conveyance to the plaintiff on the ground of fraud, were insufficient, said, as a reason therefor, that the conveyance, however fraudulent as to creditors, was valid as between the parties, and that no one could impeach it without showing that he had been injured by it.

In elucidating the rule in regard to a fraudulent transfer of personal property, the court, in Lowry v. Orr, 6 Ill. 70, made the statement that a deed made to defraud creditors will be binding between the parties, and yet liable to be avoided, so far as it may be intended to defeat the just demands of others.

And in Ward v. Enders, 29 Ill. 519, the court, in modifying a decree declaring the conveyance in that case to be void generally, said that the judgment should be confined to the parties to the bill, and the decree was therefore erroneous, as such conveyances were not utterly void; and that such was the true construction of the Illinois statute on the subject, which declared that such conveyances should be deemed and taken only as against the persons, their heirs, etc., or assigns, whose debts, etc., should, by such devices, be in any wise disturbed, hindered, delayed, or defrauded, as clearly and utterly void.

The statute 13 Eliz. chap. 5, is not in derogation of the common law. On the contrary, it is either declaratory of the common law, or an enlargement of its principles; and the statute of Indiana has not changed the law upon the subject, and contains nothing inconsistent with the principle of the common law,—that a conveyance, void as to creditors, may be binding on the parties. Findley v. Cooley, 1 Blackf. 262.

The court, in Edwards v. Haverstick, 53 Ind. 348, said: "It is firmly settled by repeated decisions in this state that a contract for the sale or conveyance of property, to hinder or delay creditors, is illegal as to creditors only. 67 L. R. A.

As between the parties, and as to all others than creditors, it is legal and valid, and can be enforced in all of its terms as any other contract." The foregoing language was quoted and approved in Etter v. Anderson, 84 Ind. 333.

A conveyance fraudulent as to creditors is valid as between grantor and grantee. Trent v. Edmonds, 32 Ind. App. 432, 70 N. E. 169.

Where one conveys land to his wife in fraud of creditors, and the wife afterwards dies, the husband cannot, in an action by him against the heir of the wife to quiet what he claims as his title, set up the claim that his wife holds the title to the land in trust for him, and that he is entitled as beneficial owner,—particularly where the deed recites a valuable consideration. Hays v. Marsh, 123 Iowa, 81, 98 N. W. 604.

The provision of § 1, art. 1, chap. 44, Ky. Gen. Stat., that "every gift, conveyance, . . . or transfer of . . . any estate, real or personal, . . . made with the intent to delay, hinder, or defraud creditors, purchasers, or other persons, . . . shall be void as against such creditors, purchasers, and other persons," does not declare such gifts, conveyances, etc., void for any and all purposes, but only as against creditors, purchasers, or other persons, who may be delayed, hindered, or defrauded. As between the grantor and grantee, such gifts or conveyances are valid. Also, such gifts or conveyances are valid as against all persons who do not come within the category mentioned in that section of the statute. Dorsey v. Phillips, 84 Ky. 420, 1 S. W. 687.

The general rule is, that all executed contracts tainted with fraud are binding upon the immediate parties, for, after the contract is executed, it is blinding, as the law will not relieve either party, no matter how great may be the hardship to which he shall have submitted himself; and this rule, in Noble v. Noble, 28 Ark. 317, was applied to a conveyance of lands in fraud of the rights of creditors.

A conveyance of real estate, fraudulent as to creditors, is nevertheless valid against the grantor and his heirs, and the land will constitute no part of his estate at his death, and his representatives cannot have it set aside; and a conveyance under an order of the county court to sell the land for the debts of the fraudulent deceased grantor will convey no title. George v. Williamson, 26 Mo. 190, 72 Am. Dec. 203.

Where the wife joins with her husband in a fraudulent conveyance to delay and hinder creditors from collecting their debts, her right to dower in the property is extinguished, although the conveyance is declared void as to creditors. Manhattan Co. v. Evertson, 6 Paige, 465.

In an action by a judgment creditor against a vendor and vendee in a conveyance for a valuable consideration, where a fraudulent intent is established, all the judgment that the plaintiff is entitled to is a sale of the lot and the payment to him of the amount of his judgment, interest, and costs, as, if the conveyance between the vendor and vendee is valid, there is nothing to warrant a judgment declaring the same null and void as to everyone. Orr v. Gilmore, 7 Lans. 345.

A deed from a judgment debtor to another, if fraudulent, is not void, but voidable only, at the election of creditors, and is valid between the parties to it. Van Wyck v. Baker, 10 Hun, 39.

A conveyance of land, made with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud creditors, is good against every interest except that intended to be hindered, delayed, or defrauded. Drum v. Painter, 27 Pa. 148.

It is well settled that a fraudulent conveyance is good between the parties; only persons whom the transaction tended to defraud have standing in court to avoid it; as against all other persons, the deed vests a good title in the grantee. Prior lien creditors, or prior creditors assenting thereto, and subsequent creditors whom the debtor did not intend to defraud, are not defrauded by such a deed, and have no standing to impeach it. Henderson v. Henderson, 133 Pa. 399, 19 Am. St. Rep. 650, 19 Atl. 424.

In Irwin v. Hess, 12 Pa. Super. Ct. 163, the court, in holding that the heirs of one who in his lifetime had conveyed land in fraud of his creditors were not necessary parties to an action to set aside the conveyance, said the conveyance of the decedent to his son was good as against himself and his heirs, and bad only as against creditors.

In Pratt v. Cox, 22 Gratt. 330, the court said that, though the deeds from the debtor to another, and from him to the children of his grantor, may have been designed to hinder and delay the creditors of the latter; and though the latter deed was wholly voluntary as to the grantees therein,—yet that, as between the parties, it must be held that both were valid, and that the deed from the first grantee to the children vests in them the legal title to and absolute property in the lands therein, subject, only, to the claims of the prior creditors of the original grantor.

In Hopkins v. Webb, 9 Humph. 519, the court, in holding that the defendant was not in condition to question the plaintiff's title as being by the conveyance fraudulent as to creditors, said that, under the statute of Tennessee, as well as under 13 Eliz., which contains the same provisions, conveyances in fraud of creditors were utterly void only as against the person or persons injured by them,—that is, only as against the creditor or subsequent purchaser; and that as to all other persons they are good and valid conveyances.

A conveyance fraudulent as to creditors is good as between the fraudulent grantor and grantee, and all the creditors can claim is that the hindrance of that conveyance shall be removed out of their way, and that the property of their debtor, thereby conveyed, to the extent of their claims against him, shall be applied to the payment of those claims. Ellington v. Moore, 4 Va. Law Reg. 608.

Where a father conveyed land to his son, an infant, for the purpose of defrauding his creditors, and thereafter the son, being still a minor, reconveyed to his father, a purchaser and grantee of the father, in an action against him by the son to recover the possession of the land, claiming that his conveyance to his father was void on account of his infancy, may show, in defense of his title, that the original deed from the father to the son was made in fraud of the former's creditors. Starr v. Wright, 20 Ohio St. 97.

A conveyance of lands, made in fraud of creditors, will convey all of the interests and title of the grantor, and is good against the grantor and everyone holding under or in privity with him; and a subsequent conveyance of the land by such fraudulent grantor will not convey to the subsequent grantee any right or interest, legal or equitable, in the land as against the original fraudulent grantee, or his transferee. Poling v. Williams (W. Va.) 46 S. E. 704.

Inasmuch as the grantor in a conveyance made by him in fraud of creditors cannot complain of the same, or have it set aside for that reason, neither can his heirs at law, as they stand in his shoes, and have no rights which he did not have. When he died, such rights as he then had, and no more, passed to them. Neal v. Neal, 28 Ky. L. Rep. 962, 82 S. W. 981.

While, as a general rule, courts of equity will not decree a specific performance of a promise made by a fraudulent grantee to reconvey property to a grantor who has conveyed it to such grantee to cheat, hinder, and delay his creditors, and will not interpose for the relief of a party who is engaged in a fraudulent transaction, yet, there are exceptions to this rule, one of which is that when a party suing, though particeps criminis, is not in pari delicto with the adverse party. Hutchinson v. Park (Ark.) 82 S. W. 843.

And so where a merchant advised and procured an illiterate negro to convey his land to him, the merchant, in order to defeat a claim then in suit against the grantor, promising to reconvey after the creditor had been disposed of, such a state of affairs would furnish the fraudulent grantor a perfect defense to an action of ejectment brought by the fraudulent grantee. Ibid.

See Splindler v. Atkinson, 3 Md. 409, 56 Am. Dec. 755, supra, II., a; Doster v. Manistee Nat. Bank, 67 Ark. 323, 48 L. R. A. 334, 77 Am. St. Rep. 116, 55 S. W. 137, and Neal v. Gregory, 19 Fla. 356, infra, IV.

IV. Title of bona fide purchaser, from fraudulent grantee.

The question as to the validity of a transfer by the fraudulent grantee of a conveyance made in fraud of the creditors of his grantor to an innocent and bona fide purchaser for value, and the character of the title which the latter would take by such a transfer under the statute of Elizabeth, chap. 5, while hardly the subject of consideration in England, in this country early became the subject of a discussion as animated as able, and participated in by some of the most noted judicial minds of the period. Its result and the subsequent confirmation of it by later decisions appear from the following cases.

In Wilson's Case, Godb. 161, it is stated that it was admitted without contradiction that, if judgment in an action of debt be given against a lessee for years, and he afterwards aliens his term, and after the year the plaintiff sues forth a scire facias and has execution, the term is not liable to the execution, if the assignment was made bona fide. It is also stated that the chief justice said that, if a lessee for years assigns his term by fraud to defeat the execution, and his assignee assigns the same over unto another bona fide, in the hands of the second assignee it is not liable to execution.

In Prodgers v. Langham, Sid. pt. 1, p. 133, it is stated that it was agreed by the court that, "if one made feoffment fraudulently, whose feoffee made feoffment for a valuable consideration, and then the first feoffer entered and made feoffment for a valuable consideration, the feoffee of the first feoffee would hold the land, and not the feoffee of the first feoffer for, as the estate of the first feoffee was fraudulent in its creation and voidable, still, as he enfeoffed another for a valuable consideration, that one would be preferred before the latter;" and that this was adjudged latterly upon argument in that court.

In Hallfax Joint Stock Bkg. Co. v. Gledhill [1891] 1 Ch. 31, 60 L. J. Ch. N. S. 181, 63 L. T. N. S. 623, 39 Week. Rep. 104, Kay, J., after stating what was said in May's Treatise on the statute of Elizabeth, to the effect that the fraudulent deed, being good against the grantor, and only void against creditors, is practically not void, but voidable, at their suit; and that, consequently, a purchaser for value of an interest under the deed can successfully resist any attempt to avoid it,—further said: "It seems to me impossible to say that the right of creditors under the statute of 13 Eliz., chap. 5, is an equity, if that is the learned author's meaning. A court of equity does not avoid the deed in a suit by such creditors, but merely declares, if it is proved fraudulent, that it is void against them by the statute. The real question is, whether a subsequent purchaser for value of an interest under the settlement without notice has his purchase protected by § 5. If he has, it does not matter whether it was a legal, or merely an equitable, interest. If he has not, then, as the creditors' rights are under a positive enactment that the deed is void against them, their claim is not equitable, but legal." The judge proceeded to say, further, that it seemed strange that there should be no direct decision to the effect, and that he had not been able to find a case in which creditors have prevailed against such a purchaser.

There is no doubt of the dearth of English cases on the subject, but the judge in the last case either overlooked the two immediately preceding ones, or deemed them not decisions, but only an admission or concession.

This rule was approved and followed, and the very language used, in Prodgers v. Langham, adopted in Price v. Junkin, 4 Watts, 85, 28 Am. Dec. 685, in which case the court further said: "This doctrine is elucidated and confirmed in the case of Anderson v. Roberts, 18 Johns. 515, 9 Am. Dec. 235, in which it is shown that the statutory enactments (generally more unyielding in their construction than the common law) fully protect such purchasers, as well against creditors as subsequent purchasers."

In the first decision in this country upon the question as to whether the grantee in a conveyance of land which was fraudulent as to the creditors of the grantor, such grantee having notice, took title to such land under the statute 13 Eliz., chap. 5,—that is to say, such a title as he could convey to a bona fide purchaser thereof for value,—the majority of the court held that he obtained no such title by the fraudulent conveyance, and that, as to the creditors of the grantor therein, the title still remained in the latter, and that even a bona fide purchaser for value from the fraudulent transferee would get no title. The fraudulent title in the case was based upon a fraudulent judgment and execution, but it seemed to be conceded that it could make no difference in principle whether the title of the bona fide purchaser was through a fraudulent judgment, or a fraudulent grant, and the judge writing the principal opinion for the majority said that he should, as more simple, consider the case as resting upon a fraudulent grant. The reasoning of the judge who delivered the principal opinion was that, under the statutes of Connecticut declaring all fraudulent conveyances or judgments designed to defeat the recovery of debts utterly void as to creditors, and inflicting heavy penalties on the parties to such fraudulent conveyances, etc., who claimed them to be fair, or alien, with an exception of the purchaser who bought bona fide, on good consideration, and without design of fraud, the bona fide purchaser there mentioned referred only to the purchaser from a fraudulent grantor, and in no way applied to a bona fide purchaser from a fraudulent grantee. And he further stated that the object of 13 Elizabeth, and also of the statute of Connecticut, was solely the protection of the creditor; and that, to effect this, all fraudulent conveyances to defeat recovery of his debts were, as to him, utterly void, and to all other purposes good; that nothing was left in the grantor, except the power to convey to a creditor; that he could make no other second conveyance, even to a bona fide purchaser. The fraudulent purchaser received the estate subject to the lien of the creditor, and, having no title as against him, had no power to do any act that would defeat the lien; and likened the statute provision as to any fraudulent attempt to defeat a recovery, to an attachment of the land which could not be affected by any subsequent bona fide transfers. In comparing the proviso of 13 Elizabeth, "that the act shall not extend to lands conveyed on good consideration and bona fide to a purchaser without notice or knowledge of the fraud," with the exception in the Connecticut statute, "except the purchaser made it appear that the contract was made bona fide, and on good consideration, before seizure by the creditor, and that it was without design of fraud to defeat creditors," he said: "Both the proviso and the exception are, from their nature, limited to the first conveyance. That, being fraudulent, will, of course, be void, unless saved by these conditions, viz., that it was on good consideration, bona fide, and to a purchaser ignorant of the fraud intended. A failure in either of these conditions would still leave the conveyance void." He further stated that the decisions under the statute 27 Eliz., chap. 4, were inapplicable to this case. That the object of that statute was to protect a bona fide purchaser, making, as it did, void, in favor of such purchaser, all prior fraudulent grants intended to defeat his title, and that, therefore, the grantor had still the power to alienate again to a bona fide purchaser, notwithstanding his fraudulent grant, a power which the fraudulent grantor under 13 Elizabeth had not. Another judge, who united in the judgment, agreed that no argument could be drawn from the cases under 27 Elizabeth, saying that "a careful attention to the different objects of the two statutes must afford the most satisfactory conviction to the mind that, because the voluntary grantee under 27

Elizabeth would get no title. The fraudulent title in the case was based upon a fraudulent judgment and execution, but it seemed to be conceded that it could make no difference in principle whether the title of the bona fide purchaser was through a fraudulent judgment, or a fraudulent grant, and the judge writing the principal opinion for the majority said that he should, as more simple, consider the case as resting upon a fraudulent grant. The reasoning of the judge who delivered the principal opinion was that, under the statutes of Connecticut declaring all fraudulent conveyances or judgments designed to defeat the recovery of debts utterly void as to creditors, and inflicting heavy penalties on the parties to such fraudulent conveyances, etc., who claimed them to be fair, or alien, with an exception of the purchaser who bought bona fide, on good consideration, and without design of fraud, the bona fide purchaser there mentioned referred only to the purchaser from a fraudulent grantor, and in no way applied to a bona fide purchaser from a fraudulent grantee. And he further stated that the object of 13 Elizabeth, and also of the statute of Connecticut, was solely the protection of the creditor; and that, to effect this, all fraudulent conveyances to defeat recovery of his debts were, as to him, utterly void, and to all other purposes good; that nothing was left in the grantor, except the power to convey to a creditor; that he could make no other second conveyance, even to a bona fide purchaser. The fraudulent purchaser received the estate subject to the lien of the creditor, and, having no title as against him, had no power to do any act that would defeat the lien; and likened the statute provision as to any fraudulent attempt to defeat a recovery, to an attachment of the land which could not be affected by any subsequent bona fide transfers. In comparing the proviso of 13 Elizabeth, "that the act shall not extend to lands conveyed on good consideration and bona fide to a purchaser without notice or knowledge of the fraud," with the exception in the Connecticut statute, "except the purchaser made it appear that the contract was made bona fide, and on good consideration, before seizure by the creditor, and that it was without design of fraud to defeat creditors," he said: "Both the proviso and the exception are, from their nature, limited to the first conveyance. That, being fraudulent, will, of course, be void, unless saved by these conditions, viz., that it was on good consideration, bona fide, and to a purchaser ignorant of the fraud intended. A failure in either of these conditions would still leave the conveyance void." He further stated that the decisions under the statute 27 Eliz., chap. 4, were inapplicable to this case. That the object of that statute was to protect a bona fide purchaser, making, as it did, void, in favor of such purchaser, all prior fraudulent grants intended to defeat his title, and that, therefore, the grantor had still the power to alienate again to a bona fide purchaser, notwithstanding his fraudulent grant, a power which the fraudulent grantor under 13 Elizabeth had not. Another judge, who united in the judgment, agreed that no argument could be drawn from the cases under 27 Elizabeth, saying that "a careful attention to the different objects of the two statutes must afford the most satisfactory conviction to the mind that, because the voluntary grantee under 27

Elizabeth can convey to his grantee for a valuable consideration a perfect title, which cannot be defeated by any subsequent grant of the voluntary grantor to another for a valuable consideration, this furnishes no authority to conclude that the fraudulent grantee under 13 Elizabeth can, for a valuable consideration, convey a perfect title to his grantee; . . . and here we must keep in view that, where there is a voluntary grant, and the grantor has creditors, it is fraudulent, and within the purview of 13 Elizabeth; and where there is a voluntary conveyance, and there are no creditors, it is within the purview of 27 Elizabeth." He further said that, if one, with a view to defeat his creditors, sold his property to a bona fide purchaser and absconded with the money, the conveyance would be good in the hands of such purchaser; that the precise danger intended to be guarded against was the grantor's fraudulently conveying to the grantee, who was consant of the fraud, and who accepted the conveyance to give aid to his fraudulent views; and that the object of the statute would be defeated by validating the conveyance of the fraudulent grantee to a bona fide purchaser. He gave, as another reason why the decision as to the effect of one statute would not apply to the other, that, under the statute 27 Elizabeth, the object of the legislature was to give a preference to the purchaser with consideration over the volunteer, which object was as effectually attained by a conveyance by the voluntary transferee as by a conveyance by the grantor in the voluntary deed; and so the rule that what the grantor could do the voluntary grantee could do accomplished the intent of that statute. But that the rule that what the fraudulent grantor could do the fraudulent grantee could do defeated the object of 13 Elizabeth. He then proceeded to make the broad statement that "the obvious meaning of the words of the statute, which declares all such conveyances to be utterly void against creditors, is that, as against creditors, the grantee has no title, but the estate remains in the grantor, liable to his debts; and so has ever been the understanding of all men." He further proceeded to reason that, if the grantee has no title against creditors, it would be natural to conclude that he could convey none against creditors. Two of the nine judges dissented, and in the dissenting opinion it was claimed that the object of the statute in rendering the conveyance void as to creditors was to remove the conveyance out of the way, and place the creditors in the same situation as though it had not been made; and that the effect of that part of the statute rendering the conveyance valid between the parties was to give the grantee all the rights of the grantor, subject to such rights as the creditors had before the conveyance was made, and such as they would have continued to have had the conveyance not been made. That the creditors lose none of their rights by the fraudulent conveyance; neither do they acquire any new ones. Their condition is the same regarding the land as before. And that so, on the other hand, the fraudulent grantee steps into the shoes of the grantor, and takes all his rights, subject to the same rights of the creditors as his were, and no other. He further stated that the creditors might levy on the land at any time, and thereby secure an interest in it; but that their debtor had an equal right, at any time, to convey the land to a bona fide purchaser, who would thereby secure a good and complete title in opposition to all their claim; and that after a fraudulent conveyance the same thing was true. The creditors had the same right to levy as they had before; and the grantee had the same right to convey that the grantor had. Neither could make a fraudulent conveyance to affect creditors; both could make a bona fide one. But the strongest reason that he seemed to give, and one which, as will be seen, was afterwards confirmed by high authority, was that, unless the grantee under a fraudulent conveyance can transmit the title to a bona fide purchaser, there is no person whatever who can; and the estate becomes completely locked up in his hands. That the creditors certainly cannot; for they have strictly no interest in the land, until they have proceeded agreeably to law in making an application of it to discharge their debts. That the fraudulent grantor, who has made a conveyance to defeat the claims of the creditors, cannot afterwards convey to a bona fide purchaser. Preston v. Crofut, 1 Conn. 527, note.

The principle of Preston v. Crofut, 1 Conn. 527, note, was substantially approved in Merrill v. Meachum, 5 Day, 341.

Following this case comes that of Roberts v. Anderson, 3 Johns. Ch. 371, in which Chancellor Kent took substantially the same ground as the majority of the court in Preston v. Crofut, 1 Conn. 527, note, stating that he had availed himself freely of the argument in that case, in which it was decided, upon their statute of frauds, which was substantially the same as the statutes of Elizabeth, that a bona fide purchaser, without notice and for a valuable consideration, from a fraudulent grantee, had no title against the creditors of the fraudulent grantor, and that that case might be considered as a decision under 13 Elizabeth, and that it was eminently distinguished for accuracy of research and closeness of reasoning. He further stated that the case was discussed at the bar and upon the bench in an elaborate manner and with very great ability; and admitted that, though he entirely subscribed to the opinions of the majority of the court, it was not without the highest respect for the talent with which the opposite opinion was supported.

The case was afterwards removed to the court for the correction of errors (18 Johns. 515, 9 Am. Dec. 235), and the decision of the chancellor and the decree entered thereon unanimously reversed by that court. Mr. Chief Justice Spencer, delivering the principal opinion, and taking substantially the same ground taken by Smith, J., in his dissenting opinion in Preston v. Crofut, said, among other things: "The 13th of Elizabeth declares a conveyance to be void only as against creditors, etc., attempted to be defrauded, whilst the 27th of Elizabeth declares the conveyance to be void only as against those who have purchased, or may purchase; but, as against the fraudulent grantors, in both cases the conveyances are valid and effectual and wholly unaffected by the provisions of either statute. What becomes, then, of the estate, and in whom is it vested, after a conveyance made to deceive existing creditors, or those who become creditors subsequent to the fraudulent conveyance? As against the grantors, the conveyance is effectual. Subsequent creditors have no debt due at the time; the possibility of their having debts cannot prevent the conveyance from taking effect. Those creditors whose debts are due, even if they have obtained judgments and acquired a lien, have gained no vested interest in the lands, and they may be paid without resort to the land fraudulently conveyed. The fee is not in abeyance, and the inevitable conclusion is that the legal title has vested in the fraudulent grantee, subject to be divested, if the creditors see fit to call in question the fraudulent conveyance, and after the creditor has proceeded to sell, on execution, the lands thus fraudulently conveyed." He further stated that the error of those who asserted that a fraudulent grantee under 13 Elizabeth takes no estate, because the deed is declared to be utterly void, consists in not correctly discriminating between a deed which is an absolute nullity, and one which is voidable only, and said that no deed can be pronounced, in a legal sense, utterly void, which is valid as to some persons, but may be avoided at the election of others.

In the same case Platt, J., recognizing what was said by Lord Mansfield in Cadogan v. Kennett, 2 Cowp. 432, that the statute 13 Eliz., chap. 5, is declaratory of the common law, and has done nothing which the common law would not have done without it, and which declaration has been repeated by numerous courts and judges since (Sharswood, J., in Clark v. Douglass, 62 Pa. 408, 416; Swayne, J., in Moore v. Clements (Clements v. Nicholson) 6 Wall. 299, 18 L. ed. 786; Hamilton v. Russell, 1 Cranch, 309, 2 L. ed. 118; and Meeker v. Wilson, 1 Gall. 418. Fed. Cas. No. 9,392), said that if the statute (of New York) is the mere declaration or development of the principles of the common law, the decision of the court in Preston v. Crofut, 1 Conn. 527, note, was perfectly reconcilable with his construction of them, viz., that a bona fide purchaser for value from a fraudulent grantee would take a good title as against the creditors of the original fraudulent grantor; and said further that it better accorded with the letter and spirit of the statute to say that a general creditor must assert his claim before the fraudulent grantee of his debtor has deceived an honest purchaser, or that such creditor will lose his right; and that a contrary doctrine would often enable the creditor to "convert his shield into a sword." The reason why the two were so reconcilable, he stated to be that the common law, the statute of 13 Eliz., chap. 5, and the New York statute for the prevention of frauds all agreed in the rule that a conveyance in which the grantor and grantee conspire to defraud creditors is void as against creditors; provided, however, that this rule shall not extend to defeat the title of any bona fide purchaser for good consideration, without notice of the fraud. That the statute of Connecticut, on which the decision in Preston v. Crofut was founded, contained no such proviso; and by such omission the legislature of that state had chosen to alter and modify the rule of the common law so as to make no saving or exception in favor of subsequent bona fide purchasers. That he understood all the judges in Preston v. Crofut to agree that, under their statute, without such proviso, the first grantee, as well as the grantor, must participate in the fraud, in order to render the deed void as to creditors; and that, if that be the true exposition of the statutes, there was no use or effect in the proviso, unless it be construed to extend to subsequent purchasers. That, if it was unnecessary in order to protect the first bona fide grantee of a fraudulent debtor, and was not to be extended to a subsequent purchaser, then it followed that the proviso in the New York statute should be rejected as surplusage. And that in his judgment the 6th section of the latter, containing the proviso of 13 Eliz., chap. 5, was designed, not merely to explain, but to limit and qualify, the 1st section, and should not be rejected as inoperative. That the universal silence in Westminster Hall upon the precise point then under discussion (whether a conveyance made in fraud of creditors was so absolutely void as to them as that the fraudulent grantee could not convey a title to the land to one who was a bona fide purchaser for value) afforded strong ground to infer that the construction that it was, and that the bona fide grantee of the fraudulent grantee would not take a good title free from the lien or claim of the original grantor, was never sanctioned by the courts in England, as, if such had been the doctrine in that country, the cases demanding an application of it must have been of very frequent occurrence; and yet there was no case to be found where a creditor in England ever attempted to impeach a conveyance on the ground of fraud, except where the purchaser, whose title was sought to be defeated, was either a party to, or was presumed consensual of, such fraud.

In Bean v. Smith, 2 Mason, 252, Fed. Cas. No. 1,174, previous to the reversal of the decree in the last case, a case which had arisen in the circuit court of the United States for the district of Rhode Island, Mr. Justice Story, who delivered the opinion, in commenting upon the two statutes mentioned said, among other things, referring to the doctrine that a bona fide purchaser for a valuable consideration, without notice, cannot protect the estate in his own hands against creditors where he derives his title to the estate through a grantee to whom it was originally conveyed for the purpose of defrauding the creditors of the first grantor, that it was certainly supported by high authority of a recent date, and the cases that had been cited were fully in point; but that, until he had perused these cases, he was not aware that there was in this respect any difference between the operation of the statute of 13 Eliz., chap. 5, which avoids conveyances made in fraud of creditors, and that of 27 Eliz., chap. 4, which avoids conveyances made in fraud of subsequent purchasers. That an unbroken current of authorities establishes beyond question that a bona fide purchaser for a valuable consideration, without notice, shall hold the estate, notwithstanding he claims through a grantee to whom it had been conveyed in fraud of purchasers. He referred to the fact that Chancellor Kent had held, in Roberts v. Anderson, 3 Johns. Ch. 371, that the same doctrine does not apply where there has been a conveyance to defraud creditors, and said that, if this were so, it was certainly a departure from the general doctrine of courts of equity on the subject of bona fide purchasers without notice, and proceeded to reason and give instances as to the solicitous regard which courts of equity have to preserve the rights of such purchasers.

In Dugan v. Vattler, 3 Blackf. 245, 25 Am. Dec. 105, the court considered all of the foregoing cases, and approved and followed the doctrine laid down in Anderson v. Roberts, 18 Johns. 515, 9 Am. Dec. 235, and Bean v. Smith, 2 Mason, 252, Fed. Cas. No. 1,174.

In Neal v. Williams, 18 Me. 391, the supreme court of Maine considered Preston v. Crofut, 1 Conn. 527, note, saying that it was approved and strengthened by the decision of Chancellor Kent in Roberts v. Anderson, 3 Johns. Ch. 371, and that the last decision was reversed in the court of errors, and the contrary doctrine established in 18 Johns. 515, 9 Am. Dec. 235, and that Chancellor Kent had stated in his Commentaries that such is now the settled doctrine (4 Com. 464), and that the question was very elaborately examined in the case of Somes v. Brewer, 2 Pick. 184, 13 Am. Dec. 406; and the court came to that conclusion.

In Andrews v. Marshall, 43 Me. 272, the property involved was personal, but the court, in approving the general rule applicable to both real and personal property, quoted what was said by Spencer, Ch. J. in Anderson v. Roberts, 18 Johns. 515, 9 Am. Dec. 235, that "the error of those who assert that a fraudulent grantee under 13 Elizabeth takes no estate, because the deed is declared to be utterly void, consists in not correctly discriminating between a deed which is an absolute nullity and one which is voidable only," etc.

In Martin v. Cowles, 18 N. C. (1 Dev. & B. L.) 29, a debtor had conveyed to another land for the purpose of defrauding his creditors. The fraudulent transferee became indebted to one who, without any knowledge of the fraud, had the land sold to satisfy his debt, became the purchaser himself, and afterwards conveyed the same to the plaintiff. At the time of the fraudulent conveyance the original grantor was indebted to another person, who, after the sale to the plaintiff mentioned, had an execution levied on the same land, became the purchaser, and took a deed from the sheriff. He then brought an action of ejectment against the tenant of the plaintiff, recovered a judgment against him and evicted him by a writ of possession. The action was upon the covenant for quiet enjoyment by the plaintiff against his grantor, who had sold the land for his debt against the fraudulent grantee; but it was held that the action could not be maintained, for the reason that, even if there was any question whether the defendant could be considered a bona fide purchaser, none existed that the plaintiff who purchased from him was, and, if he negligently permitted a recovery in ejectment to be effected, it did not entitle him to maintain this action. The court referred to the decision of Chancellor Kent in Roberts v. Anderson, 3 Johns. Ch. 371, and to the reversal thereof in 18 Johns. 515, 9 Am. Dec. 235, and approved and followed both that decision and the reasoning of Judges Spencer and Platt therein, to the effect that a bona fide purchaser from a fraudulent grantee has a good title as against any claim of a creditor of the fraudulent vendor, and that, the deed being good as between the parties, and effectual as against the grantor, the fraudulent grantee has a title and a right to alienate; and, although the estate is voidable, and may be avoided and divested while in the hands of the first grantee, by action of the creditors of the first grantor, still, if the grantee conveyed the estate to a bona fide purchaser, his title is protected by the proviso. The court further said that the question had been ably examined by Judge Story in Bean v. Smith, 2 Mason, 272, Fed. Cas. No. 1,174, and that his opinion contained much learning and solid reasoning, and satisfactorily established the principle that the bona fide purchaser from the fraudulent grantee is protected by the proviso in 13 Elizabeth against the creditors of the fraudulent grantor.
67 L. R. A.

In Oriental Bank v. Haskins, 3 Met. 332, 37 Am. Dec. 140, the supreme court of Massachusetts said that the proposition that the original fraudulent conveyance was absolutely void as against creditors, and not merely voidable, and that no subsequent transaction could purge the fraud, had been sustained in the cases of Preston v. Crofut, 1 Conn. 527, note, and Merrill v. Meachum, 5 Day, 341. That the latter case was decided upon a supposed distinction between the effects on a conveyance by statute 13 Eliz., chap. 5, and statute 27 Eliz., chap. 4. That two of the judges dissented from the opinion of the majority of the judges, and for reasons very forcible and convincing. The court did not mention the fact that there had also been a dissenting opinion in Preston v. Crofut, concurred in by another judge, the reasoning in which was fully as, if not more, forceful, as that in the dissenting opinions in Merrill v. Meachum. Referring to the fact that the distinction mentioned had been maintained by Chancellor Kent in Roberts v. Anderson, 3 Johns. Ch. 371, the court said further, that the question had been very fully discussed by Judge Story in Bean v. Smith, 2 Mason, 252, Fed. Cas. No. 1,174, who concurred in the opinion expressed by the dissenting judges in Connecticut, and that the same opinion was expressed in Somes v. Brewer, 2 Pick. 184, 13 Am. Dec. 406, and that Chancellor Kent's decree in Roberts v. Anderson had been reversed by the court of errors; and further said that they were of the opinion that the rule laid down would not be adopted beyond the jurisdiction of Connecticut, and concluded by holding that there was no such distinction between the statutes as was maintained by the majority of the court in Connecticut, but that conveyances, fraudulent as against creditors or against subsequent purchasers, are voidable only and not absolutely void.

In Pennsylvania, if land be sold which is bound by a judgment, and that judgment is not discharged, it may be levied on in the hands of the vendee; but a judgment obtained afterwards against the grantor cannot generally be levied on lands in the hands of him who bought it and got his deed before judgment obtained. And it can only be levied in such case when the land was conveyed in fraud of the creditors of the grantor, and when the purchaser, as well as the seller, knew of and joined in the fraud; the reason being that, if it were otherwise, the most honest vendee, who bought and paid a full price, would lose his land or goods, because the vendor instantly absconded and took the purchase money out of the reach of his creditors. The court said that it had lately been decided in Connecticut, and by Chancellor Kent in New York, that, although a fair purchaser from a fraudulent debtor is protected, yet a fair purchaser from the fraudulent grantee of a fraudulent debtor is not; and proceeded to dissent from the latter proposition. Mateer v. Hissim, 3 Penr. & W. 160.

The statute of 13 Elizabeth is a legislative recognition of the common law. The provision of the statute declaring conveyances in fraud of creditors "utterly void" does not mean to declare that such conveyances are mere nullities,—void to all intents and purposes,—but simply voidable; as no act can be regarded as absolutely void, and of consequence a mere nullity, which takes effect as to some purpose. In Fox v. Willis, 1 Mich. 321, the court said, further, that Chief Justice Spencer, in the case of Anderson v. Roberts, 18 Johns. 515, 9 Am. Dec. 235, gives a true interpretation of the words "utterly void" as used in the statute of 13 Elizabeth, when he says that, "whenever the act done takes effect as to some purposes, and is void as to persons who have an interest in impeaching it, the act is not a nullity, and therefore, in a legal sense, is not utterly void, but merely voidable." And also that Mr. Justice Story, in the case of Bean v. Smith, 2 Mason, 252, Fed. Cas. No. 1,174, says: "A conveyance to defraud purchasers, or to defraud creditors, is not 'utterly void,' as has been sometimes supposed; it conveys the estate effectually as between the parties and their representatives, and the estate may be maintained against all persons but those whom it was intended to defraud." The court further said that, although a voluntary assignment to defraud creditors is not "utterly void," yet courts, in administering remedies, treated the instrument as void in respect to those who are "hindered, delayed, or defrauded," in their "actions, suits," etc. In other words, for the purpose of satisfying the claims of creditors the courts will treat the property conveyed as though it still remained in the hands of the fraudulent grantor. The court proceeded further to say that assignments, though fraudulent under 13 Elizabeth, were nevertheless to be considered valid until a judgment creditor appeared, seeking in the ordinary way to enforce his legal remedy against the deed, and approved the language of the judge delivering the opinion in Anderson v. Roberts, that in such case "the fee is not in abeyance, and the inevitable conclusion is that the legal title has vested in the fraudulent grantee, subject to be divested if the creditors see fit to call in question the fraudulent conveyance, and after the creditor has proceeded to sell, on execution, the lands thus fraudulently conveyed."

The principle has long been established at common law, and repeatedly sanctioned in equity, that, though a deed be fraudulent in its creation, and voidable by a purchaser (that is, would become void by a person's purchasing the estate), yet it may become good by matter ex post facto. Price v. Junkin, 4 Watts, 85, 28 Am. Dec. 685. The court said that this doctrine was elucidated and confirmed in the case of Anderson v. Roberts, 18 Johns. 515, 9 Am. Dec. 235, in which it was shown that the statutory enactments (generally more unyielding in their construction than the common law) fully protect such purchasers, as well against creditors as against subsequent purchasers.

It is the settled doctrine in the United States that a bona fide purchaser for a valuable consideration, and without notice, either from a fraudulent grantor or grantee, shall be protected, as he takes the estate discharged of the 67 L. R. A.

fraud that previously infected the title. Choteau v. Jones, 11 Ill. 300, 50 Am. Dec. 460; Bean v. Smith, 2 Mason, 252, Fed. Cas. No. 1,174; Anderson v. Roberts, 18 Johns. 515, 9 Am. Dec. 235; Oriental Bank v. Haskins, 3 Met. 332, 37 Am. Dec. 140.

The lien of a judgment at law upon lands will not prevail against the equity of the purchaser, who, before rendition of such a judgment, has, in good faith and without notice of a previous fraudulent conveyance to his grantor, paid his money, as the equitable will overcome the legal right. The reason of this rule is that there is a higher equity in favor of one who advances his money, by way of purchase or mortgage, in reliance on a specific piece of property, than there is on the part of a general creditor who looks for his security to the entire estate of his debtor, without having in his eye, when the debt is incurred, any specific part of it. In reference to this reason, the court said: "Whatever may be thought of the validity of the reason thus announced, it is certain that the doctrine founded upon it is established by a long line of decisions of such weight and authority that no court would deem it open to discussion." Phelps v. Morrison, 25 N. J. Eq. 538.

In Garland v. Rives, 4 Rand. (Va.) 282, 15 Am. Dec. 756, it was said that under the statute 13 Elizabeth fraudulent conveyances, to the prejudice of creditors, were immediately void as to such creditors; and but for the proviso that the act should not extend to make void any estate or conveyance, etc., which should be upon a good consideration and bona fide, etc., the enacting clause might have avoided the deed made with intent to defraud creditors, although that intent was confined to the grantor only; and was not known to the grantee; but the judge delivering the opinion said further that he did not, however, think that this would have been the effect, even of the enacting clause alone, his theory being that the word "collusive" can only apply to cases in which both parties concurred in the fraudulent intent; but that, however that might be, if the grantor and grantee colluded to defraud creditors, the conveyance would be absolutely void as to the latter; and the fraudulent grantee could not, but for the proviso, have transferred any title to the bona fide purchaser from him.

In Re Estes, 6 Sawy. 459, 3 Fed. 134, 5 Fed. 60, the court said that a conveyance in fraud of creditors, although declared by the statute to be void as to them, is nevertheless valid as between the parties and their representatives, and passes all of the estate of the grantor to the grantee; and that a bona fide purchaser from such grantee takes the estate purged of the anterior fraud that affected the title, even against the creditors of the fraudulent grantor.

Under the statute of fraudulent conveyances of Ohio, which provides that "every gift, grant, or conveyance of lands, tenements, hereditaments, etc., made or obtained with intent to defraud creditors of their just and lawful debts or damages, or to defraud or deceive the person or persons who shall purchase such lands, etc., shall be deemed utterly void and of no effect," a bona fide purchaser, without notice, cannot be affected by the intent of the grantor to defraud creditors. Astor v. Wells, 4 Wheat. 487, 4 L. ed. 622.

A conveyance in fraud of creditors, although declared by the statute to be void as to them.

is, nevertheless, valid as between the parties and their representatives, and passes all the estate of the grantor to the grantee; and a bona fide purchaser from such grantee takes such estate, even against the creditors of the fraudulent grantor, purged of the anterior fraud that affected the title. Doster v. Manistee Nat. Bank, 67 Ark. 325, 48 L. R. A. 334, 77 Am. St. Rep. 116, 55 S. W. 137.

Under the statute of Kentucky, a fair and bona fide purchaser from a grantor who makes the conveyance with intent to defraud his creditors takes a good title to the real estate conveyed, free from any claim of the creditors. Violett v. Violett, 2 Dana, 324.

Where an assignee for the benefit of creditors has, by virtue of the assignment, conveyed land of the assignor, the grantee in that conveyance, being a purchaser in good faith, will take a good title, although the assignment is thereafter decreed to be fraudulent as against creditors. Wilson v. Marlon, 25 N. Y. Supp. 1066.

In Neal v. Gregory, 19 Fla. 356, the supreme court of that state, in considering the question as to whether or not a certain transfer of real property was in fraud of the creditors of the grantor, stated that the rule in regard to the question under consideration is that a bona fide purchaser for value, from a fraudulent grantee, without notice, gets a good title, and approved the following statement from Bump on Fraudulent Conveyances, 2d ed. 482, that, "as against the debtor, the fraudulent deed is effectual, and the fraudulent grantee has a title and right to alienate. The only infirmity in his title is its liability to be impeached by creditors. As to all others it is perfect, and, when it has passed into the hands of a bona fide purchaser for value without notice, even this infirmity is cured, and the title becomes sound and indefeasible."

Where a debtor conveyed his real estate to his wife in fraud of the rights of his creditors, and thereafter the wife conveyed a portion of the same to her daughter, who was a bona fide purchaser for value and without notice of the fraud, the conveyance of that portion to the daughter gave her a good title thereto. Leich v. Dee, 86 Iowa, 711, 47 N. W. 881, 52 N. W. 209.

Bona fide purchasers from a fraudulent transferee of a conveyance made to defraud creditors will take a good title to the lands, and the creditor will be remitted to the purchase money for satisfaction. Gordon v. Lowell, 21 Me. 257.

Under Me. Rev. Stat., chap. 76, § 13, where a levy is made upon land fraudulently conveyed by a debtor the officer shall deliver to the creditor a momentary seisin, which shall be sufficient to enable him to maintain an action for its recovery in his own name; and, where land has been fraudulently conveyed by a debtor, a further conveyance by the fraudulent grantee will not so completely purge the fraud as to prevent the levying creditor from acquiring the momentary seisin necessary to enable him to try the title with the party in possession. Morse v. Sleeper, 58 Me. 329. But the court further stated that by this it did not say that a conveyance by the fraudulent grantee to a bona fide purchaser for value without notice of the fraud would not give the latter a better title than the creditor would derive from a subsequent levy, but only that 67 L. R. A.

the momentary seisin which the officer gives the creditor will enable him to maintain his action, unless the party in possession shows a better title in himself.

In Young v. Lathrop, 67 N. C. 63, 12 Am. Rep. 603, the court stated that it was settled, after some conflict of the authorities, that a purchaser of a fraudulent donee, bona fide, and for a valuable consideration at a full price, without notice of the fraud, acquires a good title under 13 Elizabeth against creditors and purchasers under their executions for a debt existing at the time of the fraudulent conveyance, at a sale subsequent to the sale of the fraudulent donee, as, both of the purchasers being bona fide for a valuable consideration, the one to whom the first sale was made is preferred.

But purchasers at an execution sale of the lands of the judgment debtor will take a good legal title as against the transferee of a fraudulent grantee of the judgment debtor, where there is no evidence that the transferee from the fraudulent grantee was a purchaser for valuable consideration and without notice of the fraud. Wade v. Saunders, 70 N. C. 270.

"Where a debtor made a conveyance of his land to another without consideration, and with the intention on the part of both grantor and grantee to defeat the creditors of the former, a conveyance by the fraudulent grantee to a third party for a valuable consideration, although it may have been with notice that the original conveyance was in order to defeat creditors, and although it may have been in aid of that design, is not impeachable under the statute of Elizabeth. Daiglish v. McCarthy, 19 Grant, Ch. (U. C.) 578.

A bona fide purchaser for a full consideration from the grantee in a conveyance of land made for the purpose of defrauding the creditors of the original grantor takes a good title to the land as against such creditors, and the fact that the title from the fraudulent grantee was by a quitclaim deed does not change the effect. It was urged that by the quitclaim deed he took no better title than his grantor had by virtue of the fraudulent conveyance; but this was held not to be so. Mansfield v. Dyer, 131 Mass. 200.

A judgment rendered after the execution and delivery of deeds of real property made for the purpose of covering up the property of the grantors, and fraudulent and voidable as against their creditors, constitutes no lien upon the real property thus fraudulently conveyed, and a bona fide creditor of the grantors, who, with their consent and without fraud on his part, procures a mortgage for the amount of his debt from the fraudulent transferee, but honestly to secure his own indebtedness, will be protected in his lien against the other creditors of the grantors, and the fact that he had notice or knowledge that the deeds to the fraudulent grantee, his mortgagor, were made to defraud the creditors of the grantors will not deprive him of the right to secure the just claim which they owed him; because if those deeds were fraudulent as to creditors, they were not void; they were merely voidable; and, until some creditor attacked them, the title to the property stood unchallenged in the grantee. Johnson v. Trust Co. 43 C. C. A. 458, 104 Fed. 174.

In Brooks v. Wilson, 53 Hun, 176, 6 N. Y. Supp. 116, it was claimed that the statute which avoids conveyances made with intent to defraud creditors rendered the conveyance of the judgment debtor a nullity as respects his creditors; and, therefore, that judgments against him became liens upon the property conveyed, as if no conveyance had been made. The court said that the answer to this argument was, that the fraudulent conveyance was not void, but voidable only, at the election of creditors defrauded, as the fraudulent grantee can transfer the title to the property conveyed to a bona fide purchaser notwithstanding outstanding judgments against the fraudulent grantor, docketed after the fraudulent transfer, but before the transfer by the fraudulent grantee to a bona fide purchaser. The court claimed to approve and follow the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in Miller v. Sherry, 2 Wall. 249, 17 L. ed. 830, supra, II., a. The judgment in this case was reversed in 125 N. Y. 256, 26 N. E. 258, upon another question.

But where the fraud in the original conveyance appears upon its face the purchaser from the fraudulent grantee will not take title free from the claims of the creditor of the original grantor, as, where a father conveyed to his sons, the consideration of the deed being that they should pay all judgments "now entered" against a certain tract of land, a purchaser from the sons will not take the title free from the taint of fraud, as it appeared upon the face of the deed that the object of the conveyance was, manifestly, to put the estate into the hands of the sons with no other burden than what the law had already imposed on it, and that it then appeared that there were debts unprovided for, and that fact was enough to put a cautious and conscientious man on inquiry. Johnston v. Harvy, 2 Penn. & W. 82, 21 Am. Dec. 426.

A creditor recovered a judgment against his debtor, who had previously fraudulently conveyed his land to another. The debtor appealed from the judgment, and gave his fraudulent transferee for his security, and the appellate court gave judgment against both, and on the execution the sheriff sold the land as the land of the fraudulent grantee to the creditor, and it was held that the latter was a bona fide purchaser under the provisions of the statute, which provides that the act in relation to fraudulent conveyances shall not extend to any estate or interest in land bona fide and lawfully conveyed, nor to any person or persons, etc., who may be subsequent purchasers for valuable considerations without notice. Wineland v. Conce, 5 Mo. 296, 32 Am. Dec. 320.

Where the title to lands had been taken in the wife, but paid for out of assets belonging to the husband, which should properly have been devoted to the payment of his debts, the title to the lands in the wife is constructively fraudulent as against the creditors of the husband; but a bona fide purchaser for value from the wife before any proceedings on the part of the creditors of the husband to subject the land to the payment of their debts will take a good title free from the claims of the husband's creditors. Freeman v. Pullen, 130 Ala. 653, 31 So. 451.

Where a debtor paid the consideration for the purchase of a piece of real property, and had the title taken in the name of his wife with intent to hinder and delay his creditors, a 67 L. R. A.

deed from the wife to a subsequent purchaser who had no notice of the fraud, and who paid a valuable consideration, will be held valid, and his title cannot be disturbed. Carnahan v. McCord, 116 Ind. 67, 18 N. E. 177.

Where a mother conveyed lands to her daughters without consideration, and the daughters thereafter executed a mortgage upon the same, and thereafter a judgment creditor of the mother brought an action to subject the mortgage to his claim, a plea on the part of the mortgagee that at the time of the making of the mortgage the daughters were in the actual or constructive possession of the lands described in the bill, and were seised, or claimed to be seised, in the transaction with the legal title to said lands; and that on that day he made a loan of money to the daughters, and contemporaneously therewith he took from them a mortgage to secure the repayment of said sum of money and the interest thereon; that, before the making said loan, he required an examination of the records by an attorney, who reported that the titles of said lands were in the daughters; that, relying on these facts, he made the loan and took the mortgage to secure the sum; that at the time he made such loan and took said mortgage the execution on the judgment of the plaintiff against the mother had not been received by the sheriff; and that he had no notice of the plaintiff's equity, and knew of no fact calculated to put him on inquiry, either at or before the time he parted with the money loaned, or at or before the time he took the mortgage on the lands to secure the loan,—is good, and sets up a perfect defense in the mortgagee as a bona fide purchaser. McKee v. West (Ala.) 37 So. 740.

The following cases are also authorities to the effect that a bona fide purchaser from the fraudulent grantee in a conveyance made to defraud the creditors of the grantor will take a valid legal title to the land as against such creditors: Mathews v. Mobile Mut. Ins. Co. 75 Ala. 85, supra, II. a; Lyon v. Robbins, 46 Ill. 277; Harmon v. Harmon, 63 Ill. 512; Campbell v. Whitson, 68 Ill. 240, 18 Am. Rep. 553; Rappleye v. International Bank, 93 Ill. 396; Scott v. Purcell, 7 Blackf. 66, 39 Am. Dec. 453; Gordon v. Ritenour, 87 Mo. 54; Lewis v. Dudley, 70 N. H. 594, 49 Atl. 572; Smith v. Vreeland, 16 N. J. Eq. 198; Jackson ex dem. Bartlett v. Henry, 10 Johns. 185, 6 Am. Dec. 328; Detwiler v. Louison, 10 Ohio C. D. 95; Thompson v. McKean, 1 Ashm. (Pa.) 129; Hood v. Fahnestock, 8 Watts, 489, 34 Am. Dec. 489.

V. Title conveyed by bona fide purchaser to one having knowledge of the fraud.

And so jealous are both law and equity of the rights of one who has in good faith purchased, and paid for with his own funds, land which had previously been conveyed in fraud of the creditors of the original grantor, that any transfer he may make of the land will be valid, even to one who has notice of the original fraudulent conveyance; and the legal title of the latter will be impervious to assaults upon it by such creditors.

In Casey v. Leggett, 125 Cal. 664, 58 Pac. 264, the court approved the doctrine that a bona fide purchaser for a valuable consideration from a fraudulent transferee of land could afterwards transfer the title acquired by the deed to anyone and the title would be good in his grantee, whether the latter was a purchaser in good faith or not; as a purchaser without notice of the fraud may sell the property to a person who has notice, for the law does not know of an unencumbered estate which is forfeited by alienation, or for which the owner cannot pass a good title to the purchaser.

A bona fide purchaser, without notice is not affected by the fraud of his grantor; and a conveyance by such purchaser to a person who may have knowledge of the fraud would be valid. Swayze v. Burke, 12 Pet. 11, 9 L. ed. 980.

In Brandlyn v. Ord, 1 Atk. 571, Lord Chancellor Hardwicke said that a man who purchased for a valuable consideration, with notice of a voluntary settlement from a person who bought without notice, shall shelter himself under the first purchaser; yet it must be the very same interest in every respect.

And he afterwards repeated the observation in Lowther v. Carlton, 2 Atk. 242.

VI. When title is in fraudulent grantee as to his creditors.

In Edwards v. Haverstick, 53 Ind. 348, it was held that a fraudulent conveyance vests the title in the transferee, subject to the right of the creditors of the grantor to have it divested and the property subjected to sale for the payment of their debts; and, where no complaint is made by the creditors of the fraudulent grantor of such illegal and fraudulent conveyance, the same vests a fee simple in the fraudulent grantee, and subjects the land to levy and sale for the payment of his debts.

Where one transfers land in fraud of his creditors the title vests in the grantee as against all persons, except the creditors of the grantor or purchasers bona fide for value; and it follows that, subject to the rights of such persons, it becomes liable for the debts of such grantee, and a judgment against him is a lien from the time of its rendition, not only upon all property at the time owned by the judgment defendant, but also upon all which he subsequently acquires, and so upon the fraudulent conveyance of the land the lien of a judgment against him at once attaches to it. Wright v. Howell, 35 Iowa, 288.

A fraudulent conveyance of land is good as between the parties and all other persons except the creditors of the grantor; and so, where creditors of the grantor did not attempt to set aside such conveyance, a voluntary reconveyance by the fraudulent grantee to his grantor will be fraudulent and void against the creditors of the original grantee as the estate in the fraudulent grantee is complete and fully vested, so that it is subjected to a sale and conveyance, or to descent, no persons being entitled to impugn the same for the covin and collusion, in which it was contrived and transferred, other than the creditors of the original grantor. Walton v. Tusten, 49 Miss. 569.

A judgment creditor of a fraudulent grantee in a conveyance made in fraud of the rights of the creditors of the grantor does not stand in the light or place of a bona fide purchaser from such grantee, and the creditors of the original grantor, as to him, are entitled to have the conveyance set aside for the fraud. Couse v. Columbia Powder Mfg. Co. (N. J. Eq.) 33 Atl. 297.
67 L. R. A.

But where one with an express intent to defraud his creditors executed a mortgage to his son, the mortgage being purely voluntary, and thereafter the son reconveyed the land to his father, creditors of the son, who had not obtained judgment liens until after such reconveyance, cannot subject the lands to the payment of their debts; and, to the claim that the reconveyance was a fraud upon them, the court said the answer was that the land did not belong to the son, so that he could render it liable to his creditor; that the restoration to the owner before the liens attached was the execution of an act of moral duty, which a court of equity will not compel or even assist in, when both participate in the illegal transaction; yet the voluntary reconveyance could not be a fraud upon the creditors of the fraudulent alienee, and they could not assail the validity of the return of the property. Powell v. Ivey, 88 N. C. 258.

And where a creditor of a fraudulent grantee of real estate takes from him a mortgage on such estate as a further security on the previous debt, but without notice of the fraud, such creditor is not protected against the prior equity and legal liens of judgment creditors of the fraudulent grantor whose judgments were recovered subsequent to the fraudulent conveyance but prior to the mortgage. Manhattan Co. v. Everson, 6 Paige, 465.

Where a father, without the knowledge of his son and while the latter was a minor, conveyed land to him with the object to hinder, delay, and defraud the creditors of the father; and thereafter the son was made acquainted with the fact, and told that the land must be deeded back whenever the father desired it, to which the son assented; and thereafter the father purchased other land, paying the full purchase price himself, but had the title transferred to the son for the same fraudulent purpose that induced the first transaction, which the son well understood, and promised to convey it to the father whenever by him requested; and thereafter, and previous to the rendition of the judgment in an action for a breach of promise against the son, but after a verdict had been recovered in the action, the son carried out his moral obligation to reconvey to his father.—it was held that the judgment creditor in such action could not maintain a suit to set aside the reconveyance to the father. In so holding the court said the creditors of the father never at any time sought to disturb the title of the son. The land in the hands of the son was subject to his debts. Had a creditor of his obtained judgment against him while the title stood in his name the judgment would have been a lien upon the land, and no transfer to the father could have affected the lien. Lockren v. Rustan, 9 N. D. 43, 81 N. W. 60.

A son conveyed land to his father, and thereafter a creditor of the son obtained a judgment against him, and later a creditor of both the son and the father obtained judgments against both. The land was levied upon and sold upon an execution issued upon the latter judgment. In an action to try the right to the money received on the sale, and trial court, after permitting the creditor, who had obtained judgment against the son alone, to prove that the deed from the son to the father was made to defraud creditors, instructed the jury that, as the legal title to the land at the time it was taken in execution and sold by the sheriff was vested in the father by the deed of conveyance from the son, against both of whom was the judgment and execution under which the sale was made, that judgment creditor ought to be preferred. The supreme court held that this was error, because, if the deed of conveyance, from the son to his father was made covinously with intent to hinder, delay, and defraud the creditors of the son, it was absolutely void under the statute 13 Eliz., chap. 5, and vested no interest or estate whatever, either legal or equitable, in the father as against the creditors of the son. M'Kee v. Gilchrist, 3 Watts, 230.

VII. Rights of purchaser other than judgment creditor at execution sale.

A judgment creditor who is in a position to have a conveyance made by his judgment debtor set aside because fraudulent as to him may cause an execution to issue on his judgment, and be levied on the land as the land of his debtor, and may bring it to sale, and the purchaser may go into possession and defend his title thus acquired, in ejectment brought by such fraudulent grantee, by showing the fraudulent character of the conveyance, or he may maintain an action to quiet title, or forcible detainer to recover possession from such fraudulent grantee; or he may bring ejectment against the fraudulent grantee and obtain possession; and whether he will recover or not in any of these cases will depend upon whether he establishes and the court determines judicially that the conveyance was fraudulent. Detwiler v. Louison, 10 Ohio C. D. 95.

A purchaser at an execution sale upon a judgment rendered after a conveyance of land by a judgment debtor has the same right to attack the conveyance as being in fraud of creditors as appertains to the judgment creditor himself, and the interest of such a creditor in the land of his debtor, fraudulently conveyed, is a legal, and not an equitable, asset under the statutes of Michigan. Orendorf v. Budlong, 12 Fed. 24.

A purchaser on executions under a judgment and decree of a debt subsequent to the date of a conveyance made by the judgment debtor in fraud of creditors is entitled to all the relief that the creditor himself would have been entitled to, for he stands in his place, and is armed with his rights; and such purchaser may maintain a bill to set aside such deed as fraudulent and void as against him. Hildreth v. Sands, 2 Johns. Ch. 35.

A memorandum to the report states that this decree was, on appeal, unanimously affirmed in the court of errors April 4, 1817.

As against a creditor, a deed executed with a view to defeat, delay, or hinder him, is void. He is therefore at liberty to treat the estate of his debtor, thus conveyed, as if no such conveyance existed, and to sell it in satisfaction of his debt. The purchaser buying at such sale must be permitted to show all the facts which make a title good, or else the sale by the creditor would be of no importance; and to do this he must stand in the place of the creditor, as the judgment is a part of his title, and for that reason, if there were no other, he must be allowed to show the same facts which the creditor could in order to give it effect. This was the 67 L. R. A.

answer of the court in Jones v. Crawford, Mc-Mull. L. 373, to the second ground of appeal, which said that the judge below was in error in saying that the purchaser at the execution sale occupied the position of the creditor under whose judgment he bought.

The law is well settled in Missouri that where a debtor conveys his land with a design to defraud his creditors a resulting trust is thereby created in favor of his creditors, and is the subject of an execution sale, and a purchaser at such sale will occupy as advantageous a position as though he were a creditor, when proceeding to set aside the debtor's conveyance on the ground of fraud. Ryland v. Callison, 54 Mo. 513.

A purchaser at a sheriff's sale stands in the place of the creditor upon whose judgment the land was sold, and as such may avoid a deed fraudulently made by the debtor for the purpose of defrauding creditors, in an action of ejectment, by proof of the fraud. Mulford v. Peterson, 35 N. J. L. 127.

In an action at law to recover land it was held that a purchaser at a sheriff's sale under a judgment stands, in reference to the land sold, precisely in the place of the judgment creditor; and if for any reason, as, for instance, fraud in the conveyance, the judgment creditor could reach the property, and subject it to the payment of his judgment, then, clearly the purchaser could assail the conveyance for a like reason, as he represents the judgment creditor, and is clothed with his right by virtue of his rights at the sheriff's sale; and, if he establishes the fact that the previous conveyance was made with intent to hinder and delay creditors, and shows that the conveyance was fraudulent and void as to creditors, then the judgment under which he purchased becomes a lien, and his title is perfect. Eastman v. Schettler, 13 Wis. 324.

A purchaser at a sheriff's sale under a judgment, of land which had previously been conveyed by the judgment debtor in fraud of his creditors, acquires all the right, title, and interest in the land which the debtor had at the commencement of the judgment lien, which is that which he would have had had the fraudulent conveyance not been made; and is vested with the rights of the creditor, entitled to the same relief, and can protect his title against the frauds of the judgment debtor in the same manner, and to the same extent, that the judgment creditor might have done had he purchased. Barr v. Hatch, 3 Ohio, 527; Girard Nat. Bank v. Maguire, 15 Phila. 313.

See Hager v. Shindler, 29 Cal. 47; Spindler v. Atkinson, 3 Md. 409, 56 Am. Dec. 755,—supra, II., a.

VIII. Conclusion.

The result of the foregoing would appear to be that what the effect on the legal title a conveyance of land in fraud of creditors, is, depends: 1st, largely upon the nature and character of the conveyance,—that is to say, whether it is a conveyance made by a debtor in fraud of his creditors to another of land of which he is at the time owner, or whether it is a conveyance made by a third person to another, at the instance of a debtor for a valuable consideration which is paid by him. Where the conveyance is made by the debtor it would seem that, as to his creditors, so much of a legal title remains in him as that it may be levied upon and sold under an execution issued upon a judgment rendered against him subsequent to such conveyance, in the same manner as though the judgment had been rendered before the making thereof, and, as this cannot be done where the judgment debtor possesses a mere equitable interest, it would further seem that the legal title, so far as the judgment creditor is concerned, still remains in the debtor notwithstanding the fraudulent conveyance. Where, however, the legal title to the land never was in the fraudulent debtor, there never was, and is not, in him anything of a leviable nature, and so,—except in states where it is specially provided by statute that the interest which he has in the land into which his money has gone as a consideration for it may be levied upon the same as though he did possess the legal title—all that the creditor can do is to subject the land to the payment of his debt in equity, upon the theory that the money which should have gone to such payment was paid out for the land. What effect on the legal title such a conveyance has depends, secondly, largely upon the construction given by the courts to the various statutes on the subject in the different jurisdictions. The effect of such a conveyance upon the legal title as to parties who are not creditors is, by an almost general acquiescence of judicial decision, the same as though it were not fraudulent; and so much is this so that the legal title of a bona fide purchaser from the fraudulent grantee in such a conveyance will always be upheld, and not only as regards himself and persons who have purchased from him in good faith, but even as to those to whom he has conveyed, and who had knowledge of the original fraud. As to the effect of such a conveyance, where the same is not questioned by the creditors of the fraudulent grantor, upon the title of the fraudulent grantee as regards his creditors, and when they may levy and collect their judgments against him out of such lands, there seems to be something of a variety of opinion, with the logical deduction and reasoning in favor of the theory that, so long as the creditors of the fraudulent grantor make no complaint, and take no steps to subject the land to the payment of their debts, no one else can complain, and the legal title, so far as to subject the land to the debts of the fraudulent grantee, must be considered in him. From the fact that the subject has been up for decision in several instances, it would appear that the question has been raised as to whether a purchaser at the sale of the fraudulent grantor's interest on execution when he is not a judgment creditor himself, has the same rights, and the legal title passes to him in the same manner, as though the judgment creditor were the purchaser; and the courts are unanimous in saying that he is entitled to all the relief that the creditor himself would have been entitled to, for he stands in his place, and is armed with his rights, and he must be permitted, therefore, to show all the facts which make his title good; and, as the creditor is at liberty to treat the estate of the debtor thus conveyed as if no such conveyance existed, so is the purchaser at such sale, even though he be not a creditor.

P. H. V.

Town of GLENCOE, Respt.,

v.

A. H. REED, Appt.

(.....Minn.....)

The fee owner of abutting property removed gravel from a gravel bed within the limits of a country highway, which did not cause any injury to the roadway, and the gravel was not required for the purposes of grading or improving the same.—Held, he was lawfully in the exercise of his rights as an abutting owner, within the rule that the only limitation upon the right of the owner of the fee to control and use the soil and other natural deposits within the limits of a highway is that such use shall be consistent with the full enjoyment of the public easement.

(December 23, 1904.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for McLeod County in favor of plaintiff in an action to enjoin defendant from removing gravel from within the limits of the highway. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. F. R. Allen, for appellant:

Appellant was the owner of the gravel, and entitled to remove the same so long as he did not interfere with the public use of the highway.

15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 418; Rich v. Minneapolis, 37 Minn. 424, 5 Am. St. Rep. 861, 35 N. W. 2; Ellsworth v. Lord, 40 Minn. 339, 42 N. W. 389; Cater v. Northwestern Teleph. Exch. Co. 60 Minn. 539, 28 L. R. A. 310, 51 Am. St. Rep. 543, 63 N. W. 111; L. Realty Co. v. Johnson (Minn.) 66 L. R. A. 439, 100 N. W. 94; Watson v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 46 Minn. 321, 48 N. W. 1129; Elliott, Roads & Streets, p. 299; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 688.

Mr. C. G. Odquist, for respondent:

The abutting landowner has no right to remove any earth or gravel from the public highway without the express consent of the town or highway authorities.

Viliski v. Minneapolis, 40 Minn. 304, 3 L. R. A. 831, 41 N. W. 1050; Elliott, Roads & Streets, p. 478; Cullanan v. Gilman, 107 N. Y. 360, 1 Am. St. Rep. 831, 14 N. E. 264; Hunt v. Rich, 38 Me. 195.

Lewis, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Action to enjoin defendant from removing gravel from a gravel pit upon the highway, and for the recovery of $200 damages, the expense of restoring the highway to its former condition. The trial court found the facts as follows: (1) That defendant was the owner of the fee upon which the highway was located. (2) That prior to the time of the acts complained of there existed on the west side of the traveled track in the highway an excavation 8 to 13 feet distant from the center of the traveled track, from 8 to 12 feet wide, and from 4 to 8 feet deep, which had been made by the public authorities in the construction of and for the purpose of improving the highway. (3) That at the place of the excavation, and west thereof, there was a gravel pit, suitable for the construction and repair of streets and highways; that in the fall of 1903, defendant sold to the village of Glencoe 162 loads of gravel for the use of its streets, which was removed from the west side of the excavation, and was worth 10 cents a load, amounting to $16.20. (4) That the road was not injured by the removal of the gravel therefrom, and there was no evidence given at the trial that it was needed for the improvement or repair of the village roads. Judgment was ordered enjoining and restraining defendant from removing gravel from the highway, and for its disbursements, but the court allowed no damages.

*Headnote by Lewis, J.

NOTE.—For some cases as to right of owner of fee of street to remove soil, sand, etc., therefrom, see note to Viliski v. Minneapolis, 3 L. R. A. 831.

The appeal is based upon the findings of the court, and presents the question whether the conclusion of law is justified by the findings of fact. It is the rule in general, and in this state, that the dedication of land for a public highway confers a mere easement for public use as a highway, and the landowner retains a right to use the land for any lawful purpose compatible with the full enjoyment of the public easement. In Rich v. Minneapolis, 37 Minn. 423, 5 Am. St. Rep. 861, 35 N. W. 2, the city entered into a contract with a certain party to grade one of its streets, which in part provided that, in consideration of the grading of the street, the contractor was to receive and be permitted to quarry and take away all the rock in that part of the street covered by their contract. It was held that the owner of the fee was entitled to recover the value of the rock so carried away, but the decision was based upon the fact that it was not necessary to remove the rock for the purpose of grading or improving the street, it being located below the grade line. To the same effect, see Viliski v. Minneapolis, 40 Minn. 304, 3 L. R. A. 831, 41 N. W. 1050, where it was held that the contractor for the construction of a sewer was liable to the owner of the fee for the value of the stone taken from a ledge in the street, not necessary to be removed for the construction of the sewer. Ellsworth v. Lord, 40 Minn. 337, 42 N. W. 389; Cater v. Northwestern Teleph. 67 L. R. A.

Each. Co. 60 Minn. 539, 28 L. R. A. 310, 51 Am. St. Rep. 543, 63 N. W. 111; and L. Realty Co. v. Johnson (Minn.) 66 L. R. A. 439, 100 N. W. 94, are cases illustrative of the doctrine that the owner of the fee retains the right to use the land for any lawful purpose compatible with the full enjoyment of the public easement, and that the private right cannot be disregarded by the authorities, but must be respected in so far as may be consistent with the public right to have a safe, unobstructed, and convenient right of way, taking into consideration the nature and the situation of the property and the circumstances of the case. In Elliott on Roads & Streets, 2d ed. § 411, the author thus sums up what he deems to be the rule as defined by the American and earlier English cases: "We believe that the right of the public is an easement, and that the owner of the fee remains the owner of the soil, springs, mines, quarries, timber, and the like, except in so far as the public officers may have a right to use suitable materials for improving or repairing the road." So far as we have been able to discover from examination of the authorities, the officers in charge of a public highway are authorized to use the material necessary to remove in the improvement of the highway, at least so far as necessary for the improvement of the road under construction across the premises involved. There are not many cases in the books where the particular question involved in this case has been decided. In Old Town v. Dooley, 81 Ill. 255, it was held that the right of way existing in the public over land as a highway is only a right of passage, and not a right to get water, either in streams or springs, on the soil of the landowner: that a spring in a public highway is not a part thereof, nor its use an incident to the use of the road; and the owner had a right to fence it off from the public, so long as the use of the highway was not interfered with. In Williams v. Kenney, 14 Barb. 629, the owner of the fee sold sand from a sand pit on one side of the traveled road in the highway, stipulating that no injury should be done to the highway, and it was held that the soil was his, with all the materials which nature had placed there; that he could dig, take, use, and sell to any extent compatible with the full and secure enjoyment of the easement by the public, and that he was not responsible to an adjacent owner, there being no interference with his land and access to the highway. In Robert v. Sadler, 104 N. Y. 220, 58 Am. Rep. 498, 10 N. E. 428, a contractor, by the terms of his contract, was required to grade a roadway, and cover it with gravel to a depth of 15 inches. The land within the road line across plaintiff's premises was above the grade, and required a removal of the earth to the depth of the grade and 15 inches below it. The contractor not only removed this material above the grade, and used it upon the avenue for the purpose of filling and construction, but dug pits in the roadway to a depth of 6 feet below the grade, in order to get gravel with which to perform his contract without paying for it. The defendant attempted to justify upon the ground that his acts were embraced in the public easement, and were authorized by it. It was held that the contractor was liable, and the decision rests upon the ground that only superincumbent material, necessary to be removed, may be used upon other parts of the road and upon premises of other land-owners.

It is quite evident from the trend of American decisions that the only limitation upon the rights of the owner of the fee to control and use the soil and other natural deposits within the limits of the highway is that such use shall be consistent with the full enjoyment of the public easement. It was found by the trial court that at some prior time the public authorities had made an excavation in this gravel bed, and used the material for the construction of the road, and it is fairly inferable from the findings that such excavation was made below the grade of the road, and that it was not necessary to remove the material in the process of grading in front of plaintiff's premises. According to the findings, defendant continued the excavation, and removed his own gravel from a point not only below the grade of the roadway, but gravel not necessary for its construction or repair, and which did not injure the road. As we understand the decision of the learned trial court, it was based upon the ground that in no event will the owner of the fee be permitted to enter upon a public highway, and remove therefrom soil or gravel, without permission of the public authorities. The author of Elliott on Roads and Streets, § 399, says: "Whatever is necessary to be done in order to make a safe, convenient public country road, the highway officers may lawfully do, and there may be cases where the necessity will be such as to exclude the owner from using any part of the surface of the way for any permanent private purpose." Section 400: "While the control of the highway officers over a rural road is, as is evident from what we have said, by no means so extensive as that of municipal officers over a city street; still it is extensive enough to authorize the rural highway officers to make it safe and convenient for passage, and to effect this object they may not only pave or gravel the entire width of the way, but they may also use it for incidental highway purposes." Palatine v. Kreuger, 121 Ill. 72, 12 N. E. 75, is a case wherein the distinction is pointed out between the authority conferred with respect to city and rural highways. In short, it may be said that in the case of country roads the public authorities have jurisdiction to do all that is necessary to meet the public necessities, and make the highway efficient and safe in every respect; but this is the extent of their authority. Under the findings of this case, it not appearing that it was necessary to use that part of the highway where the excavation was extended for the purpose of making a roadway, and it not appearing that the material taken therefrom was necessary for the construction or repair of such roadway, and the roadway not having been injured, it follows that the public authorities have no power to prevent the entrance upon the highway by the owner of the fee for the purpose of enjoying the property rights incident to his ownership, and consequently their consent was not necessary.

Judgment reversed.

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

STATE of Kansas

v.

E. J. SMILEY, Appt.

(65 Kan. 240.)

1. The general language of statutes will be limited to such persons and subjects as it is reasonable to presume the legislature intended it should apply.

*Headnotes by DOSTER, Ch. J.

NOTE.—As to illegal trusts under modern anti-trust laws, see also, in this series, Whitwell v. Continental Tobacco Co. 64 L. R. A. 689, and note.
67 L. R. A.

2. Objections to the constitutional validity of statutes can be made only by those to whom the enactment applies, and against whom attempts to enforce it are made.

3. The making of anti-competitive trade agreements as to products and merchandise bought or sold on the general market is contrary to public policy, and it is competent for the legislature to enact penal measures to prevent the making and carrying out of such agreements.

4. Chapter 265, Laws 1897 (Gen. Stat. 1901, §§ 7864-7874), known as the "anti-trust law," does not conflict with the guaranty of right to acquire property by lawful contract secured by the Federal Constitution, and is a valid exercise of legislative power.

5. An agreement entered into by all the dealers on a certain market, limiting their right, severally, under stipulated forfeitures or penalties, to buy all the grain they otherwise might on such market, is an agreement in restraint of trade, and falls within the penal terms of the anti-trust act of 1897.
6. An instruction to the jury, possibly erroneous, but, if so, harmless, discussed, and the lack of error in giving it pointed out.

(Pollock, J., dissents.)

(June 7, 1902.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Rush County convicting him of violating the anti-trust law. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinions.

Mr. H. Whiteside, for appellant:

Where the statute makes the intent an element of the crime the intent must be alleged and proved.

Wharton, Crim. Pl. & Pr. 9th ed. § 163a; State v. Child, 42 Kan. 611, 22 Pac. 721; State v. Burns, 35 Kan. 387, 11 Pac. 161; State v. Bush, 45 Kan. 141, 25 Pac. 614; State v. Lawrence, 43 Kan. 125, 23 Pac. 157.

A combination of two or more persons cannot be in and of itself illegal, unless it amounts to a civil or criminal conspiracy.

Eddy, Combinations, § 170.

The law encourages and provides for combination, and recognizes the economical truth that the co-operation of individuals is essential to the well-being and the progress of society.

Jones v. Fell, 5 Fla. 510; Eddy, Combinations, § 262; Central Shade Roller Co. v. Cushman, 143 Mass. 353, 9 N. E. 629; Herriman v. Menzies, 115 Cal. 16, 35 L. R. A. 318, 56 Am. St. Rep. 82, 46 Pac. 730, 44 Pac. 660.

Where it is claimed that a combination is inimical to public interest, the apprehension of danger should rest on evident grounds.

Leslie v. Lorillard, 110 N. Y. 519, 1 L. R. A. 456, 18 N. E. 363.

All combinations or contracts that tend to suppress competition or fix prices are not illegal.

Eddy, Combinations, §§ 288-332; Macaulay Bros. v. Tierney, 19 R. I. 255, 37 L. R. A. 455, 61 Am. St. Rep. 770, 33 Atl. 1; Bohn Mfg. Co. v. Hollis (Bohn Mfg. Co. v. Northwestern Lumbermen's Asso.) 54 Minn. 223, 21 L. R. A. 337, 40 Am. St. Rep. 319, 55 N. W. 1119; Ritchie v. People, 155 Ill. 98, 29 L. R. A. 79, 46 Am. St. Rep. 315, 40 67 L. R. A.

N. E. 454; Hopkins v. United States, 171 U. S. 578, 43 L. ed. 290, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 40; Anderson v. United States, 171 U. S. 604, 43 L. ed. 300, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 50.

Less than two cannot possibly be joined in an indictment for conspiracy.

Wharton, Crim. Pl. & Pr. 9th ed. § 305; State v. Bailey, 3 Blackf. 209; State v. Jackson, 7 S. C. N. S. 283, 24 Am. Rep. 476; Turpin v. State, 4 Blackf. 72; State v. Tom, 13 N. C. (2 Dev. L.) 569; Delany v. People, 10 Mich. 241; State v. Allison, 3 Yerg. 428; State v. Byron, 20 Mo. 210; State v. Covington, 4 Ala. 603; United States v. Cole, 5 McLean, 513, Fed. Cas. No. 14,832; 1 Wharton, Crim. Law, 6th ed. 1870, § 431; 3 Wharton, Crim. Law, § 2339; People v. Howell, 4 Johns. 296; State v. Mainor, 28 N. C. (6 Ired. L.) 340; Martin v. Leslie, 93 Ill. App. 44; Jones v. Baker, 7 Cow. 445; Com. v. Edwards, 135 Pa. 474, 19 Atl. 1064; 6 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 846; People v. Olcott, 2 Johns. Cas. 301, 1 Am. Dec. 168; State v. Egan, 10 La. Ann. 698; State v. O'Donald, 1 McCord, L. 532, 10 Am. Dec. 691; State v. Foster, 21 W. Va. 769.

Chapter 265, Laws 1897, is unconstitutional and void.

The liberty to contract is as much protected by the constitutional provision as the liberty of person, and any attempt to abridge or limit that right will be held void, unless such abridgment or limitation is necessary as a police measure to preserve the peace and order of the community, or the life, liberty, and morals of individuals.

2 Eddy, Combinations, § 679. Niagara F. Ins. Co. v. Cornell, 110 Fed. 816; Re Grice, 79 Fed. 627.

Messrs. Keeler & Hite and Allen & Allen, with Messrs. A. A. Godard, Attorney General, and J. W. McCormick, for appellee:

The commission of the offense charged in the information is made a crime under the law of 1897, without any express reference to any intent. Therefore, all that was necessary was simply to allege the commission of the act.

State v. Bush, 45 Kan. 138, 25 Pac. 614; 1 Bishop, Crim. Proc. § 521; 4 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 681; State v. Hurds, 19 Neb. 316, 27 N. W. 139; State v. Smith, 93 N. C. 516; Parker v. State, 20 Tex. App. 451; United States v. Leathers, 8 Sawy. 17, Fed. Cas. No. 15,581.

The constituent elements of the offense are alleged in the information, which is sufficient in this case.

State v. Beverlin, 30 Kan. 612, 2 Pac. 630; State v. Gavigan, 36 Kan. 327, 13 Pac. 554; State v. Barnett, 3 Kan. 250, 87 Am. Dec. 471; State v. Blakesley, 39 Kan. 153, 18 Pac. 170; State v. Watson, 30 Kan. 281, 1 Pac. 770.

The unlawful conspiracy is the gist of the offense, and therefore it is not necessary to allege or prove the execution of the agreement.

3 Greenl. Ev. 15th ed. §§ 91-95; State v. Noyes, 25 Vt. 415; Wharton, Crim. Law, §§ 2293-2295.

The offense is complete if the defendant entered into an agreement with another for the purpose of fixing the price of any merchandise.

Com. v. Grinstead, 108 Ky. 59, 55 S. W. 720, 57 S. W. 471.

One of two or more conspirators may be separately indicted, tried, and convicted.

People v. Richards, 67 Cal. 412, 56 Am. Rep. 716, 7 Pac. 828; Heine v. Com. 91 Pa. 145; People v. Mather, 4 Wend. 230, 21 Am. Dec. 122; United States v. Miller, 3 Hughes, 553, Fed. Cas. No. 15,774; Reg. v. Ahearne, 6 Cox, C. C. 6; King v. Oxford County, 13 East, 413, note; 1 Bishop, Crim. Proc. § 463; 4 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 637, ¶ vii; 1 Archbold, Crim. Pr. & Pl. 301, and note; 2 Bishop, Crim. Proc. § 186; 3 Wharton, Crim. Law, 6th ed. §§ 2340, 2344, 2346; Com. v. Demain, 3 Clark (Pa.) 487.

The statute is constitutional.

United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Asso. 166 U. S. 290, 41 L. ed. 1007, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 540; State ex rel. Crow v. Firemen's Fund Ins. Co. 152 Mo. 1, 45 L. R. A. 363, 52 S. W. 595; Houck v. Anheuser-Busch Brewing Asso. 88 Tex. 184, 30 S. W. 869; United States v. Joint Traffic Asso. 171 U. S. 505, 43 L. ed. 259, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 25; State ex rel. Astor v. Schlitz Brewing Co. 104 Tenn. 715, 78 Am. St. Rep. 941, 59 S. W. 1033; State ex rel. Monnett v. Buckeye Pipe Line Co. 61 Ohio St. 520, 56 N. E. 464.

Doster, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from a judgment of conviction of a violation of the anti-trust law. The information on which the conviction was based reads as follows: "I, the undersigned county attorney of said county, in the name and by authority and on behalf of the state of Kansas, give information that on the 20th day of November, A. D. 1900, in said county of Rush and state of Kansas, one E. J. Smiley, secretary and representative of the Kansas State Grain Dealers' Association, did then and there unlawfully enter into an agreement, contract, and combination in the county of Rush and the state of Kansas with divers and sundry persons, partners, companies, and corporations, or grain dealers and grain buyers in the town of Bison, in said county and state aforesaid, 67 L. R. A.

to wit, Humburg & Ahrens, the LaCrosse Lumber & Grain Company, the Bison Milling Company, and George E. Weicken, who were at the same time and place competitive grain dealers and buyers, to pool and fix the price the said grain dealers and buyers should pay at the said place, and to divide between them the net earnings of said grain dealers and buyers, and to prevent competition in the purchase and sale of grain among the said dealers and buyers; contrary to the form of statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the state." The proceeding was instituted and conviction had under chapter 265, Laws 1897 (Gen. Stat. 1901, §§ 7864-7874). A question is raised as to whether the charge was made and judgment pronounced under that or certain other statutes. This will be noticed hereafter. The parts of the act of 1897 which apply to the case read as follows:

"Sec. 1. A trust is a combination of capital, skill, or acts, by two or more persons, firms, corporations, or associations of persons, or either two or more of them, for either, any, or all of the following purposes: First. To create or carry out restrictions in trade or commerce, or aids to commerce, or to carry out restrictions in the full and free pursuit of any business authorized or permitted by the laws of this state. Second. To increase or reduce the price of merchandise, produce, or commodities, or to control the cost of rates of insurance. Third. To prevent competition in the manufacture, making, transportation, sale, or purchase of merchandise, produce, or commodities, or to prevent competition in aids to commerce. Fourth. To fix any standard or figure, whereby its price to the public shall be, in any manner, controlled or established, any article or commodity of merchandise, produce, or commerce intended for sale, use, or consumption in this state. Fifth. To make or enter into, or execute or carry out, any contract, obligation, or agreement of any kind or description by which they shall bind or have to bind themselves not to sell, manufacture, dispose of, or transport any article or commodity, or article of trade, use, merchandise, commerce, or consumption, below a common standard figure; or by which they shall agree in any manner to keep the price of such article, commodity, or transportation at a fixed or graded figure; or by which they shall in any manner establish or settle the price of any article or commodity, or transportation, between them or themselves and others, to preclude a free and unrestricted competition among themselves or others in transportation, sale, or manufacture of any such article or commodity; or by which they shall agree to pool, combine, or unite any interest they may have in connection with the manufacture, sale, or transportation of any such article or commodity, that its price may in any manner be affected. And any such combinations are hereby declared to be against public policy, unlawful, and void.

"Sec. 2. All persons, companies, or corporations within this state are hereby denied the right to form or to be in any manner interested, either directly or indirectly, as principal, agent, representative, consignee, or otherwise, in any trust as defined in § 1 of this act."

Subsequent sections of the act contain penal provisions, under which appellant was fined, and ordered committed to jail. The above statute is assailed with great vehemence by counsel for appellant. Their contention is that it imposes such limitations upon freedom of contract as to constitute a deprivation of the right of property contrary to the guaranty of the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution. They say that, instead of being what it purports,—an act to prevent unreasonable restrictions upon trade,—it is itself such restriction, and is therefore violative of the fundamental right to acquire property by lawful contract. To enforce these contentions many generalities of language culled out of the reported decisions and the writings of the commentators have been quoted, but no concrete instances of holdings, by courts of last resort, adverse to enactments of the character of the one in question, have been cited. Two recent decisions by subordinate Federal judges, ruling against the validity of statutes of a similar kind, have been called to our attention. Re Grice, 79 Fed. 627; Niagara F. Ins. Co. v. Cornell, 110 Fed. 816. The opinions in both these cases, so far as they discuss the subject of the repugnancy of the acts under consideration to the constitutional guaranty of freedom of contract, are open to the criticism of being without the bonds of the meritorious question at issue. This is perceivable at once. The first-mentioned case involved the anti-trust statute of Texas. That statute exempted from its terms the original producer or raiser of agricultural products of live stock. The other case involved the anti-trust statute of Nebraska. That statute exempted from its provisions assemblies or associations of laboring men. The making of these exceptions was class legislation, and constituted a denial of the equal protection of the law,—so the judges ruled. That ruling was all-sufficient for the purpose of the cases. Not only that, it was on the only necessary question in the cases. Hence the disposition made of them on the one special feature forbade an opinion on the abstract general question, and rendered all that was said upon it dictum of the baldest kind. The Supreme Court of the United States recently had a like occasion to declare the law in advance of the presentation of a necessary issue concerning it. It was in the case of Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co. 184 U. S. 540, 46 L. ed. 679, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 431. That case involved the validity of the anti-trust law of Illinois, an enactment similar to the statutes of Texas and Nebraska, and, like them, containing an exception in favor of a certain class. The court held the statute invalid because of the exception, but very properly refrained from making pronouncement of what the law would be if it had not contained the exception. The opinions of the judges in the cases of Re Grice, 79 Fed. 627, and Niagara F. Ins. Co. v. Cornell, 110 Fed. 816, are not regarded by us as authority. They are, however, adopted as arguments by counsel for appellant, and as such are entitled to consideration. Nevertheless, as arguments, they are barren of reference to adjudged cases, except in the form of quotations of abstract and general statement. The burden of their reasoning is that the statutes under consideration were so broad and comprehensive in their terms as to be inclusive of classes of persons and kinds of business that it would be unreasonable and tyrannical to regulate in the mode attempted. In the case first cited it is said among other things of like kind: "Two village grocers doing business at a loss to both could not form a partnership in order to save both from bankruptcy. Neither could they form a partnership in order that they might lessen their expenses, and thus reduce the price of their commodities to the public. Still more, if A and B, each owing half a car load of potatoes, should agree to ship together in order to obtain carload rates, thus enabling them to sell lower in the markets, they would violate this act." In the other case the assumed unreasonableness and tyranny of the statute is illustrated by the following, among others, as typical instances: "If this law is valid, two or more farmers cannot agree that they will not sell their wheat to a neighboring mill for less than so much per bushel. Two or more farmers cannot agree that the live-stock feeder shall not have their corn except at a certain price. . . . Nothing can be agreed to by the manufacturer, the farmer, gardener, the contractor, consumer, or laborer to prevent the reduction of price." If the statutes of Texas and Nebraska were really to be enforced against the class of persons mentioned and to the utter length stated by the judges in the two cases cited, they well deserved the condemnation they received; and, if our statute is to be held to apply in the like way, we should not hesitate to declare it to be violative of the most fundamental principles of constitutional right,—that is, we should not hesitate to do so when the question of its invalidity should be presented by someone entitled to complain, to wit, one of the proscribed and oppressed classes: nor shall we hesitate to do so in behalf of appellant in this case if, upon examination, we find him to belong to one of such classes. However, it was not charged against him, or claimed by him, that he belonged in any such category. It was neither charged nor claimed that his confederacy with the other persons named in the information was for purposes of a business partnership, or that he was one of two shippers of produce seeking to lighten freight charges by joining with the other, or that he was a farmer agreeing with his neighbors to hold his grain for an advance in the market; nor was it charged or claimed that the acts performed by him were, as to the examples enumerated, of a like limited scope and a like presumptively harmless and reasonable nature. It was charged and proved against him that he was a buyer of grain on the general open market; that he was an intermediary between the public who produced and sold and the public who bought and consumed, and as such that he conspired with others of like business to prevent competition among themselves, and to pool and fix the price of grain bought and sold on such market. Now, whether this fact takes him out of the list of those innocent instances cited in the cases we are discussing we will presently inquire. Suffice it to say for the moment that, unless he does belong in such list, he cannot be heard to complain. He cannot be heard to object to the statute merely because it operates oppressively upon others. The hurt must be to himself. The case, under appellant's contention as to this point, is not a case of favoritism in the law. It is not a case of exclusion of classes who ought to have been included, the leaving out of which constitutes a denial of the equal protection of the law, but it is the opposite of that. It is a case of the inclusion of those who ought to have been excluded. Hence, unless appellant can show that he himself has been wrongfully included in the terms of the law, he can have no just ground of complaint. This is fundamental, and decisively settled. Kansas City v. Union P. R. Co. (Kansas City v. Clark) 59 Kan. 427, 52 L. R. A. 321, 53 Pac. 468. Affirmed under the title, "Clark v. Kansas City," 176 U. S. 114, 44 L. ed. 392, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 284; Albany County v. Stanley, 105 U. S. 305-311, 26 L. ed. 1044-1049; Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. 67 L. R. A.

Co. v. Montgomery, 152 Ind. 1, 71 Am. St. Rep. 302-311, 49 N. E. 582.

In immediate connection with the subject just discussed the question arises whether, assuming the general phraseology of the statute to be comprehensive of classes of persons who cannot be rightfully included therein, the whole enactment becomes nullified thereby. The general doctrine is that only the invalid parts of a statute are without legal efficacy. This is qualified by the further rule that, if the void and valid parts of the statute are so connected with each other in the general scheme of the act that they cannot be separated without violence to the evident intent of the legislature, the whole must fail. These rules are of everyday enforcement in the courts. The latest case in which they were adverted to by us is Hardy v. Kingman County, 65 Kan. 111, 68 Pac. 1078. The instances in which the application of the rule first mentioned most usually occurs are those where separable words, clauses, sentences, or sections of the statute are stricken out, as it were, because constitutionally objectionable. However, the rule is not limited to such instances. It applies as well to exclude from the operation of the statute subjects and classes of things lying without the legislative intent, although comprehended within the general terms of the act, as it does to exclude parts of the verbal phraseology. Two cases strikingly illustrative of this rule are Albany County v. Stanley, 105 U. S. 305, 26 L. ed. 1044, and Com. v. Gagne, 153 Mass. 205, 10 L. R. A. 442, 26 N. E. 449. See also, to the same effect, McKee v. United States, 164 U. S. 287-293, 41 L. ed. 437-439, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 92; Keokuk Northern Line Packet Co. v. Keokuk, 95 U. S. 80, 24 L. ed. 377. In the first-mentioned case it was held that a state-taxing statute, general in its terms, applying alike to all taxpayers, which did not recognize a certain exception allowed by act of Congress in favor of stockholders in national banks, was not, for that reason, void as a whole, but, limited by the controlling Federal law, was valid as to all the persons embraced within the general language employed. In the other case it was held that a state prohibitory liquor law which did not except from its operation liquors in original packages, but by the generality of its terms included them, which, under the commerce clause of the Federal Constitution as construed in Leisy v. Hardin, 135 U. S. 100, 34 L. ed. 128, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 36, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 681, could not be done, was not, for that reason, void as to liquors in broken packages, but as to them was valid and enforceable. This ruling, in necessary effect, was approved by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case Re Rahrer (Wilkerson v. Rahrer) 140 U. S. 545, 35 L. ed. 572, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 865. In that case Rahrer contended that after the decision of Leisy v. Hardin, 135 U. S. 100, 34 L. ed. 128, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 681, there was no law in Kansas prohibiting the sale of liquor in original packages; that the effect of the subsequent act of Congress popularly called the "Wilson bill," being an act to subject interstate importations of liquor in original packages to the operation of the local law, could not have the effect to give vitality to that which as a statute had existence in form only, and not in fact, but that a new state enactment was required. The soundness of this contention was denied, and in denying it the court, after restating the ground of the decision in Leisy v. Hardin, said: "This was far from holding that the statutes in question were absolutely void, in whole or in part, and as if they had never been enacted. On the contrary, the decision did not annul the law, but limited its operation to property strictly within the jurisdiction of the state." When the court did that it only did what courts are in the daily habit of doing,—limited the language of the statute to the subjects in respect of which it was competent and proper for the legislature to dispense. Throughout the entire history of English and American law the courts have been ruling that the general words of statutes were to be restrained in import and application whenever the taking of them in literal sense would lead to absurd or hurtful consequences, and the same is true under the American system of written constitutions whenever the taking of general words in their full signification would expose them to conflict with the organic law. It is but an affectation of sensitiveness of regard for the Constitution which often leads courts to beat down the whole of a legislative enactment because of its opposition to the fundamental ordinance in some minor particular, instead of adjusting it to harmonize with the controlling provision. It is not a matter of concern to us that the general language of the statute under consideration may apply to classes of persons who should not have been comprehended therein, and who may have a standing in court to claim exception therefrom. Their cases can be attended to when presented in due form. It is not they, but the appellant, who is before us. Does he state a case entitling him to exemption from the operative scope of the statute? One of the cases most strikingly illustrative of the rule of interpretation in question is Opinion of the Justices, 41 N. H. 553. It was claimed that certain sections of the statutes of New Hampshire were so broad and general as to be in opposition to what was called the 67 L. R. A.

"fugitive slave law" of Congress, and the constitutional provision in pursuance of which it was enacted. Replying to this claim, the justices said: "But, if these sections could not be applied in the cases supposed, they are not, therefore, necessarily void. If the intention of any part of the act, determined upon settled principles of legal interpretation, were to obstruct or impede the exercise or enjoyment of any right secured by the Constitution of the United States, or by any constitutional law of the United States, that part would be unconstitutional. But if the intention thus determined were merely to establish, regulate, or guarantee rights or privileges consistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States in a mode not in conflict with either, and if the act would constitutionally apply to a large class of cases that do and will exist, it would not be rendered unconstitutional by the fact that, literally construed, its language might be broad enough to extend to a few exceptional cases where it could not constitutionally apply; since, upon settled principles of construction, the latter are as fully and effectually excepted by necessary implication as if the statute had contained an express proviso that it should not extend or apply to such cases. The rule of construction universally adopted is that, when a statute may constitutionally operate upon certain persons, or in certain cases, and was not evidently intended to conflict with the Constitution, it is not to be held unconstitutional merely because there may be persons to whom, or cases in which, it cannot constitutionally apply; but it is to be deemed constitutional, and to be construed not to apply to the latter persons or cases, on the ground that courts are bound to presume that the legislature did not intend to violate the Constitution." There are some decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States said to be in opposition to the above-stated theory of construction of statutes. In our judgment, they are not, although the language of some of the opinions confuses the subject. They were cases in which the court, while admitting the existence of the rule, held it inapplicable to the particular statutes under consideration. The principal ones are United States v. Reese, 92 U. S. 214, 23 L. ed. 563; Trade-Mark Cases, 100 U. S. 82, 25 L. ed. 550; United States v. Harris, 106 U. S. 629, 27 L. ed. 290, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 601, and Baldwin v. Franks, 120 U. S. 678, 32 L. ed. 766, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 656, 763. All of these cases raised questions as to the validity of legislation enacted under the special and limited powers of Congress. The one first cited involved certain of the provisions of what is known as the "enforcement act" of May 31.

1870, which act sought to give effect to the 15th Amendment of the Constitution, prohibiting discriminations in the matter of suffrage between citizens on account of race, color, etc. The act, however, was directed in general terms against discriminations for any and all reasons, not for the particular reason of race or color. Inasmuch as the sole power conferred on Congress by the 15th Amendment was one to effectuate by appropriate legislation the prohibition against discriminations between citizens on account of the specific characteristics named, it was held that an act which undertook to prohibit discriminations generally could not be narrowed by construction into a prohibition of discriminations practised because of race or color. In the Trade-Mark Cases the statute under consideration was one which made punishable those who sold or had in their possession, counterfeits or colorable imitations of the trademarks of other persons. Inasmuch as trademarks are not the subjects of congressional legislation, except as they may be used on articles of interstate commerce or commerce with foreign nations and the Indian tribes, it was decided that a statute relating to their use on articles of commerce generally could not be upheld as applicable to the one specific subject in respect to which Congress might legislate, there being no hint or intimation in the act of a purpose to have it so confined. The cases of United States v. Harris and Baldwin v. Franks involved the question of the validity of § 5519, U. S. Rev. Stat. (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3714). That section, in general terms, sought to make punishable those who conspired to deprive other persons of the equal protection of the laws, or of equal privileges and immunities under the laws. Inasmuch as Congress can interfere to secure equality of legal protection and equality of privileges and immunities only as specifically authorized,—as, for instance, under the 15th Amendment, to prevent discriminations in suffrage on account of race, color, etc., or in execution of the treaty power to prevent the deprivation of treaty rights accorded to citizens or subjects of foreign nations,—it was held that the section of the statute cited was too general in its terms to be narrowed by construction into one in execution of any of the specific powers.

The decisions we have thus distinguished from the one we make are philosophic and reasonable. They are bottomed upon the fact of the special and limited powers of Congress; and this fact, though not commented on at length as the basis of the judgments rendered, is nevertheless adverted to in all of them, and obviously constitutes the ratio decidendi of the cases. It was plainly expressed by Mr. Justice Woods in United States v. Harris, who said in one part of the opinion, "It must, nevertheless, be stated that the government of the United States is one of delegated, limited, and enumerated powers," and who then, in another part, tersely remarked: "Those provisions of the law which are broader than is warranted by the article of the Constitution by which they are supposed to be authorized cannot be sustained." If we might be allowed to undertake the statement of a rule of interpretation applicable to the class of Federal statutes considered in the above cited cases, it would be that a power which is specifically limited cannot be allowed to express itself in general terms, and a limitation of the general language to the specific power will not be implied. On the other hand, however, a power which is unlimited, except as specifically prohibited, may express itself in general terms, and the specific instances of limitation will be implied as provisos. This furnishes a rational basis of discrimination between rules of interpretation applicable in the respect under consideration to Federal and state legislation. Congress cannot legislate on all subjects, as can a state legislature. Therefore its enactments must show on their face their application to that to which, as matter of constitutional limitation, they should be confined. For example, a state legislature is empowered to legislate generally in respect to all trusts and conspiracies in restraint of trade, except as limited by the commerce clause of the Federal Constitution; but, on the other hand, Congress is not empowered to legislate generally with respect to trusts and trade conspiracies. It can legislate against them only under the commerce clause of the Constitution. Therefore a state enactment, though broad enough in terms to apply to trusts engaged in interstate commerce, or conspiracies in restraint of interstate trade, will be limited by construction to that to which it can alone legally apply; but a congressional act, being of necessity limited to the one particular class of trusts or trade conspiracies, viz., those engaged in interstate or international trade, must express that limitation on its face. Nevertheless, we do not doubt that if a congressional enactment, general in terms, could be given specific application to subjects lying within its rightful sphere, without the aid of other and qualifying or explanatory words, but which general terms were also inclusive of subjects lying without such sphere, it would be restrained by construction of those matters in respect of which Congress is qualified to dispense, and not be nullified as a whole.
67 L. R. A.

In considering the possible view of the Supreme Court of the United States of the rule of interpretation of the general language of statutes, it is important to observe that that court does not apply the rule of the Trade-Mark and other like cases to state legislation supposed to be in conflict with the Federal Constitution or laws, but, on the contrary applies the one we invoke in this case. It did so in Albany County v. Stanley, 105 U. S. 305, 26 L. ed. 1044; Keokuk Northern Line Packet Co. v. Keokuk, 95 U. S. 80, 24 L. ed. 377; Re Rahrer (Wilkerson v. Rahrer) 140 U. S. 545, 35 L. ed. 572, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 865, and lately did so in Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Texas, 177 U. S. 28-42, 44 L. ed. 657, 663, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 518. In that case the contention was made that a statute of Texas was so broad in its terms as to prohibit foreign corporations from engaging in interstate as well as domestic commerce, and hence was unconstitutional. This claim, and the disposition made of it, were stated as follows: "The claim is, if we understand it, that the statute prohibits all business of foreign corporations, and hence is unconstitutional as including interstate business, and cannot be limited by judicial construction to local business, and the unconstitutional taint thereby removed. To sustain the contention, United States v. Reese, 92 U. S. 214, 221, 23 L. ed. 563, 565; Trade-Mark Cases, 100 U. S. 82, 25 L. ed. 550; United States v. Harris, 106 U. S. 629, 27 L. ed. 290, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 601; Baldwin v. Franks, 120 U. S. 678, 32 L. ed. 766, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 656, 763, and some other cases,—are cited. They do not sustain the contention. The interpretation of certain statutes of the United States was involved, and the court, finding the meaning of the statutes plain, decided that it could not be changed by construction, even to save the statutes from unconstitutionality." It may be said that the judgment from which the above quotation is made, so far as concerned the point noticed, was rested upon the rule that the Federal courts will adopt the construction which the state tribunals place upon their own statutes. Be it so, if that is a sufficient reason. We construe the general words of our statute to be comprehensive only of those cases which are the rightful subjects of legislation of the kind in question. However, we disavow doing so merely in order to shelter the statute under the rule mentioned, but because the ancient, established and wise canon of interpretation requires it to be done. Sporadic and anomalous cases indicating to the contrary may be found, as they may be found to the contrary of every settled accepted doctrine of the law; but the rule that the general words of statutes will be restricted in application to cases pre-sumptively within the legislative intent has been so long accepted as a cardinal principle that its occasional denial, even by the most learned of courts, fails utterly of adverse impression. "It happens in two sorts of cases that it is necessary to interpret the laws. One is when we find in a law some obscurity, ambiguity, or other defect of expression; for in this case it is necessary to interpret the law in order to discover its true meaning. And this kind of interpretation is limited to the expression, that it may be known what the law says. The other is when it happens that the sense of a law, however, clear it may appear in the words, would lead us to false consequences, and to decisions that would be unjust, if the laws were indifferently applied to everything that is contained within the expression; for in this case the palpable injustice that would follow from this apparent sense obliges us to discover by some kind of interpretation, not what the law says, but what it means, and to judge by its meaning how far it ought to be extended, and what are the bounds that ought to be set to its sense." Domat's Rules; Potter's Dwarr. Stat. 138.

It must not be understood from anything we have said that we assume that any of the cases instanced by the judges in Re Grice, 79 Fed. 627, and Niagara F. Ins. Co. v. Cornell, 110 Fed. 816, were really within the legislative thought when our statute of 1897 was enacted, and therefore that the general words of the act must be restrained to less than the intent they outwardly manifest. Such legislation must be viewed in the light of the fact that the industrial and commercial classes of the country are menaced, or supposed to be menaced, as never before, by gigantic combinations of capitalistic interests, having for their object the suppression of competition, the control of prices, and the monopolization of markets; that this fact, more than any other topic, constitutes the theme of public discussion and the occasion of public alarm; that legislators in both state and national assemblies are earnestly besought by their constituents to devise measures to avert what either rightly or unduly is conjectured to portend a direful subversion of our entire economic system, and that the enactments of the kind in question are the responses of the lawmaking bodies to the demands of the immediate time. These are the facts of the current period, known and read of all men, and discovering to the courts as well as everybody else the intent of the legislature. How vain, then, to affect to find the small personal affairs of obscure and irresponsible individuals totally lacking all the elements of public concern embraced within the legislative cognizance, and made the subjects of hostile legislative fiat.

From very early times it was the policy of the common law to encourage competitive trade, and to discourage contract restraints upon it. The courts refused to enforce stipulations between parties looking to the imposition of such restraints. That rule of policy remains to this day, and to this day the courts continue their refusal to countenance contracts of the character mentioned. To this there has been and is but one exception or class of exceptions, and it more seeming than real. It is the case of the sale of a merchandise, mechanical, or other like business, or the sale of property for a specific use, or the contract of an apprentice, agent, clerk, or servant. In these and kindred cases it has been held lawful to insert a stipulation that the seller shall not engage in competitive business with the buyer of his property; or that the apprentice, agent, clerk, or servant, after learning the master's or employer's business, shall not set up in opposition to him. The reason for these exceptions is that in such cases the buyer bargains for more than physical property. He bargains for the good will of his vendor's business, or other like valuable advantage, and the master or employer parts with something more than the wages he pays. He parts with instruction in the business learned; parts not only with the secrets of the general trade or calling, but with the secrets of his own particular business, and parts with the favorable acquaintance of his own customers or clients. The fact of these and the like constituting the only exceptions to the general rule, and the grounds upon which the exceptions rest, are elaborately set forth in the opinion of Judge Taft in the case of United States v. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. 46 L. R. A. 122, 29 C. C. A. 141, 54 U. S. App. 723, 85 Fed. 271. In that case the validity of legislation of the character now in question was upheld in an opinion of great strength and cogency, and with citations to a great list of supporting authorities. The case was appealed to the Supreme Court, which affirmed the decree rendered so far as it sought to enforce the provisions of the act of Congress of July 2, 1890, known as the "Sherman anti-trust act," modifying it only to the extent of excluding from its terms the operations of the appellant company in matters of domestic commerce over which the Federal law could not be extended. 175 U. S. 211, 248, 44 L. ed. 136, 150, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 96. A great array of decisions, English and American, will be found cited in the first-mentioned case, all tending to the establishment of the proposition that combinations having for their object the restraint of trade by the prevention of competition are inimical to public policy, their contracts in furtherance of their object non-enforceable, and their agreements of confederacy followed by acts in prosecution of their purpose, rightful subjects of restrictive and penal legislation. Two of these decisions were made in United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Asso. 166 U. S. 290, 41 L. ed. 1007, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 540, and United States v. Joint Traffic Asso. 171 U. S. 505, 43 L. ed. 259, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 25. In those cases it was held that agreements between competing railroad companies to fix and maintain noncompetitive traffic rates were in violation of the anti-trust act of Congress, and were subject to be annulled, and the associations formed thereby dissolved, at the suit of the government. Counsel for appellant denies the applicability of these cases and that of the Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. 175 U. S. 211, 248, 44 L. ed. 136, 150, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 96, on the grounds: First, that the statute which the decisions enforced was enacted under the authority of Congress to regulate commerce between the states; second, that such statute is not directed against agreements or combinations restrictive of competitive trade, but has for its object the suppression of monopolies. The first of these distinctions is founded on the dictum of the judge in Niagara F. Ins. Co. v. Cornell, 110 Fed. 816. He said: "The Railroad Traffic Asso. Case, 166 U. S. 290, 41 L. ed. 1007, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 540, has been strongly urged by the attorney general as upholding the doctrine of this statute. But it does not, for the reason that the statute under consideration in that case was upheld by reason of the commerce clause of the Constitution, and to that extent the commerce clause controlled the other clauses of the Constitution; and I repeat that the statute with which I am dealing is a state statute." There is one plainly expressed and one possible thought in this excerpt: First (the possible one), the authority can be exercised in pursuance only of express constitutional grant. That is not true of a state enactment, because the legislature of a state possesses all power not expressly withheld. It is true of a congressional enactment, because Congress possesses only such power as is expressly conferred. The express grant of power to Congress conferred by the commerce clause of the Constitution only put that body on the footing as to interstate commerce that the local legislature has as to domestic commerce without an express grant and in virtue of its general authority. The grant to Congress was not of anything different in nature from what the states possessed. It was a grant of the same thing; no more; only to be exercised in a different sphere. As to the other thought,—the one plainly expressed by the judge in the above quotation, to wit, that the commerce clause of the Constitution controlled the other clauses of that instrument,—we trust we will not be taken to mean disrespect, or to impugn motives, when we say it is a thought which can be entertained only by one fatally bent on finding pretexts to justify his own mischievous rulings. The plain import of the language used is that the commerce clause is stronger than the other clauses, stronger than the guaranties of liberty, property, and process of law contained in the 14th Amendment. In other words, the claim is that the commerce clause gives Congress the authority to override and set at naught the guaranties of popular right contained in the Constitution whenever and wherever necessary to effectuate the power to regulate interstate and international trade. This is the very madness of unreason. The proposition needs but to be stated in the ultimate terms to which we have deduced it,—and they are the terms to which of necessity it must be finally reduced,—to show its utter unsoundness. The second distinction which counsel for appellant seek to draw between the Federal cases cited and this case, to wit, the difference between legislation restrictive of noncompetitive agreements and restrictive of monopolies, has no more basis upon which to rest than has the first one. The power to regulate is the same in both cases, and may be exercised to the same extent. However, the statute enforced in the Freight Association Cases and the Addyston Pipe & Steel Company Case was a statute in prohibition of contracts restrictive of competitive trade as well as in prohibition of monopolies. That statute (26 Stat. at L. 209, chap. 647, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3200) differs in verbal phraseology, but not in essential particular or effect, from ours. It reads:

"Sec. 1. Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several states, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal," etc.

"Sec. 2. Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons to monopolize, any part of the trade or commerce among the several states, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor," etc.

The Federal-court decisions cited were more particularly in assertion of the authority of Congress to enact measures in suppression of anti-competitive trade combinations than they were in assertion of its right to prohibit trade monopolies. In the case of United States v. Joint Traffic Asso. one of 67 L. R. A.

the headnotes reads: "Congress, with regard to interstate commerce, and in the course of regulating it in the case of railroad corporations, has the power to say that no contract or combination shall be legal which shall restrain trade and commerce by shutting out the operation of the general law of competition." If counsel mean to say that agreements restrictive of trade competition may not be prohibited until they eventuate in monopolies, we reply, without pausing to reason the contrary of the proposition, that the rationale of all the cases, and particularly those of the Federal courts commented on above, is opposed to the claim; and in United States v. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. 46 L. R. A. 122, 29 C. C. A. 141, 54 U. S. App. 723, 85 Fed. 271, it was expressly ruled that, "in order to vitiate a contract or combination, it is not essential that its result should be a complete monopoly. It is sufficient if it really tends to that end, and to deprive the public of the advantages which flow from free competition." That ruling was on a substantive issue involved in the case, and as made is a quotation from the opinion arguendo of Chief Justice Fuller in United States v. E. C. Knight Co. 158 U. S. 1, 39 L. ed. 325, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 249. If counsel mean to say that acts prohibitive of anti-competitive combinations must express on their face a limitation to combinations constituting or tending to monopoly, a sufficient reply is that the anti-trust act of Congress, above partially quoted, and which has been repeatedly upheld as a valid exercise of legislative authority, does not express any such limitation. Whether an agreement restrictive of trade combinations tends to monopoly is probably a question determinable by the courts as well as by the legislature, but, primarily at least, it is a question in economic science, addressed to the business judgment and experience of the members of the law-making body. However, if the legislature should condemn a particular engagement between men on the score of its tendency to monopoly which the general sense of mankind perceived could not have that effect, we doubt not the courts would be competent to so declare, and, so declaring, disapprove the act on the constitutional ground of its interference with the freedom of the citizen; but beyond such instances we apprehend the judicial tribunals are not authorized to go. The courts may determine without previous legislative declaration that a particular agreement is contrary to public policy, and therefore nonenforceable; but they cannot adjudge, in opposition to a legislative declaration that a general class of agreements is opposed to the rules of public policy, that such is not the case.

One other topic included in the general subject remains to be discussed. It will be done briefly. It will be observed by an examination of the cases,—both those on the subject of anti-competitive trade agreements and those on the subject of monopolies,—that most of them relate to the acts or agreements of vendors (sellers on the market), and not to the acts or agreements of vendees (buyers on the market). This has not been because different principles of law apply to the two classes of persons in their trade relations and dealings, but because the oldest and favorite form of forestalling and engrossing markets has been to monopolize the supply of trade products, and hold them for extortionate prices. The rules of public policy forbid the making of agreements not to buy on the market as well as agreements not to sell. This is well illustrated by two cases. In Craft v. McConoughy, 79 Ill. 346, 22 Am. Rep. 171, it appeared that the grain dealers of a town had made a compact not to compete with one another in the purchase of grain, but collectively to control the market at fixed prices. One of them sued in execution of the agreement, but the court denied relief on the ground that it was a contract in restraint of trade, and contrary to public policy. In Chapin v. Brown Bros. 83 Iowa, 156, 12 L. R. A. 428, 32 Am. St. Rep. 297, 48 N. W. 1074, it appeared that the grocery men of a town, in order to throw the trade in butter entirely in the hands of one of their number, entered into an agreement with one another not to buy butter or take it in exchange for other goods. Suit was brought on the agreement against one of the grocery men to enjoin him from dealing in butter. The court refused the injunction, because the contract entered into was restrictive of trade competition, and tended to monopoly, and was, therefore, opposed to public policy. See also Hilton v. Eckersley, 6 El. & Bl. 47. Now, the agreement entered into by appellant and others named in the information in this case did not differ in any essential particular from the agreements condemned in the cases above cited. In this case it was shown that the parties named embraced all of the grain buyers at the town of Bison; that they agreed among themselves to divide the grain trade at that place; that, although the agreement was that anyone was at liberty to buy as much grain as he chose, and to pay for it such price as he chose, nevertheless, if he purchased more than his allotted share, he should pay to the others three cents per bushel for the excess bought; that this agreement was entered into for the express purpose of preventing competition among the buyers, and that it had that effect; that it was entered into for the purpose of pooling the profits of the grain trade and the formation of a grain trust among the buyers, and that it had those effects. Such an agreement would have been void and non-enforceable at common law. It would have been void and nonenforceable because restrictive of trade competition, and because of its tendency to monopoly, and for these reasons it would have been declared opposed to the rules of public policy. It is certainly competent for the legislature to make penal the doing of that which the courts themselves recognize as hurtful to the body politic, and for that reason refuse to countenance. The legislature of 1897 did that; nor did it do anything more. It is no argument to launch the platitudes of personal liberty, and freedom of contract, and due process of law, etc., against this statute. What specific prohibition does it contain that the common law has not contained for ages past? Absolutely none.

We come now to a final question. The first statute for the suppression of unlawful trade combinations enacted in this state was chapter 175 of the Laws of 1887 (Gen. Stat. 1901, §§ 2427-2429). That statute was directed against grain dealers alone. Section 1 reads as follows: "That it shall be unlawful for any grain dealer, or grain dealers, partnership, company, corporation, or association of grain dealers, or any other person, or persons, partnership, company, corporation, or association, to enter into any agreement, contract, or combination with any other grain dealer, or grain dealers, partnership, company, corporation, or association of grain dealers, or any other person or persons, partnership, company, corporation, or association, for the pooling of prices of different and competing dealers and buyers, or to divide between them the aggregate or net proceeds of the earnings of such dealers and buyers, or any portion thereof, or for fixing the price which any grain dealer, or grain dealers, partnerships, company, corporation, or association of grain dealers, or any other person, or persons, partnership, company, corporation, or association, shall pay for grain, hogs, cattle, or stock of any kind or nature whatever; and in case of any agreement, contract, or combination for such pooling of prices of different and competing dealers and buyers, or to divide between them the aggregate or net proceeds of the earnings of such dealers and buyers, or any portion thereof, or for fixing the price which any grain dealer, or grain dealers, partnership, company, corporation, or association of grain dealers, or any other person, or persons, partnership, company, corporation, or association, shall pay for grain, hogs, cattle, or stock of any kind or nature whatever, each day of its continuance shall be deemed a separate offense." The above-quoted section was followed by another prescribing a penalty. The court, in the instructions to the jury in this case, quoted the act of 1887, and likewise quoted the one of 1897, above discussed. The jury were not told which of the acts was applicable to defendant's case. The claim is made that the act of 1887 was repealed by the later one, and hence that the defendant may have been convicted under a statute which had ceased of existence. It will be observed that the act of 1897 covers an entire field of which the one of 1887 covered only a part, but the one of 1897 covers, though in general terms, the specific matter embraced in the earlier act. The character of punishment and maximum penalty is the same in the case of both acts, and the appellant's sentence of conviction was within the terms of either one. Assuming that the act of 1887 was repealed by implication by that of 1897, what, if any, effect to produce the appellant's conviction is to be attributed to the court's reference to the earlier enactment. We think none whatever. The statute of 1887 did not define the offense charged in any other terms than does the later act; nor did it define it in any other terms than the court was required to define it, and did define it, in the charge to the jury. The facts to be proved under the statute of 1887 were no different from the facts which, by the act of 1897, were required to be proved against the defendant, and it is impossible to see in what way he could have been prejudiced by the mistake of the court, if mistake it was. However, it is said that, if the statute of 1887 was not repealed by that of 1897, but is still to be classed among the existing enactments, it is unconstitutional, because it is class legislation. It is said that it singles out grain dealers from among all the different classes of persons engaged in domestic commerce, and subjects them to penalties for doing that which the other classes are allowed to do without let or hindrance. Grant it (which, however, we do not, except hypothetically, and for reply to the proposition). An unconstitutional statute is no different from a repealed statute. Like a statute repealed, it is no statute at all. Hence, if the appellant could not be harmed by the court's quotation of a repealed statute, he could not be harmed by the quotation of an unconstitutional statute. The general rule in criminal as in civil cases is that errors harmless in their nature—nominal errors, but not errors in fact—shall not be ground of reversal. It is expressed in Crim. Code, § 293 (Gen. Stat. 1901, § 5731): "On an appeal the court must give judgment without regard to technical errors or defects, or to exceptions 67 L. R. A.

which do not prejudice the substantial rights of the parties." The above provision of the Code has been often interposed against technical and unsubstantial claims of error in criminal cases, and especially in cases where immaterial, but unprejudicial, evidence has been admitted, and mistaken, but harmless, instructions have been given. State v. Hilton, 35 Kan. 338-349, 11 Pac. 164; State v. Baldwin, 36 Kan. 1-14, 12 Pac. 318.

Some minor claims of error are made. They do not involve anything fundamental, but relate to unimportant matters of practice. However, we have examined them, and perceive that none of them is well founded. The judgment of the court below is affirmed.

Johnston, Smith, Cunningham, Greene, and Ellis, JJ., concur.

Pollock, J., dissenting:

Believing, as I do, that no recent decision of this court is comparable in its consequences to the public at large, especially the business and commercial world, with that just announced in this case; convinced beyond all reasonable doubt that legislation so drastic in terms, tending in such large measure to make criminal the otherwise innocent, every-day affairs of life, should not be upheld by this court; and fully satisfied beyond all escape from the conviction that the act itself in express terms involves more of personal liberty and the rights of private property, in turpitude, and crime than has any prior act ever upheld by this court; and also convinced that the process of reasoning employed in the opinion for the purpose of upholding the act is inherently and radically false in principle, and dangerous in conclusion,—I refuse to concur therein, and respectfully state my reasons therefor.

A careful reading of the opinion will disclose the fact that the validity of the act in question is first attempted to be maintained by tacitly admitting the language of the act to be in violation of the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution, but upholding its validity by exclusion from its condemnation those cases which the court may deem to have been in excess of the legislative power, upon the theory that the legislature did not intend to include such cases as would impair the validity of the act; and by denying appellant the right to question the validity of the act under which he has been tried, convicted, and sentenced, upon the ground that, under the facts charged against him, he does not belong in the category of cases which the court should exclude by construction, and therefore he cannot be heard to complain of his punishment, or challenge the validity of the act under which he is punished. That this is a fair construction of the language employed, and the true ground upon which the opinion is based, will appear from the first and second points of the syllabus and the corresponding portions of the opinion, and from the further fact that the law as stated in the syllabus and the argument employed in the opinion can have no place in this case if it is not admitted that the act in certain respects is unconstitutional and void. If it is within the province of the courts to thus separate the valid from the void provisions of a statute by construction, and give force to the valid, so ascertained, and reject the void, it is difficult to comprehend why any legislative act should be declared void in toto. What the legislature creates void, the courts, the final arbiters of the power of the legislature to create, can reconstruct, separate, and make good. It is a settled rule that courts shall resolve all doubts in favor of the constitutionality of the statute challenged, and in all cases where possible, consistently with the rules of law, uphold the validity of the statute. Hence, if the doctrine announced in this case is sound, in no case should an entire act be overthrown by the courts. On the contrary, it would become the duty of the court to reject those provisions beyond the constitutional power of the legislature to include in an act as not intended by the legislature to be included, because beyond its power to do so, and enforce the remainder. Is this doctrine sound in principle, and fortified by authority? It is the settled rule of interpretation of statutes that the words employed by the lawmaking power are to be first consulted. When their meaning is clear, plain, and unambiguous, there is no room left for interpretation. Mr. Black, in his work on Interpretation of Laws (§ 43), says: "But it must be observed that the presumption of constitutionality, like all the other presumptions of this class, is available only in case of doubt or ambiguity. The courts cannot revise or correct an act of the legislature in order to make it conform to the Constitution. If it is plainly and palpably invalid, it is their duty to so declare it. Where the language is not ambiguous, and the meaning is clear and obvious, an unconstitutional consequence cannot be avoided by forcing upon the language of the act a meaning which, upon a fair test, is repugnant to its terms." The 1st section of the act in question creates and defines the offense. The parts are interdependent and inseparable, constituting one general scheme. All acts therein prohibited are made alike criminal. There is no attempt at classification. All acts inhibited are alike criminal; all persons violating the act alike criminals. In such case the entire section must stand or fall together. Separation is impossible. Either all is good, or all bad. Mr. Justice Field, in Norton v. Shelby County, 118 U. S. 425, 30 L. ed. 178, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1121, says: "An unconstitutional act is not a law; it confers no rights; it imposes no duties; it affords no protection; it creates no office; it is, in legal contemplation, as inoperative as though it had never been passed." I have no desire to dispute the familiar and well-recognized rule of law, when part of a statute is constitutional and part is unconstitutional, that which is constitutional will, if capable of separation and independent enforcement, be separated and enforced, and that which is unconstitutional be rejected. This is a principle so well recognized and of such every-day application in courts of justice that a citation of authorities in its support is unnecessary and ill-appropriate. I dispute neither the existence nor the soundness of this rule in cases where applicable. What I do deny is its application to this case, and the manner in which it is applied to the case. The writer of the opinion, after stating the rule and its exception, states the extension of the rule applied in this case as follows: "However, the rule is not limited to such instances. It applies as well to exclude from the operation of the statute subjects and classes of things lying without the legislative intent, although comprehended within the general terms of the act, as it does to exclude parts of the verbal phraseology," and makes application of the extension of the rule in the following manner: "He cannot be heard to object to the statute merely because it operates oppressively upon others. The hurt must be to himself. The case, under appellant's contention as to this point, is not a case of favoritism in the law. It is not a case of exclusion of classes who ought to have been included, the leaving out of which constitutes a denial of the equal protection of the law; but it is the opposite of that. It is a case of the inclusion of those who ought to have been excluded. Hence, unless appellant can show that he himself has been wrongly included in the terms of the law, he can have no just ground of complaint. This is fundamental and decisively settled." This is not the first instance in which it has been attempted to uphold the validity of an enactment beyond the constitutional power by limiting the scope of the act by construction, and thus eliminating the provisions in conflict with the organic law. But limitation by construction is not separation. It is merely an attempt on the part of the court to both make and enforce laws without the aid of the legislative branch of the government. Mr. Justice Waite, in United States v. Reese, 92 U. S. 214, 23 L. ed. 563, said of this doctrine: "There is no attempt in the sections now under consideration to provide specifically for such an offense. If the case is provided for at all, it is because it comes under the general prohibition against any wrongful act or unlawful obstruction in this particular. We are therefore directly called upon to decide whether a penal statute enacted by Congress, with its limited powers, which is in general language broad enough to cover wrongful acts without as well as within the constitutional jurisdiction, can be limited by judicial construction so as to make it operate only on that which Congress may rightfully prohibit and punish. For this purpose we must take these sections of the statute as they are. We are not able to reject a part which is unconstitutional, and retain the remainder, because it is not possible to separate that which is unconstitutional, if there be any such, from that which is not. The proposed effect is not to be attained by striking out or disregarding words that are in the section, but by inserting those that are not now there. Each of the sections must stand as a whole, or fall together. The language is plain. There is no room for construction, unless it be as to the effect of the Constitution. The question, then, to be determined, is whether we can introduce words of limitation into a penal statute, so as to make it specific, when, as expressed, it is general only. It would certainly be dangerous if the legislature could set a net large enough to catch all possible offenders, and leave it to the courts to step inside and say who could be rightfully detained, and who should be set at large. This would, to some extent, substitute the judicial for the legislative department of the government. The courts enforce the legislative will when ascertained, if within the constitutional grant of power. Within its legitimate sphere Congress is supreme, and beyond the control of the courts; but if it steps outside of its constitutional limitations, and attempts that which is beyond its reach, the courts are authorized to, and when called upon in due course of legal proceedings must, annul its encroachments upon the reserve power of the states and the people. To limit this statute in the manner now asked for would be to make a new law, not to enforce an old one. This is no part of our duty." Mr. Justice Matthews, in delivering the opinion in Poindexter v. Greenhow, 114 U. S. 270, 29 L. ed. 185, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 903, 962, says: "It is undoubtedly true that there may be cases where one part of a statute may be enforced as constitutional and another be declared inoperative and void, because unconstitutional; but these are cases where the parts are so distinctly separable that each can stand alone, and where the court is able to see and to declare that the intention of the legislature was that the part pronounced valid should be enforceable, even though the other part should fail. To hold otherwise would be to substitute for the law intended by the legislature one they may never have been willing by itself to enact. An illustration of this principle is found in the Trade-Mark Cases, 100 U. S. 82, 25 L. ed. 550, where an act of Congress, which, it was claimed, would have been valid as a regulation of commerce with foreign nations and among the states, was held to be void altogether, because it embraced all commerce, including that between the citizens of the same state, which was not within the jurisdiction of Congress, and its language could not be restrained to that which was subject to the control of Congress. 'If we should,' said the court in that case (p. 99, L. ed. p. 554), 'in the case before us, undertake to make, by judicial construction, a law which Congress did not make, it is quite probable we should do what, if the matter were now before that body, it would be unwilling to do.'" In the case of Baldwin v. Franks, 120 U. S. 678, 32 L. ed. 766, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 656, 763, Mr. Chief Justice Waite, in delivering the opinion, said: "It is now said, however, that in that case the conspiracy charged was by persons in a state against a citizen of the United States and of the state to deprive him of the protection he was entitled to under the laws of that state, no special rights or privileges arising under the Constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States being involved; and it is argued that, although the section be invalid so far as such an offense is concerned, it is good for the punishment of those who conspire to deprive aliens of the rights guaranteed to them in a state by the treaties of the United States. In support of this argument, reliance is had on the well-settled rule that a statute may be in part constitutional and in part unconstitutional, and that under some circumstances the part which is constitutional will be enforced, and only that which is unconstitutional rejected. To give effect to this rule, however, the parts—that which is constitutional and that which is unconstitutional—must be capable of separation, so that each may be read by itself. This statute, considered as a statute punishing conspiracies in a state, is not of that character, for in that connection it has no parts within the meaning of the rule. Whether it is separable, so that it can be enforced in a territory, though not in a state, is quite another question, and one we are not now called on to decide. It provides in general terms for the punishment of all who conspire for the purpose of depriving any person, or any class of persons, of the equal protection of the laws, or of equal privileges or immunities under the laws. A single provision, which makes up the whole section, embraces those who conspire against citizens as well as those who conspire against aliens,—those who conspire to deprive one of his rights under the laws of a state, and those who conspire to deprive him of his rights under the Constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States. The limitation which is sought must be made, if at all, by construction, not by separation. This, it has often been decided, is not enough." See also Sutherland, Stat. Constr. § 173; Trade-Mark Cases, 100 U. S. 82, 25 L. ed. 550; United States v. Harris, 106 U. S. 629, 27 L. ed. 290, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 601; Wynehamer v. People, 13 N. Y. 378; Mesmeier v. State, 11 Ind. 482. Nor are the cases cited and relied upon by the writer of the opinion to support the doctrine announced in conflict with the views here expressed. The cases of Albany County v. Stanley, 105 U. S. 305, 26 L. ed. 1044, and Com. v. Gagne, 153 Mass. 205, 10 L. R. A. 442, 26 N. E. 449, arose upon a conflict between legislative acts, state and Federal, no question of conflict between a legislative act and the organic law being involved. And in none of the cases cited did the decision turn upon the power of the court to separate and eliminate from a legislative act by construction those cases provided for by the terms of the act which would render it in conflict with the organic law.

It certainly needs no argument to satisfy the mind, no citation of authorities to support the contention, that, if the act in question in express terms strikes down personal rights guaranteed to all by the Federal Constitution, in so doing the act is completely and utterly void, and that appellant, tried, convicted, and punished under this void act, can assert its invalidity, although it may appear from the charge contained in the information and the evidence at the trial that appellant might be convicted under a proper law. Mr. Justice Woods, delivering the opinion of the court in United States v. Harris, 106 U. S. 629, 27 L. ed. 290, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 601, commenting upon and applying the decision in United States v. Reese, 92 U. S. 214, 23 L. ed. 563, says: "The indictment in the case charged two inspectors of a municipal election in the state of Kentucky with refusing to receive and count at such election the vote of William Garner, a citizen of the United States of African descent. It was contended by the defendants that it was not within the constitutional power of Congress to pass the section upon which the indictment was based. The attempt was made by the counsel for the United States to sustain the law as warranted by the 15th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States. But this court held it not to be appropriate legislation under that amendment. The ground of the decision was that the sections referred to were broad enough not only to punish those who hindered and delayed the enfranchised colored citizen from voting on account of his race, color, or previous condition of servitude, but also those who hindered or delayed the free white citizen. The court, speaking by the chief justice, said: 'It would certainly be dangerous if the legislature could set a net large enough to catch all possible offenders, and leave it to the courts to step inside and say who could be rightfully detained and who should be set at large. This would, to some extent, substitute the judicial for the legislative department of the government. The courts enforce the legislative will, when ascertained, if within the constitutional grant of power. But if Congress steps outside of its constitutional limitation, and attempts that which is beyond its reach, the courts are authorized to, and, when called upon, must, annul its encroachment upon the reserve rights of the states and the people.'" This precise question was considered also in Wynehamer v. People, 13 N. Y. 378, in which Johnson, J., says: "The prohibitions of the 1st section, taken together,—and they form but a single scheme, and are to be enforced by the same penalties,—cannot, therefore, in my judgment, be upheld,—at least in respect to property which had been acquired while there was no prohibition against the acquisition of such property. The future acquisition the legislature might, in my opinion, control; and I am not disposed to deny that they could have subjected such future acquisitions to the prohibitions this act imposes. But in this act they have made no discrimination. The provisions extend, and were clearly meant to extend, to all liquors. It is no part of the proof to make out the offense according to the statute to show that the liquors were acquired after the prohibitions became operative, nor is the fact that they were previously acquired any defense under the statute. The only way of defending against it on the ground in question is by asking to have it declared void. Laws in relation to civil rights are sometimes held to be unconstitutional in so far as they affect the rights of certain persons, and valid in respect to others. This is done mainly upon the ground that the courts will not construe them to relate to such cases as the legislature had not power to act upon. To statutes creating criminal offenses such a rule of construction ought not to be applied, and I cannot find any trace of its ever having been applied. It is of the highest importance to the administration of criminal justice that acts creating crime should be certain in their terms and plain in their application; and it would be in no small degree unseemly that courts should be called upon, in administering the criminal law, to adjudge an act creating offenses at one time valid and at another time void. It must, I think, stand as it has been enacted, or not stand at all."

The statute under consideration is criminal. The acts condemned and punished thereby were neither criminal nor unlawful at common law. The rule of strict construction applies in this case with all its force. The cases cited in the opinion in support of the doctrine announced are civil cases. An examination will show their inapplicability in this case. That the rule of separation of valid from void, rejecting the void and upholding the good by construction, employed in this case, is wrong in principle, I have no doubt. That the appellant may be heard to question the power of the legislature to enact the law under which he stands convicted, I do not doubt. To hold that he may is sound in reason, and fully settled by the authorities above cited. But it is contended by the writer of the opinion that there is a distinction between Federal and state legislation; that Congress possesses only such legislative power as is expressly granted by the Federal Constitution; whereas the legislature of the state possesses all legislative power not expressly withheld by the Constitution of the state. Therefore the reasoning employed in the above cases construing Federal statutes as opposed to the Federal Constitution is inapplicable to the case at bar; and the case of Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Texas, 177 U. S. 28-42, 44 L. ed. 657-663, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 518, is relied upon to support the contention made. Such reasoning is more to be admired for its ingenuity than to be commended for its logic. While the rule governing the power of national and state legislatures to legislate is correctly stated, yet it does not follow that a different rule of construction is to be employed in arriving at a conclusion as to the validity of an act challenged as obnoxious to the Federal Constitution. That Constitution is the supreme law of the land, equally binding upon this court and the Federal Supreme Court. The 14th Amendment does not touch upon Federal legislation, but is an express limitation upon legislation by a state. If the act in question is violative of its prohibitive provisions, it is void, and that is an end of it. The question before us, which should be squarely met, is, Does the act in question contravene the Federal Constitution? and not, How may this court attempt to hew round it by the process of specious reasoning employed? The case cited is not in point, and does not touch upon the question at issue here. The question involved in Waters-Pierce Oil Co. Case, and the only question, was the power of the state of Texas to impose conditions upon a foreign corporation desiring to transact business in that state. The question sought to be raised by counsel for plaintiff in error in that case is the one raised in the case at bar. The authorities relied upon here are the authorities cited there. It was ruled in that case, not that the contention here made is untenable, or the authorities cited are unsound, or inapplicable to the question, but that the question here at issue was not involved in that case. It is also worthy of remark here that the able counsel representing the state neither in their voluminous briefs nor at the oral argument made mention of the doctrine applied by the court; nor have counsel for appellant been heard upon this proposition.

Is the act of 1897 within the legislative power of the state, constitutional, and valid? Whatever may be the extent of power possessed by the state over quasi public corporations engaged in the performance of a public service, or whatever the power of Congress to control and regulate such servants of the public under the interstate commerce clause of the Federal Constitution, is not the question in controversy. The power of the state to prevent the formation of monopolies and combinations tending to monopoly, and exercising control over them to prevent public oppression, is not the subject under consideration. The power of the state to prohibit such combinations as may, to an unreasonable extent, restrain trade or commerce, or may unreasonably restrict competition in trade, commerce, manufacturing, or business, is not the question at issue. By the act in question the legislature has attempted to prohibit, by combinations of capital, skill, or acts, all restraint upon trade and commerce, and all restrictions upon trade, commerce, manufacturing, or transportation, whether such restriction is in its nature and extent such as may be reasonable and necessary to the self-preservation and protection of the parties engaged from financial ruin, or oppressive to the public. Unbridled competition, which is, in effect, a license to the strong to destroy and obliterate the weak, is commanded. With the public policy of this act, whether wise or unwise, we have no concern.

With the power of the legislature to enact this law and the duty of the courts to command its enforcement or deny its validity as opposed to the fundamental law of the land, we are concerned. The right of the legislature, in the exercise of what is called the police power of the state, to restrain and prohibit monopolies and combinations tending to monopoly, is freely granted. The power of the legislature to prohibit such restrictions upon trade and commerce as are in their nature unreasonable, and to condemn such restraints upon competition in trade and commerce as are unreasonable, oppressive, and injurious to the public, is also admitted. But that in a free government the right of two or more persons, firms, or corporations transacting commercial or other business, drawn into unreasonable and destructive competition, threatening financial ruin, to agree one with the other to restore and maintain the price of their goods at or above cost, having in view the laudable and reasonable purpose of averting financial self-destruction, every right-minded man must concede. A denial of such right is a denial of the right of self-defense; is oppression; is tyranny. Yet that such an agreement is clearly within the prohibition of the act in question is not open to dispute. The right of two or any number of persons engaged in agriculture to agree that they will combine and place their agricultural products in elevators and storehouses, and that they will not sell the same until a certain price is obtained, which price will net them a profit for their labor, is founded upon such natural justice as to be beyond the reach of legislative power to prohibit. Yet such right is by the act denied. Many of the states have exercised the power of fixing for those engaged in transportation such maximum and minimum rates of carriage as shall not be exceeded under penalty of the law. Yet any combination of those engaged in transportation to charge only the minimum rate so fixed is in terms prohibited by this act. Other examples may be given ad libitum. Upon an examination of the act others will occur to the mind ad infinitum. All combinations, justifiable or unjustifiable, reasonable or unreasonable, necessary or unnecessary, beneficial or oppressive, to the public, are alike prohibited and made criminal. Under this act the fact that the prohibited agreement was made for justifiable ends, or for self-preservation, is no defense. May such an act exist in a free country? Will such an act be enforced in a free government? Any student at all familiar with history will recall the baneful and disastrous effect of kindred legislation in England, Italy, and other European countries, where the legislative power operates untrammelled by a written constitution. It is useless in the consideration of this question to attempt a citation or review of the many authorities in this country making application of the provision found in the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution to such legislation. The English authorities have no application, because announced under no written constitution. The source of power relied upon to support this act and all others of kindred character is the police power of the state; but this power has, and of necessity must have, its limitations. That the police power, or any power of the state, authorizes the act in question, I deny. I deny it because it is an unwarranted abridgment of personal liberty; because it takes away private property without due process of law; because it denies equal protection under the law, without justifiable ends. A legislature may become as much a tyrant as a czar or a king. "By the term 'liberty,' as used in the provision, something more is meant than mere freedom from physical restraint or the bounds of a prison. It means freedom to go where one may choose, and to act in such manner, not inconsistent with the equal rights of others, as his judgment may dictate for the promotion of his happiness; that is, to pursue such callings and avocations as may be most suitable to develop his capacities, and give to them their highest enjoyment." Mr. Justice Field in Granger Cases (Munn v. Illinois) 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. ed. 77. The Federal Constitution (article 6) declares: "This Constitution, and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof, and all treaties made, or which shall be made, under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land; and the judges in every state shall be bound thereby, anything in the Constitution or laws of any state to the contrary notwithstanding." The 14th Amendment to the Constitution is: "No state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." Guizot, in his Lectures on Government, says: "Liberties are nothing until they have become rights, positive rights, formally recognized and consecrated; rights, even when recognized, are nothing so long as they are not intrenched within guaranties; and, lastly, guaranties are nothing, so long as they are not maintained by forces independent of them in the limit of their rights. Surround rights by guaranties; intrust the keeping of those rights to forces independent of them; such are the necessary steps in the progress towards a free government." Mr. Justice Field, in Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 36, 21 L. ed. 394, quoting from Live Stock D. & B. Asso. v. Crescent City L. S. L. & S. H. Co. 1 Abb. (U. S.) 398, Fed. Cas. No. 8,408, says: "It is one of the privileges of every American citizen to adopt and follow such lawful industrial pursuit, not injurious to the community, as he may see fit, without unreasonable regulation or molestation." And again: "There is no more sacred right of citizenship than the right to pursue unmolested a lawful employment in a lawful manner. It is nothing more nor less than the sacred right of labor." Mr. Eddy, in his work on Combinations (§ 681), says: "Any extension of the police power beyond the preserving of peace and order in the community, and the protection of life, health, and morals of the individual, is a departure so radical as to be absolutely destructive of all limitations upon the exercise of the power. If the state can go beyond considerations affecting the peace and order of the community and the life, health, or morals of the individual, and intervene for reasons of a purely social or economic nature, then there are no limitations whatsoever upon the power of legislatures to intervene, and in their discretion dictate terms upon which various contracts shall be made and different occupations pursued." In Frerer v. People, 141 Ill. 171, 16 L. R. A. 492, 31 N. E. 395, it is said: "Other instances of statutory regulations of private rights are in lien laws in favor of homesteaders, mechanics, etc.; limitation laws; the statute of frauds, and other statutes relating to evidence; laws in regard to pleadings; exemption laws, and insolvent laws. But these all relate, not to the power to contract in regard to matters of general right, but to the remedy for the enforcing of contracts, as to which the legislature may make such regulations as the public welfare seems to demand, so long as under pretense of regulating the remedy it does not impair the right itself." In Braceville Coal Co. v. People, 147 Ill. 66, 22 L. R. A. 340, 37 Am. St. Rep. 206, 35 N. E. 62, it is held: "Constitutional liberty means not only freedom of the citizen from servitude and restraint, but includes the right of every man to be free in the use of his powers and faculties, and to adopt and pursue such avocation or calling as he may choose, subject only to the restraints necessary to secure the common welfare." In the opinion it is said: "The fundamental principle upon which liberty is based in free and enlightened government is equality under the law of the land. It has accordingly been everywhere held that 'liberty,' as that term is used in the Constitution, means, not only freedom of the citizen from servitude and restraint, but is deemed to embrace the right of every man to be free in the use of his powers and faculties, and to adopt and pursue such avocation or calling as he may choose, subject only to the restraints necessary to secure the common welfare. Frerer v. People, 141 Ill. 171, 16 L. R. A. 492, 31 N. E. 395; Com. v. Perry, 155 Mass. 117, 14 L. R. A. 325, 31 Am. St. Rep. 533, 28 N. E. 1126; People v. Gillson, 109 N. Y. 389, 4 Am. St. Rep. 465, 17 N. E. 343; Live Stock D. & B. Asso. v. Crescent City L. S. L. & S. H. Co. 1 Abb. (U. S.) 398, Fed. Cas. No. 8,408; Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 36, 21 L. ed. 394; Godcharles v. Wigeman, 113 Pa. 431, 6 Atl. 354; State v. Goodwill, 33 W. Va. 179, 6 L. R. A. 621, 25 Am. St. Rep. 863, 10 S. E. 285. Property, in its broader sense, is not the physical thing which may be the subject of ownership, but is the right of dominion, possession, and power of disposition which may be acquired over it; and the right of property preserved by the Constitution is the right, not only to possess and enjoy it, but also to acquire it in a lawful mode, or by following any lawful industrial pursuit, which the citizen in the exercise of the liberty guaranteed, may choose to adopt." In Ritchie v. People, 155 Ill. 98, 29 L. R. A. 79, 46 Am. St. Rep. 315, 40 N. E. 454, it is held: "Statutes passed in pursuance of the police power must have some relation to the end sought to be accomplished. Where the ostensible object is to secure the public comfort, welfare and safety, the statute must appear to be adapted to that end. It cannot invade the rights of persons and property under the guise of a mere police regulation when such is not the effect." In the opinion it is said: "But it is claimed on behalf of defendant in error that this section can be sustained as an exercise of the police power of the state. The police power of the state is that power which enables it to promote the health, comfort, safety, and welfare of society. It is very broad and far-reaching, but it is not without its limitations. Legislative acts passed in pursuance of it must not be in conflict with the Constitution, and must have some relation to the end sought to be accomplished; that is to say, to the comfort, welfare, or safety of society. Where the ostensible object of an enactment is to secure the public comfort, welfare, or safety, it must appear to be adapted to that end. It cannot invade the rights of person and property under the guise of a mere police regulation, when it is not such in fact; and where such an act takes away the property of a citizen, or interferes with his personal liberty, it is the province of the courts to determine whether it is really an appropriate measure for the promotion of the comfort, safety, and welfare of society. Lake View v. Rose Hill Cemetery Co. 70 Ill. 191, 22 Am. Rep. 71; Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 98, 50 Am. Rep. 636; People v. Gillson, 109 N. Y. 389, 4 Am. St. Rep. 465, 17 N. E. 343." Mr. Justice Harlan, in declaring the anti-trust act of the state of Illinois unconstitutional and void in the recent case of Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co. 184 U. S. 540, 46 L. ed. 679, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 431, said: "The question of constitutional law to which we have referred cannot be disposed of by saying that the statute in question may be referred to what are called the 'police powers' of the state, which, as often stated by this court, were not included in the grants of power to the general government, and therefore were reserved to the states when the Constitution was ordained. But, as the Constitution of the United States is the supreme law of the land, anything in the Constitution or statutes of the states to the contrary notwithstanding, a statute of a state, even when avowedly enacted in the exercise of its police powers, must yield to the law. No right granted or secured by the Constitution of the United States can be impaired or destroyed by a state enactment, whatever may be the source from which the power to pass such enactment may have been derived. 'The nullity of any act inconsistent with the Constitution is produced by the declaration that the Constitution is the supreme law.' The state has undoubtedly the power by appropriate legislation to protect the public morals, the public health, and the public safety; but if, by their necessary operation, its regulations looking to either of those ends amount to a denial to persons within its jurisdiction of the equal protection of the laws, they must be deemed unconstitutional and void. Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 1, 210, 6 L. ed. 23, 73; Sinnot v. Davenport, 22 How. 227, 16 L. ed. 243; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Haber, 169 U. S. 613, 42 L. ed. 878, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 488." True, in that case the act under consideration was declared void because denying equal protection under the law; but, if the police power of the state of Illinois was insufficient to uphold the act because that act contravened the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution, how may it be contended the same source of power relied upon here will uphold this act, which deprives the citizen of his property without due process of law,—that is, arbitrarily denies to those engaged in certain branches of trade and business the right to contract with relation to that business and their private property: arbitrarily denies the right to so conduct their business as they may choose without injury to others; arbitrarily and unreasonably interferes 67 L. R. A.

with the liberty of private contracts not injurious to the public morals, public health, or public safety. As was said by McPherson, J., in Niagara F. Ins. Co. v. Cornell, 110 Fed. 816, in declaring the anti-trust act of Nebraska unconstitutional and void upon this precise ground: "If we cannot acquire property, then we have a government of socialism. And how can we acquire property, or enjoy the property we do have, without the right of contract? If this law is valid, two or more farmers cannot agree that they will not sell their wheat to a neighboring mill for less than so much per bushel. Two or more farmers cannot agree that the live-stock feeder shall not have their corn only at a certain price. Blacksmiths cannot agree that they will charge so much for shoeing horses. Nothing can be agreed to by the manufacturer, the farmer, gardner, the contractor, consumer, or laborer to prevent the reduction of price. Can it be possible that such legislation is valid? If it is valid, then what becomes of the provision, 'No man shall be deprived of equal protection of the law,' or of that other provision, 'No man shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law?' " As was said by Judge Catron in Wally v. Kennedy, 2 Yerg. 555, 24 Am. Dec. 511, and Vanzant v. Waddel, 2 Yerg. 270: "The rights of every individual must stand or fall by the same rule or law that governs every other member of the body politic or land under similar circumstances; and every partial or private law which directly proposes to destroy or affect individual rights, or does the same thing by affording remedies leading to similar consequences, is unconstitutional and void. Were it otherwise, odious individuals or corporate bodies would be governed by one law; the mass of the community, and those who made the law, by another; whereas a like general law, affecting the whole community equally, could not have been passed." "The idea of a people, through their representatives, making laws whereby are swept away the life, liberty, and property of one or a few citizens, by which neither the representatives nor their other constituents are willing to be bound, is too odious to be tolerated in any government where freedom has a name. Such abuses resulted in the adoption of the Magna Charta in England, . . . which is, and for centuries has been, the foundation of English liberty. Its infraction was a leading cause why we separated from that country, and its value as a fundamental rule for the protection of the citizen against legislative usurpation was the reason of its adoption as part of our Constitution."

The argument made that the colossal aggregations of capital and rapid formation of gigantic industrial trusts of recent years have created public alarm and widespread apprehension of danger, calling forth public clamor for enactments of the character in question by the legislature, and their enforcement by the courts, if true, is without merit here. There is no safety to the citizen where the convictions of lawmakers, and the settled principles of the law as enunciated by the courts as well, melt away before the hot breath of public clamor.

Again, from the information it cannot be determined upon what act of the legislature the prosecution in this case is based. At the trial the court not only gave the jury in his charge the anti-trust act of 1897 above discussed, but also in his instructions gave to the jury the unlawful trust and combination act (Laws 1887, chap. 175), found in chapter 145, Gen. Stat. 1897 (Gen. Stat. 1901, §§ 2427-2429), quoted at length in the opinion. By instruction No. 4 the jury are directed as follows: "Gentlemen of the jury, you are instructed that if you find from the evidence that the defendant, E. J. Smiley, did, on or about the 20th day of November, 1900, unlawfully enter into an agreement, contract, and combination, in the county of Rush and state of Kansas, with certain partnerships, companies, corporations of grain dealers and grain buyers in the town of Bison, in the said county and state; and you further find that the said parties were competitive grain buyers, dealers, and buyers, to pool and fix the price the said grain dealers and buyers should pay for grain at the said place, and to divide between them the net earnings of the said grain dealers and grain buyers, and to prevent competition in the purchase and sale of grain among the said dealers and buyers,—that would be a violation of chapter 145, and you should so find, and find the defendant guilty." That this act of 1887 is clearly unconstitutional and void because denying equal protection under the law is scarcely a debatable question. It singles out one class of persons engaged in domestic trade and commerce from the general class, and makes acts by them done criminal, which, if done by other members of the general class, remain innocent. That such legislation cannot be upheld is not only, in effect, conceded in the opinion, but is conclusively settled by authority. In Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co. 184 U. S. 540, 46 L. ed. 679, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 431, it is said: "We conclude this part of the discussion by saying that to declare that some of the class engaged in domestic trade or commerce shall be deemed criminals if they violate the regulations prescribed by the state for the purpose of protecting the public against illegal combinations formed to destroy competition and to control prices, and that others of the same class shall not be bound to regard those regulations, but may combine their capital, skill, or acts to destroy competition and to control prices for their special benefit, is so manifestly a denial of the equal protection of the laws that further or extended argument to establish that position would seem to be unnecessary." Re Grice, 79 Fed. 627; Niagara F. Ins. Co. v. Cornell, 110 Fed. 816. The validity of this act of 1887 is directly and pointedly challenged by the record and urged upon this court by counsel in their briefs and at the oral argument; yet this question is disposed of as wholly immaterial and harmless error. By what means this court ascertained what influence the charge of the court upon the act of 1887 had upon the minds of the jury is not shown. How it determined the jury would have convicted had this portion of the charge been omitted, is not clear. The defendant is engaged in the grain business. The act of 1887 is directed against grain dealers. The conspiracy charged in the information is one with grain dealers. The unlawful acts charged therein relate solely to the grain trade. All the evidence found in the record pertains to the grain business, and yet escape is made from the consideration of the validity of the act of 1887 because in the judgment of the court the defendant might have been tried and convicted under the act of 1897. Section 236 of the Criminal Code (Gen. Stat. 1901, § 5681) provides: "The judge must charge the jury in writing, and the charge shall be filed away among the papers of the cause. In charging the jury he must state to them all matters of law which are necessary for their information in giving their verdict." This court has held that the failure of a trial court, although not requested to do so, to fully instruct the jury upon the law governing the case under the above section, is material error. State v. Grubb, 55 Kan. 678. 41 Pac. 951. By a parity of reasoning, and upon general principles, it must be true that the action of a trial court upon a criminal prosecution instructing the jury to ascertain and determine the guilt of the defendant by a statute which is not the law, but is unconstitutional and void, is equally erroneous, and reversible error.

The conviction in this case should be set aside.

Petition for rehearing denied.

Affirmed by Supreme Court of United States February 20, 1905.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

PEOPLE of the State of Michigan

v.

Charles H. PRATT, Plff. in Err.

(183 Mich. 125.)

The judge who convened a grand jury which is investigating a crime cannot be permitted to give in evidence a confession made to him by a witness called before such jury, who is subsequently indicted and placed on trial, where the witness, being unable to obtain advice from a lawyer in whom he had confidence, went to the judge, and, upon stating his difficulty, was told by the judge that he could give him no advice, but that he should tell the truth, whereupon the witness made the confession; such evidence is excluded upon the grounds that it is in the nature of a confidential communication from client to counsel, and that it was received by the judge in his official capacity, as having charge of the grand jury and being required to determine what testimony the witnesses before it might be required to give.

(Grant, J., and Hooker, Ch. J., dissent.)

(May 12, 1903.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Ingham County to review a judgment convicting defendant of the unlawful use of money for the purpose of influencing the action of members of the legislature. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Alex. J. Groesbeck, for plaintiff in error:

Proof of the body of the crime, or, as it is termed, the corpus delicti, cannot be made

NOTE.—Admissibility in evidence of communications made to persons serving in a judicial capacity.

The question of privilege as applied to communications between an attorney and his client is treated generally in a note to Dierstein v. Schubkagel, 6 L. R. A. 481, where the authorities are collected. It is not proposed, therefore, to consider the general subject here, except to call attention to some constructions of the rule, which throw light upon the subject of this note. The principles enunciated in the following cases, as to which there is practically no conflict of authority, seem decisive of the main question.

The protection afforded communications made to attorneys from disclosure in court, it is said, is not based upon the ground that they are made confidentially. Barnes v. Harris, 7 Cush. 576, 54 Am. Dec. 734; People v. Hess, 8 App. Div. 143, 40 N. Y. Supp. 486. The principle of the rule, according to Chief Justice Shaw, is that, in view of the complexity of the laws by which the rights and duties of citizens are governed, and the importance that they be permitted to avail themselves of the superior skill and learning of those who are sanctioned by the law as its ministers and exponents, without publishing those facts which they have a right to keep secret, but which must be disclosed to a legal adviser, the law considers it good policy to encourage and sanction this confidence by requiring that on such facts the mouth of the attorney shall be forever sealed. Hatton v. Robinson, 14 Pick. 416, 422, 25 Am. Dec. 415.

And Lord Brougham said, in Greenough v. Gaskell, 1 Myl. & K. 103, that the rule is established "out of regard to the interests of justice, which cannot be upholden, and to the administration of justice, which cannot go on, without the aid of men skilled in jurisprudence, in the practice of the courts, and in those matters affecting rights and obligations, which form the subject of all judicial proceedings. If the privilege did not exist at all, everyone would be thrown upon his own legal resources."

Substantially the same view is presented in the following cases: Goddard v. Gardner, 28 Conn. 172; Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. 67 L. R. A.

Schaefer, 94 U. S. 457, 24 L. ed. 251; Verdell v. Gray's Harbor Commercial Co. 115 Cal. 517, 47 Pac. 364; Crisler v. Garland, 11 Smedes & M. 156, 49 Am. Dec. 49; McMannus v. State, 2 Head, 213; Doheny v. Lacy, 168 N. Y. 223, 61 N. E. 258.

Such being the reason for the rule, it is said, in Barnes v. Harris, 7 Cush. 578, 54 Am. Dec. 734, the rule should be applied to those cases only which fall within that reason. Therefore, the court refused to hold a communication to a student in an attorney's office as within the rule, where it did not appear that such person was the attorney's agent or clerk.

Likewise, in Schubkagel v. Dierstein, 131 Pa. 46, 6 L. R. A. 481, 18 Atl. 1059, it is said, that confidential communications to a law student, employed to advise and assist a plaintiff in a breach of promise suit, are no more privileged than communications made to a blacksmith retained in a like service. To the same effect are Sample v. Frost, 10 Iowa, 266, and Hawes v. State, 88 Ala. 37, 7 So. 302.

The ground upon which these decisions are based is that, the privilege being accorded in the interest of persons needing the advice and assistance of those learned in the law, and to advance the administration of justice, it is applicable only where the relation of attorney and client exists, or, at least, is believed to exist; and that even the belief of its existence cannot obtain where the person whose counsel is sought is not an attorney. Peek v. Boone, 90 Ga. 707, 17 S. E. 66; Earle v. Grout, 46 Vt. 113; Theisen v. Dayton, 82 Iowa, 74, 47 N. W. 801; Sample v. Frost, 10 Iowa, 266.

A communication to a magistrate, by one whose business he usually attended to, and to whom he frequently gave advice and counsel, is not privileged, since the rule is applicable only to "disclosures made to practising attorneys for the purpose of obtaining professional advice." Pierson v. Steertz, Morris (Iowa) 136.

Likewise, a communication made to one who was not known to be an attorney at the time, and by whom the advice was gratuitously given, has been held not privileged. Union P. R. Co. v. Day, 68 Kan. 726, 75 Pac. 1021; Hawes v. State, 88 Ala. 37, 7 So. 302.

by the introduction of respondent's admissions alone.

People v. Lambert, 5 Mich. 349, 72 Am. Dec. 49; People v. Lane, 49 Mich. 340, 13 N. W. 622; People v. Parker, 67 Mich. 222, 11 Am. St. Rep. 578, 34 N. W. 720; People v. Hess, 85 Mich. 132, 48 N. W. 181; People v. Isham, 109 Mich. 73, 67 N. W. 819; Winslow v. State, 76 Ala. 47; Mose v. State, 36 Ala. 211; Matthews v. State, 55 Ala. 187, 28 Am. Rep. 698; Johnson v. State, 59 Ala. 37; Ryan v. State, 100 Ala. 94, 14 So. 868; Harden v. State, 109 Ala. 51, 19 So. 494; People v. Simonsen, 107 Cal. 345, 40 Pac. 440; People v. Tapia, 131 Cal. 647, 63 Pac. 1001; Gray v. Com. 101 Pa. 380, 47 Am. Rep. 733; Territory v. Farrell, 6 Mont. 12, 9 Pac. 536; Williams v. People, 101 Ill. 382; Campbell v. People, 159 Ill. 24, 50 Am. St. Rep. 134, 42 N. E. 123; Gore v. People, 162 Ill. 265, 44 N. E. 500; May v. People, 92 Ill. 343; People v. Hennessy, 15 Wend. 147; People v. Badgley, 16 Wend. 53; Ber- gen v. People, 17 Ill. 427, 65 Am. Dec. 672; Yoe v. People, 49 Ill. 410; Anderson v. State, 72 Ga. 98; Andrews v. People, 117 Ill. 195, 7 N. E. 265; Cook v. State, 11 Ga. 53, 56 Am. Dec. 410; Brady v. State, 32 Tex. Crim. Rep. 264, 22 S. W. 924; People v. Thrall, 50 Cal. 415; Roberts v. People, 11 Colo. 213, 17 Pac. 637; United States v. Boese, 46 Fed. 917; People v. Jaehne, 103 N. Y. 199, 8 N. E. 374; People v. O'Neil, 109 N. Y. 266, 16 N. E. 68; Sullivan v. State, 58 Neb. 796, 79 N. W. 721.

Messrs. Quincy A. Smith and O. J. Hood also for plaintiff in error.

Mr. Watts S. Humphrey, with Messrs. Arthur J. Tuttle and Horace M. Oren, Attorney General, for defendant in error:

Defendant's admissions are competent evidence of the corpus delicti when there is substantial and material corroboration of the confession by evidence outside of the respondent's confession or admissions.

People v. Jaehne, 103 N. Y. 199, 8 N. E.

It has been held, however, where one's regular employment for many years has been the practice of law before justices of the peace, although not admitted to practice in courts of record, that communications made by one who seeks his aid and counsel, in answer to inquiries as to the facts concerning his alleged offense, are privileged. Benedict v. State, 44 Ohio St. 679, 11 N. E. 125.

And where a detective represents to one accused of crime that he is a celebrated attorney, and, in the confidence of that supposed relation, procures from the accused a statement of his connection with the crime, the communication is privileged. People v. Barker, 60 Mich. 277, 1 Am. St. Rep. 501, 27 N. W. 539.

Since the rule is in contravention of the general rules of law, and has a tendency to prevent the full disclosure of the truth, it is generally held that it is to be construed strictly, and is not to be extended beyond the principle of public policy upon which it is founded. "The rule," says Mr. Starkie, "is strictly confined to counsel, solicitors, and attorneys." 2 Starkie, Ev. 229 To the same effect is Foster v. Hall, 12 Pick. 89, 22 Am. Dec. 400.

Not only must the person applied to for advice be in fact an attorney, but the relation of attorney and client must exist as to the subject of the communication. And it necessarily follows that the attorney must not be disqualified from serving as such. The communication, to be privileged, must be made by the client to his attorney, and for the purpose of obtaining legal advice. Foster v. Hall, 12 Pick. 89, 99, 22 Am. Dec. 400; Hatton v. Robinson, 14 Pick. 416, 423, 25 Am. Dec. 415; Barnes v. Harris, 7 Cush. 576, 54 Am. Dec. 734; Satterlee v. Bliss, 36 Cal. 489; Sharon v. Sharon, 79 Cal. 633, 22 Pac. 26, 131; Ferguson v. McBean, 91 Cal. 63, 14 L. R. A. 65, 27 Pac. 518; Patten v. Glover, 1 App. D. C. 466, Affirmed in 165 U. S. 394, 41 L. ed. 760, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 411; Skelley v. James, 81 Ga. 419, 8 S. E. 607; Granger v. Warrington, 8 Ill. 299; Borum v. Fouts, 15 Ind. 50; Reinhart v. Johnson, 62 Iowa, 155, 17 N. W. 452; Wasson v. Millsap, 77 Iowa, 762, 42 N. W. 528; McLellan 67 L. R. A.

v. Longfellow, 32 Me. 494, 54 Am. Dec. 599; Riley v. Conner, 79 Mich. 497, 44 N. W. 1040; Alderman v. People, 4 Mich. 414, 60 Am. Dec. 321; House v. House, 61 Mich. 69, 1 Am. St. Rep. 570, 27 N. W. 858; Hanson v. Bean, 51 Minn. 546, 38 Am. St. Rep. 516, 53 N. W. 871; Costes v. Semper, 82 Minn. 460, 85 N. W. 217; Crisler v. Garland, 11 Smedes & M. 136, 49 Am. Dec. 49; Randel v. Yates, 48 Miss. 685; Farley v. Peebles, 50 Neb. 723, 70 N. W. 231; Heaton v. Findlay, 12 Pa. 304; Beeson v. Beeson, 9 Pa. 279; McMannus v. State, 2 Head. 213; Flack v. Neill, 26 Tex. 275; Henderson v. Terry, 62 Tex. 285; Coon v. Swan, 30 Vt. 6; Earle v. Grout, 46 Vt. 113; Brayton v. Chase, 3 Wis. 456.

In Calley v. Richards, 19 Beav. 401, although a communication between a person and his legal adviser, who had been a solicitor, but who, unbeknown to the person seeking advice, had ceased to practice, is held to be privileged, yet the master of the rolls said: "If, indeed, a client knows that the person with whom he communicates is not and cannot act as solicitor, of course the communications do not fall within the reason of the rule, and are not privileged."

And where an attorney, at the request of a neighbor, gives him friendly advice, without charging or expecting compensation, a communication made to him under such circumstances is not privileged. Coon v. Swan, 30 Vt. 6; Oliver v. Cameron, MacArth. & M. 237; Hoffman v. Smith, 1 Calnes, 157; Annesley v. Anglesey cited in MacNally, Ev. 241.

To tax a lawyer's courtesy or liberality for advice or services is not to employ him. In such case he is "raided," not retained, and communications made to him under such circumstances are not privileged. Brown v. Matthews, 79 Ga. 1, 4 S. E. 13.

In Hatton v. Robinson, 14 Pick. 416, 423, 25 Am. Dec. 415, it is said, so strictly is this rule applied, that in a late case a communication made to obtain information as to a matter of fact, merely, was held not to be privileged, although the relation of attorney and client existed.

The foregoing case cites, in support of its 374; People v. O'Neil, 109 N. Y. 251, 16 N. E. 68; Sullivan v. State, 58 Neb. 796, 79 N. W. 721; Flower v. United States, 53 C. C. A. 271, 116 Fed. 241; 6 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 582; State v. Hall, 31 W. Va. 505, 7 S. E. 422.

Carpenter, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Defendant was convicted under an indictment in which he was charged with unlawfully and corruptly promising the sum of $20,000 to a member of the house of representatives of the state of Michigan, with intent to influence the act, vote, decision, and judgment of said member, in his legislative capacity, on a certain joint resolution then and there pending in the house of representatives, and with unlawfully and corruptly giving said sum to said member with said intent to influence his action on said resolution. Defendant assigns 116 errors. We deem it necessary, however, to discuss but one of these assignments. That relates to the admission of the testimony of Honorable Rollin H. Person, the judge of the Ing-ham county circuit court at the time the defendant was indicted. Defendant was subpoenaed as a witness before the grand jury. Arthur J. Tuttle, the prosecuting attorney of said county, testified: "Mr. Pratt said to me: 'I would like to talk to some attorney before I go before the grand jury. I have been up to see Judge Cahill, and for some reason he could not talk to me about it. . . . I would like to see someone that I have confidence in, before I go before the grand jury and give my testimony. . . . Where is Judge Person? Couldn't I see him and talk to him?' I took him . . . to Judge Person's room, . . . and introduced him to Judge Person, and they were together for some time, and Mr. Pratt then went back before the grand jury." Before Judge Person testified, he said: "While it is immaterial to me personally, I think I position, the case of Bramwell v. Lucas, 2 Barn. & C. 745, where it is said: "Whether the privilege extends to all confidential communications between attorney and client or not, there is no doubt that it is confined to communications, and to communications to the attorney in his character of attorney. A question for legal advice may come within the description of a confidential communication, because it is part of the attorney's duty, as attorney, to give advice; but a question for information as to matter of fact, as to a communication the attorney had made to others, where the communication might have been made by any other person as well as an attorney, and where the character or office of attorney has not been called into action, has never been held within the protection, and is not within the principle upon which the privilege is founded."

Nor can the relation of attorney and client be said to exist when the attorney whose advice is asked refuses to serve. A communication made to one after his declaration, that he cannot and will not act as the party's attorney, is not privileged. Farley v. Peebles, 50 Neb. 723, 70 N. W. 231; Thelsen v. Dayton, 82 Iowa, 74, 47 N. W. 891; Ellis v. State, 92 Tenn. 85, 105, 20 S. W. 500.

Of course, if the communication be made by reason of the anticipated employment of one as attorney, by a person seeking his aid and advice, it would be privileged whether the attorney is, or is not, employed. Peek v. Boone, 90 Ga. 767, 17 S. E. 66; Cross v. Riggins, 50 Mo. 335; Denver Tramway Co. v. Owens, 20 Colo. 107, 128, 38 Pac. 848, 855; Sheehan v. Allen, 67 Kan. 712, 74 Pac. 245; Thorp v. Goewey, 85 Ill. 611.

To recapitulate, the foregoing authorities establish the following principles of construction, for determining the applicability of the rule of privilege:

First. That it is the relation of attorney and client, rather than the repose of confidence in the person to whom the communication is made, that determines the question of privilege.

Second. That the relation of attorney and client can be said to exist, within the rule of privilege, only when the person applied to for advice is qualified to serve in the capacity of counsel, solicitor, or attorney.

Third. That the rule is to be strictly construed, and should not be extended to communications which are not within the reason upon which the rule is based.

Applying these principles of construction to communications made to persons acting in a judicial capacity, it would seem that the preponderance of authority is on the side of the dissenting opinion in PEOPLE v. PRATT. A judge being disqualified from practicing either as barrister or counselor, the relation of attorney and client cannot exist as between him and a party coming to him for counsel. And if, as in PEOPLE v. PRATT, the judge informs the party seeking his advice, before any communication is made, that he cannot advise him, and that he "had better see an attorney," any communication thereafter made should be deemed outside the rule, under the authorities above cited.

The only case directly in point, which we have been able to find, is that of People v. Hess, 8 App. Div. 143, 40 N. Y. Supp. 486, 6 Misc. 246, 26 N. Y. Supp. 630. There a prisoner charged with homicide, being brought before a magistrate, who had acted as his attorney in other matters, requested him to take his case. This the magistrate refused to do because of his office. Subsequently the prisoner, when in jail, again sent for him, and, after being told by the magistrate that he could not and would not be his attorney or counsel in the matter, said that, because of his confidence in him, he wanted to send a communication to a person named. Thereupon the defendant related to the magistrate certain facts about the shooting, which he wished him to tell such person. The magistrate did the errand, and brought back a reply. The communication thus sent, and the interview which took place when the reply was reported to the defendant, constituted the evidence which it was claimed was privileged. The court says: "There is no doubt of the materiality of the evidence. Clearly, accordought to raise the question whether I should state matters that came to me in that way, when I was on the bench; that is, whether it is against public policy for me to be required to state them. . . . Mr. Pratt said that he was before the grand jury, and wanted to get some advice. I said, 'Mr. Pratt, I cannot give you any advice.' He stood a moment, irresolute, and I said, 'I will say this to you,—that you are not obliged to say anything before the grand jury to criminate yourself.' He said he knew that, but he wanted advice as to what course he ought to pursue for his benefit. I said 'Mr. Pratt, you had better see an attorney.' He said: 'I have seen an attorney here, but got no advice from him. I am not acquainted with the attorneys here, and I don't know how much they may be employed in these matters by various parties against my interest,—where they would conflict our interests.' 'Well,' I said, 'I cannot give you any advice as to what you ought to do for your personal benefit, but you are not obliged to testify to anything that will incriminate yourself; but, if you do testify, I will say this much to you: Tell the truth, whatever it is.' He stood a moment, and burst into tears, like a baby, and said, 'That is the last thing my wife said to me before I left home,—was to tell the truth, whatever I told,' and he dropped into a chair and cried; and in a moment he straightened up and he said: 'I must tell. I won't stand this any longer.' And he went right on rapidly and told his story." At this point, defendant's counsel objected to Judge Person's testimony on the ground that the communication in question was confidential, ing to the evidence of Hallenbeck [the magistrate], the relation of attorney and client did not exist between the defendant and Hallenbeck as to the affair then under consideration, and the defendant was distinctly so informed. The fact that, as to other matters, the relation may have existed, does not confer the privilege here,—especially when the relation here is distinctly repudiated to the party. . . . The fact simply that the communication is confidential is not enough."

The proposition that the rule of privilege is not applicable to communications made to a person who is disqualified, by reason of his official position, from serving as an attorney, is further supported by the case of Wilson v. Rastall, 4 T. R. 753. In that case the trial court refused to permit an attorney to produce in evidence certain letters, which had been communicated to him in consequence of the defendant's consulting him professionally; but he had declined employment, because he was under-sheriff, and a material witness. On appeal, Lord Kenyon, Ch. J., in reversing the ruling of the trial judge, said: "In order to show that the privilege extends beyond the case of an attorney and client, a hard case has been pressed upon our feelings, of confidence reposed in a friend. But if a friend and its disclosure forbidden on grounds of public policy. The trial court ruled that there was nothing exempting Judge Person from testifying (to which ruling defendant excepted), and he proceeded and detailed the statement made to him by defendant. The testimony detailing this statement occupies about 3½ pages of the printed record. It may be described briefly as follows: Defendant, with the co-operation of a certain prominent state official, planned to corruptly secure the adoption of a certain joint resolution. To carry out this plan, defendant delivered drafts to the amount of $20,000 to a prominent member of the house of representatives.

It is to be noted that the purpose of the defendant (though this does not appear to have been known to Judge Person) was "to talk with someone he had confidence in." It is obvious, too, that this confidence was given by reason of Judge Person's profession and official position, and of the advice given by him to defendant. Is the communication made under these circumstances to be regarded as confidential, and its disclosure forbidden by principles of public policy? Counsel for the people has neither in his argument nor brief endeavored to sustain the ruling of the court below. He has taken a course which merits the highest commendation. Apparently doubtful of the propriety of the ruling permitting this disclosure, he has not endeavored to support it by inapplicable argument or authority. He has contented himself with saying: "This matter received the careful attention of counsel in the court below. The court admitted the testimony. It is for this court could not reveal what was imparted to him in confidence, what is to become of many cases, even affecting life. . . . I therefore think that this privilege is only allowed in the case of attorney and client." And Buller, J., said: "The question therefore here is, whether B. Handley were privileged with respect to any person. As to W. Handley, he certainly was not; for he said that the witness neither was, nor could be, his attorney, because he was at that time acting as under-sheriff. Neither was he privileged as to this defendant for the same reason; and though it was said that the defendant (by W. Handley) consulted him in his profession as a confidential person, the meaning of that was that, as B. Handley was more conversant with business of this kind than those who were not of his profession, W. Handley consulted him, but did not employ him as an attorney. . . . As B. Handley was neither the attorney of W. Handley, nor of the defendant, I am of opinion that he was improperly prevented from producing the letters in question."

And in Pierson v. Steortz, Morris (Iowa) 136, it is said that the rule is applicable only to disclosures made to "practising attorneys."

N. B. R.

to say whether or not that decision was correct. If it was correct, there is no error in this case. If incorrect, the conviction should be set aside and defendant discharged, for without this testimony another conviction cannot be obtained."

It seems to us that the principle which prohibits the disclosure of communications between attorney and client prohibits the disclosure under consideration. That principle is found in the common law, and is not confined in its application to cases where the technical relation of attorney and client exists. In the case of People v. Barker, 60 Mich., at page 297, 1 Am. St. Rep., at page 513, 27 N. W., at page 546, this court, speaking through Mr. Justice Champlin, said: "Confidential communications made in reliance upon the supposed relation of attorney and client, whether the party assuming to act as such is an attorney or not, are excluded upon the plainest principles of justice." The principle extends to communications made under the erroneous belief that the party consulted had consented to act as counsel. Smith v. Fell, 2 Curt. Eccl. Rep. 667. The privilege is not confined to communications made for the purpose of obtaining advice. It extends to "communications made to an attorney in the course of any professional employment, . . . and which may be supposed to have been drawn out in consequence of the relation in which the parties stand to each other." Williams v. Fitch, 18 N. Y., at page 551. It is not material that no fee has yet been paid or is to be paid. Sargent v. Hampden, 38 Me. 581; Wade v. Ridley, 97 Me. 368, 32 Atl. 975; Davis v. Morgan, 19 Mont. 141, 47 Pac. 793.

Have these principles any application to the question under consideration? Defendant informed Judge Person that he wished advice as to what course he should pursue for his benefit. When advised by Judge Person to see an attorney, he made known the circumstances which prevented his acting in accordance with this advice. Thereupon Judge Person said: "I cannot give you any advice as to what you ought to do for your personal benefit, but you are not obliged to testify to any thing that will incriminate yourself; but, if you do testify, I will say this much to you: Tell the truth, whatever it is." This statement of Judge Person was obviously advice, and it was advice, which properly should, and in this case did, come from a lawyer to a layman who desired to be advised. It is immaterial that the advice is so simple that an intelligent layman could have given it. This would perhaps characterize the best legal advice that ever was given, but it would be legal advice none the less. If it were true that the course of action prescribed by this advice was the only proper course to pursue, a relation of confidence nevertheless resulted from its being given. But it is not true that the course of action prescribed by this advice is the only course an honest lawyer might have advised defendant to follow. It is quite conceivable that a lawyer having regard to the personal interests of defendant, acting from the highest motives, might have said: "Testify to nothing that is not true, but, if you are asked to testify to anything that may incriminate you, I advise you to decline to answer, upon that ground." It is clear that defendant then and there decided to adopt and act upon the advice which Judge Person had given him, and, as a result, gave his confidence, and made the communication under consideration.
67 L. R. A.

If Judge Person had not been, as he was, the judge of the circuit court for the county of Ingham, who had convened the grand jury, the principles of law above referred to would have prevented his disclosing the communication respondent made to him. It is true that Judge Person's position as judge of the circuit court prevented his becoming, in law, respondent's attorney. But it did not, in fact, prevent his advising respondent what course to pursue. How is the principle which regards as confidential communications between attorney and client affected by the fact that the attorney in this case was also a judge? If it be true that the fact that the attorney was the judge prevented his legally acting as attorney, it is also true that the fact that he occupied that position gave an increased weight to his advice. The reasons for regarding as confidential communications made in consequence of advice from an ordinary attorney apply with full force, and are re-enforced by others, when that advice emanates from an attorney who is also a judge. The law protects these communications as confidential, because of the nature of the confidence which exists between the client and the attorney of his choice. That confidence is not diminished, but is increased, when the advice is given by the judge authorized, not merely to express an opinion, but to declare the law. Not often will a judge undertake to give legal advice. Circumstances may, however, as in this case, make it his duty to give it. When they do, he will not, in any technical sense, become the attorney of the person to whom it was given. But if, as a result of such advice, he receives the confidence of that person, the principles of public policy applicable to attorney and client require that confidence to be respected.

I think our decision in this case might be based on another ground, viz., the communication under consideration is privileged because made to the judge in control of the deliberations of the grand jury before whom defendant had been called as a witness. Defendant, wishing advice as to what testimony he should give before the grand jury, and having no opportunity to consult a lawyer of his own choice, went directly to Judge Person, who had the power to compel him to testify. See People ex rel. Taylor v. Forbes, 143 N. Y. 219, 38 N. E. 303; Minters v. People, 139 Ill., at page 365, 29 N. E. 45. If defendant had gone before the grand jury, and had refused to answer questions put to him, his right to persist in such refusal would have been determined by Judge Person. See above cases. It is obvious that whatever Judge Person thus learned—and in that event he would have learned what testimony defendant had given—would have been privileged. If in that manner Judge Person had learned all that he did by the communication under consideration, the entire disclosure would have been privileged. Is it to be said that, because defendant anticipated his dilemma, and obtained this advice shortly before it was necessary to act upon it, he thereby loses the privilege which he would otherwise have had? I do not think so. I think we should look upon Judge Person as the judge in charge of the grand jury, the advice given by him as advice respecting testimony to be given before said grand jury, and that we should therefore decide that the communication made in consequence thereof is privileged, in accordance with the principle that governs testimony before said grand jury.

It follows from this reasoning that there was error in receiving the testimony of Judge Person; and inasmuch as, according to the statement of counsel, and according to our own judgment of the record, there can be no conviction without this testimony, the conviction will not only be set aside, but the defendant will be discharged from custody.

Montgomery and Moore, JJ., concur with Carpenter, J.

Grant, J., dissenting:

A grand jury had been summoned by the circuit court of Ingham county, Judge Person presiding. One of the subjects under investigation by the grand jury was an attempt to bribe legislators to secure the passage of a certain bill then pending before the legislature. The respondent was the agent of and represented a corporation in the attempt to secure the passage of this bill. Undoubtedly the respondent believed 67 L. R. A.

that he was summoned as a witness before the grand jury to testify in regard to this transaction. Before going before the grand jury he went to the presiding judge, and made a voluntary confession of his crime. He knew that the presiding judge could not act as his attorney or counsel, any more than could the prosecuting attorney. To hold that he believed that the judge could so act would be a reflection upon the respondent's common sense and intelligence. He was a man of age and experience, and the trusted agent of a large corporation. I do not think that it can be said, under this record, that he approached the presiding judge and made his confession with any idea that he stood to him in that confession in the relation of client and attorney. The confession was made, not only without any threats or promises, or even inducements, but after the presiding judge had told him that he could not advise him; thus practically saying to him: "You know that the relation between us is not that of client and attorney, and cannot be, and that whatever you say to me is not privileged, under the law." Everyone knows that a presiding judge cannot advise litigants, for it would disqualify him from sitting in the case. It is immaterial what the motive of respondent was in making this confession,—whether he did it from sting of conscience, or from repentance for his error, or a desire to escape sentence, or in order to obtain a lighter one. The confession was not made as an informer, for the purpose of causing an investigation into the crime of others. It was no less a confession, pure and simple, because it involved other participants in the crime. As against such participants, the confession would not be competent evidence,—at least until a conspiracy had been established by other evidence. Confessions are potent evidence of guilt when made voluntarily, without threats, promises, or duress. See Daniels v. State, 6 Am. St. Rep. 238, and note (78 Ga. 98).

It will be conceded that there is no statute of this state covering the case. The only statutory privileged communications are where a confession is made to a priest "in the course of discipline enjoined by the rules or practice of such denomination" to which such priest belongs (Comp. Laws, § 10,180), and information acquired by a physician in attending a patient in his professional character, which information must be necessary to enable him to prescribe (Comp. Laws, § 10,181). Under these statutes, confessions of crime made to a physician, not necessary for the physician's prescription, or to a priest, not in accordance with the discipline of his church, would be competent. At the common law, communications to clergymen and physicians were not privileged. 1 Greenl. Ev. 16th ed. § 247a. The question of communications by a layman to his priest arose in the English courts, and the court said: "It was not to be supposed for a single moment that a clergyman had any right to withhold information from a court of law. It was a principle of our jurisprudence that justice should prevail, and no unrecognized privilege could be allowed to stand in the way of it." Normanshaw v. Normanshaw, 69 L. T. N. S. 468. The common law throws the mantle of secrecy over two classes of communications, viz., between lawyer and client and between government officials and informers. What is the basis of this rule of the common law? Such communications are not excluded for the protection of criminals, but solely on the ground of public policy. Many efforts have been made before the courts to ascertain who informed government officials of frauds and crimes against the government, but the testimony has been universally excluded, not for the purpose of protecting the informer against prosecutions, but solely because public policy requires that this information, so essential to protect the government from frauds and crimes, should not be made public; otherwise the government would suffer, for it is evident that but few, if any, would give such information if they knew that it could be made the basis of a libel suit, or could be used against them in other ways. See Worthington v. Scribner, 109 Mass. 487, 12 Am. Rep. 736; Rex v. Akers, 6 Esp. 125, note; Atty. Gen. v. Briant, 15 Mees. & W. 169; Robinson v. May, 2 Smith, 3; Beaton v. Skene, 5 Hurlst. & N. 838. In Shinglemeyer v. Wright, 124 Mich. 230, 50 L. R. A. 129, 82 N. W. 887, we said: "The defendant did not make these statements for repetition. He made them for the exclusive use and benefit of the trusted and sworn officers of the law. They should have been forever locked in their breasts, and never disclosed; otherwise, few persons would dare to disclose to an officer the name of a suspect, or anything they had learned about his character." This rule also covers communications made to those in authority, relative to the character and conduct of a party applying for a public office. Earl v. Vass, 1 Shaw, 229; Garn v. Lockard, 108 Mich. 196, 65 N. W. 764; Pollasky v. Minchener, 81 Mich. 280, 9 L. R. A. 102, 21 Am. St. Rep. 516, 46 N. W. 5; Bacon v. Michigan C. R. Co. 66 Mich. 166, 33 N. W. 181; Wieman v. Mabec, 45 Mich. 484, 40 Am. Rep. 477, 8 N. W. 71. This case is not within the principle of those above cited. Evidence of these communications is rejected "upon the ground of public policy, because greater mischiefs would probably result from requiring or permitting its admission than from any refusal to receive it." 23 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 50.

67 L. R. A.

The rejection of this testimony is sought upon the basis of the existence of the relation of attorney and client. The authorities hold that "it is absolutely essential, [in order to make the communication privileged] that the relation of attorney and client should have existed," and that "the communication must also be made solely on account of the relation of attorney and client, and for the purpose of obtaining professional assistance or advice," etc. 23 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 58, 62, and authorities there cited; Bramwell v. Lucas, 4 Dowl. & R. 367. If that relation existed, the evidence is inadmissible; otherwise it is admissible. There is no privilege for a confidential communication, merely as such. 1 Greenl. Ev. 16th ed. § 248. It is not a question of sentiment, but of law. The language of Lord Camden, quoted in Greenleaf on Evidence, is appropriate here: "It is not befitting the dignity of this high court of justice to be debating the etiquette of honor at the same time when we are trying lives and liberties." 1 Greenl. Ev. § 248. There must be found some well-recognized rule of the common law, founded upon common sense and justice, which justifies the exclusion of a voluntary confession of crime. Public policy protects communications between lawyer and client from the eyes of the public, because they are regarded as essential to enable the lawyer to make a proper defense for him. It does not protect confessions or communications where that relation does not exist, no matter how close any other relation between the parties to it may be, or what the purpose may be in making the confession. No sacredness attaches to the confession of a criminal, and, when he seeks protection from its consequences, he must show his privilege to be within some well-recognized rule of law. I do not believe in extending the rule for his protection, but, rather, in restricting it for the protection of the public. Chief Justice Shaw said that the communication, to be privileged, must be "with a view to obtain his advice and opinion in matters of law in relation to his legal rights, duties, and obligations, whether with a view to the prosecution or defense of a suit, or other lawful object. . . . This principle we take to be this: That so numerous and complex are the laws by which the rights and duties of citizens are governed, so important is it that they should be permitted to avail themselves of the superior skill and learning of those who are sanctioned by the law as its ministers and expounders, both in ascertaining their rights in the country, and maintaining them most safely in courts, without publishing those facts which they have a right to keep secret, but which must be disclosed to a legal adviser and advocate to enable him successfully to perform the duties of his office, that the law has considered it the wisest policy to encourage and sanction this confidence, by requiring that on such facts the mouth of the attorney shall be forever sealed. To the rule as thus stated we are still inclined to adhere. But the privilege of exemption from testifying to facts actually known to the witness is in contravention to the general rules of law. It is therefore to be watched with some strictness, and is not to be extended beyond the limits of that principle of policy upon which it is allowed. It is extended to no other person than an advocate or legal adviser, and those persons whose intervention is strictly necessary to enable the client and attorney to communicate with each other as an interpreter, agent, or attorney's clerk. And this privilege is confined to counsel, solicitors, and attorneys, when applied to as such, and when acting in that capacity. Wilson v. Rastall, 4 T. R. 753. . . . And so strictly is the rule held that the privilege extends only to communications made by the client to his attorney, for the purpose of obtaining legal advice, that in a late case it was held that a communication made by a client to his attorney, not for the purpose of asking his legal advice, but to obtain information as to a matter of fact, is not privileged, and may be disclosed by the attorney if called as a witness in a cause. Bramwell v. Lucas, 2 Barn. & C. 745." Hutton v. Robinson, 14 Pick. 416, 25 Am. Dec. 415.

As applied to this case, the relation of client and attorney is the only basis upon which the confession can be held privileged. How can this relation be held to exist in the face of the fact that the respondent knew he was not talking to Judge Person as his lawyer; and most certainly did he know this, when the judge promptly told him that he could not advise him. Not only did the judge plainly tell him this once, but also told him he had better see an attorney; and after respondent said he had seen an attorney, but got no advice from him, etc., the judge again said, emphatically, "I cannot give you any advice as to what you ought to do for your personal benefit;" and after all this the respondent told his story of the crime. I cannot yield my assent to the existence of a relation between this respondent and Judge Person which neither, in my judgment, believed to exist.

I have carefully examined the authorities to find under what circumstances judges are privileged from testifying as to matters which take place before them, and the only privilege I find accorded to them is that, on grounds of public policy, they cannot be called on to state what occurred before them in court. 1 Greenl. Ev. 16th ed. § 254c. I find one case which is somewhat in point. State v. Chambers, 45 La. Ann. 36, 11 So. 944. That case, in its facts, is almost the counterpart of this, except that in that case the judge sought the respondent, while in this the respondent sought the judge. The respondent was charged with the crime of murder. The district judge, before whom he was first tried, visited the respondent in prison, and communicated with him. Upon the second trial, presided over by the judge's successor, he (the judge) was placed upon the stand as a witness. The objection was made, not that the communication was privileged, but that the presence of the judge in his official capacity in the prison intimidated the respondent, so that his answers were not free and voluntary. The court, in disposing of the case, said: "We find no legal and valid reason to set aside the verdict on this account. His testimony shows that he warned and cautioned the defendant, and that he conversed freely and voluntarily." What difference, in principle, does it make whether the judge sought the respondent to obtain, if he could, a confession, or whether the respondent sought the judge to voluntarily make a confession? The only difference between the two cases is that in this case the respondent made the communication after twice being told by the judge that he could give him no advice, while in the other case the respondent made the communication without asking any advice.
67 L. R. A.

The fact that a grand jury was believed to be investigating this crime is of no significance. The same rule would apply if there had been no grand jury, and no suspicion of the crime or of the respondent's guilt. Suppose a case of murder or burglary, and the criminal, for any reason whatever, seeks the presiding judge within whose jurisdiction the crime was committed, and confesses the crime, after being told that he can give him no advice; is the judge's mouth sealed,—should it be sealed? Must a heinous crime go unpunished, under the protection of privileged communications, where no relation of lawyer and client existed or could exist? Would not the judge, under such circumstances, be required by all considerations of public policy to disclose the confession?

I do not think there is any error upon the record, and the conviction should be affirmed.

Hooker, Ch. J., concurred with Grant, J.

A. L. LAKEY COMPANY

v.

City of KALAMAZOO, Plff. in Err.

(.....Mich.....)

1. A municipal corporation which has utilised a stream to carry off the surface water falling within its watershed, and, for the maintenance of the public health, has cleaned its bed, is not liable to a riparian owner for failure to remove obstructions placed in the stream by another riparian owner so that the water is dammed back to the injury of the former.
2. A municipal corporation which turns into a stream flowing through its storm sewers from streets within the watershed of the stream is not bound to remove the sand and debris carried into the stream by the water for the purpose of protecting riparian owners from injury by overflow of the stream.

(December 30, 1904.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Kalamazoo County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for injuries to plaintiff's property, which was alleged to have been caused by the overflow of a stream through defendant's negligence. Reversed.

Statement by Grant, J.:

The appellant's statement of the case is not disputed, and we therefore adopt it. It is as follows:

This is an action for permitting Arcadia creek to overflow its banks and flood the plaintiff's cellar. Plaintiff had verdict and judgment for $1,700. Arcadia creek is a natural water course, draining a portion of the area of the defendant city. The city is situated in a valley. The creek has always carried off the rainfall within its natural area, and, as the community grew, streets were paved and laid out across the creek, and the gutters from the streets were connected with it. Later, as the city grew, underground waterways known as "storm sewers" were installed (which served substantially the same purpose as the old gutters) which were also connected with the creek, but no sewer or gutter connected with it drained any area except the natural watershed. The creek passes through a thickly settled business portion of the defendant city, and substantially all the large buildings of the city are within the drainage area of the creek. The territory occupied by these buildings has been gradually built up, and the water which falls upon the roofs of the buildings collects and is discharged in some instances into the sewers, but usually on the pavements, from whence by gutter or storm sewer it finds its way into the creek. On June 18 and July 2, 1902, heavy rains fell within the drainage area, and the creek overflowed its banks at or near the plaintiff's place of business, and the water ran into its cellar, whereby it claims damage. The city, although it has never admitted that it was bound so to do, has, as a health measure, always cleaned the water courses within the city, and very shortly before the 18th of June, 1902, the creek was thoroughly cleaned by the city employees, with the one exception that at the building occupied by the Harrow Spring Company, which faces on Edwards street in said city, and which is but a few rods from plaintiff's place of business, the workmen were unable to reach the bed of the creek, because for a considerable distance there were private storage sheds built entirely over it. The sheds had been over the creek for a number of years, and entirely upon private property, and there was no method of cleaning it at this place unless the floor of the sheds was removed. Upon inspection, the city employees discovered that there were stored within the sheds harrow teeth and other iron material, and in such a manner that it was impossible for them to reach the bed of the creek. After the floods the Harrow Spring Company moved from their place of business, and then the floor of these sheds was taken up, and it was discovered that harrow teeth had fallen through the floor into the creek in such a manner as to catch debris and drift material, making a dam, which undoubtedly to some extent caused the flood.

The court instructed the jury that the city had the legal right to turn the surface waters of this watershed of the creek into the creek, and that it had turned no more of the surface water into it than it was justified in so doing. The court also instructed the jury that, if they found that the city permitted the creek "to become and be so obstructed on the days in question, and that the obstruction caused the creek to overflow its banks and damage the plaintiff's property, then the plaintiff would be entitled to recover; provided you further find that the rain storms which happened on those days were such as might ordinarily have been expected to occur in this latitude, although happening at rare intervals." He further instructed them that, if the rainfall was unprecedented, and would have caused the creek to overflow notwithstanding the obstructions, then the defendant was not liable. He also instructed them that it was the duty of the city to keep the creek reasonably clear and free from obstructions, and that it was responsible for the obstructions by the Harrow Spring Company.

NOTE.—As to rights and duties of municipalities with respect to surface water, see, in this series, Johnson v. White, 65 L. R. A. 250, and note.

67 L. R. A.

Mr. William R. Fox, with Mr. Harry C. Howard, for plaintiff in error:

Plaintiff cannot recover in this case, because in all that the city did in its corporate capacity within the drainage area of this brook in opening and paving streets and gutters it was performing a governmental duty.

Wilson v. Waterbury, 73 Conn. 416, 47 Atl. 687.

A city is not liable for injuries caused by a defect or insufficiency in the plan or system of drainage adopted under authority conferred by the legislature, or which are a necessary result of the exercise of the authority so conferred.

Gould, Waters, § 261; Johnston v. District of Columbia, 118 U. S. 19, 30 L. ed. 75, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 923.

A municipal corporation is not liable to the owner of land upon a stream for the overflow of his property by the stream, and to which it has conducted its surface drainage, if no more than the natural amount of water finds its way into the stream, although the flow is hastened, and a considerable amount of soil is washed into the stream, which to some extent obstructs its flow.

Wheeler v. Worcester, 10 Allen, 603; Cumberland v. Willison, 50 Md. 138, 33 Am. Rep. 304; Butler v. Worcester, 112 Mass. 541; Diamond Match Co. v. New Haven, 55 Conn. 510, 3 Am. St. Rep. 70, 13 Atl. 409; Kellogg v. New Britain, 62 Conn. 232, 24 Atl. 996; Fisk v. Hartford, 69 Conn. 375, 38 L. R. A. 474, 37 Atl. 983; Platt Bros. v. Waterbury, 72 Conn. 531, 48 L. R. A. 691, 77 Am. St. Rep. 335, 45 Atl. 154; Watson v. New Milford, 72 Conn. 561, 77 Am. St. Rep. 345, 45 Atl. 167; Strohl v. Ephrata, 178 Pa. 50, 35 Atl. 713; Com. ex rel. Tyron v. Stevens, 178 Pa. 543, 36 Atl. 166.

No action lies against the city for failure to keep a public sewer and cesspool in repair, whereby waste water accumulates and flows into the cellar of a neighboring house not connected with drain.

Barry v. Lowell, 8 Allen, 128, 85 Am. Dec. 690.

The city is not liable where the drain is sufficient for ordinary purposes, not floods. 67 L. R. A.

Watson v. Kingston, 114 N. Y. 88, 21 N. E. 102; Madison v. Ross, 3 Ind. 236, 54 Am. Dec. 481; Cold Water v. Tucker, 36 Mich. 474, 24 Am. Rep. 601; Powers v. Council Bluffs, 50 Iowa, 197; German Theological School v. Dubuque, 64 Iowa, 739, 17 N. W. 153; Haney v. Kansas City, 94 Mo. 334, 7 S. W. 417; Taubert v. St. Paul, 68 Minn. 519, 71 N. W. 684; Scott v. Provo City, 14 Utah, 31, 45 Pac. 1005; Jordan v. Mt. Pleasant, 15 Utah, 440, 49 Pac. 746; Allen v. Chippewa Falls, 52 Wis. 430, 38 Am. Rep. 748, 9 N. W. 284; Savannah v. Cleary, 67 Ga. 153.

If a city or town makes provision for carrying off the surface water of its streets and highways, which proves insufficient, and such water overflows upon the land of an adjoining proprietor to his injury, he will have no right of action.

Gould, Waters, 3d ed. § 270; Barry v. Lowell, 8 Allen, 127, 85 Am. Dec. 690; Mills v. Brooklyn, 32 N. Y. 489; Kavanagh v. Brooklyn, 38 Barb. 232; Acker v. Newcastle, 48 Hun, 312; Schmidt v. Rowse, 35 Mo. App. 288; Fair v. Philadelphia, 88 Pa. 309, 32 Am. Rep. 455; Carr v. Northern Liberties, 35 Pa. 324, 78 Am. Dec. 342; Alden v. Minneapolis, 24 Minn. 254; Atchison v. Challiss, 9 Kan. 603.

A municipal corporation is not liable in damages for a failure to enact ordinances with reference to subjects within its jurisdiction, or a failure to enforce ordinances after their enactment.

20 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 1198; Fifield v. Phaniz, 4 Ariz. 283, 24 L. R. A. 430, 36 Pac. 916; Rivers v. Augusta, 65 Ga. 376, 38 Am. Rep. 787; Taylor v. Cumberland, 64 Md. 68, 54 Am. Rep. 759, 20 Atl. 1027; Hines v. Charlotte, 72 Mich. 278, 1 L. R. A. 844, 40 N. W. 333; Harman v. St. Louis, 137 Mo. 494, 38 S. W. 1102; Moran v. Pullman Palace Car Co. 134 Mo. 641, 33 L. R. A. 755, 56 Am. St. Rep. 543, 36 S. W. 659; Carroll v. St. Louis, 4 Mo. App. 191; Hill v. Charlotte, 72 N. C. 55, 21 Am. Rep. 451; Levy v. New York, 1 Sandf. 465; Peck v. Austin, 22 Tex. 261, 73 Am. Dec. 261; Jones v. Williamsburg, 97 Va. 722, 47 L. R. A. 294, 34 S. E. 883; Kelley v. Milwaukee, 18 Wis. 83.

The nonexercise of a power granted by the legislature creates no liability.

Gould, Waters, § 270; Lynch v. New York, 76 N. Y. 60, 32 Am. Rep. 271; Mills v. Brooklyn, 32 N. Y. 489; Flagg v. Worcester, 13 Gray, 601; Roll v. Augusta, 34 Ga. 326; Fair v. Philadelphia, 88 Pa. 309, 32 Am. Rep. 455.

A town is not liable for the obstruction of the passage of water through a culvert under a highway, which causes the water to overflow the land of an adjoining owner.

where the obstruction is caused by a railroad company, that owns land adjoining the highway, in filling up a ravine on its land, which constituted a natural channel for the water from the culvert under the highway.

Haynes v. Burlington, 38 Vt. 350; Coonley v. Albany, 132 N. Y. 145, 30 N. E. 382; Buchert v. Boyertown, 1 Monaghan (Pa.) 577, 17 Atl. 190.

A municipal corporation, being a government agency, is not liable to an action for damages sustained by the torts of its officers or agents, unless it is made so by statutory provision.

Little Rock v. Willis, 27 Ark. 572; Stevens v. Muskegon, 111 Mich. 72, 36 L. R. A. 777, 69 N. W. 227; Detroit v. Blackeby, 21 Mich. 84, 4 Am. Rep. 450; Webb v. Detroit Bd. of Health, 116 Mich. 516, 72 Am. St. Rep. 541, 74 N. W. 734; Taggart v. Fall River, 170 Mass. 325, 49 N. E. 622; Pettin-gell v. Chelsea, 161 Mass. 368, 24 L. R. A. 426, 37 N. E. 380; Galveston v. Posnainsky, 62 Tex. 118, 50 Am. Rep. 517; Ogg v. Lansing, 35 Iowa, 495, 14 Am. Rep. 499.

The true test should be whether the thing from which the injury is alleged to have resulted was undertaken purely for public benefit and advantage, and not for the benefit of the corporation.

Howard v. Worcester, 153 Mass. 426, 12 L. R. A. 160, 25 Am. St. Rep. 651, 27 N. E. 11; Gilpatrick v. Biddeford, 86 Me. 534, 30 Atl. 99; Murtaugh v. St. Louis, 44 Mo. 479.

Messrs. Osborn & Mills, for defendant in error:

A city has no more right to invade, or cause the invasion of, private property than an individual.

Rice v. Flint, 67 Mich. 401, 34 N. W. 719; Defer v. Detroit, 67 Mich. 346, 34 N. W. 680; Burford v. Grand Rapids, 53 Mich. 98, 51 Am. Rep. 105, 18 N. W. 571; Ashley v. Port Huron, 35 Mich. 296, 24 Am. Rep. 552; Seaman v. Marshall, 116 Mich. 327, 74 N. W. 484; Noonan v. Albany, 79 N. Y. 470, 35 Am. Rep. 540; Barton v. Syracuse, 36 N. Y. 54; Jones, Neg. Mun. Corp. ¶ 143, and note; Clay v. St. Albans, 43 W. Va. 539, 64 Am. St. Rep. 883, 27 S. E. 368; 6 Ballard, Real Prop. 890; Waycross v. Houk, 113 Ga. 963, 39 S. E. 577.

Grant, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The overflow of the creek so as to flood the basement of plaintiff's building was caused either by a great rainfall, or by the obstruction of the Harrow Spring Company, or both combined. Of course, but for the heavy rains the overflow would not have occurred. It is very probable that but for 67 L. R. A.

the obstruction the water would have remained within the banks of the creek. The evidence is that no such flooding had before been known. Plaintiff's manager testified that it had occupied the building ever since it was built; that it had never had a flood to that extent before; that only once before had the water reached its basement, and that was about two years previous; that that overflow was caused by a blockade in the bed of the creek by a firm named Bush & Patterson, who were building a mill, and had lumber and brick piled across the creek. After the first flood plaintiff took no steps to remove its material from its basement, because, as its manager testified, "they did not think they would have another flood right on the heels of the first. We never had any damage before; it had never been flooded before; and, basing my judgment upon the line of my former experience, I certainly did not think it would happen so soon again."

The rule is conceded to be that a municipality is not responsible for damages caused by unexpected and unusual rain-falls, but only for those which experience has shown are liable to occur. Coldwater v. Tucker, 36 Mich. 474, 24 Am. Rep. 601; Scaman v. Marshall, 116 Mich. 327, 74 N. W. 484. It was not claimed by the defendant in the court below, and is not now claimed, that the court erred in leaving to the jury the question whether the rainfall was unprecedented, or one which might have been expected to occur, although happening at rare intervals.

Two questions are raised: First. Was the defendant liable for the obstruction of the creek by the Harrow Spring Company? The defendant did not cause the obstruction. It was not aware of it until after that company had removed the contents of its warehouse, built over the creek, and the defendant had been able to reach the bed of the creek from the inside, the only way it appears by which it could be reached and cleaned. The Harrow Spring Company owned both banks and the bed of the stream. So long as it did not interfere with the natural flow of the water, it had the right to erect buildings over it. The building itself did not interfere with the natural flow. The defendant had no control over the creek (except that inherent in municipal corporations under the police power) to cause it to be cleaned for the protection of the health of its inhabitants. Even under its charter it could only "regulate, improve, alter, widen, or change the channel of Arcadia brook, . . . on making compensation to persons whose property was taken for such purposes." The fact that it had caused the stream to be cleaned for sanitary reasons did not make it the duty of the city to protect owners of land from the overflow of water naturally emptying into it. The creek had not been appropriated by the city for the purpose of sewerage. It was no more liable in damages to riparian owners for water running into it, under the circumstances of this case, than it would be for emptying its surface water into the Kalamazoo river, where its general sewerage is conducted. The riparian owners along such streams are entitled to use them for any legitimate purpose so long as they do not affect the rights of other riparian owners or cause a nuisance dangerous to the health of the inhabitants. Knight v. Barr, 130 Mich. 673, 90 N. W. 849. It follows that the instruction of the court that the defendant is liable for the obstruction of the Harrow Spring Company is erroneous. Haynes v. Burlington, 38 Vt. 350; Coonley v. Albany, 132 N. Y. 145, 30 N. E. 382.

Second. Was the defendant liable for obstructions arising from the flow of water into the creek? While the instruction of the court is not very specific as to the character of the obstruction for which the defendant is liable, we infer from its general character, and from briefs of counsel, that it was held responsible for any obstructions caused by the accumulation of sand and mud in its bottom which the water from the streets and buildings washed into it, and that it was the duty of the city to keep the creek at its natural depth and width. Arcadia creek is a natural water course. As the city grew, the watershed of the creek became covered with buildings. Parties who owned land on both sides of it erected buildings over it, as they had the legal right to do. Paved streets became necessary. The speedy discharge of the water from the buildings and streets into the creek was essential to the business, comfort, and health of the inhabitants of the city. The authorities are apparently unanimous in holding that under such circumstances the city had the legal right to construct pavements and storm sewers to speedily carry off the water into the creek through which it was emptied into the river of Kalamazoo, a short distance away. In this process some dirt and material, necessarily deposited upon the pavements, would be carried into the creek. Some of this dirt and material would perhaps settle in the bottom of the creek and lodge along its banks. The cities and villages in this country are usually situated along the banks of rivers and small streams, into which the water falling upon their paved streets and buildings must be conducted. For the dirt and material thus carried into such streams, the municipalities are not liable to the riparian owners, or to others living in the vicinity. If any such owner is damaged thereby, it is damnum absque injuria. Neither does the law impose upon the municipality the duty to keep the bed of the stream at its original depth and width. As a measure of health, the municipality undoubtedly has the power to clean, or cause to be cleaned, the bed of the stream, and thus accelerate the flow of the water; but the municipality has no other control over it. It owns no land along the banks. The creek is not a trunk sewer owned by the municipality.

Under the facts of this case the defendant is not liable. Its nonliability is founded in sound reason, and is supported by the authorities. Wilson v. Waterbury, 73 Conn. 416, 47 Atl. 687; Wheeler v. Worcester, 10 Allen, 603; Cumberland v. Willison, 50 Md. 138, 33 Am. Rep. 304; Fair v. Philadelphia, 88 Pa. 309, 32 Am. Rep. 455; Kavanagh v. Brooklyn, 38 Barb. 232; Gould, Waters, § 270. The learned counsel for the plaintiff cite and rely upon Ashley v. Port Huron, 35 Mich. 296, 24 Am. Rep. 552; Rice v. Flint, 67 Mich. 401, 34 N. W. 719; Seaman v. Marshall, 116 Mich. 327, 74 N. W. 484; Manning v. Lowell, 130 Mass. 21; Brayton v. Fall River, 113 Mass. 218, 18 Am. Rep. 470; O'Brien v. St. Paul, 18 Minn. 176, Gil. 163; Clay v. St. Albans, 43 W. Va. 539, 64 Am. St. Rep. 883, 27 S. E. 368; Noonan v. Albany, 79 N. Y. 470, 35 Am. Rep. 540; Barton v. Syracuse, 36 N. Y. 54; Stanchfield v. Newton, 142 Mass. 110, 7 N. E. 703; Parker v. Nashua, 59 N. H. 402; Waycross v. Houk, 113 Ga. 963, 39 S. E. 577. In Ashley v. Port Huron the city cut a sewer in such a manner as to cause a collection of large quantities of water upon the plaintiff's land which would not otherwise have flowed there. In Rice v. Flint the city made a dam by raising the grade of the street, so that the water overflowed the plaintiff's premises. In Seaman v. Marshall the city was held negligent in not providing reasonably efficient means to carry off the water which should reasonably have been expected to accumulate. In Manning v. Lowell the territory which was drained of its surface water was very much greater than that extent of territory which would be thus naturally drained without the intervention of the artificial means constructed by the city. In other words, the city took water which would not naturally flow upon defendant's land, and discharged it upon his land. In Brayton v. Fall River the city drained by its system of sewers a territory of 60 or 75 acres, and emptied it into a creek, whereas only about 15 to 20 acres naturally drained into it. In O'Brien v. St. Paul the area of the drainage through the sewer is not clearly shown. It is stated that by means of the sewer the city conducted to and emptied upon the plaintiff's premises a greater body of water than the natural flow of water through the water course,—wore away the banks and soil to a much greater extent than would have been caused by any stream naturally flowing through said water course. If it is meant by this that a municipality cannot pave its streets and construct storm sewers so as to convey water more rapidly into the creek than it would naturally flow, it is against the clear weight of authority, and against the instruction of the court in this case. In Clay v. St. Albans we gather from the statement of the case that the city, by its gutters and drains, collected surface water and cast it in a body onto plaintiff's land. It is not a case of draining into a creek or natural water course. In Noonan v. Albany the water was collected from the lands and streets of a municipality into an artificial channel and discharged upon plaintiff's lands. The defendant in that case, by means of sewers and manner of grading, concentrated the surface water and sewerage of a large territory and discharged it in one body into a ravine where a small rivulet formerly ran. Barton v. Syracuse involves the duty of the municipality to keep its sewers in proper repair and prevent their becoming filled with dirt and rubbish, thus impeding the overflow of the water, and causing it to set back upon the lands of lot owners. Stanchfield v. Newton is a similar case. In Waycross v. Houk the plaintiff sought to enjoin defendant from continuing, or from extending, a main sewer so that the sewerage would be discharged directly upon her land. The basis of the decree in that case was that the nuisance should be abated as dangerous to life and health. In Parker v. Nashua the liability was based upon the negligent management of the municipality in not keeping a culvert free from obstructions. We are of the opinion that those cases do not apply to this one.

Judgment reversed, and new trial ordered.

The other Justices concur.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

COMMONWEALTH of Massachusetts
v.

Albert M. PEAR.

SAME

v.

Henning JACOBSON.

(183 Mass. 242.)

1. The legislature may, in the exercise of its police power, authorize the health authorities of a municipal corporation to require, under penalty, all citizens to be vaccinated when, in their discretion, it is necessary for the public health and safety.
2. Evidence as to what vaccination consists of is not admissible in a prosecution for refusal to obey an order of the board of health to be vaccinated, since it is a fact of common knowledge.
3. The views of an individual do not entitle him to be exempted from the operation of an order of the board of health requiring the vaccination of all citizens of the municipality.
4. The testimony of experts that the effects of vaccination are injurious and dangerous does not, in view of facts of history, warrant a court in holding a statute requiring citizens to be vaccinated unconstitutional.

ute requiring citizens to be vaccinated unconstitutional.

5. The constitutional requirement that police powers shall be wholesome and reasonable does not justify the court in setting aside a statute upon a subject in regard to which the legislature is authorized to act because the opinion of the judge differs from that of the legislators on the question whether it will be for the good and welfare of the state.
6. The theoretical possibility of an injury from vaccination in an individual case does not show that a statute requiring the vaccination of all citizens is unreasonable.
7. Exemption of minors and persons under guardianship from the penalty imposed by a statute for refusal to be vaccinated does not render the statute unconstitutional as working an inequality.

(April 2, 1903.)

EXCEPTIONS by defendants to rulings of the Superior Court for Middlesex County, made during the trial of actions which resulted in convicting defendants of refusal to comply with a health ordinance. Overruled.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

NOTE.—As to constitutionality of compulsory vaccination, see also, in this series, Morris v. Columbus, 42 L. R. A. 175, and State v. Hay, 49 L. R. A. 588.

As to validity of regulation making vaccination a condition of attending school, see Duffield v. Williamsport School District, 25 L. R. A. 67 L. R. A.

A. 152, and note; Blissell v. Davison, 29 L. R. A. 251; State ex rel. Adams v. Burdge, 37 L. R. A. 157; Potts v. Breen, 30 L. R. A. 152; Blue v. Beach, 50 L. R. A. 64; Mathews v. Board of Education, 54 L. R. A. 736; and State ex rel. Freeman v. Zimmerman, 58 L. R. A. 78.

Messrs. Henry Ballard and J. Winthrop Pickering, for defendants:

If a legislature undertakes to exert any part of that vast, unclassified residue of legislative authority which is called, not always intelligently, the police power, this action must not degenerate into an irrational excess, so as to become in reality something different and forbidden, e. g., the depriving of people of their property without due process of law.

Prof. James B. Thayer, 7 Harvard Law Rev. p. 148.

The source of police power is no exception to the old, sound doctrine that the state legislation is at all times subject to the paramount authority of the Constitution, and cannot violate rights which are safeguarded by the Constitution of the United States.

Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 663, 31 L. ed. 211, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273; Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 678, 32 L. ed. 253, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 992, 1257; Clark v. Syracuse, 13 Barb. 32; People v. Gillson, 109 N. Y. 400, 4 Am. St. Rep. 465, 17 N. E. 343; Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 108, 50 Am. Rep. 636; People v. Mara, 99 N. Y. 377, 52 Am. Rep. 34, 2 N. E. 29.

The obvious absolute necessity of protecting unfit persons—a manifestly large number in the aggregate—from the destructive effects of its improper enforcement is utterly overlooked in this statute.

School Directors v. Breen, 60 Ill. App. 201; Blue v. Beach, 155 Ind. 121, 50 L. R. A. 64, 80 Am. St. Rep. 195, 56 N. E. 89.

The summary condemning of an entire community to bodily mutilation and inoculation with disease, with certainty of so much suffering and such terrible risk, and with so much uncertainty as to any benefit therefrom, all without any hearing, merely upon the forming of an "opinion," perhaps a guess,—is not a valid exercise of the police power.

People ex rel. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. v. Board of Health, 58 Hun, 595, 12 N. Y. Supp. 561; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Minnesota, 134 U. S. 418, 33 L. ed. 970, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 209, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 462, 702; Clark v. Syracuse, 13 Barb. 32; Babcock v. Buffalo, Sheldon, 317; Tugman v. Chicago, 78 Ill. 405.

An unconstitutional act, whenever challenged, must fall.

Levin v. Burlington, 129 N. C. 184, 55 L. R. A. 396, 39 S. E. 822; 54 Cent. L. J. 361.

The number of those who seriously object to vaccination is by no means small, and they cannot, except when necessary for the public health, and in conformity to law, be deprived of their right to protect themselves and those under their control from an invasion of their liberties by a practically compulsory inoculation of their bodies with a virus of any description whatever, however meritorious it may be.

Potts v. Breen, 167 Ill. 67, 39 L. R. A. 152, 59 Am. St. Rep. 262, 47 N. E. 81; Morris v. Columbus, 102 Ga. 792, 42 L. R. A. 175.

"Due process of law" is not confined to judicial proceedings, but extends to every case which may deprive a citizen of life, liberty, or property, whether the proceeding be judicial, administrative, or executive in its nature.

Weimer v. Bunbury, 30 Mich. 201; Stuart v. Palmer, 74 N. Y. 183, 30 Am. Rep. 289; Spencer v. Merchant, 125 U. S. 345, 31 L. ed. 763, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 921; People ex rel. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. v. Board of Health, 58 Hun, 595, 12 N. Y. Supp. 561; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Minnesota, 134 U. S. 418, 33 L. ed. 970, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 209, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 462, 702; Clark v. Syracuse, 13 Barb. 32; Babcock v. Buffalo, Sheldon, 317.

It is a matter of common knowledge, and therefore of the judicial knowledge of this court, that among the natural and probable results likely to follow from vaccination are syphilis, vaccine fever, vaccine eczema, vaccine erysipelas, cancer, cirrhosis, blood poisoning, paralysis, tetanus, pneumonia, meningitis, total blindness, spinal contractions, tuberculosis, and leprosy.

See A Blunder in Poisons, by C. F. Nichols, M. D.; The Recrudescence of Leprosy, by William Tebb, M. D.; A Century of Vaccination, by William S. Tebb, M. D.

When a man has treated hundreds of cases of smallpox, both under sporadic and epidemic conditions, through many years and at all seasons, he comes to the decided conclusion that vaccination has not the remotest effect on the outbreak, course, or issue of the disease.

D. Josef Hermann, Chief of the Imperial Wiede Hospital, Vienna, from 1858 to 1884; from the Naturarzt.

All such "regulations" and orders must be reasonable in order to be valid and binding.

Parker & W. Public Health & Safety, § 86, p. 98, and note; State ex rel. Cedar Rapids v. Holcomb, 68 Iowa, 107, 56 Am. Rep. 853, 26 N. W. 33; Cushing v. Board of Health, 13 N. Y. S. R. 783; Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. p. 240; Hayes v. Appleton, 24 Wis. 542; Barking v. West, 29 Wis. 307, 9 Am. Rep. 576.

The constitutional limitations upon the exercise of legislative powers by the state are equally applicable to the exercise of such powers by municipal corporations.

Parker & W. Public Health & Safety,

pp. 74, 75, § 62; Cooley, Const. Lim. pp. 238, 239.

The right to life includes the right of the individual to his body in its completeness and without dismemberment.

Bertholf v. O'Reilly, 74 N. Y. 509, 30 Am. Rep. 323; Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 30 L. ed. 220, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1064.

Mr. Hugh Bancroft, for plaintiff:

The legislature has the power to require all inhabitants of the commonwealth to be vaccinated, and to prescribe penalties for failure to comply with such requirement. It has an extensive, undefined power, usually called the police power, to pass laws for the common good.

Lawton v. Steele, 152 U. S. 133, 38 L. ed. 385, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 499; Com. v. Alger, 7 Cush. 53; Mass. Const. pt. 2, chap. 1, § 4.

The police power of the legislature unquestionably extends to the protection and preservation of the public health.

Salem v. Eastern R. Co. 98 Mass. 431, 96 Am. Dec. 650; Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 36, 21 L. ed. 394; Boston Beer Co. v. Massachusetts, 97 U. S. 25, 24 L. ed. 989; Northwestern Fertilizing Co. v. Hyde Park, 97 U. S. 659, 24 L. ed. 1036.

The legislature determines what is for the public good, and its wide discretion cannot be controlled by the courts, unless its action is clearly evasive. It is not a question for the court whether vaccination is a preventive of smallpox.

Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 678, 32 L. ed. 253, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 992, 1257; Bancroft v. Cambridge, 126 Mass. 438.

The court may take judicial notice of the fact that vaccination is a successful, and the most effective known, preventive of one of the most dangerous diseases to which the human race is subject.

Duffield v. Williamsport School District, 162 Pa. 476, 25 L. R. A. 152, 29 Atl. 742; Morris v. Columbus, 102 Ga. 792, 42 L. R. A. 175, 66 Am. St. Rep. 243, 30 S. E. 850; State v. Hay, 126 N. C. 999, 49 L. R. A. 588, 78 Am. St. Rep. 691, 35 S. E. 459.

Familiar instances where natural liberty must yield to promote the common welfare are—

1. Quarantine.

Minneapolis, St. P. & S. Ste. M. R. Co. v. Milner, 57 Fed. 276; Haverty v. Bass, 66 Me. 71; Rev. Laws, chap. 75, § 131.

2. Conscription.

Lanahan v. Birge, 30 Conn. 438.

3. Prohibition and regulation of various trades and callings.

Northwestern Fertilizing Co. v. Hyde Park, 97 U. S. 659, 24 L. ed. 1036; Stone v. Mississippi, 101 U. S. 814, 25 L. ed. 1079; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 652, 31 L. ed. 205, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273; Fisher v. McGirr, 67 L. R. A.

1 Gray, 1, 61 Am. Dec. 381; Com. v. Waite, 11 Allen, 264, 87 Am. Dec. 711; Watertown v. Mayo, 109 Mass. 315, 12 Am. Rep. 694.

The legislature may impose penalties for the violation of any laws which it has the power to enact. When such a penalty is imposed after a conviction by a jury in the usual way there is no deprivation of property without due process of law.

Southern Exp. Co. v. Com. 92 Va. 59, 41 L. R. A. 436, 22 S. E. 809; New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. New York, 165 U. S. 628, 41 L. ed. 853, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 418; Ex parte Kinnebrew, 35 Fed. 52.

This act confers on the local boards of health no power of legislation, but gives them discretion as to the execution of the law, to which no valid objection can be made.

Stone v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. 116 U. S. 307, 29 L. ed. 636, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 334, 388, 1191; People v. Long Island R. Co. 134 N. Y. 506, 31 N. E. 873.

It is frequent and usual for the legislature to confer such discretionary power on the local boards of health.

Salem v. Eastern R. Co. 98 Mass. 431, 96 Am. Dec. 650.

Legislation requiring vaccination, or authorizing some local board to require it, as a prerequisite to attendance at school, has always been sustained.

Abeel v. Clark, 84 Cal. 226, 24 Pac. 383; Bissell v. Darison, 65 Conn. 183, 29 L. R. A. 251, 32 Atl. 348; Duffield v. Williamsport School District, 162 Pa. 476, 25 L. R. A. 152, 29 Atl. 742; Re Walters, 84 Hun, 457, 32 N. Y. Supp. 322; Re Rebenack, 62 Mo. App. 8.

Legislation requiring vaccination is mentioned as a proper exercise of the police power in a leading case in the Supreme Court of the United States.

Lawton v. Steele, 152 U. S. 133, 38 L. ed. 385, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 499.

Statutes substantially the same as the one before us have been upheld.

Morris v. Columbus, 102 Ga. 792, 42 L. R. A. 175, 66 Am. St. Rep. 243, 30 S. E. 850; State v. Hay, 126 N. C. 999, 49 L. R. A. 588, 78 Am. St. Rep. 691, 35 S. E. 459; Levin v. Burlington, 129 N. C. 184, 55 L. R. A. 396, 39 S. E. 822.

Knowlton, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

These are complaints against the respective defendants for refusing to comply with a requirement of the board of health of Cambridge made on February 27, 1902, under Rev. Laws, chap. 75, § 137, ordering that all the inhabitants of the city who had not been successfully vaccinated since March 1, 1897, be vaccinated or revaccinated. The order recites that smallpox has been prevalent to some extent in the city of Cambridge, and still continues to increase; that it is necessary, for the speedy extermination of the disease, that all persons not protected by vaccination should be vaccinated; and that, in the opinion of the board, the public health and safety require the vaccination or revaccination of all the inhabitants of Cambridge. At the trial of each case there was uncontradicted evidence of the adoption of the order making the requirement by the board of health, and that the chairman of the board of health called upon the defendant and informed him that, if he refused to be vaccinated, he would incur the penalty of $5 provided by the statute, and would be prosecuted therefor, and then and there offered to vaccinate the defendant without any expense to him, and that he then and there absolutely refused to be vaccinated. The requirement of the board of health follows exactly the provisions of the statute. In each case the defense principally relied on is founded upon the refusal of the court to comply with numerous requests for rulings, which, in a variety of forms, called for an instruction that the statute was in violation of the Constitution of Massachusetts and of the Constitution of the United States.

In the second of the cases there is also an exception to the exclusion of evidence offered by the defendant to prove numerous propositions in regard to vaccination, chiefly relating to the alleged injurious and dangerous effects of it. We will consider the cases first in reference to the constitutionality of the statute, without regard to the evidence which was excluded. This statute is as follows: "The board of health of a city or town, if, in its opinion, it is necessary for the public health or safety, shall require and enforce the vaccination and revaccination of all the inhabitants thereof, and shall provide them with the means of free vaccination. Whoever, being over twenty-one years of age and not under guardianship, refuses or neglects to comply with such requirement, shall forfeit $5." Its language, considered in connection with facts of common knowledge, makes its object plain. It was enacted with a view to the enforcement of necessary measures for the prevention of smallpox. That such an object is worthy of the intelligent thought and earnest endeavor of legislators is too plain for discussion. Under the police power there is general legislative authority to make laws for the common good. Article 4, § 1, chap. 1, of the second part of the Constitution of Massachusetts, states more fully than most constitutions the nature of this power, when it gives authority to "the said general court from time to time to make, ordain, and establish all manner of wholesome and reasonable orders, laws, statutes, ordinances, directions, and instructions, either with penalties or without, so as the same be not repugnant or contrary to this Constitution, as they shall judge to be for the good and welfare of this commonwealth," etc. That this power extends to the protection and preservation of the public health is not questioned. Salem v. Eastern R. Co. 98 Mass. 431, 96 Am. Dec. 650; Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 36-62, 21 L. ed. 391-404; Boston Beer Co. v. Massachusetts, 97 U. S. 25-33, 24 L. ed. 989-992; Northwestern Fertilizing Co. v. Hyde Park, 97 U. S. 659-669, 24 L. ed. 1030-1039. The rights of individuals must yield, if necessary, when the welfare of the whole community is at stake. This is true of the right to personal liberty as well as the right to property. People ex rel. Neckamcus v. Warden of City Prison, 144 N. Y. 329-535, 27 L. R. A. 718, 39 N. E. 686. Sometimes it is necessary that persons be held in quarantine. Rev. Laws, chap. 75, § 131; Haverty v. Bass, 66 Me. 71; Minneapolis, St. P. & S. Ste. M. R. Co. v. Milner, 57 Fed. 276. Conscriptio may be authorized if the life of the nation is in peril. See Lanahan v. Birge, 30 Conn. 438. The use or sale of certain kinds of property may be regulated or prohibited. Fisher v. McGirr, 1 Gray, 1, 61 Am. Dec. 381; Com. v. Waite, 11 Allen, 264, 87 Am. Dec. 711; Watertown v. Mayo, 109 Mass. 315, 12 Am. Rep. 604; Northwestern Fertilizing Co. v. Hyde Park, 97 U. S. 659, 24 L. ed. 1036; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 652, 31 L. ed. 205, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273. In these and other ways the liberty of the individual may be interfered with whenever the general welfare requires a course of proceedings to which certain persons object because of their peculiar opinions or special individual interests.

It is a fact of common knowledge that smallpox is a terrible disease, whose ravages have sometimes swept away thousands of human beings in a few weeks. It is equally well known that a large majority of the medical profession and of people generally consider vaccination, repeated at intervals of a few years, a preventive of the disease. So far as we are aware, all courts that have considered the subject have recognized the right of the legislature to enact laws founded upon the theory that vaccination is important as a preventive of smallpox, and to impose restrictions, during an epidemic, upon persons who have not been vaccinated. There are some cases in which it has been held that the statute did not go far enough to authorize the restrictions which the authorities sought to impose.

Re Smith, 146 N. Y. 68, 28 L. R. A. 820, 48 Am. St. Rep. 769, 40 N. E. 497; State ex rel. Adams v. Burdge, 95 Wis. 390, 37 L. R. A. 157, 60 Am. St. Rep. 123, 70 N. W. 347; Potts v. Breen, 167 Ill. 67, 39 L. R. A. 152, 59 Am. St. Rep. 262, 47 N. E. 81; Mathews v. Kalamazoo Bd. of Edu. 127 Mich. 530, 54 L. R. A. 736, 86 N. W. 1036. But these assume that the legislature may interfere with the exercise of the ordinary rights of individuals if they are not vaccinated when smallpox is prevalent. Legislation requiring vaccination, or authorizing some local board to require it, as a prerequisite to attendance at school, has been sustained whenever called in question. Duffield v. Williamsport School District, 162 Pa. 476, 25 L. R. A. 152, 29 Atl. 742; Bissell v. Davison, 65 Conn. 183, 29 L. R. A. 251, 32 Atl. 348; Abel v. Clark, 84 Cal. 226, 24 Pac. 383; Blue v. Beach, 155 Ind. 121, 50 L. R. A. 64, 80 Am. St. Rep. 195, 56 N. E. 89; Re Walters, 84 Hun, 457, 32 N. Y. Supp. 322; Re Rebenack, 62 Mo. App. 8. Legislation requiring vaccination is mentioned as a proper exercise of the police power in Lawton v. Steele, 152 U. S. 133-136, 38 L. ed. 385-388, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 499. Statutes substantially the same as the one now before us have been sustained, after careful consideration, by the highest courts of Georgia and North Carolina. Morris v. Columbus, 102 Ga. 792, 42 L. R. A. 175, 66 Am. St. Rep. 243, 30 S. E. 850; State v. Hay, 126 N. C. 999, 49 L. R. A. 588, 78 Am. St. Rep. 691, 35 S. E. 459; Levin v. Burlington, 129 N. C. 184, 55 L. R. A. 396, 39 S. E. 822.

Let us consider the offer of evidence which was made by the defendant Jacobson. The ninth of the propositions which he offered to prove, as to what vaccination consists of, is nothing more than a fact of common knowledge, upon which the statute is founded, and proof of it was unnecessary and immaterial. The thirteenth and fourteenth involved matters depending upon his personal opinion, which could not be taken as correct or given effect merely because he made it a ground of refusal to comply with the requirement. Moreover, his views could not affect the validity of the statute, nor entitle him to be excepted from its provisions. Com. v. Connelly, 163 Mass. 539, 40 N. E. 862; Com. v. Has, 122 Mass. 40; Reynolds v. United States, 98 U. S. 145, 25 L. ed. 244; Reg. v. Doynes, 13 Cox, C. C. 111. The other eleven propositions all relate to alleged injurious or dangerous effects of vaccination. The defendant "offered to prove and show by competent evidence" these so-called facts. Each of them, in its nature, is such that it cannot be stated as a truth, otherwise than as a matter of opinion. The only "competent evidence" that could be presented to the court to prove these propositions was the testimony of experts giving their opinions. It would not have been competent to introduce the medical history of individual cases. Assuming that medical experts could have been found who would have testified in support of these propositions, and that it had become the duty of the judge, in accordance with the law as stated in Com. v. Anthes, 5 Gray, 185, to instruct the jury as to whether or not the statute is constitutional, he would have been obliged to consider the evidence in connection with facts of common knowledge, which the court will always regard in passing upon the constitutionality of a statute. He would have considered this testimony of experts in connection with the facts that for nearly a century most of the members of the medical profession have regarded vaccination, repeated after intervals, as a preventive of smallpox; that, while they have recognized the possibility of injury to an individual from carelessness in the performance of it, or even, in a conceivable case, without carelessness, they generally have considered the risk of such an injury too small to be seriously weighed as against the benefits coming from the discreet and proper use of the preventive; and that not only the medical profession and the people generally have for a long time entertained these opinions, but legislatures and courts have acted upon them with general unanimity. If the defendant had been permitted to introduce such expert testimony as he had in support of these several propositions, it could not have changed the result. It would not have justified the court in holding that the legislature had transcended its power in enacting this statute on their judgment of what the welfare of the people demands.

An elaborate argument has been addressed to us upon the effect of the quoted words "wholesome and reasonable" in our Constitution. It is at least doubtful whether these words, considered in connection with accompanying provisions, restrict our general court in the exercise of the police power, otherwise than by the constitutional limitations upon this power which exist under the Constitutions of most of the other states of this country. It is generally held that, if a statute purports to be enacted to promote the general welfare of the people, and is not at variance with any provision of the Constitution, the question whether it will be for the good of the community is a legislative, and not a judicial question. Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 678, 684, 686, 32 L. ed. 253, 256, 257, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 992, 1257; Fick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 370, 371, 30 L. ed. 220, 226, 227, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1064; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 662, 31 L. ed. 205, 210, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273; Bancroft v. Cambridge, 126 Mass. 438-441; Com. v. Blackington, 24 Pick. 352-357; Com. v. Alger, 7 Cush. 53, 96, 102; Watertown v. Mayo, 109 Mass. 315, 12 Am. Rep. 694; Re House Bill, No. 1230, 163 Mass. 589, 595, 28 L. R. A. 344, 40 N. E. 713; Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 98, 110, 50 Am. Rep. 636; People v. Gillson, 109 N. Y. 389-401, 4 Am. St. Rep. 465, 17 N. E. 343. If a law relates to a subject in regard to which the general court is authorized to legislate, this court is not justified in setting aside the statute as unreasonable and unconstitutional merely because the judges differ in opinion from the legislators on the question whether it will "be for the good and welfare of this commonwealth." But if a statute invades personal rights to liberty or property, and is not directed to the promotion of the general welfare, but is an evasion of the principles on which legislative action should be founded and by which it should be regulated, and is thus an abuse of legislative power, it should be declared unconstitutional.

We see no reason for regarding the present statute as outside of legislative authority to enact it. Plainly, it is wholesome and reasonable in the sense that it relates to a subject about which the legislature may well concern itself. There is no reason for holding that the measures authorized by it do not relate directly to the promotion of the intended object. The theoretical possibility of an injury in an individual case as a result of its enforcement does not show that, as a whole, it is unreasonable. The application of a good law to an exceptional case may work hardship. There is no reason to suppose that the enforcement of the requirement, in the present case, was conducted harshly. Naturally, there would be regard to temporary conditions, if they became important, as to the time and manner of its enforcement. If a person should deem it important that vaccination should not be performed in his case, and the authorities should think otherwise, it is not in their power to vaccinate him by force, and the worst that could happen to him under the statute would be the payment of the penalty of $5.

The defendants' contention that the statute works unequally, in making an exception of minors and persons under guardianship, is not well founded. It only limits the liability to a penalty for neglect of the requirement to persons who have a right to control their own conduct.

We are of opinion that the statute is constitutional, and that there was no error at the trial. In each case the entry must be:

Exceptions overruled.

Affirmed by Supreme Court of United States February 20, 1905.

MONTANA SUPREME COURT.

SILVER CAMP MINING COMPANY et al., Respts.,
v.

Ferdinand DICKERT, Appt.

(.....Mont.....)

1. An action to compel specific performance of a contract to convey real estate is one in personam.
2. Service of summons by publication will not confer jurisdiction to compel a nonresident to perform his contract to convey real estate located within the state.
3. A statute providing for service of process on nonresident defendants by publication will be construed to apply to cases where, under recognized principles of law, suits may be instituted against such defendants, and will not be held to confer jurisdiction in case of service of process in that manner in a suit merely in personam.

(December 24, 1904.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Lewis and Clarke County in favor of plaintiffs in a suit to enforce specific performance of a contract to convey real estate. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. William Wallace, Jr., and Word & Word, for appellant:

This action is one in personam, and not one in rem.

Spurr v. Scoville, 3 Cush. 578; Close v. Wheaton, 65 Kan. 830, 70 Pac. 891; Hart v. Sansom, 110 U. S. 151, 28 L. ed. 101, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 586; Viele v. Van Steenberg, 31 Fed. 252; Arndt v. Griggs, 134 U. S. 316, 33 L. ed. 918, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 557; Massie v. Watts, 6 Cranch, 159, 3 L. ed. 185; Bennett v. Fenton, 10 L. R. A. 500, 41 Fed. 283; Roller v. Holly, 176 U. S. 399, 44 L. ed. 520, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 410; Ormsby

NOTE.—As to validity of personal judgments rendered upon constructive service of process, see, in this series, Moyer v. Bucks, 16 L. R. A. 231, and note.

As to what service of process is sufficient to constitute due process of law as basis of judgment in personam, see note to Pinney v. Providence Loan & Invest. Co. 50 L. R. A. 577, 67 L. R. A.

v. Ottman, 29 C. C. A. 295, 56 U. S. App. 510, 85 Fed. 492; Ætna L. Ins. Co. v. Lyon County, 95 Fed. 331; Cooper v. Newell, 173 U. S. 567, 43 L. ed. 812, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 506; Cabanne v. Graf, 87 Minn. 513, 59 L. R. A. 735, 94 Am. St. Rep. 722, 92 N. W. 461; Davis v. Parker, 14 Allen, 94; First Nat. Bank v. Henry, 156 Ind. 1, 58 N. E. 1057; Wood v. Warner, 15 N. J. Eq. 81; Needham v. Thayer, 147 Mass. 536, 18 N. E. 429; Merrill v. Beckwith, 163 Mass. 503, 40 N. E. 855; 1 Elliott, Gen. Pr. § 244; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 744; Lehigh v. Green, 193 U. S. 79, 48 L. ed. 623, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 390; Hill v. Henry (N. J. Eq.) 57 Atl. 554; Eliot v. McCormick, 144 Mass. 10, 10 N. E. 705; McKinney v. Collins, 88 N. Y. 216; Fowler v. Fowler, 204 Ill. 82, 68 N. E. 414. See note to Pinney v. Providence Loan & Invest. Co. 50 L. R. A. 577.

Mr. T. J. Walsh, for respondents:

In an action touching or affecting the title to property within the state, whether the same is made the subject of the action by virtue of the averments of the complaint, or has been seized and held by virtue of the process of the court, service may be made by publication under statutes authorizing that procedure.

In an action for specific performance of a contract it is within the power of the court to provide in the decree that, upon failure of the defendant to execute the conveyance, a commissioner appointed by the court should execute it in his behalf.

Muller v. Buyck, 12 Mont. 354, 30 Pac. 386; Finlen v. Heinze, 28 Mont. 548, 73 Pac. 123.

There is no constitutional objection to service by publication in an action for specific performance.

Boswell v. Otis, 9 How. 336, 13 L. ed. 164; Seculovich v. Morton, 101 Cal. 677, 40 Am. St. Rep. 106, 36 Pac. 387; O'Sullivan v. Overton, 56 Conn. 102, 14 Atl. 300; Mason v. Benedict, 43 La. Ann. 397, 8 So. 931; Porter Land & Water Co. v. Baskin, 43 Fed. 323; Perkins v. Wakeham, 86 Cal. 580, 21 Am. St. Rep. 67, 25 Pac. 51; Loaiza v. Superior Court, 85 Cal. 11, 9 L. R. A. 376, 20 Am. St. Rep. 197, 24 Pac. 707; 20 Enc. Pl. & Pr. p. 409; Roller v. Holly, 176 U. S. 398, 44 L. ed. 520, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 410; Lynch v. Murphy, 161 U. S. 247, 40 L. ed. 688, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 523; Morris v. Graham, 51 Fed. 56; United States v. Southern P. R. Co. 63 Fed. 485; Dillon v. Heller, 39 Kan. 599, 18 Pac. 693.

On motion for rehearing.

As a suit for specific performance is usually in personam, the defendant must be personally served with process in order to confer jurisdiction upon the court. But, where property which is the subject-matter of the contract is within the territorial jurisdiction of the court, and the defendant is beyond the jurisdiction, the suit is substantially one in rem, and service by publication is sufficient to confer jurisdiction upon the court to bind the property by its decree.

20 Enc. Pl. & Pr. p. 409.

There is no constitutional objection whatever to the entry of a judgment in an action for specific performance against a defendant served by publication, with reference to property which is within the jurisdiction of the court.

Boswell v. Otis, 9 How. 336, 13 L. ed. 164; Cooper v. Reynolds, 10 Wall. 308, 19 L. ed. 931; Hart v. Sansom, 110 U. S. 151, 28 L. ed. 101, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 586; Arndt v. Griggs, 134 U. S. 316, 33 L. ed. 918, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 557; Galpin v. Page, 3 Sawy. 93, Fed. Cas. No. 5,206; Single v. Scott Paper Mfg. Co. 55 Fed. 553; Jennings v. Rocky Bar Gold Min. Co. 29 Wash. 726, 70 Pac. 136; Robbins v. Martin, 43 La. Ann. 488, 9 So. 112; Reeves v. Pierce, 64 Kan. 502, 67 Pac. 1108; Robinson v. Kind, 23 Nev. 330, 47 Pac. 1, 977; Rourke v. McLaughlin, 38 Cal. 196; Dillon v. Heller, 39 Kan. 599, 18 Pac. 693; Corson v. Shoemaker, 55 Minn. 386, 57 N. W. 134; Lynch v. Murphy, 161 U. S. 247, 40 L. ed. 688, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 523; Morris v. Graham, 51 Fed. 53; United States v. Southern P. R. Co. 63 Fed. 481.

Holloway, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action, brought by the Silver Camp Mining Company and another against Ferdinand Dickert, to enforce the specific performance of a contract to convey certain real estate situate in Lewis and Clarke County, Montana, and to compel the defendant, Dickert, to make an assignment of certain dividends. At the time this action was commenced, and so far as this record shows, at all times therein mentioned, Dickert was not a resident of the state of Montana, he being a resident of the state of Utah. The plaintiffs made affidavit for publication of summons, secured an order to that effect, and then made service on the defendant in Utah under the provisions of § 638 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The defendant appeared specially and challenged the jurisdiction of the court. This appeal is from the judgment.

Three questions are presented for solution: First. Is the action for specific performance of a contract to convey real estate one in personam? Second. Will service of summons by publication warrant a judgment in personam? Third. Does a general statute providing for the publication of summons in civil actions abrogate the common-law rule which requires personal service of summons in actions in personam?

1. As to the first question. Conceding that there may be some conflict in the authorities respecting this, the decided weight of authority is in favor of an affirmative answer, though the courts holding this view have not always been in harmony as to the reasons, or as to the extent to which the doctrine should be carried. As early as 3 Cushing this question was before the supreme court of Massachusetts, and, respecting it, that court said: "The simple question raised in the case is whether the court can proceed in this suit against the defendant, he not being at the commencement of the suit, or now, within the jurisdiction of this court, but being then and now an inhabitant of and within the state of Connecticut. This is strictly a proceeding in personam. There is but one person who is the party defendant, and he is not a passive party, but must be eminently active in the performance of any decree which may be made against him. The whole object of the bill is to compel the defendant to execute a conveyance of land, as is alleged, according to his contract." Spurr v. Scoville, 3 Cush. 578. This doctrine is reaffirmed by the same court in Davis v. Parker, 14 Allen, 94, and Merrill v. Beckwith, 163 Mass. 503, 40 N. E. 855. In Close v. Wheaton, 65 Kan. 830, 70 Pac. 891, it is said: "The character of an action for specific performance as in personam entirely is so well established that courts having jurisdiction of the parties frequently entertain suits to compel the execution of contracts for the conveyance of lands in other states, in which, of course, their decrees as to the res cannot operate. Lindley v. O'Reilly, 50 N. J. L. 636, 1 L. R. A. 79, 7 Am. St. Rep. 802, 15 Atl. 379. Sometimes a question may exist as to whether the complaining party may not have such peculiar interest in the property as to entitle him to the enforcement of a trust, and not of contract merely (Merrill v. Beckwith, 163 Mass. 503, 40 N. E. 855), in which event the action might be local, and not transitory; but the plaintiffs in this case have neither stated in their pleadings, nor claimed before us, such character of right. We are therefore well convinced that the inherent nature of the ordinary proceeding to compel a vendor to comply with his contract, as contract, by the execution of a deed, makes the action one in personam, which can be brought only where the defendant resides or may be legally served with personal process." The supreme court of Indiana, in Coon v. Cook, 6 Ind. 268, said: "For the reversal of this decree it is contended: (1) That the land in question, being in Hancock county, the circuit court of Henry county had no jurisdiction of the subject-matter in controversy. This objection is not tenable. We concur with the appellee's counsel that the present, being a suit for a specific performance of a contract, operates on the person, and may properly be instituted in any county where the contractor resides." This is approved and followed in Dehart v. Dehart, 15 Ind. 167. In McQuerry v. Gilliland, 89 Ky. 434, 7 L. R. A. 454, 12 S. W. 1037, the court said: "The court is of the opinion that in case of fraud, of trust, or of contract, the jurisdiction of a court of chancery is sustainable wherever the person be found, although lands not within the jurisdiction of that court may be affected by the decree." In such case the subject-matter is not that of the recovery of land. In other words, it is not an action in rem. The court need not have the land before it in order to be able to render a judgment; but the action is in personam, for the purpose of enforcing a personal obligation of contract or of trust. It is true that the title to land is to be affected by the decree, in so far as it compels the party to convey; but, as said, by reason of his trust or contract duty, he is personally obliged to convey, and that duty may be discharged in one state as well as another, although the land may not be situated in such state. It is the breach of trust or contract to convey that may be complied with, without regard to the location of the land, that gives the right of action in personam." In Brown v. Desmond, 100 Mass. 267, the court said: "A suit for specific performance of a contract for the conveyance of land proceeds in personam." This doctrine is affirmed by the supreme court of Indiana in Bethell v. Bethell, 92 Ind. 318. As if to place particular emphasis upon the view that an action to enforce the specific performance of a contract to convey land operates strictly in personam, the chancery courts in England and of many of the states in this country have repeatedly held that such an action may be commenced in, and relief had from, a court having jurisdiction of the parties, even though the land to be affected lies in another state or in a foreign country. Penn v. Baltimore, 1 Ves. Sr. 444; Cranstown v. Johnaton, 3 Ves. Jr. 170; Ward v. Arredondo, Hopk. Ch. 213, 14 Am. Dec. 543; Sutphen v. Fowler, 9 Paige, 280; Newton v. Bronson, 13 N. Y. 587, 67 Am. Dec. 89; Davis v. Headley, 22 N. J. Eq. 115; Massie v. Watts, 6 Cranch, 148, 3 L. ed. 181. The doctrine is broadly stated by Story as follows: "The proposition may, therefore, be laid down in the most general form that, to entitle a court of equity to maintain a bill for the specific performance of a contract respecting land, it is not necessary that the land should be situate within the jurisdiction of the state or country where the suit is brought. It is sufficient that the parties to be affected and bound by the decree are resident within the state or country where the suit is brought, for in all suits in equity the primary decree is in personam, and not in rem. The incapacity to enforce the decree in rem constitutes no objection to the right to entertain such a suit." 1 Story, Eq. Jur. 10th ed. § 744; Brown v. Desmond, 100 Mass. 267; Elliott, Gen. Pr. § 244; Close v. Wheaton, 65 Kan. 830, 70 Pac. 891. As further illustrating the view that this character of action is purely in personam, and that a statute of the character of our § 610 of the Code of Civil Procedure has no application to an action to enforce the specific performance of a contract for the conveyance of real estate, the supreme court of Washington, in Morgan v. Bell, 3 Wash. 554, 16 L. R. A. 614, 28 Pac. 925, said: "The first point argued by the appellant is that this is an action affecting the title to the real estate, and should have been brought in Clallam county, where the land is situated, by virtue of § 47 of the Code, which provides that actions for the recovery of, for the possession of, for the partition of, for the foreclosure of a mortgage on, or for the determination of all questions affecting the title, or for any injuries to, real property, shall be commenced in the county or district in which the subject of action, or some part thereof, is situated. We do not think this is the character of cases contemplated by the statute. The title to this land was not in dispute, and could not be affected by the decree of the court, under the pleadings. It is true that the court could decree a specific performance of the contract, under the allegations of the complaint, but it would be a decree affecting the parties to the action personally. It would not determine any question affecting the title, in the sense in which the word 'title' is evidently employed in the statute."

For the purpose of differentiating between the legal effects which flow from that class of actions wherein service of summons may be properly made by publication and actions strictly in personam, reference is had to the language used by the Supreme Court in Cooper v. Reynolds, 10 Wall. 308, 19 L. ed. 931. The court there had under consideration an action which grew out of an action for damages, wherein summons had been served by publication, and in which property of one of the defendants which was within the jurisdiction of the court had been seized by attachment and sold under execution to Cooper. The original owner of the property, who was a defendant in that action, then brought ejectment against

Cooper, who asserted title under the sheriff's deed. After reviewing the proceedings had in the original action for damages, the court carefully reviewed the whole subject, and announced a rule which has since been followed. The court said: "But the plaintiff is met at the commencement of his proceedings by the fact that the defendant is not within that territorial jurisdiction, and cannot be served with any process by which he can be brought personally within the power of the court. For this difficulty the statute has provided a remedy. It says that, upon affidavit being made of that fact, a writ of attachment may be issued and levied on any of the defendant's property, and a publication may be made warning him to appear, and that thereafter the court may proceed in the case, whether he appears or not. If the defendant appears, the cause becomes mainly a suit in personam, with the added incident that the property attached remains liable, under the control of the court, to answer to any demand which may be established against the defendant by the final judgment of the court. But if there is no appearance of the defendant, and no service of process on him, the case becomes, in its essential nature, a proceeding in rem, the only effect of which is to subject the property attached to the payment of the demand which the court may find to be due to the plaintiff. That such is the nature of this proceeding in this latter class of cases is clearly evinced by two well-established propositions: First, the judgment of the court, though in form a personal judgment against the defendant, has no effect beyond the property attached in that suit. No general execution can be issued for any balance unpaid after the attached property is exhausted. No suit can be maintained on such a judgment in the same court or in any other, nor can it be used as evidence in any other proceeding not affecting the attached property, nor could the costs in that proceeding be collected of defendant out of any other property than that attached in the suit. Second, the court, in such a suit, cannot proceed unless the officer finds some property of defendant on which to levy the writ of attachment. A return that none can be found is the end of the case, and deprives the court of further jurisdiction, though the publication may have been duly made and proved in court."

2. As to the second question. If any doubt existed respecting the proper answer to be made to this inquiry, that doubt was settled by the Supreme Court of the United States in Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. ed. 585. In 1866, J. H. Mitchell obtained a judgment in the district court of Oregon against Neff, a nonresident of Oregon, for services alleged to have been rendered to Neff. Summons was served by publication, and Neff did not appear. Judgment was rendered by default. Execution was issued, and land belonging to Neff in Oregon was levied upon and sold to Pennoyer. Neff later returned and brought ejectment against Pennoyer, who pleaded title in himself, based upon the deed which he had received from the sheriff by virtue of the execution sale in Mitchell v. Neff. The validity of the judgment in Mitchell v. Neff was put directly in issue. Respecting the doctrine that a personal judgment can only be had after personal service on the defendant or his voluntary appearance in the action, the court said: "It is the only doctrine consistent with proper protection to citizens of other states. If, without personal service, judgments in personam, obtained ex parte against nonresidents and absent parties, upon mere publication of process, which, in the great majority of cases, would never be seen by the parties interested, could be upheld and enforced, they would be the constant instruments of fraud and oppression. Judgments for all sorts of claims upon contracts and for torts, real or pretended, would be thus obtained, under which property would be seized, when the evidence of the transactions upon which they were founded, if they ever had any existence, had perished. Substituted service by publication, or in any other authorized form, may be sufficient to inform parties of the object of proceedings taken, where property is once brought under the control of the court by seizure or some equivalent act. The law assumes that property is always in the possession of its owner, in person or by agent; and it proceeds upon the theory that its seizure will inform him, not only that it is taken into the custody of the court, but that he must look to any proceedings authorized by law upon such seizure for its condemnation and sale. Such service may also be sufficient in cases where the object of the action is to reach and dispose of property in the state, or of some interest therein, by enforcing a contract or a lien respecting the same, or to partition it among different owners, or, when the public is a party, to condemn and appropriate it for a public purpose. In other words, such service may answer in all actions which are substantially proceedings in rem. But where the entire object of the action is to determine the personal rights and obligations of the defendants,—that is, where the suit is merely in personam,—constructive service in this form upon a nonresident is ineffectual for any purpose." Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. ed. 565, is directly approved and followed by the Supreme Court in Hart v.

Sansom, 110 U. S. 151, 28 L. ed. 101, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 586, and the doctrine of that case reannounced in Leigh v. Green, 193 U. S. 79, 48 L. ed. 623, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 390. That doctrine has also been followed by the courts of last resort of several states where it has been in issue. In Eliot v. McCormick, 144 Mass. 10, 10 N. E. 705, it is said: "The Supreme Court of the United States has held, in recent decisions, that under this provision it is not competent for a state court to render a judgment in personam against a person who is not a resident of the state, who does not appear in the suit, and who is not served personally with process within the state. It is held that, where property of a nonresident defendant is found within the state, the state court may attach it on the writ, and may proceed to a judgment so far as to apply the property to the debt; but if there is no appearance of the defendant, and no personal service on him, a judgment rendered against him personally is void, and has no effect beyond the property attached; and no suit can be maintained on such a judgment, either in the same or any other court. Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. ed. 565; Freeman v. Alderson, 119 U. S. 185, 30 L. ed. 372, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 165." In Needham v. Thayer, 147 Mass. 536, 18 N. E. 429, the views of the court in Eliot v. McCormick, 144 Mass. 10, 10 N. E. 705, were adopted and followed, and it is there held that a judgment in personam against a person who is not a resident of the state in which the judgment is rendered, who has not been personally served in the state with summons, and who has not appeared in the action, is wholly void, and no suit can be maintained on it either in that or any other court; that the court obtained no jurisdiction, and its judgment has no force either in the state in which it is rendered or in any other state. Pennoyer v. Neff is also approved and followed in First Nat. Bank v. Henry, 156 Ind. 1, 53 N. E. 1057. In Hill v. Henry, 57 Atl. 554, the court of chancery of New Jersey said: "The following propositions have been established by the supreme court: First. That a personal judgment is without validity, if it be rendered by a state court in an action upon a money demand against a nonresident, proceeded against by publication, but not personally served with process within the state, and not appearing. Second. That no validity is imparted to such a judgment by the fact that the defendant has, at the time the action is commenced, property within the state, upon which a levy can be made under the judgment. Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. ed. 565." The supreme court of Minnesota, in Cabanne v. Graf, 87 Minn. 510, 59 L. R. A. 735, 94

Am. St. Rep. 722, 92 N. W. 461, said: "Prior to the decision in the case of Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. ed. 565, it was the law of this state, and in some other jurisdictions, that, if a nonresident defendant had property in this state, its courts had jurisdiction, without seizing it, to proceed by publication of the summons, and render a judgment in personam, valid within the state to the extent of any property of the defendant therein. Stone v. Myers, 9 Minn. 303, 86 Am. Dec. 104, Gil. 287; Cleland v. Tavernier, 11 Minn. 194, Gil. 126. Such, however, is not now the law, for a statute authorizing such a proceeding would not be due process of law. Kennedy v. Goergen, 36 Minn. 190, 31 N. W. 210; Lydiard v. Chute, 45 Minn. 277, 47 N. W. 967; Plummer v. Hatton, 51 Minn. 181, 53 N. W. 460. Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. ed. 565, is the leading authority in support of the now well-settled proposition that, except as to proceedings affecting the personal status of the plaintiff, or in rem, or as to actions to enforce liens, or to quiet title, or to recover possession of property, or for the partition thereof, or to set aside fraudulent transfers thereof, or to obtain judgment enforceable against property seized by attachment or other process, no state can authorize its courts to compel a citizen of another state remaining therein to come before them and submit to their decision a mere claim upon him for a money demand, no matter what the prescribed mode of service of process against him may be. An attempt to do so is not due process of law."

3. As to the third question. It is contended that it is competent for the state by statute to provide for valid service by publication in actions in personam. If this state has done so, the question of the constitutionality of such a statute might be involved. If it has not done so, that question is, of course, eliminated from consideration. Section 637 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides: "When the person on whom the service of a summons is to be made, resides out of the state, or has departed from the state, or cannot, after due diligence, be found within the state, or conceals himself to avoid the service of the summons; or when the defendant is a foreign corporation, having no managing or business agent, cashier, secretary, or other officer within the state, and an affidavit stating any of these facts is filed with the clerk of the court in which the action is brought, and such affidavit also states that a cause of action exists against the defendant in respect to whom the service of the summons is to be made, and that he or it is a necessary or proper party to the action, the clerk of the court in which the action is commenced shall cause the service of the summons to be made by publication thereof." Counsel for respondents cites Perkins v. Wakeham, 86 Cal. 580, 21 Am. St. Rep. 67, 25 Pac. 51, as sustaining the view that service of summons by publication in actions strictly in personam may be had under a statute similar to our § 637, above, and there is an expression to be found in the opinion of the court in that case bearing out that idea, and that case is apparently cited with approval in Seculovich v. Morton, 101 Cal. 673, 40 Am. St. Rep. 106, 36 Pac. 387, in an action to have a trust declared and enforced, and in which we are unable to see any applicability of the doctrine announced in Perkins v. Wakeham. In Loaiza v. Superior Court, 85 Cal. 11, 9 L. R. A. 376, 20 Am. St. Rep. 197, 24 Pac. 707, the same court had at great length reviewed the cases, and put itself in harmony with the weight of authority as we have outlined it, and distinguished between the classes of cases where service of summons may be made by publication and where it may not be, and in the latter class included actions strictly in personam; and this case was not alluded to or overruled in either of the cases cited above. An examination of the opinion in Perkins v. Wakeham, above, discloses that the decision of the court is made upon the theory that an action to quiet title, which was the form of action in that case, is one affecting the title to real estate. Whether that doctrine would be approved by this court is not decided; suffice it to say that the present action, being to enforce the specific performance of a contract, is not one which affects title to real estate, for, if it did, it could only be tried in the county where the real estate is situated, whereas the authorities are practically unanimous in holding that such an action may be tried where jurisdiction of the defendant is obtained, without reference to the location of the real estate. In Roller v. Holly, 176 U. S. 398, 44 L. ed. 520, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 410, a statute of Texas, as broad in its provisions as our § 637, above, was under consideration, and, respecting it, the court said: "It is true there is no statute of Texas specially authorizing a suit against a nonresident to enforce an equitable lien for purchase money, but article 1230 of the Code of Texas, hereinafter cited, contains a general provision for the institution of suits against absent and nonresident defendants, and lays down a method of procedure applicable to all such cases. Obviously this article has no application to suits in personam, as was held by the supreme court of Texas in York v. State, 73 Tex. 651, 11 S. W. 869; Kimmarle v. Houston & T. C. R. Co. 76 Tex. 686, 12 S. W.

698; Maddox v. Craig, 80 Tex. 600, 16 S. W. 328; and by this court in Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 723, 24 L. ed. 565, 569. The article must then be restricted to actions in rem; but to what class of actions, since none is mentioned specially in the article? We are bound to give it some effect. We cannot treat it as wholly nugatory, and, as it is impossible to say that it contemplates a procedure in one class of cases and not in another, we think the only reasonable construction is to hold that it applies to all cases where, under recognized principles of law, suits may be instituted against nonresident defendants." We prefer to adopt this view as more in consonance with reason and the general practice which has heretofore prevailed throughout this country.

The other questions involved in this case need not be considered. The court had no jurisdiction of the defendant. The judgment rendered is nugatory and is reversed, and the cause remanded.

Reversed and remanded.

Brantly, Ch. J., and Milburn, J., concur.

Petition for rehearing denied February 6, 1905.

NEW HAMPSHIRE SUPREME COURT.

STATE of New Hampshire ex rel. Martha S. MUNSEY

v.

M. Swain CLOUGH.

(72 N. H. 178.)

1. Failure of the governor's warrant, for the arrest and rendition of an alleged fugitive from justice, to state that the person whose arrest is directed is a fugitive from justice, does not require his release in habeas corpus proceedings, where the written evidence required by law for the issuance of the warrant is before the court, and is legally sufficient to support a finding of such fact.
2. That one of the crimes for which an alleged fugitive from justice is indicted was committed after his departure from the state, and that in case he is returned to the state, he may be tried on that charge, do not remove him from the class of persons liable to rendition under the Federal Constitution, where the indictment also charges the commission of other crimes before the date of his departure.
3. The finding of the governor that an alleged fugitive from justice is such, and should be returned to the state from which he fled, is subject to review by the courts in a habeas corpus proceeding to obtain his release from custody under the governor's warrant.
4. A finding that an accused is a fugitive from justice is not precluded by the fact that the indictment shows that the offenses were committed more than six years before the indictment was found.

NOTE.—As to who are fugitives subject to extradition, see, in this series, State v. Hall, 28 L. R. A. 289 and note; Re Sultan, 28 L. R. A. 294; Drinkall v. Spiegel, 36 L. R. A. 486; Ex parte Tod, 47 L. R. A. 566, and People ex rel. Corkran v. Hyatt, 60 L. R. A. 774.

As to presumption that warrant for arrest was granted on competent proof that person was a fugitive from justice, see State ex rel. McNichols v. Justus, 55 L. R. A. 325. 67 L. R. A.

5. A governor's warrant for the arrest of a fugitive from justice is not void because it describes the offense as uttering forged wills, where the indictment in each count charged the uttering and publication as true of "a certain forged instrument purporting to be a will," where, by reference to the indictment, the meaning of the warrant is rendered plain and definite.

6. A joinder in one indictment of several counts charging distinct offenses will not prevent the rendition of accused as a fugitive from justice,—at least if, under the laws of the state where the indictment was found, it was sufficient to support a conviction under one of the counts.

7. A clerical error in the affidavit of the clerk of court, to the effect that an indictment was found in 1892, does not preclude the governor from finding that it was in fact found in 1902, for the purpose of upholding a proceeding for the interstate rendition of one accused of crime.

8. The addressing of the governor's warrant for the rendition of a fugitive from justice to a local officer, rather than to the agent of the demanding state, affords no reason for the discharge of the accused from custody, where the statute merely directs that the warrant shall authorize the agent to take and transport the fugitive out of the state without prescribing to whom it shall be addressed.

On Second Hearing.

9. One whose rendition is sought from a sister state as a fugitive from justice is not entitled, as matter of right, to a hearing before the governor upon the question whether or not he is such fugitive.

10. A governor, in determining whether or not one whose rendition is demanded by a sister state is in fact a fugitive from justice, is not precluded from receiving evidence that falls to meet the requirements of legal proof.

11. The governor's order directing the rendition of a person as a fugitive from justice is not nullified by the fact that he acted upon copies of affidavits showing that accused was a fugitive from justice, the originals of which were on file with the governor of the demanding state, rather than requiring the originals to be produced before him.

(December 27, 1902.)

TRANSFER by the Superior Court for Merrimack County on relator's exceptions for the opinion of the Supreme Court of a petition for a writ of habeas corpus to discharge petitioner from custody to which she had been committed under extradition proceedings. Overruled.

Statement by Walker, J.:

The defendant, who is the sheriff of the county, states in his return that he has the custody of the relator under a warrant from the governor of this state issued on the requisition of the governor of Massachusetts. The warrant recites that "it has been represented to me by the acting governor of the commonwealth of Massachusetts that Martha S. Munsey stands charged with the crime of uttering forged wills, which he certifies to me to be a crime under the laws of said commonwealth, committed in the county of Middlesex, in said commonwealth, and has taken refuge in the state of New Hampshire; and the said governor of Massachusetts having, in pursuance of the Constitution and laws of the United States, demanded of me that I shall cause the said Martha S. Munsey to be arrested and delivered to Jophanus H. Whitney, who is duly authorized to receive her into his custody, and convey her back to the said commonwealth of Massachusetts; and whereas, the said representation and demand is accompanied by certified copy of an indictment, whereby the said Martha S. Munsey is shown to have been duly charged with the said crime, and with having fled from said commonwealth, and taken refuge in the state of New Hampshire, which is duly certified by the acting governor of Massachusetts to be authentic and duly authenticated: Therefore, you are required to arrest and secure the said Martha S. Munsey wherever she may be found within this state, and afford her such opportunity to sue out a writ of habeas corpus as is prescribed by the laws of this state, and to thereafter deliver her into the custody of the said Jophanus H. Whitney to be taken back to the said commonwealth from which she fled, pursuant to the said requisition." From the copy of the indictment referred to it appears that the relator was indicted by the grand jury of the county of Middlesex, in Massachusetts, on the second Monday of February, 1892, in which it is charged that the relator, on February 28, 1895, "at Cambridge, in the county of Middlesex, aforesaid, with intent to injure and defraud, did utter and publish as true a certain forged instrument purporting to be a will, well knowing the same to be forged." In the second and third counts she is charged with similar offenses committed, respectively, on May 17, 1895, and November 20, 1901. In each count the alleged forged will is set out in full. In the certificate of the clerk of the court it was stated that the indictment is pending it was stated that the indictment was found and returned "on the second Monday of February, A. D. 1892." The requisition papers also contain the affidavit of Whitney, in which it is stated that the relator has "fled from the limits of said commonwealth, and is a fugitive from justice;" also that "at the time of the commission of said crime she was in the state of Massachusetts; . . . that she fled from said commonwealth of Massachusetts on or about the 4th day of November, A. D. 1901; that she is not now within the limits of the commonwealth, but, as I have reason to believe, is now in Pittsfield, in the state of New Hampshire." The affidavit of the district attorney was submitted to the governor, in which he refers to Martha S. Munsey as one "who stands charged by indictment with the crime of uttering forged wills, committed in the county of Middlesex on the 28th day of February, A. D. 1895, on the 17th day of May, A. D. 1895, and on the 20th day of November, A. D. 1901, and who, to avoid prosecution, fled from the jurisdiction of this commonwealth, and is now a fugitive from justice, and, as I am informed, is within the jurisdiction of said state of New Hampshire. And I further certify that the offense charged against the said fugitive is a felony, and that said offense and punishment therefor is defined in § 1 of chapter 204 of the Public Statutes. Application for the arrest and return of the said fugitive has not been made sooner because the indictment was not found by the grand jury until the February sitting of the superior court in the year 1902." The relator, claiming that on the face of the documents submitted to the governor he was not authorized to issue his warrant, and that the warrant is defective, made a motion for her discharge, which was denied, subject to exception.

Mr. Edward A. Lane, for relator:

All the necessary facts to give the governor authority to issue the warrant should appear on its face.

Re Jackson, 2 Flipp. 184, Fed. Cas. No. 7,125.

The court may review the proceedings and discharge relator, if the charge of "fleeing" is not sustained by the record evidence.

Re Jackson, 2 Flipp. 183, Fed. Cas. No. 7,125; Ex parte Thornton, 9 Tex. 635; Ex parte Hart, 28 L. R. A. 801, 11 C. C. A. 165, 25 U. S. App. 22, 63 Fed. 249; Ex parte Smith, 3 McLean, 121, Fed. Cas. No. 12,968; People ex rel. Lawrence v. Brady, 56 N. Y. 182; Jones v. Leonard, 50 Iowa, 106, 32 Am. Rep. 116; Hartman v. Aveline, 63 Ind. 344, 30 Am. Rep. 217; 3 Spear, Extradition, pp. 391, 498, 548.

To arrest relator on a warrant which denies her a sufficient description of the charges against her, to enable her to tell how many and when they were committed, and to intelligently petition for a writ of habeas corpus, is denying her her constitutional right to enjoy its privilege and benefit in the most free, easy, cheap, expeditious, and ample manner.

Ex parte Butler, 7 Luzerne Legal Reg. 209; Re Leary, 10 Ben. 197, Fed. Cas. No. 8,162.

Relator has the same constitutional right to remain unmolested on account of charges of crimes as to which he is not a fugitive as the demanding state has to take him for crimes as to which he is a fugitive, consequently the demanding state in pursuing its lawful remedy must also respect the constitutional rights of relator, and not indict him for extraditable and non-extraditable offenses and then endeavor to remove him in order to try him for both at once.

Re Mohr, 73 Ala. 503, 49 Am. Rep. 63; Re Cook, 49 Fed. 833; Re White, 5 C. C. A. 29, 14 U. S. App. 87, 55 Fed. 54.

This indictment is intended to charge three distinct crimes.

Benson v. Com. 158 Mass. 164, 33 N. E. 384; Carlton v. Com. 5 Met. 532.

The claim that the act of the governor of a state in issuing his warrant of removal is conclusive, and that the presumption is he had the necessary papers, duly authenticated, before him, when he acted, cannot be assented to.

Ex parte Hart, 28 L. R. A. 801, 11 C. C. A. 165, 25 U. S. App. 22, 63 Fed. 260; Jones v. Leonard, 50 Iowa, 109, 32 Am. Rep. 116; Work v. Corrington, 34 Ohio St. 64, 32 Am. Rep. 345; Ex parte Reggel, 114 U. S. 653, 29 L. ed. 253, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1148.

The burden is on the demanding state to make it plain by record evidence clear and consistent that a valid indictment exists against relator.

Re Manchester, 5 Cal. 237; Com. v. Certain Intoxicating Liquors, 128 Mass. 73.

Messrs. Sargent, Niles, & Morrill, also for relator:

An indictment containing accusations of three felonies, based upon three entirely distinct transactions, violates all the constitutional provisions guaranteeing liberty, trial by jury, and due process of law.

10 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 295; 67 L. R. A.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. 434; State v. Gerry, 68 N. H. 495, 38 L. R. A. 228, 38 Atl. 272; Opinion of the Justices, 41 N. H. 550; King v. Hopkins, 57 N. H. 350; Pierce v. State, 13 N. H. 536; State v. Hodge, 50 N. H. 510; Opinion of the Justices, 44 N. H. 633; East Kingston v. Toule, 48 N. H. 57, 2 Am. Rep. 174, 97 Am. Dec. 575; Hale v. Everett, 53 N. H. 9, 16 Am. Rep. 82; Copp v. Henniker, 55 N. H. 179, 20 Am. Rep. 194; State v. Griffin, 66 N. H. 326, 29 Atl. 414; State v. Parker, 43 N. H. 83; State v. Nelson, 8 N. H. 163; Young v. King, 3 T. R. 98; State v. Snyder, 50 N. H. 150; State v. Canterbury, 28 N. H. 195; State v. Lincoln, 49 N. H. 464.

The established practice in the demanding state is by no means conclusive. If it appears to the courts of the jurisdiction upon which the demand is made that the practice of the demanding jurisdiction is such that the accused, if surrendered, will be subjected to an unconstitutional form of trial, that fact alone will warrant and compel a refusal to comply with the requisition.

Re Dana, 7 Ben. 1, Fed. Cas. No. 3,554; State v. Gerry, 68 N. H. 495, 38 L. R. A. 228, 38 Atl. 272; Jones v. Robbins, 8 Gray, 329.

Even if the Massachusetts courts had decided that indictments of this description were constitutional the courts of New Hampshire would be under no obligation to surrender a citizen of this state to be tried in a manner which, whatever the holding of the courts of Massachusetts, is clearly unconstitutional.

State v. Jackman, 69 N. H. 318, 42 L. R. A. 438, 41 Atl. 347.

The warrant upon which the relator is arrested, which forms a part of the officer's return and is before the court, is fatally defective.

The governor is not above the Constitution. In issuing warrants he acts as a magistrate of limited jurisdiction, and there is no presumption in favor of his jurisdiction in any particular case; his warrant, like any other, is void unless the facts essential to jurisdiction appear on its face.

Ex parte Smith, 3 McLean, 121, Fed. Cas. No. 12,968; 1 Bishop, New Crim. Proc. 126; Re Doo Woon, 9 Sawy. 417, 18 Fed. 898; Thurston v. Adams, 41 Me. 419; State v. Staples, 37 Me. 228; Bridge v. Ford, 4 Mass. 641; Granite Bank v. Treat, 18 Me. 340; State v. Hartwell, 35 Me. 129; McGlinchy v. Barrows, 41 Me. 74.

Messrs. Mitchell & Foster, for defendant:

The guilt or innocence of the prisoner will not be investigated on this writ. The prisoner cannot, on habeas corpus, show by parol that the affidavit or indictment was a forgery; or that it is untrue; or that it was procured upon insufficient evidence. The governor of the surrendering state can insist, and it will be presumed on habeas corpus that he has insisted, upon the production of whatever he deems necessary or important properly to inform himself on the subject as to whether or not a crime has been committed against the laws of the demanding state.

Church, Habeas Corpus, § 468; Kurtz v. State, 22 Fla. 36, 1 Am. St. Rep. 173; Re Cook, 49 Fed. 833; Ex parte Brown, 28 Fed. 653; Re Clark, 9 Wend. 212.

An indictment is sufficient for the purpose of extradition proceedings, when it is framed in accordance with the technical rules of pleading of the state within which it is found, and where the offense was committed.

8 Enc. Pl. & Pr. p. 816.

The indictment is in accord with the Massachusetts rules of pleading.

Com. v. Hills, 10 Cush. 530; Carlton v. Com. 5 Met. 552; Com. v. Costello, 120 Mass. 358; Com. v. Jacobs, 152 Mass. 276, 25 N. E. 463; Benson v. Com. 158 Mass. 164, 33 N. E. 384.

Walker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

One question presented by the case is whether the record evidence submitted to the governor upon the proceeding before him for the extradition of the relator shows, as a matter of law, that he exceeded his authority in issuing the warrant for her arrest and removal to Massachusetts. How far his duty was discretionary, and to what extent he was obliged to comply with the demand for the surrender of the alleged fugitive from justice, are questions not necessarily material to the present inquiry. He has exercised whatever discretion he possesses, and has complied with the demand. He has issued his warrant for the arrest of the relator and for her return to Massachusetts. Has he thereby violated any of her rights of citizenship under the Constitution and laws of the United States or of this state? The rendition of a fugitive from justice to the state from which he fled is authorized by the Constitution of the United States (art. 4, § 2), which provides that "a person charged in any state with treason, felony, or other crime, who shall flee from justice and be found in another state, shall, on demand of the executive authority of the state from which he fled, be delivered up, to be removed to the state having jurisdiction of the crime." To make this provision effectual, and to afford means for its practical operation, Congress has enacted that, "whenever the executive authority of any state or territory demands any person as a fugitive from justice, of the executive authority of any state or territory to which such person has fled, and produces a copy of an indictment found, or an affidavit made before a magistrate of any state or territory, charging the person demanded with having committed treason, felony, or other crime, certified as authentic by the governor or chief magistrate of the state or territory from whence the person so charged has fled, it shall be the duty of the executive authority of the state or territory to which such person has fled to cause him to be arrested and secured, and to cause notice of the arrest to be given to the executive authority making such demand, or to the agent of such authority appointed to receive the fugitive, and to cause the fugitive to be delivered to such agent when he shall appear." U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5278, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3597. As supplementary to these provisions, the legislature of this state has enacted the following statute: "If the governor is satisfied that the demand is conformable to law and ought to be complied with, he shall issue his warrant under the seal of the state, authorizing the agent who shall make the demand, either forthwith or at such time as shall be designated in the warrant, to take and transport such person to the line of the state, at the expense of such agent, and shall also, by the warrant, require the civil officers within this state to afford all needful assistance in the execution thereof." Pub. Stat. chap. 263, § 8. If the governor has not substantially complied with these constitutional and statutory provisions, the relator must be discharged from arrest. She cannot be forcibly removed from this jurisdiction, except by virtue of legal process and procedure. Unless she is one of the class of persons which the Federal Constitution makes liable to rendition, and unless the legal requirements in such cases have been substantially observed, the governor's warrant is void, and the court must order her discharge. It is the duty of the court to protect the rights of citizenship.

67 L. R. A.

The question of the validity of the governor's warrant must be considered in connection with the demand, the copy of the indictment, and the affidavit submitted to him. It is not essential that the warrant should contain a formal statement of all the facts upon which it is issued. Kingsbury's Case, 166 Mass. 223; People ex rel. Draper v. Pinkerton, 17 Hun, 199; Re Romaine, 23 Cal. 585. If an examination of the record evidence presented to the governor legally authorizes the finding of the necessary facts, it will be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that he made such findings. It is insisted that the warrant is fatally defective, because it contains no statement of a finding by the governor that the relator is a fugitive from justice. In Roberts v. Reilly, 116 U. S. 80, 29 L. ed. 544, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 291, in which the warrant was similar to the one in this case, the court says (p. 95, 116 U. S., p. 549, 29 L. ed., and p. 300, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep.): "It is conceded that the determination of the fact by the executive of the state in issuing his warrant of arrest, upon a demand made on that ground, whether the writ contains a recital of an express finding to that effect or not, must be regarded as sufficient to justify the removal until the presumption in its favor is overthrown by contrary proof." In State ex rel. Arnold v. Justus, 84 Minn. 237, 243, 55 L. R. A. 325, 87 N. W. 770, the court says upon this subject: "This is a matter upon which the chief magistrate granting the warrant should have evidence, although the law does not describe its character, nor the precise rules by which such fact shall be established. It would seem to follow that the issuance of the warrant embraces the exercise of a prerogative of the governor of the state where the fugitive is, and that it must be presumed, in the absence of proof to the contrary, where the executive acts in such case, that he has performed his duty in that respect. Hence, when a proper warrant has been issued, the burden of showing that the prisoner has not fled, or is not a fugitive [from justice], rests upon such prisoner in habeas corpus proceedings." In that case the warrant did not contain a finding that the prisoner was a fugitive. It simply recited that "a demand has been made, pursuant to the Constitution and laws of the United States, by H. A. Northcott, acting governor of the state of Illinois, upon the governor of the state of Minnesota, for the delivery of Eddie McNichols as a fugitive from justice of the state of Illinois." The court held this sufficient, on the ground that technical precision is not necessary in a warrant. See also Ea parte Reggel, 114 U. S. 642, 29 L. ed. 250, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1148; Com. v. Hall, 9 Gray, 262, 266, 69 Am. Dec. 285; Kingsbury's Case, 106 Mass. 223; Davis's Case, 122 Mass. 324; People ex rel. Jourdan v. Donohue, 84 N. Y. 438; Ex parte Sheldon, 34 Ohio St. 319. What the result might be, upon habeas corpus proceedings, if none of the written evidence required by law for the issuance of the warrant were before the court, and the validity of the warrant was attacked (People ex rel. Draper v. Pinkerton, 17 Hun, 199), it is unnecessary to inquire. If the evidence is legally sufficient to support the necessary facts, it must be presumed, even from a warrant which does 67 L. R. A.

not contain a full recital of such facts, that it was based upon their existence. No particular form of a warrant is prescribed, and an examination of the cases shows that the warrant in this case is not an exceptional one. The case of Re Jackson, 2 Flipp. 183, Fed. Cas. No. 7,125, holding that a warrant was invalid because it recited that the person charged had been "represented" to be a fugitive from justice, instead of stating an express conclusion on this point, is against the weight of authority, and was substantially overruled by Roberts v. Reilly, 116 U. S. 80, 29 L. ed. 544, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 291; 2 Moore, Extradition, § 640. Whether the relator is charged with a crime in another state, and whether she is a fugitive from justice, are questions upon which it was the duty of the governor to pass before ordering her removal from the state. "Under the act of Congress it became the duty of the governor of Utah to cause the arrest of Reggel, and his delivery to the agent appointed to receive him, when it appeared: (1) That the demand by the executive authority of Pennsylvania was accompanied by a copy of an indictment, or affidavit made before a magistrate, charging Reggel with having committed treason, felony, or other crime within that state, and certified as authentic by her governor; (2) that the person demanded was a fugitive from justice." Ex parte Reggel, 114 U. S. 642, 649, 29 L. ed. 250, 252, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1148, 1152. "To be a fugitive from justice, in the sense of the act of Congress regulating the subject under consideration, it is not necessary that the party charged should have left the state in which the crime is alleged to have been committed after an indictment found, or for the purpose of avoiding a prosecution anticipated or begun, but simply that having, within a state, committed that which by its laws constitutes a crime, when he is sought to be subjected to its criminal process to answer for his offense he has left its jurisdiction, and is found within the territory of another." Roberts v. Reilly, 116 U. S. 80, 97, 29 L. ed. 544, 549, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 291. In Re Voorhees, 32 N. J. L. 141, 150, the court says: "A person who commits a crime within a state, and withdraws himself from such jurisdiction without waiting to abide the consequences of such act, must be regarded as a fugitive from the justice of the state whose laws he has infringed. Any other construction would not only be inconsistent with good sense, and with the obvious import of the word to be interpreted in the context in which it stands, but would likewise destroy, for most practical purposes, the efficacy of the entire constitutional provision." "The fact that a man is charged with crime in one state, and is afterwards found in another, has generally been regarded as prima facie evidence that he is a fugitive." Drinkall v. Spiegel, 68 Conn. 441, 448, 36 L. R. A. 486, 36 Atl. 830; Kingsbury's Case, 106 Mass. 223. The evidence that the relator departed from Massachusetts after the commission of the alleged crimes, and was found in this state, supports the necessary finding that she is a fugitive. The affidavit of Whitney tends to show that she fled "about the 4th day of November, A. D. 1901," after the dates of the crimes alleged in the first two counts of the indictment, but before the date of the third crime. It may be true that she could not be a "fugitive" on account of a crime committed by her when not within the jurisdiction of Massachusetts, or that a person cannot be said to "flee" from a state unless he was personally there at the time of the alleged offense. Constructive presence may not be sufficient. 2 Moore, Extradition, §§ 581-585; People ex rel. Corkran v. Hyatt, 172 N. Y. 176, 60 L. R. A. 774, 92 Am. St. Rep. 706, 64 N. E. 825. But the fact, if it be one, that the relator departed from the demanding state before the commission of one crime alleged in the indictment, for which alone she could not be extradited, suggests no reason why she could not legally be returned for other crimes alleged to have been committed there before she left. The liability that she may be tried on the last count alone does not exclude her from the class of persons made liable to extradition by the Federal Constitution. She is still "a person charged . . . with . . . crime." The question is, not whether the governor might decline to extradite her for that reason, or because he believed the demand was not made in good faith, but whether her rights of citizenship are infringed by her rendition to answer to such an indictment. Neither the Constitution nor the statutes upon the subject make an exception of that character. Lascelles v. Georgia, 148 U. S. 537, 542, 547, 37 L. ed. 549, 551, 552, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 687; Com. v. Wright, 158 Mass. 149, 19 L. R. A. 206, 35 Am. St. Rep. 475, 33 N. E. 82. If the indictment upon which this proceeding is based had contained only the first count, but it appeared that another indictment, containing the other counts, was pending in the same court, that fact would not prevent the rendition of the prisoner, though the question, in legal effect, would be substantially the same as is presented here. The governor was justified in finding that she was a fugitive with reference to the first two counts in the indictment. But upon that question the relator was entitled to submit evidence and be heard, and the 67 L. R. A.

justice before whom the habeas corpus proceedings were returned may review the action of the governor in this respect. The governor's finding that the relator is a fugitive is not conclusive upon the court on habeas corpus. Church, Habeas Corpus, § 474a; 2 Moore, Extradition, § 640; Spear, Extradition, 391; Hartman v. Aveline, 63 Ind. 344, 30 Am. Rep. 217; Jones v. Leonard, 50 Iowa, 106, 32 Am. Rep. 116; Re Mohr, 73 Ala. 503, 49 Am. Rep. 63. If his finding of fact in this respect is erroneous, the prisoner is unlawfully restrained of her liberty, and is entitled to a discharge. It is a principle of general application that one cannot be finally deprived of his liberty except upon a judicial trial.

The fact that it appears from the indictment that the offenses charged in the first two counts were committed more than six years before the finding of the indictment does not preclude a finding that she was a fugitive from justice, and such finding by the governor was justified by the evidence before him. If Whitney's affidavit is ambiguous, and may be open to more than one construction, so far as it relates to the length of time Mrs. Munsey resided in Massachusetts after the date of the offense alleged in the first count and before November 4, 1901, when he certifies she fled, it was not incompetent as evidence, to be considered by the governor, upon the question whether she was a fugitive from justice as to the first two counts. It does not necessarily establish the proposition, as claimed by her, that during all the time she was "usually and publicly resident" (Mass. Pub. Stat. chap. 213, § 25) in that state. If it did, it would become necessary to consider the question whether, under those circumstances, she could be a fugitive from justice within the meaning of the law of extradition. The affidavit states unequivocally that she was "a fugitive from justice." This statement, though in some sense a conclusion of law, was held sufficient in Ex parte Reggel, 114 U. S. 642, 29 L. ed. 260, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1148, where the court says (p. 653, 114 U. S., p. 253, 29 L. ed., and p. 1154, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep.) that the accused should not be discharged "merely because, in the judgment of the court, the evidence as to his being a fugitive from justice was not as full as might properly have been required, or because it was so meager as, perhaps, to admit of a conclusion different from that reached by" the governor. It was sufficient to make out a prima facie case. Whether, in this case, there was other evidence before the governor upon which his finding could be based, it is unnecessary to inquire.

The indictment upon which the requisition is founded consists of three counts, each charging the respondent with intentionally and fraudulently uttering and publishing as true "a certain forged instrument purporting to be a will." It is conceded that forging a will is a crime under the laws of Massachusetts. But it is claimed that the warrant is faulty, because it states that the relator is "charged with the crime of uttering forged wills." This is a sufficiently definite statement of the charges in the indictment for practical purposes, and affords no substantial or reasonable ground for holding the warrant to be void; especially when, by a reference to the indictment, its meaning is rendered sufficiently plain and definite.

The objection is made that the relator is charged in the indictment with three distinct and independent offenses, and that for this reason the indictment is bad at common law, and is repugnant to article 12 of the Bill of Rights of Massachusetts, which provides that "no subject shall be . . . deprived of his . . . liberty, . . . but by the judgment of his peers or the law of the land." It is also claimed to be repugnant to the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States for the same reason. Whether this court has jurisdiction, under the Federal Constitution and the law of Congress relating to extradition, to decide upon the validity of the formal allegations in the indictment, which substantially charges the fugitive with the commission of a crime, is a question which the weight of authority answers in the negative. Kentucky v. Dennison, 24 How. 66, 107, 16 L. ed. 717, 729; Ex parte Reggel, 114 U. S. 642, 651, 29 L. ed. 250, 253, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1148; Re Roberts, 24 Fed. 132; Roberts v. Reilly, 116 U. S. 80, 29 L. ed. 544, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 291; Re Voorhees, 32 N. J. L. 141, 146; People ex rel. Nubell v. Byrnes, 33 Hun, 98, 101; State ex rel. O'Malley v. O'Conner, 38 Minn. 243, 36 N. W. 462; Spear, Extradition, 499; 2 Moore, Extradition, §§ 550, 638; and cases cited supra. But without deciding whether the joinder of two or more counts in an indictment charging distinct offenses is faulty as a matter of criminal pleading, it does not appear that in Massachusetts such joinder renders the indictment absolutely void. The indictment may still be sufficient to support a conviction under one of the counts. In Com. v. Tuck, 20 Pick. 356, 361, it is said: "A defective indictment cannot be cured by verdict. If the crime be not correctly described, no judgment can be rendered either upon verdict or plea of guilty. 2 Hale, P. C. 193; Com. v. Morse, 2 Mass. 128, 130; Com. v. Hearsey, 1 Mass. 137. But the objection now under consideration is totally different. It is not that the offense is defectively set forth, but that more than one offense is sufficiently set forth in the same indictment. The only argument which lies against the latter is that it subjects the defendant to inconvenience and danger by requiring him to prepare himself to meet several charges at the same time. The appropriate remedy would be a motion to the court to quash the indictment, or to confine the prosecutor to some one of the charges." "The objection that the indictment is bad because more than one offense is joined in it cannot be sustained. It is settled in this commonwealth that several offenses may be charged in the same indictment when they are of the same general nature, and when the mode of trial and the nature of the punishment are the same." Com. v. Brown, 121 Mass. 69, 82. In Josslyn v. Com. 6 Met. 236, 239, Chief Justice Shaw remarks: "The next objection is that there were two distinct offenses charged, in two distinct counts, which is irregular. Without considering whether, if this is an irregularity for which a court would, on motion, quash the indictment, or put the prosecutor to his election on which count to proceed (Com. v. Tuck, 20 Pick. 356, 362), we think that, within certain limits, different offenses of the same nature may be stated in different counts of an indictment, when the same mode of trial applies, and the same judgment is to be given." "It is always open to the presiding judge to order a separate trial on each distinct charge, when there is any reason for supposing that the defendant will be perplexed in his defense, or unnecessarily embarrassed by being put on trial for two distinct offenses. We see no good reason for holding that it is illegal to present in the same indictment felonious offenses of a similar character, and having a like punishment." Com. v. Hills, 10 Cush. 530, 534. See also Com. v. Carey, 103 Mass. 214; Com. v. Costello, 120 Mass. 358.

Even if it were conceded that this indictment is faulty for the reason assigned by the relator, and that a trial and conviction on all the counts would not be in accordance with "the law of the land," it would not follow that the indictment was a nullity, and that her arrest thereon was illegal. The fact that it contains three counts does not make it necessary that she should be tried upon each, or prevent the entry of a nolle prosequi as to two of them and a trial as to the other; and a verdict of guilty under one count alone would not be erroneous because the indictment contained other counts for which she was not tried. Com. v. Holmes, 103 Mass. 440. If she cannot, under the Constitution of the United States or under that of Massachusetts, be tried for three distinct offenses set out in one indictment, it is not to be presumed that the courts of that state would sanction such a procedure, but that they would protect her in the enjoyment of all her constitutional rights. Her constitutional right to be tried according to "the law of the land" does not necessarily include a right to escape a trial upon one good count in a regularly returned indictment containing other counts. Com. v. Cain, 102 Mass. 487, 489.

But it is not necessary to determine what the effect of the alleged misjoinder may be upon the validity of the indictment at common law, or to discuss the question whether the decisions of the Massachusetts court above referred to, and many other similar cases in that jurisdiction, are repugnant to constitutional provisions. If they are open to that objection, as the relator claims, the courts of that state, where her alleged crime was committed, and where she must be tried, if tried at all, will afford her ample protection in all her constitutional rights. The contrary presumption cannot be entertained if the Federal law providing for the extradition of alleged criminals is recognized as an effectual means of aiding in the enforcement of the criminal laws of the various states. An authoritative determination of this question has been made by the Supreme Court of the United States, as far, at least, as the Federal Constitution is concerned. One Pearce was arrested in Texas, on a requisition from the governor of Alabama, for his extradition for trial in the latter state on two indictments for embezzlement and larceny. He sought his discharge upon habeas corpus on the ground that the indictments were insufficient to authorize his extradition, because it was not alleged therein that the offenses were committed in Alabama, that no time or place were laid therein, and that it did not appear where the offenses were committed. He relied entirely for his discharge upon the invalidity of the indictments. The trial court in which the habeas corpus proceedings were instituted refused to discharge him. He thereupon took an appeal to the court of criminal appeals of Texas, where it was held that, "if it reasonably appears upon the trial of the habeas corpus that the relator is charged by indictment in the demanding state, whether the indictment be sufficient or not under the law of that state, the court trying the habeas corpus case will not discharge the relator because of substantial defects in the indictment under the laws of the demanding state. To require this would entail upon the court an investigation of the sufficiency of the indictment in the demanding state, when the true rule is that, if it appears to the court that he is charged by indictment with an offense, all other prerequisites being complied with, the applicant should be extradited." Ex parte Pearce, 32 Tex. Crim. Rep. 301, 307, 23 S. W. 15. The case was then brought before the Supreme Court of the United States, and the decision of the state court was affirmed in an opinion delivered by Chief Justice Fuller, in which he says: "It was not disputed that the indictments were in substantial conformity with the statute of Alabama in that behalf, and their sufficiency as a matter of technical pleading would not be inquired into on habeas corpus. Ex parte Reggel, 114 U. S. 642, 29 L. ed. 250, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1148. Nor was there any contention as to the proper demand having been made by the executive authority of the state from whence the petitioner had departed, or in respect of the discharge of the duty imposed by the Constitution and laws of the United States on the executive authority of the asylum state to cause the surrender. The question resolved itself, therefore, into one of the validity of the statute on the ground of its repugnancy to the Constitution, and the court of appeals declined to decide in favor of its validity. And if it could be said upon the record that any right under the Constitution had been specially set up and claimed by plaintiff in error at the proper time and in the proper way, the state court did not decide against such right, for the denial of the right depended upon a decision in favor of the validity of the statute. What the state court did was to leave the question as to whether the statute was in violation of the Constitution of the United States, and the indictments insufficient accordingly, to the demanding state. Its action in that regard simply remitted to the courts of Alabama the duty of protecting the accused in the enjoyment of his constitutional rights; and, if any of those rights should be denied him,—which is not to be presumed,—he could then seek his remedy in this court. We cannot discover that the court of appeals, in declining to pass upon the question raised in advance of the courts of Alabama, denied to plaintiff in error any right secured to him by the Constitution and laws of the United States, or that the court, in announcing that conclusion, erroneously disposed of a Federal question." Pearce v. Texas, 155 U. S. 311, 313, 314, 39 L. ed. 164, 167, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 116; Ex parte Hart, 59 Fed. 894.

As the relator is substantially charged with the commission of one crime, at least, in Massachusetts, upon an indictment properly authenticated, and as it appears that the form of the indictment, if peculiar, is in accordance with the uniform practice in that state, this court will neither affirm nor deny the constitutionality of that method of procedure in the courts of the demanding state. To do so would be based upon the assumption of a right to impugn the validity of the decisions of a sister state, and to hold that the relator could not be extradited unless it appeared that her trial in that state would be in accordance with the ideas of this court upon the question of its constitutionality. Such a holding, while opposed to the ordinary principles of comity existing between the states, would go far toward abrogating the salutary provisions of the Federal law upon the subject of extradition. People ex rel. Nubell v. Byrnes, 33 Hun, 98, 101, 104. So far as the trial of the question of her rendition is concerned, the joinder of counts in the indictment presents no serious difficulty.

The evidently clerical error in the affidavit of the clerk of court, that the indictment was returned "on the second Monday of February, A. D. 1892," did not preclude a finding by the governor that the true date was the second Monday of February, 1902. The caption of the indictment, as well as the affidavit of the district attorney, fully authorized that conclusion, which is placed beyond peradventure by an amendment of the clerk's affidavit in this court. The objection urged on this ground is a refinement of technical reasoning, which has nothing to commend it in the modern administration of justice in criminal cases.

Nor does the fact that the warrant was addressed to the sheriff of Merrimack county, and not to the agent appointed by the demanding state, afford any reason for the relator's discharge. The statute (Pub. Stat. chap. 263, § 8) does not require that the warrant should be directed to the agent, but that it should authorize him "to take and transport" the fugitive out of the state, and should require the civil officers of the state to render necessary assistance for that purpose. The warrant was issued in compliance with these requirements.

As the relator has not succeeded in showing that any of her rights of citizenship are jeopardized by the action of the governor, the denial of her motion for a discharge upon the reserved case presents no error.

Exception overruled.

All concur.

A petition for rehearing was denied on January 24, 1903, the court making some slight modifications in the opinion as originally filed, which are incorporated in the opinion as published above.

The trial in the superior court, having been suspended pending the hearing of the 67 L. R. A.

exceptions by the supreme court, was resumed March 28, 1903, and relator, having moved for her discharge because of having been denied a hearing before the governor, and the motion having been denied, took the case to the supreme court a second time on exceptions.

Bingham, J., delivered the opinion of the court on June 2, 1903:

The relator contends that the warrant upon which she was arrested was illegally issued, because she was not permitted to be heard before the governor upon the question whether she was a fugitive from justice, and assigns this as a reason why she should be discharged from arrest. It was a question of fact, to be determined in the first instance by the governor, whether the relator was a fugitive from justice. Re Cook, 40 Fed. 833, 838. But she was not then entitled as of right to be heard. It was discretionary with the governor to grant or deny her request. It is not the practice in such proceedings to give the accused notice before the rendition warrant is issued, and the act of Congress and the statutes of this state do not contain a provision requiring that she should be notified. The reason for the omission of such a provision is apparent. If notice were required, the practical operation of the law would be rendered nugatory and its purpose defeated. It is an ex parte proceeding, and necessarily so. Re Cook, 49 Fed. 838. While the presence of the relator at the hearing obviated the usual objection to giving the accused notice, yet her presence did not create a legal right to be heard, and no such right previously existed.

If the relator had the right not to be removed from the state without a judicial trial, the issuing of the warrant for her arrest did not conclude her right in this respect. Under the law of this state, she could sue out a writ of habeas corpus, and test the question whether she was a fugitive from justice; and, if it were made to appear to the court that the finding of the governor on this question was erroneous, she would be entitled to her discharge. State ex rel. Munsey v. Clough, 71 N. H. 594, 600, 601, ante, 949, 53 Atl. 1086. It was also expressly provided in the rendition warrant that she should be afforded an opportunity to sue out a writ of habeas corpus before being delivered over to the Massachusetts authorities. She has availed herself of that privilege; but in the trial before the superior court she declined and expressly waived the right to then, or at any future time, offer evidence showing that she was not a fugitive from justice, and contented herself with submitting the record evidence presented to the governor, and causing it to appear that she had been denied a hearing before him. As the relator was entitled, in the trial before the superior court, to review the action of the governor, and to be discharged if his finding upon this question of fact was erroneous, or if there was no evidence from which he was warranted in making the finding, we are unable to see wherein she has been deprived of any right to be heard to which she was legally entitled.

As the governor should not have issued his warrant without proof that the accused was a fugitive from justice (State ex rel. Munsey v. Clough, 71 N. H. 598, 599, ante, 949, 53 Atl. 1086; Ex parte Reggel, 114 U. S. 642, 29 L. ed. 250, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1148), it is argued that the record evidence was incompetent and insufficient to warrant such a finding. But the character of proof essential to establish the fact is not prescribed by the act of Congress (U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5278, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3597) or the statutes of this state (Pub. Stat. 1901, chap. 263, §§ 7, 8). And while it has been said that "the executive of the state in which the accused is found . . . does not fail in duty if he makes it a condition precedent . . . that it be shown to him by competent proof that the accused is in fact a fugitive from justice" (Ex parte Reggel, 114 U. S. 642, 29 L. ed. 250, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1148), this does not mean that he shall not receive evidence that fails to meet the requirements of legal proof, if he deems it advisable. It appears to have been the policy of Congress and of the legislature to permit the chief executive to determine the question upon such proof as seems to him worthy of credit; and in Roberts v. Reilly, 116 U. S. 80, 95, 29 L. ed. 544, 549, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 291, and Re Cook, 49 Fed. 838, it was held that the executive of the state upon which the demand is made is to decide the question "upon such evidence as he may deem satisfactory."

Among the documents accompanying the requisition of the governor of Massachusetts, and which he certified to be authentic and 67 L. R. A.

duly authenticated, was a copy of an affidavit made by Jophanus H. Whitney, purporting to have been sworn to before a justice of the peace, in which it was stated that the relator had fled from the limits of said commonwealth, and was a fugitive from justice; also that at the time of the commission of said crime she was in the state of Massachusetts. This copy of an affidavit would not answer the requirements of legal proof in a court of justice, and the same is true of the original affidavit. But legal rules prescribing the competency of proof do not, in the absence of statute, govern the admission of evidence in extradition proceedings, except so far as the executive may see fit to adopt them. A statute of Massachusetts provides that sworn proof that the accused is a fugitive from justice shall accompany an application for a requisition to the governor of that state. Mass. Rev. Laws, chap. 217, § 11. The original affidavit of Whitney, from which the copy here under consideration was made, is without doubt the sworn proof required by the statute of that state to be there filed with the governor; and we cannot say that the governor of this state was not justified in receiving a copy of that sworn proof in evidence and treating it as worthy of credit. That the Whitney affidavit contained evidence warranting a finding that the accused was a fugitive from the justice of Massachusetts, and was actually present in that state at the time of the commission of the crime charged, has already been decided. State ex rel. Munsey v. Clough, 71 N. H. 594, ante, 949, 53 Atl. 1086.

The relator's motion to be discharged was properly denied.

Exception overruled.

All concur.

Petition for rehearing denied.

Affirmed by Supreme Court of United States January 30, 1905.

NEW JERSEY COURT OF ERRORS AND APPEALS.

William J. A. BURNS

v.

DELAWARE & ATLANTIC TELEGRAPH & TELEPHONE COMPANY, Plff. in Err.

Owen DONAHUE

v.

SAME, Plff. in Err.

(70 N. J. L. 745.)

- *1. It is one of the duties of an employer to exercise reasonable care that the place in which he sets his servant to work and the system or method adopted by the employer for the doing of the work shall be reasonably safe for the servant, and free from latent dangers known to the master, or discernible by an ordinarily prudent master in the circumstances.
2. Where there is evidence from which the jury may reasonably find that the injured servant had no knowledge of the latent danger that necessitated the use of certain precautions for his safety, it cannot be held as a conclusion of law that, because the servant knew of the absence of the precautions, he thereby assumed the risk of injury resulting to him from their absence.
3. It is not merely the physical surroundings of the servant that must be obvious to him in order that he may be held to have assumed the risks arising therefrom, but it must be obvious to him, or at least to an ordinarily prudent servant under the circumstances, that there is danger to him in such a situation.
4. The rule that the duty of a master with respect to care as to the tools and appliances furnished for his servant's work is limited to such as are in fact supplied by the master has no applicancy to the failure of the master to supply appliances needed, not for the work itself, but solely to protect the servant against latent dangers arising out of the work.
5. The duty of the master to exercise care for the safety of the servant cannot be evaded by the employment of others for its performance. The persons so employed are not fellow servants engaged in common employment with the servant for whose safety the care is to be exercised.
6. The question whether a witness has such special knowledge or experience as to qualify him to give opinion evidence is a question of fact for the determination of the trial court, whose finding is not review-

*Headnotes by PITNEY, J.

NOTE.—As to liability of electric companies to employees for injury caused by electric shock, see also, in this series, Western U. Teleg. Co. v. McMullen, 32 L. R. A. 351, and note, and the later case of Bergin v. Southern New England Teleph. Co. 39 L. R. A. 192. 67 L. R. A.

able on writ of error if there be any legal evidence to support it.

(Dixon, J., dissents.)

(November 14, 1904.)

ERROR to the Supreme Court to review judgments in favor of plaintiffs in actions brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Norman Grey for plaintiff in error.
Messrs. John W. Wescott and Ralph W. E. Donges for defendants in error.

Pitney, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

These were two actions of tort, brought to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by the plaintiffs below while in the employ of the defendant company. They were tried together, and resulted in a verdict and judgment in favor of each plaintiff. Errors at the trial are asserted as ground for reversal.

Plaintiffs were laboring men, and, with others, were engaged in attending reels from which copper wires were being unwound, while at the same time another gang of men were stringing them upon poles of the defendant company. There were 10 reels, each of which carried a single coil of wire. The outer ends of the wires were attached by snaphooks to a device known as a "running board," to which in turn was attached a rope by means of which a team of horses drew the 10 wires simultaneously from the reels. These wires were bare, and, of course, were normally "dead" wires. The defendant's line of poles carried two sets of cross-arms, each arm being designed to carry 10 wires. The 10 wires that were being unreeled were being placed upon the upper set of cross-arms. From the reels the wires passed to the cross-arm upon a pole near by, and thence along the line of poles. As each successive pole was reached and passed by the team, the wires were detached from the running board, lifted over the cross-arm by the polemen or "climbers," and then once more attached to the running board. Thus the strain of the wires was intermittent. The lower cross-arms carried 8 telephone wires, previously strung, and running parallel to the wires that were being strung at the time in question. Between 350 and 400 feet from the place where the plaintiffs were working the wires that were in process of being unreeled passed above a trolley-feed wire, the elevation of which was below the lower cross-arms of the telephone line. It was in evidence that between the place where the plaintiffs worked and the trolley line the line of wires passed through trees or woods that obscured the plaintiffs' view of all beyond. As to the cause of the accident, the evidence tended to show that one or more of the new wires broke or sagged, and thus came in contact with the trolley wire, deriving from it a strong current of electricity that was conveyed along the new wires to the plaintiffs, who were shocked and seriously burned thereby. The team was about 3,500 feet from the reels at the time. The evidence tended to show that the current proceeded from the trolley wire, and to exclude the theory that it could have proceeded from any other source. The evidence on the part of the plaintiffs tended to show that a wire or wires were permitted in the ordinary progress of the work to sag and come in contact with the trolley wire. Upon the part of the defendant the insistence was that one of the wires broke while being drawn from the reel; but, as it was at least disputable whether the breaking, if it occurred, was occasioned by any negligence of the plaintiffs or their fellow workmen, it makes little difference for present purposes whether the wire broke or not. If it broke without negligence of the workmen, the jury had a right to treat the breaking as an ordinary incident of the method or system adopted by the defendant in the prosecution of its work.

The negligence attributed by the plaintiffs to the defendant was the failure to take precautions to prevent the powerful current of the trolley wire from being communicated to the persons of the employees. The precautions suggested by the evidence were a sling or basket made of rope, to be suspended over the trolley wire in order to prevent the telephone wires from dropping at that point, and, as a further precaution, the use of rubber gloves for the hands of the workmen, or a board platform or wagon upon which they might stand. It appeared that the reels were placed upon the ground, that the earth at this point was damp and muddy, and that this rendered the men more liable to be injured by the escape of electric current from the wire through their bodies to the ground. The rope sling or basket, of course, would tend to prevent the wires upon which they were working from becoming charged with electricity. The gloves or platform would tend to prevent the men from receiving a serious shock if the wires should become charged.

There was a motion for nonsuit, and also a motion to direct a verdict in favor of the defendant, both of which were refused. The grounds upon which these motions were based, so far as necessary to be now mentioned, are (1) absence of evidence to show negligence on the part of the defendant; (2) or to show knowledge on the part of the defendant that the telephone wires were crossing a live wire; (3) or to show that the absence of boards and gloves was the proximate cause of the accident; (4) or to show that it was the usual custom in the business for employing companies to supply such devices to men working under the circumstances that surrounded the plaintiffs. A similar question was raised by defendant's fourth request to charge, which was refused. The proposition thus rejected was that "it was no portion of any duty of defendant to supply gloves and boards or a platform under the circumstances in this case."

It is one of the duties of an employer to exercise reasonable care that the place in which he sets his servant to work, and the system or method adopted by the employer for the doing of the work, shall be reasonably safe for the servant, and free from latent dangers known to the master or discernible by an ordinarily prudent master in the circumstances. Western U. Teleg. Co. v. McMullen, 58 N. J. L. 155, 32 L. R. A. 351, 33 Atl. 384. That the duty of the master to exercise care with respect to the place of working extends to the system or method of arranging the work is established in this state. Belleville Stone Co. v. Moonhey, 60 N. J. L. 323, 38 Atl. 835, 61 N. J. L. 253, 39 L. R. A. 834, 39 Atl. 764. In the present case the jury might reasonably find from the evidence that the danger of contact between the wires at which the plaintiffs were working and the trolley wire was a latent danger, unknown to the plaintiffs. They severally denied that they knew there was any danger connected with the work, and it was shown they were inexperienced in the work of line construction. They were not linemen, and had no knowledge or experience of electricity. Even had they known their wires were to be carried across a trolley wire, it was not necessarily obvious to them that there was a probability of contact with the latter wire. Again, an obvious probability of such contact would not necessarily import notice to the plaintiffs of an obvious danger to them: First, because, even on defendant's own evidence, the jury had a right to find that not all trolley wires carry current sufficiently powerful to injure a human being; and, secondly, because there is much evidence in the case indicating that even a powerful current might be harmless to men handling wires, except where their feet were placed upon damp ground; and there is nothing to show that the plaintiffs knew that the dampness of the ground at all imperiled their safety. The jury had a right to find that the entire situation, as well as the danger that was latent in the situation, was known to defendant's agents, who acted for it in laying out the work, and who represented it in respect of the duty to exercise care for the safety of the plaintiffs, or that it would have been known to an ordinarily prudent employer under the like circumstances. There was likewise abundant evidence from which the jury might reasonably infer that ordinarily prudent employers, under such circumstances, employed either a guard wire or a rope sling or basket to prevent the wires upon which employees were working from dropping upon a live wire carrying a current of high power, and that, as an additional precaution against danger to the men in case of such contact, it was customary to use rubber gloves or a board platform, or, as a substitute for the latter, to place the men upon a wagon while employed in such work. It is urged here that the evidence as to the failure to supply rubber gloves and a guard wire was irrelevant and immaterial to the issue as framed, since the plaintiffs' declarations counted solely upon the absence of boards or a platform for the plaintiffs to stand upon. The criticism ignores some of the averments of the declarations, but, without spending time upon the point, it is sufficient to say that the objection of variance was not taken at the trial. If it had been, an amendment would doubtless have been applied for and allowed. As it appears from the testimony returned with the bills of exception that both parties went fully into the question of the propriety and necessity of guard wires and gloves, the pleadings will be treated in this court as amended, if necessary, so as to be applicable to the issues that were actually tried. For these reasons we think the trial court properly denied the motion to nonsuit and the motion to direct a verdict in favor of the defendant.

To return now to the fourth request to charge, that "it was no portion of any duty of defendant to supply gloves and boards or a platform, under the circumstances in this case." It is suggested here that, because the plaintiffs knew that no gloves, boards, or platform had been supplied, and voluntarily continued in the employment, they should not have been permitted to recover for injuries arising from the absence of such precautions, and that for this reason the refusal of the request just quoted was erroneous. But it is entirely plain from the context that the phrase, "under the circumstances in this case," was intended to mean, and was understood by the trial judge to mean, the physical circumstances that bore upon the existence or nonexistence of a necessity for such precautions. During the trial defendant's counsel and the witnesses called by him repeatedly used the phrase "existing conditions" and "existing circumstances" in the sense just indicated. As there was abundant evidence to show that under such circumstances reasonable prudence dictated the employment of such precautions as gloves and boards or a platform, the trial judge could not properly accede to a request that, if complied with, would have prevented the jury from considering the omission of such safeguards as any breach of duty on the part of the defendant. We cannot treat this request as intended to include the proposition that, because the plaintiffs knew that neither gloves, boards, nor platform had not been supplied, they assumed any risk of danger resulting to them from the absence of such precautions. And this for several reasons. The assumption of risk is not mentioned in the request, but was dealt with in a separate request. The question of the master's duty with respect to care for the servant's safety is distinct from the question of the servant's assumption of risks, whether those ordinarily incident to the employment or those obviously resulting from the master's breach of duty. The request under consideration directed the attention of the trial judge solely to the question of the master's duty. Moreover, the fact that the plaintiffs knew that no gloves, boards, or platform had been furnished cannot be held to excuse the master from furnishing them, if required in the exercise of reasonable care for the servant's safety. The jury might properly find from the evidence that the plaintiffs had no knowledge of the danger that necessitated the use of such precautions, and that the defendant, on the other hand, either had such knowledge, or, if reasonably careful, would have possessed it. It is not merely the physical surroundings of the servant that must be obvious to him in order that he may be held to have assumed the risks arising therefrom, but it must be obvious to him, or at least to an ordinarily prudent servant under the circumstances, that there is danger in such a situation. It is his voluntary acceptance of, or persistence in, an employment that involves personal hazard to him that debars his action; the theory of the law being that his wages have been fixed in view of the hazard. But where the danger is unknown to the servant he cannot be held to have voluntarily assumed it, although the physical surroundings that create the danger are known to him. And so the known absence of safeguards or precautions cannot prevent a recovery where the danger that renders them necessary is unknown to the injured servant. 4 Thomp. Neg. New ed. §§ 4608-4610, 4640, etc. Thus, in Van Steenburgh v. Thornton, 58 N. J. L. 160, 33 Atl. 380, the negligence for which the master was held liable was the failure to brace the sides of a sewer trench in which the plaintiff was working. The plaintiff, of course, knew that the trench was not braced. But the defendant's representative knew, while the plaintiff did not, that there was danger of caving from the existence of a parallel trench that had been filled up. See this case commented on in Regan v. Palo, 62 N. J. L. 35, 41 Atl. 364, and Curley v. Hoff, 62 N. J. L. 760, 42 Atl. 731. So, in Smith v. Erie R. Co. 67 N. J. L. 636, 644, 59 L. R. A. 302, 52 Atl. 634, it was insisted that, since the plaintiff knew there was a defect in the railroad track, he assumed the risk of a derailment caused by such defect. But this court said: "It was far from obvious to one traveling upon the train that the roughness of the track indicated a weakness sufficient to cause derailment. The trial judge therefore could not say, as a matter of law, that the plaintiff assumed the risk of the injury that he received, and so it was at best a question for the jury to determine whether the special danger was known to the plaintiff, or was so obvious that he ought to have known of it." In a multitude of other cases in our courts the principle is impliedly recognized, if not distinctly declared, that it is the danger that must be known or obvious, and not merely the physical situation, in order to charge the injured servant with assumption of an obvious risk. The doctrine of "latent dangers" is largely grounded upon this distinction. Paulmier v. Erie R. Co. 34 N. J. L. 151; Smith v. Irwin, 51 N. J. L. 507, 14 Am. St. Rep. 699, 18 Atl. 852; Foley v. Jersey City Electric Light Co. 54 N. J. L. 411, 24 Atl. 487; New York, S. & W. R. Co. v. Marion, 57 N. J. L. 94, 30 Atl. 316; Essex County Electric Co. v. Kelly, 57 N. J. L. 100, 29 Atl. 427; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. McMullen, 58 N. J. L. 155, 32 L. R. A. 351, 33 Atl. 384; Chandler v. Atlantic Coast Electric R. Co. 61 N. J. L. 380, 39 Atl. 674; Johnson v. Devoe Snuff Co. 62 N. J. L. 417, 41 Atl. 936; Dillenberger v. Weingartner, 64 N. J. L. 292, 45 Atl. 638; Christensen v. Lambert, 67 N. J. L. 341, 51 Atl. 702.

It is suggested that the duty of a master with respect to care as to the tools and appliances furnished for his servant's work is limited to such as are in fact supplied by the master. But this has no applicancy to the failure of the present defendant to supply gloves, boards, or a platform. These articles, if furnished, would have been, not tools and appliances for the work that the plaintiffs were doing, but rather safeguards against the dangers that arose out of the work. In the absence of such dangers, the plaintiffs could perform the work at which they were set just as well without gloves, boards, or platform as with them. See Belleville Stone Co. v. Mooney, 61 N. J. L. at page 254, 39 L. R. A. 834, 39 Atl. 764. It was not the exigencies of the work, but the latent danger that inhered in the work, and of which the jury have found the plaintiffs were ignorant, that necessitated the use of gloves, boards, or a platform. And so, in any and every aspect, we think the fourth request to charge was properly refused.

It is argued that, if there was any negligence in not furnishing boards, rubber gloves, or guard wires, it was the negligence of one Naylor, a fellow servant of the plaintiffs, and the defendant is not liable for his negligence. This point was raised by one of the requests to charge that was overruled. Knutter v. New York & N. J. Teleg. Co. 67 N. J. L. 646, 58 L. R. A. 808, 52 Atl. 565, is cited in support of it. But in that case the foreman, through whose negligence, as was claimed, the plaintiff was injured, was in respect of the act that produced the injury employed merely as a fellow servant, and not in the performance of any duty that had to do with the master's precautions for the safety of its employees. As has been frequently declared in this court, the test is whether the negligent act or omission was in discharge of the master's or the servant's duty. It is for the master to make preparation for the general employment, and what he does in establishing a system of work and furnishing the plant, appliances, and place of work is done in this behalf. It is for the servants to carry on the employment when the master has thus prepared for it. The duty of the master to exercise care for the safety of the servant cannot be evaded by the employment of others for its performance. The agent thus employed is a "vice principal," and the question is whether he in truth exercised due care. Nord Deutscher Lloyd S. S. Co. v. Ingebregsten, 57 N. J. L. 400, 31 Atl. 619; Van Steenburgh v. Thornton, 58 N. J. L. 160, 33 Atl. 380; Maher v. Thropp, 59 N. J. L. 186, 35 Atl. 1057; Hustis v. James A. Banister Co. 63 N. J. L. 465, 43 Atl. 651; Smith v. Erie R. Co. 67 N. J. L. 636, 59 L. R. A. 302, 52 Atl. 634. And so, in the present case, whether it was the duty of Naylor, or of some other agent of the employer, to make those preparations that the situation and circumstances required for the conduct of the general employment with reasonable safety for the men, the person doing or assuming to do that work for the master was not, within the meaning of the rule, a fellow servant engaged in common employment with the plaintiffs.

Exception was taken to certain testimony of the plaintiffs tending to show the custom of other employers, on the ground that the witnesses called upon this point were not shown to have sufficient experience to qualify them to speak as experts upon the question. We think, however, there was sufficient evidence of experience to justify the action of the trial court in admitting them to express opinions. The question whether a witness has such special knowledge or experience as to qualify him to give opinion evidence is a question of fact for the determination of the trial court, whose finding is not reviewable on writ of error if there be any legal evidence to support it. State v. Arthur (N. J. L.) 57 Atl. 156, and cases there cited.

It is assigned for error that the trial judge admitted evidence over objection to show that the defendant, after the injury to the plaintiffs, furnished gloves and boards for the protection of their men. But the bills of exception show that the defendant was responsible for the introduction of this evidence.

The remaining points raised have been examined, and found unsubstantial.

The judgments under review should be affirmed.

Dixon, J., dissenting:

The testimony in these cases, I think, presented for decision these three questions: First. Were the plaintiffs injured by an electric current transmitted to the wires which they were handling from a trolley wire over which those wires were being strung? Second. Was the defendant, the employer of the plaintiffs, chargeable with knowledge that such injury was probable? Third. Were the plaintiffs, notwithstanding the exercise of due care on their part, ignorant that such injury was probable? A finding on all these questions favorable to the plaintiffs would necessarily result in establishing their right to compensation from the defendant but a finding of any of them adverse to the plaintiffs would necessarily result in the denial of such right. If the first question were negatived, then the injury did not occur in the defendant's service. If the second were negatived, then the defendant was not guilty of negligence. If the third were negatived, then the plaintiffs assumed the risk. In a case thus conditioned, the furnishing or nonfurnishing of rubber gloves for the hands, or of a wooden platform for the feet, of the workmen, was legally unimportant. It merely affected the degree of risk. If the probability that the current might be thus transmitted was patent to the employer, but not to the workmen, then he could not relieve himself from responsibility by providing such means of lessening the injury; and, if that probability was patent to the workmen, then they assumed the risk of it, under all conditions known to them, including, of course, the absence of gloves and platform. Now, as I understand the charge of the court at the trial of these cases, it was to the effect that, even if the jury should find adversely to the plaintiffs on either the second or the third of the questions above stated, yet they might conclude that, under the circumstances of the case, a duty rested on the defendant to furnish gloves or a platform, as a customary precaution, and they might base a verdict for the plaintiffs on the nonperformance of that duty. In order to preclude such a verdict, the defendant's fourth request was made, for a distinct instruction "that it was no portion of any duty of defendant to supply gloves and boards, or a platform, under the circumstances of this case." After the charge which had been given to the jury, it was erroneous to refuse this instruction. However humane it might have been for the defendant to provide such safeguards, it was not its legal duty to do so.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

PEOPLE of the State of New York ex rel.
COMMERCIAL CABLE COMPANY

v.

William J. MORGAN, State Comptroller.

(178 N. Y. 433.)

1. The court of appeals cannot review the decision of the comptroller when based on sufficient evidence and affirmed by the appellate division of the supreme court as to the capital employed within the state upon which a corporation is subject to a franchise tax.

2. A ruling that, because of its character, property alleged to be employed within the state by a corporation sought to be subjected to a franchise tax cannot in fact be made the basis of the assessment, presents a question of law reviewable by the court of appeals.

NOTE.—As to taxation of corporate franchisees in the United States, see also, in this series, Louisville Tobacco Warehouse Co. v. Com. 57 L. R. A. 33, and note; People ex rel. United States Aluminium Printing Plate Co. v. Knight, 63 L. R. A. 87; People ex rel. Metropolitan 67 L. R. A.

Street R. Co. v. State Tax Comrs. 63 L. R. A. 884; and Bank of California v. San Francisco, 64 L. R. A. 918.

As to taxation of capital stock of corporations in the United States, see State Board v. People, 58 L. R. A. 513.

3. The amount of capital employed by a corporation, and not its share stock, is to be considered under a statute imposing a franchise tax upon corporations, to be computed upon the basis of the amount of capital stock employed within the state.
4. Government bonds and those of other corporations held by a corporation whose capital stock is subject to a franchise tax cannot be presumed to have been purchased with surplus so as to bring them within the rule withdrawing them from consideration in ascertaining the capital employed within the state, if so purchased, against the finding of the comptroller that they were purchased with capital as distinguished from surplus.
5. The value of stock of another corporation purchased by a corporation against which a franchise tax is to be enforced and paid for with its bonds, to secure which the stock is deposited with a trustee, is to be regarded as part of the capital employed within the state, where the identity of the former corporation is preserved, although the stock was purchased for the purpose of securing the assets and privileges of the other corporation.

(Gray and O'Brien, JJ., dissent.)

(May 17, 1904.)

CROSS APPEALS from an order of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court modifying a finding of the State Comptroller assessing a franchise tax against the relator corporation; the relator appealing from so much of the ruling as held it liable in an amount in excess of its claim; and respondent appealing from so much as altered the finding of the Comptroller. Reversed on respondent's appeal.

Statement by Werner, J.:

The relator is a domestic corporation owning and operating a system of cable and telegraph lines extending from this state into other states and countries. Its authorized capital stock is $10,000,000, upon which it paid in 1897 a dividend of 8 per cent. Its aggregate assets were $31,414,469.21, of which $13,162,068.33 were concededly employed without the state. The basis for the tax was originally fixed by the comptroller at $5,485,860, capital stock employed in this state, upon which the tax was fixed at $10,967.72, but upon a hearing for revision the amount of capital stock employed in this state was reduced to $4,500,000, upon which the tax was cut down to $9,000. Upon appeal from this decision of the comptroller, the appellate division of the third department still further reduced the amount of capital stock employed in this state to $1,104,691.92, upon which the tax was fixed at $7 L. R. A.

$2,209.38, and from the order entered upon that decision both parties appeal to this court. The relator contends that of its aggregate assets of about $31,000,000, at least $29,000,000 are employed without the state, leaving approximately $2,000,000 within the state, the larger portion of which is not capital stock or capital employed within this state in any such sense as to furnish a basis for taxation. This contention is sought to be fortified by various combinations of figures set forth at great length in the relator's relief. The learned attorney general presents other schedules of figures, from which it is argued that the relator has at least $29,000,000 of assets employed within this state.

In our view of the case it is unnecessary to reproduce in detail these elaborate and confusing computations except in so far as they bear upon the questions which this court has jurisdiction to review, and that will be done in the opinion.

Mr. Edmund L. Cole, for relator:

The basis upon which the franchise tax of relator should be computed is such part of the relator's capital share stock at par as is evidenced by the proportion of the relator's capital employed in the state of New York to the entire employed capital, within and without the state of New York.

When the tax is based upon dividends, it is upon the capital stock at par value; but, when no dividends have been declared, it must be assessed upon the appraised capital.

People ex rel. Jewelers' Circular Pub. Co. v. Roberts, 155 N. Y. 1, 40 N. E. 248; People v. Delucare & H. Canal Co. 54 Hun, 598, 1 N. Y. Supp. 890, Affirmed in 121 N. Y. 668, 24 N. E. 1093; People v. Home Ins. Co. 92 N. Y. 328; People v. Horn Silver Min. Co. 105 N. Y. 76, 11 N. E. 155.

In case of dividends of less than 6 per cent, if the market value of the stock is known, the basis must be the proportion of share stock employed in this state at market value.

People ex rel. New York & E. River Ferry Co. v. Roberts, 168 N. Y. 14, 60 N. E. 1043; People v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 54 Hun, 598, 1 N. Y. Supp. 890; People ex rel. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. v. Knight, 173 N. Y. 255, 65 N. E. 1102.

In case of no dividends, if the value of the share stock is known, then the tax should be assessed upon the capital share stock employed in this state at market value.

People ex rel. Colonial Trust Co. v. Morgan, 47 App. Div. 126, 62 N. Y. Supp. 191, Affirmed in 162 N. Y. 654, 57 N. E. 1116; People ex rel. Edison Electric Light Co. v. Wemple, 63 Hun, 444, 18 N. Y. Supp. 511.

If the value of the capital share stock is not known, then the basis should be the actual value of the capital employed in this state.

People ex rel. Wiebusch & H. Co. v. Roberts, 154 N. Y. 101, 47 N. E. 980; People ex rel. Niagara River Hydraulic Co. v. Roberts, 30 App. Div. 180, 51 N. Y. Supp. 771.

The statute seeks to impose a franchise tax proportionate to, or measured by, only that part of the capital which is employed within this state.

People ex rel. New York & E. River Ferry Co. v. Roberts, 108 N. Y. 14, 60 N. E. 1043; People ex rel. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. v. Knight, 173 N. Y. 255, 65 N. E. 1102.

Messrs. John Gunneen, Attorney General, and William H. Wood, for defendant:

The term "capital stock," employed in the final sentence of § 182, means the capital share stock of the corporation, as distinguished from its capital or assets.

The amount of capital stock employed within this state is to be ascertained by assuming that it is the same proportion of the total capital stock as the capital or assets employed within this state is of the total capital or assets of the corporation.

The holdings of the relator, of West Shore Railroad bonds, United States bonds, New York Central & Hudson River Railroad and New York Times bonds were properly included by the comptroller as assets employed within this state.

People ex rel. American Contracting & Dredging Co. v. Wemple, 129 N. Y. 558, 29 N. E. 812; People ex rel. John A. Roebling's Sons' Co. v. Wemple, 138 N. Y. 587, 34 N. E. 386; People ex rel. Western Electric Co. v. Campbell, 145 N. Y. 587, 40 N. E. 239.

The stock of the Postal Telegraph Cable Company, a domestic corporation owned by the relator, was capital of the relator employed within this state.

People ex rel. Edison Electric Light Co. v. Campbell, 139 N. Y. 545, 20 L. R. A. 453, 34 N. E. 370.

Werner, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

If we had the right to review the facts in proceedings to revise and readjust franchise taxes, the case at bar would present some embarrassing questions that evidently perplexed the comptroller and the appellate division. As our jurisdiction is limited, however, to the review of questions of law, we must take the facts as established by the record. The comptroller decided, in the first instance, that the relator's capital stock to the extent of $5,483,860 was employed within this state, and upon this basis he fixed the relator's franchise tax at $10,967.72. The relator then applied for a revision and readjustment of this tax, and the comptroller, under the power conferred upon him by § 195 of the corporation tax law (Laws 1896, chap. 908, p. 864), reviewed his first decision, reducing the amount of relator's capital stock held to be employed within this state to $4,500,000, and cutting down the tax to $9,000. This decision by the comptroller, based upon sufficient evidence, has the effect of a judgment rendered by a court, and his return is conclusive upon this appeal (People ex rel. John A. Roebling's Sons' Co. v. Wemple, 138 N. Y. 586, 34 N. E. 386), unless the facts upon which his conclusions are based were reversed by the appellate division. Upon consulting the order of the appellate division, we find that it reduces the amount of relator's capital stock employed in this state from $4,500,000 to $1,104,691.92. In many cases such a reduction would necessarily involve a reversal of the comptroller's decision upon questions of fact, but in the case at bar it clearly appears from the order itself that the conclusion of the appellate division was reached, not because the comptroller erred in holding that capital stock was employed here when in fact it was employed elsewhere, but because he held that property owned by the relator, and concededly within this state, was not capital stock or capital that was a proper basis for taxation. In other words, the appellate division differed from the comptroller, not as to the amount of the relator's property held within this state, but as to the character of a part of it. This presents a legal conclusion that is reviewable by this court.

According to the relator's own showing, its New York assets in 1897 were West Shore Railroad bonds, $107,125; Commercial Union Telegraph stock, $33,945; United States bonds, $158,125; New York Times bonds, 9,000; New York Central & Hudson River Railroad bonds, $775,779.25; Commercial Cable Building bonds, $250,000; United States bonds, $228,500; bank balances, $163,215.36; real estate, Postal Telegraph lines, $140,000; real estate, Commercial Cable lines, $84,505; bills and accounts receivable, Cable and Postal lines, $311,931.26; Supply stores, $52,904.30. These items make an aggregate valuation of $2,315,330.17. In addition to the foregoing properties, the relator was the owner of 107,750 shares of the capital stock of the Postal Telegraph Cable Company, of the face value of $10,775,000, all of which was in this state under circumstances that will be more fully stated later on. The comptroller's decision does not set forth the items from which he computed the amount of relator's capital stock employed within this state, but it is evident that if the assets above enumerated, which were concededly within this state, are to be regarded as capital stock or capital employed therein, the relator has no just cause for complaint, since the amount upon which its tax was based is considerably less than the sum which might properly have been fixed as the basis of taxation. The appellate division held that the bonds of the West Shore Railroad Company, of the New York Times, of the New York Central & Hudson River Railroad Company, and of the United States were neither capital stock nor capital, but simply investments, and therefore not taxable. No reference is made in the order of the appellate division to the stock of the Postal Telegraph Cable Company, above referred to, but, as it is excluded from the schedule of assets held to be a proper basis for taxation, it is obvious that it was regarded as not belonging to that class. As we view the case, it presents for our review three questions of law:

(1) What is the meaning to be given to the term "capital stock," as used in § 182 of the corporation tax law? (2) Are the railroad bonds, the United States bonds, and the New York Times bonds held by the relator to be considered as part of its capital stock employed within this state under that section? (3) Is the capital stock of the Postal Telegraph Cable Company held by the relator to be considered as part of its capital stock employed within this state under that section? These questions, together with the subsidiary considerations which they involve, we will proceed to discuss in the order in which they are stated.

Section 182 of the corporation tax law (p. 856) provides that "every corporation, joint stock company or association incorporated, organized, or formed under, by, or pursuant to, law in this state, shall pay to the state treasurer, annually, an annual tax to be computed upon the basis of the amount of its capital stock employed within this state, and upon each dollar of such amount, at the rate of $\frac{1}{4}$ of a mill for each 1 per cent of dividends made and declared upon its capital stock during each year ending with the 31st day of October, if the dividends amount to 6 or more than 6 per cent upon the par value of such capital stock. If such dividend or dividends amount to less than 6 per cent on the par value of the capital stock, the tax shall be at the rate of $1\frac{1}{2}$ mills upon such portion of the capital stock at par as the amount of capital employed within this state bears to the entire capital of the corporation." It is apparent, of course, that this section applies to two classes of corporations. In the first class are those that declare and pay dividends of 6 per cent or more upon their capital stock, and in the second class are those that declare and pay dividends of less than 6 per cent upon their capital stock. The tax upon corporations in the first class is "to be computed upon the basis of the amount of its capital stock employed within this state," while the tax upon corporations in the second class is "upon such portion of the capital stock at par as the amount of capital employed within this state bears to the entire capital of the corporation." It will be observed that in either case the tax can only be based upon the capital stock employed in this state, although the methods for ascertaining the amount thereof are different. If the share stock were the basis for the tax, as distinguished from the assets representing capital, then this difference in method might be very material, for in one case it would be competent for the comptroller to fix the amount of capital stock within this state without reference to the amount or location of capital, while in the other case the presence of share stock within the state would furnish a basis for taxation only to the extent of the capital employed here. But if, on the other hand, the actual capital employed in this state, not exceeding the authorized capital stock, is the basis upon which the tax is to be computed, then, notwithstanding the difference in rate, it is in both cases based upon the same thing, namely, the amount of capital employed within this state. And, if the tax is to be computed upon that basis, the rule of proportion, practically agreed upon by the respective counsel, but discarded by the appellate division, is simply a rule of confusion. This is a simple fact which no amount of statutory verbiage can obscure, and which no divergence in methods can change. What, then, is the basis upon which the tax is to be computed? Is it the share stock held by individuals, or is it the capital held by the corporation? The tax is upon the corporation. It would seem to follow that the amount of the tax is to be measured by something that the corporation owns. A franchise stock corporation owns three things: (1) Its capital, existing in money or property; (2) its surplus, if any; (3) its franchise. The franchise is the thing taxed, and the tax is "computed upon the basis of the amount of its capital stock employed within the state." The share stock, or, in other words, the paper certificates held and owned by individuals, are not employed within this state. It is the capital represented by such certificates that is so employed. The total share stock of a domestic corporation may be held by nonresidents, and yet all of its capital may be employed within the state. In such a case there would be absolutely no basis for taxation, unless the capital of the corporation, instead of the share stock held by its members, is the thing upon which the tax is to be computed. In construing this section of the corporation tax law, the authorized issue of the share stock of a corporation needs to be considered only as fixing the limit beyond which a corporate franchise cannot be taxed in a case where all of the corporate capital is employed within this state. This court has held that the term "capital stock," as used in statutes similar to the one under consideration, means, not share stock, but the property of the corporation contributed by its stockholders, or otherwise obtained by it, to the extent required in its charter. Williams v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 93 N. Y. 162. The expression "capital stock" is often loosely used in speech, and sometimes in statutory phraseology, to denote capital and nothing more. State, Canfield, Prosecutor, v. Morristown Fire Asso. 23 N. J. L. 195. In Burrall v. Bushwick R. Co. 75 N. Y. 211, capital stock was defined as "money or property which is put into a single corporate fund by those who, by subscription therefor, become members of the corporate body." "Capital stock" and "capital" are practically the equivalent of each other when considered as a basis for a franchise tax.

The second question to be considered is whether the bonds of the United States, and of the railroads above mentioned, and of the New York Times, held by the relator within this state, are to be treated as capital employed within this state, and therefore as a part of the basis upon which the relator's franchise tax is to be computed. If these bonds were purchased with capital, as distinguished from surplus, they furnish a proper basis for taxation (People ex rel. Edison Electric Light Co. v. Campbell, 138 N. Y. 543, 20 L. R. A. 453, 34 N. E. 370); and so, if they were bought with surplus, they are not a basis for taxation (People ex rel. United Verde Copper Co. v. Roberts, 156 N. Y. 585, 51 N. E. 293). The comptroller has included these bonds in the list of assets that represent capital for the purpose of franchise taxation. There is nothing to show that they were bought with surplus. The relator does, it is true, claim that they were bought with surplus, but its contention is founded upon nothing more than an argument to the effect that, because it has more assets than share stock, there must be a presumption that capital would be invested in properties relating to its business, while surplus would naturally be invested in safe interest-bearing securities. We can indulge in no such presumption, but, if we could, it would be of no avail as against the comptroller's decision, which should not be disturbed unless clearly erroneous. People ex rel. American Contracting & Dredging Co. v. Wemple, 120 N. Y. 558, 29 N. E. 812.

The third question that remains to be considered is whether the stock of the Postal Telegraph Cable Company held by the relator is a proper element in the basis for taxation. Stocks of other corporations held by a corporation sought to be taxed upon its franchise fall within the same rules that govern the bonds above referred to. People ex rel. Edison Electric Light Co. v. Campbell, 138 N. Y. 543, 20 L. R. A. 453, 34 N. E. 370, and People ex rel. United Verde Copper Co. v. Roberts, 156 N. Y. 585, 51 N. E. 293. The recital of a few facts relating to the acquisition of the Postal Telegraph Cable Company's stock by the relator will enable us to determine whether there was anything in that transaction to take it out of the operation of the general rule. The relator not only acquired all of the share stock of the Postal Telegraph Cable Company, but all of its assets, property, and privileges, except its corporate franchise and some nonassignable contracts. The relator issued bonds in payment of the property and rights thus acquired by it, and then deposited with a trust company, to whom the bonds were turned over for collection, the stock of the Postal Telegraph Cable Company as collateral security to the bonds. Upon these facts the relator contends, in effect, that its ownership of the stock was merged in the ownership of the assets and privileges represented by it, and was therefore of no value. The difficulty with this contention is that the Postal Telegraph Cable Company is, in a legal sense, as much of a corporation as it ever was. The holder or holders of its stock can at any time pursue the business for which it was organized. The corporation has never been dissolved, and it still retains its corporate franchise. That its stock has not ceased to have life and value is very cogently shown by the deposit thereof as collateral security to relator's bonds. To some extent the tangible property and equipment of the Postal Telegraph Cable Company acquired by the relator is used by the latter in the name of the former and under its franchise. It seems clear, therefore, that the stock of the Postal Telegraph Cable Company held by the relator should be regarded as capital employed within this state, and is a proper item in the sum total upon which the relator's franchise tax should be computed.

This view of the large features of this case renders it unnecessary to discuss some of the incidental matters, which in other aspects might have had an important bearing upon the result, and leads to the conclusion that the order of the Appellate Division should be reversed and the revised decision of the Comptroller affirmed, with costs to Comptroller.

Parker, Ch. J., and Bartlett, Haight, and Vann, JJ., concur.

Gray and O'Brien, JJ., dissent.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

Frank MORRISON, Plff. in Certiorari,
v.

Fred W. KENT.

(.....Mich.....)

1. A statute, authorizing superintendents of the poor to draw from time to time on the county treasury for expenses incurred in the discharge of their duties is annulled by a subsequent statute providing that all bills against the county shall be audited or allowed by the board of auditors except those of the drain commissioners and board of supervisors.
2. A bill which is introduced into the legislature within the time designated by the Constitution may properly become a law, although the constitutional authority for such legislation is not granted until after the expiration of the time when bills might constitutionally be introduced for passage at the pending session of the legislature.

(November 9, 1908.)

NOTE.—Construction of constitutional limitations as to time for the introduction of bills in legislative assemblies.

- I. Text of constitutional provisions, 965.
- II. Presumptions respecting the regularity of legislative action, 966.
- III. Amendment and substitution of bills after expiration of constitutional limitation, 967.

I. Text of constitutional provisions.

Constitutional provisions like that referred to in MORRISON v. KENT, requiring all legislative bills to be introduced within a stated number of days after the legislature convenes, appear to be peculiar to the states of California, Colorado, and Michigan. The text of the several provisions of those states is as follows:

"No bill shall be introduced in either house . . . after fifty days after the commencement" of the session, "without the consent of two thirds of the members thereof." Cal. Const. art. 4, § 2.

"No bill, except the general appropriation for the expenses of the government only, introduced in either house of the general assembly after the first twenty-five days of the session, shall become a law." Colo. Const. art. 5, § 19.

"No new bill shall be introduced into either house of the legislature after the first fifty days of the session shall have expired." Mich. Const. art. 4, § 28.

67 L. R. A.

CERTIORARI to the Circuit Court for Saginaw County to review a judgment granting a writ of mandamus to compel defendant to pay an order in favor of relator. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Weadock & Purcell, for plaintiff in certiorari:

The act is unconstitutional and void for the reason that it was never legally introduced, and that at the time when it was introduced such an act was unconstitutional and void.

The board of county auditors had no power to change, alter, modify, reject, or interfere with, the bills made by the superintendents of the county poor for Saginaw county.

The local act providing for a board of county auditors does not repeal, either directly or by implication, the provisions of chapter 3, Statutes 1897, for the maintenance of the poor and the organization and

The Constitution of Georgia contains a similar limitation in respect to bills of a special or local nature in the following language: "No bill shall be considered or reported to the house, by said [the specified] committee, unless the same shall have been laid before it within fifteen days after the organization of the general assembly, except by a two-thirds vote." Ga. Const. § 7, ¶ 15.

And in North Dakota the introduction of appropriation bills is limited as follows: "No bill for the appropriation of money, except for the expenses of the government, shall be introduced after the fortieth day of the session, except by unanimous consent of the house in which is sought to be introduced." N. D. Const. 1889, art. 2, § 60.

Besides the foregoing, provisions are found in a number of state Constitutions prohibiting the introduction of bills during the closing days of the legislative session. In some states, however, the limitation is applicable only to appropriation bills.

Arkansas: "No new bill shall be introduced into either house during the last three days of the session." Const. 1874, art. 5, § 34.

Louisiana: "No appropriation of money shall be made by the general assembly in the last five days of the session thereof." Const. art. 55.

Maryland: "No bill shall originate in either house during the last ten days of the session." Const. art. 3, § 27.

Minnesota: "No new bill shall be introduced in either branch, except on the written request maintenance of a board of superintendents of the poor of Saginaw county.

It was held in Sackrider v. Saginaw County, 79 Mich. 59, 44 N. W. 105, that, after the expiration of the fifty-day limit, a bill introduced within the time could not be amended by adding a subject-matter not germane to the bill as originally introduced.

Constitutional provisions are not directory.

People v. Dettenthaler, 118 Mich. 595, 44 L. R. A. 164, 77 N. W. 450.

There is no remedy for a bill that has no lawful beginning.

Atty. Gen. v. Rice, 64 Mich. 385, 31 N. W. 203.

It cannot be presumed that the legislature intended to repeal the law when no reference is made to it in the later act, unless the intent is clear.

Re Bushey, 105 Mich. 64, 62 N. W. 1036; Hatch v. Calhoun Circuit Judge, 127 Mich. 177, 80 N. W. 518; Highland Park v. Mo-Alpine, 117 Mich. 666, 76 N. W. 159; University of Michigan v. Auditor General, 103 Mich. 134, 66 N. W. 956.

Repeal by implication is not favored.

23 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 489-492.

The superintendents of the county poor in any county in this state are a corporation by that name, and by statute are given the essential powers of a corporation for public purposes, including the right to sue and be sued.

Newaygo County v. Nelson, 75 Mich. 160, 42 N. W. 797.

of the governor, during the last twenty (20) days of such sessions." Const. art. 4, § 1.

Mississippi: "No new bills shall be introduced into either house of the legislature during the last three days of the session." Const. art. 4, § 67.

Montana: "No bill for the appropriation of money, except for the expenses of the government, shall be introduced within ten days of the close of the session, except by unanimous consent of the house in which it is sought to be introduced." Const. 1889, art. 5, § 21.

Texas: "No bill shall be passed which has not been presented and referred to and reported from a committee at least three days before the final adjournment of the legislature." Const. art. 3, § 37.

Washington: "No bill shall be considered in either house unless the time of its introduction shall have been at least ten days before the final adjournment of the legislature, unless the legislature shall otherwise direct by a vote of two thirds of all the members elected to each house, said vote to be taken by yeas and nays and entered upon the journal, or unless the same be at a special session." Const. art. 2, § 36.

Wyoming: "No bill for the appropriation of money, except for the expenses of the government, shall be introduced within five (5) days of the close of the session, except by unanimous consent of the house in which it is sought to be introduced." Const. art. 3, § 22.

The purpose of the foregoing provisions, unless it be that of Georgia, is said by Judge Cooley to be "to prevent hasty and improvident legislation, and to compel, so far as any previous law can accomplish that result, the careful examination of proposed laws, or, at least, the affording of opportunity for that purpose." Cooley, Const. Llm. 7th ed. 199.

Another purpose, it is said, is, "to give the people of the state, or of any locality in the state, an opportunity to be heard upon proposed legislation affecting their interests. The legislative journals, referring, as they do, to the titles of all bills introduced, give some warning to the people of the measures introduced. The right of petition and protest has ever been recognized as one of the established privileges of the people in a free country; and they have a right to notice of proposed legislation, and an opportunity to express their assent or dissent. If there was no constitutional inhibition against such practice, bills might be 67 L. R. A.

introduced upon the last days of the session, and rushed at once through both houses, without any chance for the people to be heard before their passage, or to rectify the action until another biennial session of the legislature." Atty. Gen. v. Rice, 64 Mich. 388, 389, 31 N. W. 203.

Respecting the use of skeleton bills for the purpose of evading these constitutional provisions, Judge Cooley says: "A practice has sprung up of evading these constitutional provisions by introducing a new bill after the time has expired when it may constitutionally be done, as an amendment to some pending bill, the whole of which, except the enacting clause, is struck out to make way for it. Thus, the member who thinks he may possibly have occasion for the introduction of a new bill after the constitutional period has expired takes care to introduce sham bills in due season which he can use as stocks to graft upon, and which he uses irrespective of their character or contents. The sham bill is perhaps a bill to incorporate the city of Slam. One of the member's constituents applies to him for legislative permission to construct a dam across the Wild Cat river. Forthwith, by amendment, the bill entitled A Bill to incorporate the City of Slam has all after the enacting clause stricken out, and it is made to provide, as its sole object, that John Doe may construct a dam across the Wild Cat. With this title and in this form it is passed; but the house then considerably amends the title to correspond with the purpose of the bill, and the law is passed, and the Constitution at the same time saved. This trick is so transparent, and so clearly in violation of the Constitution, and the evidence at the same time is so fully spread upon the record, that it is a matter of surprise to find it so often resorted to." Cooley, Const. Llm. 7th ed. p. 199, note 3.

II. Presumptions respecting the regularity of legislative action.

Where the validity of a statute is questioned, the parties will not be permitted to stipulate, or agree, or admit by pleadings, that the same was not properly passed by the legislature in accordance with these provisions. Neither can parol proof be resorted to for that purpose. In such case the legislative record must prevail, and, unless the journal shows affirmatively that

Mr. John F. O'Keefe for defendant in certiorari.

Montgomery, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The relator presented to the respondent, as county treasurer, an order drawn in relator's favor by the superintendents of the poor of Saginaw county, and demanded payment thereof. Payment was refused for the reason that the relator's claim had not been audited by the board of county auditors. On application to the circuit court mandamus was granted, and the case is brought here for review.

At the spring election of 1903, § 10 of article 10 of the Constitution was amended so as to read: "Sec. 10. The board of supervisors, or, in the counties of Saginaw, Jackson, Washtenaw, Kent, and Wayne, the board of county auditors, shall have the exclusive power to fix the compensation for all services rendered for, and to adjust all claims against, their respective counties, and the sum so fixed and defined shall be subject to no appeal." At the legislative session of 1903 act No. 397 was passed, establishing a board of auditors of Saginaw county, and prescribing their powers and duties. Section 7 of this act reads in part as follows: "No bills against the county of Saginaw shall be audited or allowed in any other manner than provided for in this act, except the bills of the county drain commissioner and such expenditures as may be authorized by the board of supervisors of said the constitutional directions were not complied with, it will be presumed that they were followed. Atty. Gen. v. Rice, 64 Mich. 385, 31 N. W. 203; People ex rel. Hart v. McElroy, 72 Mich. 446, 2 L. R. A. 609, 40 N. W. 750; Sackrider v. Saginaw County, 79 Mich. 59, 44 N. W. 165.

Therefore, although the constitutional provision, that no new bill may be introduced after the first fifty days of the session, is violated by the report of a substituted bill by a committee for one in mere skeleton form, a mere title, handed up to pass as a bill until convenience or some future interest might enable the member introducing it to engraft upon it any legislation he might desire, yet, if such facts do not appear upon the journals of the legislative assembly, the presumption that the constitutional requirement was complied with is conclusive. Atty. Gen. v. Rice, 64 Mich. 385, 31 N. W. 203.

In Hale v. McGettigan, 114 Cal. 112, 45 Pac. 1049, it is said: "There can be no presumption that the legislature has disregarded any constitutional requirements in the passage of a statute, and, if the journals are silent upon the observance of any constitutional requirement, it cannot be assumed that such requirement was omitted by the legislature." But, although the question was raised, the court refused to determine, in this case, whether the journals might be examined for the purpose of impeaching the validity of an act because the introduction of the bill was not within the time limited by the Constitution.

In Michigan, it seems to be settled that this presumption does not attach to the enrolled bill, as is held in some of the states, but the courts will examine the legislative journals to ascertain whether the constitutional method has been followed in the enactment of a statute. People ex rel. Hart v. McElroy, 72 Mich. 446, 2 L. R. A. 609, 40 N. W. 750; Sackrider v. Saginaw County, 79 Mich. 59, 44 N. W. 165.

And, although the presumption is strong that the legislature has not violated the Constitution, still, if the proof furnished by the journals is clear that an act was not constitutionally passed, it is the duty of courts to so declare, and to hold it void. Sackrider v. Saginaw County, 79 Mich. 59, 44 N. W. 165.

III. Amendment and substitution of bills after expiration of constitutional limitation.

Such limitations upon the introduction of G7 L. R. A.

bills are not violated by the amendment, after the time limit, of a bill regularly introduced within the limitation, if the amendment is germane to the purpose which the original bill had in view. Thus, a bill introduced for the organization of the "township" of Montmorency may be so amended after the time as to make it a bill for the organization of the "county" of Montmorency, since both the original bill and the amendment had in view the same general purpose, namely, to give the inhabitants of the territory described a distinct municipal government. Pack v. Barton, 47 Mich. 520, 11 N. W. 367.

To the same effect is Davock v. Moore, 103 Mich. 120, 28 L. R. A. 783, 63 N. W. 424, where a bill was amended after the time limited for the introduction of new bills; but the nature of the amendment is not indicated.

A section added to a bill after the time limited by the Constitution for the introduction of new bills is not invalid for that reason, if the bill itself was introduced in time, and the section is a proper one to be embodied in the bill. Renackowsky v. Water Comrs. 122 Mich. 613, 81 N. W. 581.

Even though the amendments be extensive, they will not render the act of the legislature invalid, if they indicate no purpose to violate the Constitution, or to exceed the proper limits of legislative discretion. Powell v. Jackson, 51 Mich. 129, 16 N. W. 369.

Likewise, it is held, under a constitutional provision that no "new" bill shall be introduced after a stated time, that a substitute for a bill introduced within the prescribed time may be introduced after such time, if in harmony with the objects and purposes of the original, as expressed in its title. Atty. Gen. ex rel. Crane v. Amos, 60 Mich. 372, 27 N. W. 571.

Within this rule, a bill "to incorporate the city of Marine City, in the county of St. Clair" may be substituted for one "detaching certain lands from the township of Ft. Gratiot, in the county of St. Clair, and organizing the same into a township." In such case, although the journal does not reveal the description of the particular territory contained in the original bill as introduced, the court will not go outside the journal to ascertain if it was identical with the territory affected by the substitute. People ex rel. Hart v. McElroy, 72 Mich. 446, 2 L. R. A. 609, 40 N. W. 750.

When both the original and the substitute county at any regular, special, or adjourned session thereof, where payment shall be provided for in the resolution authorizing the same." The circuit judge was of the opinion that this section did not abrogate the provisions of subdivision 7 of § 4506 of the Compiled Laws, which authorizes the superintendents of the poor to draw from time to time on the county treasurer for all necessary expenses incurred in the discharge of their duties, and directs the treasurer to pay such draft out of moneys placed in his hands for the support of the poor, and that, under this and other provisions of the act relating to superintendents of the poor, full control of the funds raised for the support of the poor by counties is given to the superintendents, and has not been withdrawn by the act of 1903; and it is contended in this court by relator's counsel that the superintendents of the poor constitute a corporate body whose powers are not affected by the act of 1903. The fact that the superintendents may make contracts which bind the county does not necessarily establish that the bills for work performed under such contract may not, or should not, be audited by a distinct auditing body. Indeed, such fixed allowances have been audited in many instances by the boards of supervisors. People ex rel. Bristow v. Macomb County, 3 Mich. 475; People ex rel. Douville v. Manistee County, 40 Mich. 589. The language of § 7 of the act of 1903 is very broad, and includes all claims against the county excepting certain distinct claims. The inference is bills relate to the same subject-matter, viz., the collection of taxes, and have the same object in view, the enforcement of such collection, they come within the foregoing rule, although the title of the former recites that it is to authorize and empower the township treasurers of a particular county to force the collection of taxes in certain cases, and the title of the latter recites that it is to authorize the issuance of injunctions to restrain waste upon certain lands when taxes upon same shall be due and unpaid. Caldwell v. Ward, 83 Mich. 13, 46 N. W. 1024.

A bill to require the judge of the sixteenth judicial circuit to hold the terms of court of the thirty-first judicial circuit in certain cases, and also to require the judge of the thirty-first judicial circuit to hold the terms of the sixteenth judicial circuit under certain circumstances, may be substituted after the expiration of the constitutional limitation for the introduction of bills, for "a bill to vacate the sixteenth judicial circuit, and to reorganize the thirty-first judicial circuit," the general purpose of the two bills being to provide for the holding of courts in the territory covered by the sixteenth and thirty-first judicial circuits. Toll v. Jerome, 101 Mich. 468, 59 N. W. 816.

In Detroit v. Schmid, 128 Mich. 379, 92 Am. St. Rep. 408, 87 N. W. 383, it is said that the law is fully settled in that state, "that whatever might have been incorporated into the original act under the title of such original act may be added by way of amendment under the most general title;" and the validity of a substituted bill, whose title indicates the amendment of a section of an existing statute, different from that proposed in the title of the original bill, is upheld.

But a bill which is not germane to the purpose and object of the original bill cannot be offered as a substitute after the constitutional limit for the introduction of bills has expired. And whether it is germane may be determined from the titles of the respective bills, as contained in the journal. Such titles, being a part of the journal, may be used to support or rebut the presumption of the correctness of legislative action. Sackrider v. Saginaw County, 79 Mich. 59, 44 N. W. 165; Caldwell v. Ward, 83 Mich. 13, 46 N. W. 1024.

Tested by this method, a bill for the bonding of Saginaw county, to maintain stone and other roads within that county, cannot be substituted for a bill to vacate a state road in Midland 67 L. R. A.

county. Parol evidence will not be received, however, to show the proceedings of the legislature, and to prove the contents of the respective bills. Sackrider v. Saginaw County, 79 Mich. 59, 44 N. W. 165.

In Hale v. McGittigan, 114 Cal. 112, 45 Pac. 1049, the only case upon this question we have been able to find outside the state of Michigan, there were introduced, during the first fifty days of the session, eight different bills entitled "An Act to Amend 'an Act to Establish a Uniform System of County and Township Governments, Approved March 31, 1891,'" and twenty-nine other bills, amendatory of different sections of the same act, were introduced into the assembly. Of these latter, assembly bill No. 74 was entitled "An Act to Amend Section 165" of said act. These several bills were referred to a committee, which reported a substitute for all of said bills, and recommended its passage. After bill No. 74 had been read a first and second time, the bill reported by the committee, entitled "An Act to Establish a Uniform System of County and Township Governments," was offered and passed. In sustaining the validity of the act the court says: "If a bill has been introduced in either house within the first fifty days of the session, whatever is proper in the way of amendment is as admissible after the fifty days as before, and this will include whatever is within the purpose of the bill. By the same rules, a substitute that is germane to the subject of the bill may be adopted, without violating this provision of the Constitution, since such substitute is in effect only an enlarged amendment to the bill for which it is offered. Toll v. Jerome, 101 Mich. 468, 59 N. W. 816. The various bills for which the substitute in the present instance was reported, related to the county government act of 1891, some of them purporting by their titles to amend the entire act, and others to amend certain sections of the act, and it was within the proper function of the committee to which they were referred for consideration to consolidate them into one bill, if in its judgment it was expedient, and to report the same as a substitute for them all. Such report and substitute, instead of being the introduction of a new bill, was only bringing together before the house, in a revised form, bills that had already been introduced and referred to that committee, with a recommendation from it for the action by the house which that committee deemed advisable." N. B. R. irresistible that the exceptions stated are the only ones intended. It follows that the claim in question is within the act.

The point is made in this court that, as the bill which was finally enacted into a law after the Constitution was amended was introduced at a time when its provisions would have been unconstitutional, the spirit of the provision requiring bills to be introduced within the first fifty days of the session was thereby violated. This contention cannot be allowed. The practice of the legislature has been in harmony with the action taken in this case for many years. To admit relator's contention would work havoc in legislation which has stood unquestioned up to this time. We think it is enough to expect or require that a statute shall be constitutional when enacted.

The order of the Circuit Court is reversed, with costs.

The other Justices concur.

VERMONT SUPREME COURT.

Susan W. HUBBARD

v.

Asahel H. HUBBARD, Appt.

(.....Vt.....)

The legislature cannot empower the court, in its discretion, to authorize a married woman to convey her real estate by separate deed, in jurisdictions where the common law, giving the husband a freehold right in the property, is in force, since it would deprive him of his property without due process of law.

(September 15, 1904.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a decree of the Chancery Court for Addison County empowering petitioner to sell her real estate by separate deed. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. W. H. Davis, for appellant:

No power to authorize the sale resides in the court of chancery, independent of the discretionary power conferred by the statute.

Chapman v. Long, 66 Vt. 656, 30 Atl. 3; Dietrich v. Hutchinson, 73 Vt. 134, 87 Am. St. Rep. 698, 50 Atl. 810.

The real estate in question was not the sole and separate property of the petitioner. Her husband is entitled to the rents and profits thereof.

Dietrich v. Hutchinson, 73 Vt. 134, 87 Am. St. Rep. 698, 50 Atl. 810; Hackett v. Mozley, 68 Vt. 210, 34 Atl. 949; Gould v. Gould, 29 Vt. 504.

A married woman may not convey her real estate, except by deed executed jointly with her husband.

Vt. Stat. § 2646.

NOTE.—For a case in this series as to validity of statute giving judge discretion to allow separation of jury in criminal case, see King v. State, 3 L. R. A. 210.

As to statute empowering court to commit one acquitted of murder, because of insanity, to asylum for treatment without notice to him or provision for investigation as to his present mental state, see the following case of Re Boyett, post, 972.
67 L. R. A.

The legislature could not enact a law suspending § 2646, Vt. Stat., in favor of one individual and allowing it to remain in force as to others.

Holden v. James, 11 Mass. 397, 6 Am. Dec. 174; King v. State, 87 Tenn. 304, 3 L. R. A. 210, 10 S. W. 509; Tillman v. Cocke, 9 Baxt. 429; Cooley, Const. Lim. 558; Lewis v. Webb, 3 Me. 326.

The discretion as to the regulation of property rights between husband and wife is a legislative discretion, and must be exercised by the legislature. It cannot be delegated to the courts.

Vt. Const. art. 3; Noel v. People, 187 Ill. 587, 52 L. R. A. 287, 79 Am. St. Rep. 238, 58 N. E. 616; State ex rel. Hahn v. Young, 29 Minn. 474, 9 N. W. 737; Smith v. Strother, 68 Cal. 194, 8 Pac. 852; Re North Milwaukee, 93 Wis. 616, 33 L. R. A. 638, 67 N. W. 1033; Galesburg v. Hawkenson, 75 Ill. 152; Merrill v. Sherburne, 1 N. H. 203, 8 Am. Dec. 52.

No. 49 of the Acts of 1896 is unconstitutional because it vests in the court of chancery a purely arbitrary power, by virtue of which, at the uncontrolled will of the chancellor, one husband may be deprived of his freehold and another protected.

Baltimore v. Radecke, 49 Md. 217, 33 Am. Rep. 239; Noel v. People, 187 Ill. 587, 52 L. R. A. 287, 79 Am. St. Rep. 238, 58 N. E. 616; Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 30 L. ed. 220, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1064; Re Wo Lee, 26 Fed. 471; King v. State, 87 Tenn. 304, 3 L. R. A. 210, 10 S. W. 509; Tillman v. Cocke, 9 Baxt. 429; Galesburg v. Hawkenson, 75 Ill. 152.

Mr. W. H. Bliss for appellee.

Stafford, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The question is whether No. 49, p. 42, of the Acts of 1896 is constitutional. It provides that "the court of chancery, in its discretion, upon the petition of a married woman, may empower her to convey her real estate by her separate deed" as effectually as if the deed were executed by herself and her husband. In the present case the petition set forth the marriage of the petitioner to the petitionee; that the petitioner was then the owner in fee simple of a piece of land described; that since her marriage she had bargained the land to a party named, and needed the proceeds for her support and to meet her obligations, and thereupon prayed for authority under said act. These, so far as the case shows, were the only averments in the bill. There was an answer, but there is nothing before us to show what it contained. The cause was referred to a special master to hear and determine the issues of fact, and the master, having heard the testimony, made his report to the court of chancery. The printed "case" purports to give the substance of the findings, as well as certain concessions, from which it appears that the parties were married in 1899; that the petitioner then owned the land described in the petition, holding the same by ordinary conveyance, and not to her sole and separate use; that the parties lived together for about a year, and since that period have lived apart in the circumstances and for the reasons stated by the master, which need not be noticed further than to say that they seem to show a case of separation begun and continued through the fault of the husband; that the property, free of encumbrances, is worth about $900; that the husband brought a petition for divorce, which was dismissed, and that the wife brought one, which was discontinued; that she bargained the land, and that the petitionee refused to join in the deed. The cause was heard in the court of chancery upon the report and the petitionee's exceptions thereto (what the exceptions were does not appear) and a decree was entered empowering the petitioner to convey the real estate by her separate deed "pursuant to the provisions of No. 49, p. 42, of the Acts of 1896," from which decree this appeal was taken.

It will be observed that the petition is brought and the decree rendered strictly under and pursuant to the act in question. The petition does not attempt to make a case under the provisions of Vt. Stat. 2650, nor does the court of chancery treat the case as arising thereunder. That statute provides that, when a married man is incapacitated by intemperance, insanity, or otherwise for supporting his family, or deserts, neglects, or abandons his wife, or by ill usage or criminal conduct gives her cause to live apart from him, the chancellor may, upon her petition, if she is of full age, authorize her to sell and convey her real estate or any personal estate which came to the husband by reason of the marriage. How the case might have stood under that enactment we have, for the reason stated, no occasion to inquire. Even in this court the petitioner's counsel does not rely upon, or even refer to, that provision.

If the decree is valid, what is its effect? We are still living under the common-law rule which gives the husband a freehold estate for the joint lives of himself and his wife in her lands which she held at the time of her marriage, except such as she held to her sole and separate use. In this land, therefore, the petitionee has such a freehold interest. In that sense and to that extent it is his estate. He is entitled to the rents and profits thereof. Dietrich v. Hutchinson, 73 Vt. 134, 87 Am. St. Rep. 698, 50 Atl. 810; Hackett v. Mozley, 68 Vt. 210, 34 Atl. 949; Chapman v. Long, 66 Vt. 656, 30 Atl. 3. Such estate is still recognized and protected by statute, for the wife may not convey nor mortgage her real estate except by deed duly executed by herself and her husband. Vt. Stat. 2646. The effect of the decree, then, is to deprive the husband of his estate. This, of course, cannot be done without due process of law. U. S. Const. Amend. 14, § 1. Does the act in question provide or contemplate due process of law? It declares that the husband's estate may, in effect, be taken from him and bestowed upon the wife, upon her petition, by the court of chancery, "in its discretion." Legitimate judicial discretion is, without doubt, due process of law. Consequently the exact question is whether the power attempted to be vested in the court of chancery is a permissible instance of judicial discretion. Many attempts have been made to define the term, and there is no harmonizing the results. See 6 Enc. Pl. & Pr. p. 819, title, Discretion; 2 Enc. Pl. & Pr. pp. 409-420, title, Appeals; and 9 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 473. One court treats it as nothing more than the power to determine finally and without appeal upon the question of fact, treating the legal rule as settled and binding. Bundy v. Hyde, 50 N. H. 120. Another declares that it can have no meaning whatever unless it extends to the determining of the rule of law itself, and be recognized as final and conclusive in that respect also. Oneida Common Pleas Judges v. People, 18 Wend. 99. Others treat it as a freedom to determine both the rule and the fact within certain bounds, which bounds are inviolable, and are not to be overpassed without redress. All agree that by judicial discretion is never intended the whim or caprice of the magistrate, nor a course of judicial action inconsistent with itself in dealing with cases essentially alike. It is the essence of all law that when the facts are the same the result is the same. It is always necessary in the decision of a matter in court that the judge should have in mind, first, a rule or standard and, second, the facts which are to be tested thereby. But certain matters seem hardly to admit of the formulation of inflexible rules in advance, and to be most wisely left to the sound judgment of the magistrate when the exigency shall arise, leaving him to be governed by the general analogies of the law and his own sense of justice. The better view seems to be that, even in these instances, he is not altogether a law unto himself, but may be overruled if his action is such as to shock the universal or the common sense of what is right among his fellows. All judicial discretion may thus be considered as exercisable only within the bounds of reason and justice in the broader sense, and to be abused when it plainly overpasses these bounds. See an article entitled Judicial Discretion, 17 Am. L. Rev. 569; Sir John Romilly's opinion, [Hayward v. Cope, 25 Beav. 151], 17 English Ruling Cases, 823; Gardner v. Jay, L. R. 29 Ch. Div. 52, 3 English Ruling Cases, at pages 251, 252. The deposit of discretion is most usually found in matters of procedure and the conduct of trials, where not only would it be difficult to prescribe exact and minute regulations, but where the situation itself is not easily reproduced in its original character, and cannot safely be reviewed. Such are questions concerning the latitude of cross-examination, the course of argument, within certain bounds, questions of continuance and frequently of new trials, whether actions should be consolidated, whether and when election between counts should be compelled, questions of contempt in the presence of the court, and the like. Instances are not wanting, however, in the field of substantive law. Whether specific performance shall be decreed is said to be a matter of discretion, but the rules governing the exercise of the discretion have become so well fixed and understood that the conditions determining the right to a decree are almost capable of being stated in the form of a rule. 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1404; Fowler v. Sands, 73 Vt. 237, 50 Atl. 1067. We are not aware of any instance where the law has attempted to subject the right of a person to retain his estate to the decision of a magistrate unguided and unregulated save by his own sense of fairness and justice. The grant of discretionary power in the legal sense apparently implies the existence of certain well-understood principles within which it should be exercised. But when a statute declares that a husband's property may be taken from him and bestowed upon his wife in the discretion of the chancellor, what are the well-understood principles which are to govern him in the exercise of his discretion? In the statute referred to above (Vt. Stat. 2650) the legislature undertook to lay down the law upon that very subject, carefully defining the circumstances in which a wife might be given the authority now asked for. When the chancellor is bidden to exercise his discretion beyond and regardless of these circumstances, how is he to judge? He has no law to govern him, because the law is against divesting the husband of his estate. Is he to make a law? Is he to formulate a rule governing such cases? Then he becomes the legislature for that case. And is one chancellor to make one rule and another chancellor a different rule? Then we live under a government of men; not of laws. Is it a case for the exercise of discretion, or is it not rather a field wherein the rights of men and women must be regulated by positive law? Is it not too much to ask that one's right to hold his estate should be made to depend upon its appearing fair and just to a chancellor that he should do so, merely in view of the circumstances existing between himself and another?

Analogous cases are to be found. A statute attempting to give the judge in criminal trials authority to keep the jury together or permit them to disperse, in his discretion, has been held void. King v. State, 87 Tenn. 304, 3 L. R. A. 210, 10 S. W. 509. An ordinance forbidding the use, upon certain streets, of heavy vehicles without special permission of a board, was held unreasonable and void as failing to prescribe conditions upon which the permission should be granted, and leaving it to the arbitrary will of the officers. Cicero Lumber Co. v. Cicero, 176 Ill. 9, 26, 42 L. R. A. 696, 68 Am. St. Rep. 155, 51 N. E. 758. Similar cases are Plymouth v. Schulteis, 135 Ind. 339, 35 N. E. 12; Baltimore v. Radecke, 49 Md. 217, 33 Am. R. p. 243; Noel v. People, 187 Ill. 587, 52 L. R. A. 287, 79 Am. St. Rep. 238, 58 N. E. 616; Re Wo Lee, 26 Fed. 471; Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 30 L. ed. 220, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1064. In our opinion, to take one's property under a statute like the present is to deprive him thereof without due process of law, and accordingly we hold that Acts 1896, p. 42, No. 49, is unconstitutional and void in that it undertakes to clothe a court with power to deprive a property owner of his estate without making the exercise of the power depend upon proof of any prescribed facts, but leaving it to the arbitrary and unregulated will of the magistrate.

Decree reversed, with costs in this court, and cause remanded, with mandate that the bill be dismissed.

NORTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

Re Emmett BOYETT.

(136 N. C. 415.)

1. Empowering the court, in its discretion, to commit one acquitted of murder because of insanity to an asylum for treatment, from which he cannot be released without an act of the legislature, without notice to him or giving him an opportunity to be heard, or any provisions for investigation as to his present mental state, deprives him of his liberty without due process of law.
2. The legislature cannot assume the right to pass upon the question of the release of one committed to a hospital for criminal insane, and thereby deprive the courts of their jurisdiction to inquire into the legality of his restraint.
3. If the evidence indicates that one committed to an asylum for the insane under an invalid statute is actually insane, the court should not order his discharge, but should direct his detention for a reasonable time until proceedings can be taken for his commitment in a proper manner.

(November 15, 1904.)

APPEAL by petitioner from an order denying his application for release under a writ of habeas corpus from an asylum to which he had been committed as an insane person. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Land & Cowper, for petitioner:

Law of the land means the general law, a law which hears before it condemns, and renders judgment only after trial.

Black, Const. Law, 419; Cooley, Const. Lim. 502; Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. 518, 4 L. ed. 629; Parish v. East Coast Cedar Co. 133 N. C. 483, 98 Am. St. Rep. 718, 45 S. E. 768.

The essential elements of due process of law are notice and an opportunity to defend.

Simon v. Craft, 182 U. S. 427, 45 L. ed. 1165, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 836; Phillips v. Postal Teleg. Cable Co. 130 N. C. 513, 89 Am. St. Rep. 868, 41 S. E. 1022.

The gist of the constitutional require-

NOTE.—For a case in this series holding that a statute permitting commitment to hospital for insane upon application of relative or friend of alleged insane person, or by any of certain officials, without notice to such person, is invalid, see Re Lambert, 55 L. R. A. 856.

As to validity of order by judge for temporary confinement of person alleged to be insane pending proceedings for determination of his insanity, see Porter v. Ritch, 39 L. R. A. 353.

As to necessity of notice of lunacy proceedings to alleged lunatic generally, see note to Evans v. Johnson, 23 L. R. A. 737, 67 L. R. A.

ments of due process of law implies "a regular proceeding before a competent court, possessing jurisdiction, with an opportunity to the party to appear and to be heard in his own defense, or in rebuttal of the claim made against his property."

Black, Const. Law, § 153, pp. 424, 425; Portland v. Bangor, 65 Me. 120, 20 Am. Rep. 681.

The proceeding must be such as conforms to the Constitution, and gives the citizen the right to be heard.

Re Dowdell, 169 Mass. 387, 61 Am. St. Rep. 290, 47 N. E. 1033; Montana Co. v. St. Louis Min. & Mill. Co. 152 U. S. 160, 38 L. ed. 398, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 506; Walker v. Sauvinet, 92 U. S. 90, 23 L. ed. 678.

A person supposed to be insane may not lawfully be committed to an asylum, at the instance of public authority, against his will, without some sort of judicial inquiry into his sanity; and such proceeding should give notice and an opportunity to be heard in order to meet the constitutional requirement.

16 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 599 (6); Black, Const. Law, 399; Re Lambert, 134 Cal. 626, 55 L. R. A. 857, 86 Am. St. Rep. 296, 66 Pac. 851; Evans v. Johnson, 23 L. R. A. 737, and note, 39 W. Va. 299, 45 Am. St. Rep. 912, 19 S. E. 623; Armstrong v. Short, 8 N. C. (1 Hawks) 11.

Asylums are not places of punishment.

State v. Pritchett, 106 N. C. 673, 11 S. E. 357; Clark, Crim. Proc. § 149, p. 427; State v. Vann, 82 N. C. 635; Van Deusen v. Newcomer, 40 Mich. 93.

Petitioner has established the fact that he is not now insane. One cannot lawfully be placed or detained in an insane asylum against his will unless actually insane.

Van Deusen v. Newcomer, 40 Mich. 90.

The writ of habeas corpus is the proper remedy and right of any person unlawfully restrained of his liberty in an asylum.

15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 160 (6); 16 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 598 (4); Palmer v. Buck, 83 Mich. 528, 47 N. W. 355; Re Dixon, 4 N. Y. L. Bul. 84, 11 Abb. N. C. 118; Re Le Donne, 173 Mass. 552, 54 N. E. 244.

A statute which provides that an insane person may be committed to an asylum by others, and there held and detained without the right to institute proceedings for his own release, is unconstitutional and void.

16 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 599 (7); Doyle's Petition, 16 R. I. 537, 5 L. R. A. 359, 27 Am. St. Rep. 759, 18 Atl. 159; Black Hawk County v. Springer, 53 Iowa, 417, 10 N. W. 791; Chavannes v. Priestley, 80 Iowa, 317, 9 L. R. A. 193, 45 N. W. 766; State v. Pritchett, 106 N. C. 672, 11 S. E. 357; State ex rel. Blaisdell v. Billings, 55 Minn. 473, 43 Am. St. Rep. 524, 57 N. W. 206, 794; Stuart v. Palmer, 74 N. Y. 183, 30 Am. Rep. 289; Underwood v. People, 32 Mich. 1, 20 Am. Rep. 633; People ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Lawton, 30 Mich. 386.

Connor, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The petition herein was filed by E. M. Land on behalf of Emmett Boyett on the 28th day of September, 1904, before his honor Judge Ferguson, setting forth: That Emmett Boyett was detained of his liberty by J. S. Mann, Esq., superintendent of the Hospital for the Dangerous Insane in the city of Raleigh, North Carolina. That such detention was by virtue of an order made by the judge of the superior court presiding at the November term, 1903, of Lenoir county. That at said term said Boyett, pursuant to indictment theretofore found by the grand jury, was put on trial charged with the murder of his wife, Lena Boyett. That upon his arraignment on said indictment he pleaded not guilty, and was upon such plea tried before the court and jury. That by the verdict of the jury he was acquitted of said charge. That to sustain his said plea he introduced evidence tending to show that he was insane at the time he killed his wife, and that it was upon such evidence that he relied for his acquittal. That, after said verdict was returned by the jury, his honor, the judge presiding, made the following order: "Whereas, Emmett Boyett was indicted at the above term of the Lenoir superior court for the murder of Lena Boyett, his wife; and whereas, upon trial of said indictment before the petty jury, duly impaneled to try the same, it was admitted by the prisoner's counsel that said prisoner did kill his said wife by shooting her; and whereas, said counsel pleaded insanity as a defense to said indictment; and whereas, the jury acquitted the said prisoner on the ground of insanity: It is therefore ordered and adjudged by the court, in the exercise of its discretion, in accordance with § 65, Acts of the general assembly of 1899 [p. 25] chap. 1, that said Emmett Boyett be at once committed to the Hospital for the Dangerous Insane, to be kept in custody therein as provided in said section, and until discharged in accordance with the provisions of § 67 of said act, or otherwise discharged according to law. Chapter 1 [p. 3], Acts 1899. The sheriff of Lenoir county is commanded at once to deliver said prisoner to the Hospital for the Dangerous Insane at Raleigh, and to the authorities governing the same." That no investigation has been had for the purpose of determining the mental condition at any other time than that of the homicide. That when the verdict was rendered and the court committed him to the custody of the sheriff he moved the court that an inquiry as to his mental condition at that time be had. That the court refused the motion, and made the order set out in the record. Judge Ferguson issued the writ of habeas corpus as prayed for. Pursuant thereto, the officer in charge of the dangerous insane produced the body of the said Boyett, making return to said writ that the said Boyett was "confined in the Hospital for the Criminal Insane by virtue of the order of Judge Brown, one of the judges of the superior court of North Carolina, made at the November term, 1903, of the superior court of Lenoir county, a copy of which is herewith filed." Upon the hearing before his honor Judge Ferguson, a certified copy of the record in the case of State v. Boyett in the superior court of Lenoir county was introduced, by which the facts set out in the petition were verified. Dr. J. R. Rogers, the physician in charge of the hospital for the criminal insane of this state, filed an affidavit stating that he had given careful examination and study of said Boyett in reference to his mental condition, and that in his opinion Boyett "is of sound mind, and has entirely recovered from any mental derangement from which he may have suffered in the past." His honor denied the motion that Boyett be discharged, and remanded him to the custody of the superintendent of the hospital. From this order the petitioner appealed.

The order committing the petitioner to the Hospital for the Dangerous Insane was made pursuant to the provision of chapter 1, p. 3, Pub. Laws 1899, entitled "An Act to Revise, Consolidate, and Amend the Insanity Laws of This State." Section 65, p. 25, provides that, "when any person accused of the crime of murder . . . shall have escaped indictment, or shall have been acquitted upon the trial upon the ground of insanity, . . . the court before which such proceedings are had shall, in its discretion, commit such person to the Hospital for the Dangerous Insane to be kept in custody therein for treatment and care as herein provided," etc. Section 67, p. 26, provides that "no person acquitted of a capital felony on the ground of insanity, and committed to the Hospital for the Dangerous Insane, shall be discharged therefrom unless an act authorizing his discharge be passed by the general assembly." Other provisions are made in this section for the discharge of persons committed under § 65 upon indictments of lower grade. The petitioner concedes that the order of committal made by his honor Judge Brown is authorized by the terms of the statute. He attacks its validity upon the ground that the statute (§ 65), in conferring the power to commit a person acquitted on the grounds of insanity at the time the act was committed, and (§ 67) prescribing the only mode by which he may be released from custody, violates both the state and Federal Constitutions, in that: First. No provision is made for giving the persons so acquitted notice, or an opportunity to be heard, or requiring the question of his insanity at that time to be inquired into; that, on the contrary, the court is empowered, "in its discretion," without any finding of facts in respect to his mental condition, to commit him to the hospital for an indefinite period of time. Second. That not only is there an absence of any provision by which, in a judicial proceeding, his mental condition can at any time thereafter be inquired into, but by express language he is deprived of his constitutional right to the writ of habeas corpus or any other remedial writ, the sole power to grant relief being conferred upon the legislature. These contentions, it must be conceded, present serious questions involving the liberty of the citizen and his constitutional rights. The right and duty of the state to provide for the care and treatment of its insane, with such confinement and restraint of their liberty as may be necessary for that purpose, is conceded. It is made the duty of the general assembly to do so. Const. art. 11, § 10. It is also conceded that the state may, pursuant to general laws, and after proper judicial proceedings, confine insane persons for their own protection and that of other persons. "The state, in respect to the care of the insane, owes a duty to these unfortunate people as well as to the public. . . . The state has undoubtedly the right to provide for the involuntary confinement of the harmlessly insane in order that the proper medical treatment may be given, and a cure effected." Tiedeman, Pol. Power, p. 106. It is also true that, to meet sudden emergencies, and prevent either self-destruction or injury or harm to other persons, an insane person may be restrained temporarily without any adjudication of his insanity. The writers and courts have not undertaken to define the limitations of the power which the state has to deal with these unfortunate people, except by the announcement of general principles essential to their welfare and the protection of the public. We do not propose to enter upon a discussion of this delicate subject. It is discussed with ability by Mr. Tiedeman in his work on Limitations of the Police Power, chap. 5. See also Buswell, Insanity, p. 33. A very different question 67 L. R. A.

is presented when the legislature undertakes to confer upon courts discretionary power to confine persons in asylums or hospitals, and makes no provision for notice or adjudication before the order for confinement, or for review of such discretion after the person is committed. It is well settled that a person acquitted by a jury upon the ground of insanity existing at the time of the commission of the act is entitled to all of the protection and constitutional rights as if acquitted upon any other ground. He enters his plea, and upon issue joined by the state puts himself upon his country. "It is probably the rule of law in every civilized country that no insane man can be guilty of a crime, and hence cannot be punished for what would otherwise be a crime. . . . Insanity, when it is proved to have existed at the time when the offense was committed, constitutes a good defense, and the defendant is entitled to an acquittal. If the person is still insane, he can be confined in an asylum until his mental health is restored, when he will be entitled to his release, like any other insane person." Tiedeman, 110. Campbell, J., in Underwood v. People, 32 Mich. 1, 20 Am. Rep. 633, says: "There can be no reason to doubt the propriety of making provision to secure to such unfortunate persons protection and care in such a way as to prevent them injuring, or being injured, if they are dangerous, or in need of seclusion. The state has an ultimate guardianship over non compos in cases where it is necessary. But, inasmuch as such authority can only exist over those who are thus disqualified, the power of determining their condition is one of great importance, and one which especially involves judicial oversight. In this country, where all legislation must be within constitutional limits, and does not reach the full parliamentary range, private liberty can never be subjected to the mere discretion of any person. No one can be deprived of liberty without due process of law. . . . But the more serious difficulty is in the nature of the proceedings themselves. In the first place, the prisoner is sent into confinement without any legal investigation into his [mental] condition at that time, when he may be perfectly sane, and when, having been acquitted, he is entitled to all the privileges of an innocent man. . . . Neither judge nor expert has any power under our Constitution to select his own means and process of inquiry and pass ex parte upon the liberty of citizens." Re Dowdell, 169 Mass. 387, 61 Am. St. Rep. 290, 47 N. E. 1033. In Re Lambert, 134 Cal. 626, 55 L. R. A. 856, 86 Am. St. Rep. 296, 66 Pac. 851, it is said: "An order for the commitment of a person to an insane hospital is essentially a judgment by which he is deprived of his liberty, and it is a cardinal principle in English jurisprudence that before any judgment can be pronounced against a person there must have been a trial of the issue upon which the judgment is given." In State ex rel. Blaisdell v. Billings, 55 Minn. 467, 43 Am. St. Rep. 525, 57 N. W. 206, 794, the court says: "While the state should take charge of such unfortunates as are dangerous to themselves and to others, not only for the safety of the public, but for their own amelioration, due regard must be had to the forms of law and to personal rights. To the person charged with being insane to a degree requiring the interposition of the authorities and the restraint provided for, there must be given notice of the proceeding, and also an opportunity to be heard in the tribunal which is to pass judgment upon his right to his personal liberty in the future." The statute under which the defendant was committed to an asylum in that case was in several respects similar to ours. The court declared it void. It is true that it is provided that the person acquitted is to be kept in "custody for treatment and cure." The fatal infirmity in the statute is that the power to commit is vested in the court to be exercised "in its discretion." No provision is made for notifying the person whose liberty is involved, nor is the court required to make any investigation either by itself, by the examination of witnesses, by calling to its aid medical experts, or otherwise. The order of his honor expressly recites in the language of the act that "it is therefore ordered and adjudged by the court in the exercise of its discretion." We approve the language of the court in People ex rel. Ordway v. St. Saviour's Sanitarium, 34 App. Div. 363, 56 N. Y. Supp. 431: "No matter what may be the ostensible or real purpose in restraining a person of his liberty, whether it is to punish for an offense against the law or to protect the person from himself or the community from apprehended acts, such restraint cannot be made permanent or of long continuance unless by due process of law." It is not necessary to discuss the question what is "due process of law," or to adopt any of the various definitions thereof. There is here, in no possible aspect, anything approaching the essential requirements of due process of law. An examination of the testimony in the case sent up as a part of the record and his honor's remarks to the jury show that he strongly and properly disapproved of the verdict. We are quite sure that his honor, in strict compliance with the statute, exercised a sound discretion; but the difficulty lies in the fatal infirmity of the statute. As is well said: "The constitutional validity of law is to be tested, not by what has been done under it, but by what may, by its authority, be done. The legislature may prescribe the kind of notice, and the mode in which it shall be given, but it cannot dispense with all notice." Stuart v. Palmer, 74 N. Y. 183, 30 Am. Rep. 289. Doubtless the legislature, in its effort to deal with a difficult and embarrassing condition existing in the state respecting the care for that class of persons called criminal insane, and looking to legislation in other states upon the subject, enacted the statute without due regard to the constitutional limitations upon its power. The court, in Underwood v. People, 32 Mich. 1, 20 Am. Rep. 633, thus accounts for a similar statute enacted by the general assembly of Michigan: "It is a result of the dangers which have been multiplied by the absurd lengths to which the defense of insanity has been allowed to go under the fanciful theories of incompetent and dogmatic witnesses. . . . No doubt many criminals have escaped justice by the weight foolishly given by credulous jurors to evidence which their common sense should have disregarded. But the remedy is to be sought by correcting false notions, and not by destroying the safeguards of private liberty." It may be that the wisdom of the legislature will find, within constitutional limitations, a remedy for the objectionable features of the statute. We do not wish to be understood as saying that a person acquitted of a grave crime upon the ground of insanity may not be detained for a reasonable time, so that by some appropriate proceedings the condition of his mind may, either under the direction of the judge presiding or some other judicial officer or commission, be examined into for the purpose of ascertaining whether his own safety and that of other persons or the public generally requires that he be committed to the hospital for treatment and care. It is well settled that it is not necessary that a jury trial be had; it is sufficient if the inquiry be had in some way and by some tribunal conforming to the constitutional requirement of due process of law. Black Hawk County v. Springer, 58 Iowa, 417, 10 N. W. 791; 16 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 599; Nobles v. Georgia, 168 U. S. 398, 42 L. ed. 515, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 87.

There is, however, another and equally fatal objection to the statute. Section 67 provides that a person acquitted of a capital felony and committed to the hospital cannot be released except by an act of the legislature. It is a fundamental principle that every person restrained of his liberty is entitled to have the cause of such restraint inquired into by a judicial officer. The judicial department of the government cannot by any legislation be deprived of this power or relieved of this duty. It must afford to every citizen a prompt, complete, and adequate remedy by due process for every unlawful injury to his person or property. This is absolutely essential to a constitutional government. The legislature may make laws, prescribe rules of action, and provide remedies not provided by the Constitution; the judiciary alone can administer the remedy. It is inconceivable to the mind of an American citizen at all familiar with the fundamental principles of our system of government how it can be possible that a person restrained of his liberty must await the action of the legislature before he can have the cause thereof inquired into. Doyle's Petition, 16 R. I. 537, 5 L. R. A. 359, 27 Am. St. Rep. 759, 18 Atl. 159, the court held that a statute which permitted a person to be committed to an insane asylum and detained until discharged by a commission appointed by a justice of the supreme court was invalid. The principle upon which the decision is based is thus stated: Such commission, however, is to be appointed, not at the instance of the person confined, but only on application of some other person. . . . Inasmuch as the person confined cannot himself initiate the proceeding, or take any part in it when initiated by another, the effect of the act is to deprive the person of his liberty without due process of law. Notwithstanding the express provisions of the act, the court granted the writ of habeas corpus. The supreme court of Michigan, commenting upon a somewhat similar statute, says: "It practically leaves the liberty of the person confined to depend upon the uncontrolled pleasure of the inspectors." It will be observed that no duty is imposed upon the legislature to inquire into the mental condition of persons confined under the statute, or to take any notice of or action in regard to them. While this provision is invalid, and does not prevent the application for or relieve the judge of the duty to issue the writ of habeas corpus for the purpose of inquiring into the cause of the detention of the petitioner, it does not follow that he would be entitled to his discharge if committed in accordance with a valid law. Notwithstanding the invalidity of the statute under which the petitioner is committed, if it appeared from the return of the superintendent of the hospital or the evidence before the judge hearing the cause upon the return of the writ that the petitioner was then insane, and that he was a fit subject for restraint in the asylum or hospital, it would be his duty to direct his detention for a reasonable time, to the end that proceedings should be had before the clerk of the superior court, as prescribed by § 15, chap. 1, p. 6, of the Laws of 1899. Whatever power the courts may have possessed to deal with insane persons under their general chancery jurisdiction is now regulated by statute, and we find no authority for the admission of insane persons into the state hospitals otherwise than as prescribed by the statute. There can be no doubt of the duty and power of the court to issue the writ of habeas corpus when applied for in accordance with statutory provisions. Buswell, Insanity, 30; Palmer v. Buck, 83 Mich. 528, 47 N. W. 355; Re Le Donne, 173 Mass. 552, 54 N. E. 244. The judge does not find any fact in regard to the mental condition of the petitioner at this time. He sends to this court the affidavit of Dr. Rogers, the physician in charge of the Hospital for the Dangerous Insane, in which he says that he has made a careful study and examination of the petitioner, and that in his opinion he is now sane. In this condition of the record the cause should be remanded to his honor Judge Ferguson, with direction to ascertain the mental condition at this time of the petitioner. If he shall find, upon an examination, that his mental condition is such that he should be confined in the hospital, he will certify the same to the clerk of the superior court of Lenoir county, who will proceed, after notice to the petitioner, and inquiry made as provided by § 15, chap. 1, p. 6, of the Acts of 1899, to make such orders as shall be proper in the premises. Buswell, Insanity, p. 30, says: "In cases where a person, whether sane or insane, is detained or confined as a lunatic without authority of law, it appears that such person is entitled to be brought into court upon a writ of habeas corpus, in order that the question of the legality of his detention may be inquired into. But it is necessary that the affidavit should show that the detained person is not a dangerous lunatic, and that he is in a fit state to be removed; and the court may, if necessary, enlarge the time for making the return." If his honor shall find it more convenient, he may transfer the cause to the judge holding the courts of this district, who will proceed in the cause as herein directed. Let this order be certified to his honor Judge Ferguson and to J. S. Mann, Esq., superintendent of the Hospital for the Insane.

Remanded to judge for further findings.

J. H. LE ROY
v.
H. JACOBOSKY et al.

(136 N. C. 443.)

1. A guardian who is tenant in common of certain real estate with his wards is not personally liable as upon his own contract for breach of a contract to convey their interest, made without authority, where, in contracting to sell the whole tract, he signs the contract to convey personally, and also as guardian for the wards.
2. An agent who signs a contract to convey his principal's land thereby warrants his authority to make the contract, and is liable in damages to the other contracting party in case the authority does not in fact exist.
3. The measure of damages for breach by an agent who signs a contract to convey his principal's land and so warrants his authority to make the contract, is what the other contracting party loses by reason of the false assertion of authority, or the amount of money paid out, or the value of services rendered, or the special damages sustained.
4. The measure of damages for breach of a contract to convey real estate is the difference between the contract price and the market value of the property.
5. The liability of one, who, being tenant in common with his wards, contracts to sell the common property without authority to bind them for breach of his contract to convey his own interest and for breach of his warranty of authority to sign the contract on their behalf, cannot be tried upon one issue.
6. One contracting with an agent knowing that he has no authority to bind his principal upon the contract cannot hold him liable for the damages in case the principal refuses to carry out the contract.
7. A contract by a guardian to sell his wards' land in advance of legal authority is contrary to public policy and void.
8. The proceeds of a judicial sale of lands, confirmed by the court, which are held subject to the immediate demand of the party entitled to them, are subject to attachment by his creditors in the hands of the clerk of court.
9. Proof of the signatures of nonresident parties to a contract who are alive may be made by one of the parties thereto.
10. One who signed an option contract to convey land after the expiration of the option and without any consideration moving to him is not bound thereby.

(November 15, 1904.)

CROSS APPEALS from a judgment of the Superior Court for Pasquotank County in an action brought to recover damages for refusal to convey real estate; plaintiff appealing from so much of the judgment as denied a portion of the damages claimed: defendants Jacobosky appealing from so much as sustained an attachment; and defendant Weisel appealing from so much as held him bound by the contract. Affirmed on plaintiff's and defendants Jacobosky's appeal. Reversed on defendant Weisel's appeal.

Statement by Connor, J.:

Plaintiff's Appeal.

The defendants H. Jacobosky, A. Jacobosky, and S. H. Weisel were, on March 13, 1903, the owners, as tenants in common with Rebecca Weisel and Sadie Weisel; the last three being infants, and the said H. Jacobosky being their general guardian, residing in the state of Virginia. On the said 13th day of March, 1903, the said H. and A. Jacobosky, under the firm name and style of Jacobosky Brothers, and the said H. Jacobosky, as guardian of the said wards, entered into a written agreement with the plaintiff, as follows:

Portsmouth, Va., March 13, 1903.

In consideration of Twenty-five Dollars paid to us, we hereby agree to sell to J. H. Le Roy, the property and wharf on Water St. in Elizabeth City, N. C., known as the "Weisel property" for the sum of $22,500, leaving a balance due us of $22,475. This option holds good from this date until April 13, 1903. Said property cannot be delivered to purchaser until present leases expire which are known to Mr. Le Roy.

[Signed] Jacotosky Bros.,
 H. Jacobosky,
Gd'n. of Simon, Fannie, and Sadie Weisel.
 J. H. Le Roy,
 S. H. Weisel.

The said S. H. Weisel reached his majority prior to April 23, 1903, on which day he signed the agreement. After the execution of the agreement, the parties, tenants in common, the adults in their own behalf and the infants appearing by their next friend, filed their petition in the superior court of Pasquotank county, asking for an order for a sale of the property. After proper proceedings had in the premises, the land was brought to public sale by the com-

NOTE.—For another case in this series as to personal liability of guardian on contract made for ward, see Andrus v. Blazzard, 54 L. R. A. 354.

As to personal liability generally of one who contracts as agent without authority to do so, see Farmers' Co-op. Trust Co. v. Floyd, 12 L. R. A. 346, and cases in note thereto; also Kansas Nat. Bank v. Bay, 54 L. R. A. 408.
67 L. R. A.

missioner duly appointed, and bought by B. F. White and J. B. Flora at the price of $25,000. The sale was confirmed and title made to the purchasers. The defendants having refused to convey to the plaintiff, who duly tendered the amount of the contract price within the time named, he brought this action for the purpose of recovering damages for the breach of the contract. The court submitted the following issues to the jury: "(1) Are the defendants H. and A. Jacobosky indebted to the plaintiff on breach of contract, and, if so, in what sum? (2) Is the defendant H. S. Weisel indebted to the plaintiff, and, if so, in what amount?" The plaintiff introduced the contract. He testified that he was present at the time the contract was signed, and that he knew nothing of the ages of the infants, except that it was signed as guardian for them: that he gave a check for $25, and as he went out of the front door of the defendants' store after the check was given the defendant H. Jacobosky said that the Weisels were minors, and it would be necessary to obtain an order of court to make title, and that he would get the order. He also said, if anyone raised the price, he would buy it in and make the title. The plaintiff testified that he tendered the money. The defendants H. and A. Jacobosky said that they admitted that the witness had offered to comply with this contract, but that S. H. Weisel had since become of age, and refused to carry it out. Certain letters were put in evidence tending to show a demand of the plaintiff and refusal of the defendants to comply with the contract. The court charged the jury that, if they believed the evidence, they should answer the first issue, "Yes; twelve twenty-sevenths of $25,000 and $25" (that being the interest of the defendants H. and A. Jacobosky). The plaintiff excepted, claiming the entire damage, or difference in the contract price and the amount for which the property sold. From a judgment on the verdict the plaintiff appealed.

Mr. E. F. Aydlett for plaintiff.

Messrs. Ward & Thompson for defendants.

Connor, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The only question presented upon the plaintiff's appeal is whether the defendant H. Jacobosky is personally liable on the contract in respect to the interests or shares of his wards, Sadie and Rebecca Weisel. It will be well to bear in mind the fact that the action is on the contract and for breach thereof; that the issues are directed to the inquiry of the indebtedness arising from a breach of the contract. The brief of the plaintiff's counsel maintains and cites authorities to show that the defendant guardian is personally liable in the same manner and to the same extent as he is on the contract in respect to his own share or interest in the land. He concedes that there can be no decree for specific performance as against the infants. The defendant concedes that he had no authority, as guardian, to enter into any contract to sell the real estate of his wards. He says that this was well known to the plaintiff, and that by his signature as guardian the plaintiff knew that he was contracting only in his representative capacity, and not personally. The plaintiff says that, conceding this to be true, the law, without regard to the intention of the parties, fixes the defendant with a personal liability; that someone was to be bound, and, if the infants were not bound by the contract, the guardian must be so personally, or there was no contract. It has been said by quite a number of judges that when, by reason of the absence of authority, the principal is not bound upon the contract, the agent must be. Ellsworth, J., in Ogden v. Raymond, 22 Conn. 379, 58 Am. Dec. 429, says: "We are aware that it is not unfrequently laid down as a rule of law that, if an agent does not bind his principal, he binds himself; but this rule needs qualification, and cannot be said to be universally true or correct." Mr. Mechem says: "The rule sometimes asserted that, whatever the agent fails to create a right of action against his principal upon the contract, he makes himself liable thereon, cannot, therefore, be sustained as a general rule." Mechem, Agency, § 550. Referring to the cases holding this doctrine. Selden, J., says: "The authority of these cases has been somewhat shaken, . . . and in England as well as in several of the United States the principle upon which they rest, if they are supposed to present the only ground of liability of the agent, has been substantially repudiated. . . . If it were necessary, in disposing of the present case, to decide the question whether, as a general principle, one entering into a contract in the name of another without authority is to be himself holden as a party to the contract, I should hesitate to affirm such a principle. By that rule courts would often make contracts for parties which they neither intended nor would have consented to make." White v. Madison, 26 N. Y. 117. Approved in Taylor v. Nostrand, 134 N. Y. 103, 31 N. E. 246; Wallace v. Bentley, 77 Cal. 19, 11 Am. St. Rep. 231, 18 Pac. 788; Ballou v. Talbot, 16 Mass. 461, 8 Am. Dec. 146; Duncan v. Niles, 32 Ill. 532, 83 Am. Dec. 293; Bartlett v. Tucker, 104 Mass. 336, 6 Am.

Rep. 240. "Some of the authorities hold that in all written contracts, except specialties, if the pretended agent has so worded the instrument as to make it appear that he is acting for or on behalf of another, and not himself,—having no authority to do so,—he binds himself personally, and will be liable in an action on the contract itself, for the reason that he must have intended to bind someone; and, if he was unauthorized to bind the principal, he is estopped to deny that he intended to bind himself, as in that case no one whatever would be bound. But the objection to this doctrine is that it would require the court to make a new contract for the parties, or one into which they have not themselves entered; and the courts now generally repudiate it. While the decisions are not uniform, the great weight of modern authority is that the agent is not personally bound on the contract itself, and cannot be held liable in an action thereon." Reinhard, Agency, § 307; Clark, Contr. 274; Hall v. Crandall, 29 Cal. 567, 89 Am. Dec. 64. The same view has been held by this court in Delius v. Cawthorn, 13 N. C. (2 Dev. L.) 90. The defendant executed a note payable to the plaintiff in the name of one Johnson by himself as agent. The action was upon the bond. It was shown that the defendant had no authority to sign Johnson's name. The court held that the action could not be maintained; that it was not the bond of the agent. Toomer, J., says: "It is believed the elementary writers, in speaking of the personal liability of the agent because he has no responsible principal, do not mean to convey the idea that the instrument becomes the deed of the agent when it had been signed, sealed, and delivered in the name of the principal, who was bound on its face, merely because the agent had exceeded his authority, or had acted without authority. But they intend simply to declare his personal responsibility, which may be enforced by bill in equity on the ground of fraud, or by special action on the case." The learned judge cites a number of cases to sustain the conclusion reached by him. Judges Henderson and Hall wrote concurring opinions. In Ballou v. Talbot, 16 Mass. 461, 8 Am. Dec. 146, the action was upon a promissory note signed by the defendant as "agent for David Perry," and the court held that an action could not be maintained against him on the bond, but that he would be responsible in a special action on the case. This opinion was written by Parker, Ch. J., and has been followed by the Massachusetts court. In Russell v. Koonce, 104 N. C. 237, 10 S. E. 256, Smith, Ch. J., says: "The defendant does not become individually liable because his authority to bind his principal is disowned by the latter, unless the consideration is received by the agent, out of which arises an implied promise to pay. . . . In such case the agent may become personally answerable upon the contract, but otherwise the action must be for damages for his false assumption of authority to act;" citing Delius v. Cawthorn, 13 N. C. (2 Dev. L.) 90. The cases cited by the plaintiff in which the guardian has been held personally liable upon promissory notes executed by him in his representative capacity show that he received the consideration, or that some service was rendered; as in Fessenden v. Jones, 52 N. C. (7 Jones, L.) 14, 75 Am. Dec. 445, where the plaintiff was a physician, and was called to attend the slaves of the defendant's ward, and the guardian was held personally liable in an action of assumpsit. Of course he could reimburse himself out of the estate of his ward. In McKay v. Royal, 52 N. C. (7 Jones, L.) 426, the plaintiff rendered service to the executor as attorney in the settlement of the estate. He was held personally liable, the court saying: "If the disbursement be a proper one, she will be allowed a credit in the settlement of her account with the estate." Kessler v. Hall, 64 N. C. 61. In McLean v. McLean, 88 N. C. 396, Ashe, J., says: "It is well settled by the almost unvarying current of authorities that the promissory note of an administrator or executor, founded upon the consideration of forbearance or the possession of assets, will be binding upon him in his individual capacity, although he should sign the note as 'administrator or executor.'" It will be observed that the note must be founded upon sufficient consideration "as of assets or forbearance." This court, in Morehead Bkg. Co. v. Morehead, 122 N. C. 318, 30 S. E. 331, followed the early cases, and held the executrix liable personally upon a note executed in her representative capacity in consideration of the surrender of a note against her testator and the extension of time for payment. The decision was put upon the fact that she had assets and obtained forbearance. The first case in our Reports is Sleigheter v. Harrington, 6 N. C. (2 Murph.) 332. Ruffin, J., rests the decision of that case upon the fact that the executor had assets applicable to the payment of the debt surrendered, saying that the debt "must be such as the creditor would be entitled to recover if he were then suing the executor in his representative capacity for his debt. The executor is the mere holder, as it were, of money which is in justice and conscience the money of another person." The question was again before the court in Williams v. Chaffin, 13 N. C. (2 Dev. L.)

336, when the same eminent judge said that, if there were no other consideration, and the executor had no assets applicable to the debt, the promise was void. How far the doctrine has been modified by the change in the law by which the status of the creditor of a deceased person is fixed in respect to assets it is not necessary to inquire. It must be conceded that the authorities are not uniform. In Taylor v. Davis, 110 U. S. 330, 28 L. ed. 163, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 147, and Mason v. Caldwell, 10 Ill. 196, 48 Am. Dec. 330, it is held that the person making the contract in his representative capacity without authority is bound upon the contract. After reviewing the cases which had been then decided, Ellsworth, J., in Ogden v. Raymond, 22 Conn. 379, 58 Am. Dec. 429, says: "The question in these cases will be found to be one of construction of the language and meaning of the person who attempts to act for another, and is a question often attended with very great difficulty and doubt; but, when the intention is ascertained, that intention should ever be the rule for deciding whose contract it is. The cases are exceedingly conflicting and unsatisfactory, though they contain some general principles universally acquiesced in." All of the authorities concur in holding that the court will ascertain the intention by reference to the written contract and the surrounding circumstances. Referring to those cases in which the court has rejected the words showing that the contract is signed as agent, or, as in this case, "Guardian of Simon, Sadie and Rebecca Weisel," and holding the agent liable personally upon the contract, Mr. Mechem says: "This, however, as has been well said, is rather to make a new contract for the parties than to construe the one which they have made for themselves. Where, however the agent in undertaking, without authority, to bind another, has used apt words to bind himself, there is abundant reason and justice in holding him liable upon the contract itself as made. . . . The agent is only liable on the contract in those cases in which he has used apt words to bind himself, or has expressly pledged his personal responsibility, or in which the credit was given to him personally." Mechem, Agency, § 550. We do not think that the word "guardian," etc., can be rejected as surplusage, or treated as descriptio personarum.

It will be noted that the property belonged to the defendant and his wards as tenants in common. The contract was signed "Jacobosky Bros." first, and "H. Jacobosky, Guardian," etc., next, and then by the plaintiff. He must have thereby known that the defendant was making the contract in a dual capacity. He accepted it with this knowledge. In a few moments after signing, and before he left the store, the defendant called his attention to the fact that, as the Weisel children were infants, it would be necessary to obtain an order of the court to make a perfect title. The plaintiff certainly did not expect the defendant as guardian to make a deed. He would not have been under any obligation to accept such a deed. The conduct of the parties shows clearly that they expected and intended that an order of sale should be obtained. The defendant promptly employed learned and able counsel to procure the order. No other construction can be reasonably put upon the contract than that the defendant was acting in respect to the interests of his wards, in his representative capacity. To do otherwise would be to misinterpret the language and conduct of the parties. The language of Judge Toomer is very much in point. In Delius v. Cauthorn he says: "The present action can only be sustained by making the instrument the deed of the defendant. Is there any principle of law which can so entirely defeat the intentions of the parties and prevent the truth of the transaction as to change the nature and character of the instrument and make it the deed of the defendant?" Ruffin, J., in Fowle v. Kerchner, 87 N. C. 56, says: "The legitimate aim of all interpretation is, not to make a contract for the parties, or to modify the one they have made for themselves, but simply to ascertain their intentions and give them effect if not inconsistent with some policy of the law; and in the effort to arrive at their intentions it is always proper for the court to consider, not only the precise terms of the instrument, but the circumstances under which it was made, the situation of the parties, and the manner in which they have borne themselves with reference to it." After citing authorities showing the trend of judicial opinion upon the subject, the learned justice says: "In other words, the courts now regard the particular form of executing a contract, not under seal, by an agent, as being wholly immaterial, provided the context of the instrument and the circumstances under which it was executed show that it was a ministerial act on his part."

We are of the opinion that the defendant H. Jacobosky is not personally liable on the contract in respect to the shares of his infant wards. It does not follow, however, that, because an agent, or one acting in a representative capacity, is not liable on the contract as made, a party who is misled, or who parts with something of value, or otherwise acquires legal rights, is without remedy. As is said by the court in Delius v. Cauthorn, supra, in a special action on the case under the former system of pleading and practice, or under our present system in a civil action either upon an implied assumpsit, when he has received the consideration, or for damages, he has an ample remedy. Seiden, J., in White v. Madison, 26 N. Y. 117, says: "Whenever a person enters into a contract as agent for another, he warrants his own authority, unless very special circumstances or express agreement relieve him from that responsibility. . . . An action upon such warranty must always be appropriate where personal liability attaches to an agent in consequence of his contracting without authority." Parker, Ch. J., in Taylor v. Nostrand, 134 N. Y. 108, 31 N. E. 246, referring to this case, says: "In a carefully considered opinion by Judge Selden in White v. Madison the conclusion was reached that the liability of the agent rests on the ground that he warrants his authority, not that the contract is to be deemed his own; and on the question of damages it was held that the agent's liability is not necessarily measured by the contract, but embraces all injury resulting from his want of power, which was held to include the costs of an unsuccessful action against the alleged principal." Russell v. Koonce, 104 N. C. 237, 10 S. E. 256. The measure of damages is what the plaintiff lost by reason of the false assertion of agency or of authority, or the amount of money paid out, or the value of the service rendered, or such special damages sustained by the plaintiff by reason of the defendant's wrong in undertaking to act for another without authority. Hall v. Crandall, 20 Cal. 507, 89 Am. Dec. 64. If the plaintiff had set out in his complaint the contract, with a statement of the facts out of which his cause of action accrued, he would have been entitled to have had appropriate issues submitted to the jury presenting the several phases of his case; but he simply alleges that the defendants contracted with the plaintiff in writing to sell and convey to him that certain piece of property, etc. In making his proof he introduces the contract, by which it appears that, in respect to the shares of the infants, the defendant H. Jacobosky contracted as guardian. He did not ask permission to amend his complaint, but rested his right to recover upon the theory that the entire contract was the personal obligation of the defendant. There was no allegation upon which he could recover damages of the defendant upon this view of the case. His measure of damages in the action upon the contract as against Jacobosky Brothers is the difference between the contract price and the market value of the land, ascertained by a public sale. In an action against H. Jacobosky 67 L. R. A.

for representing himself as having authority to make the contract to sell the infants' share or interest entirely different questions in regard to damages were involved. The action in one respect was for breach of contract; in the other for asserting that he had authority to make the contract for his wards. These separate and distinct actions could not be tried upon one issue, and, upon the pleadings, but one issue could have been submitted. This is not a mere matter of form, but of substance, affecting the substantive rights of both parties. We are, however, of the opinion that in any aspect of the case his honor correctly instructed the jury. Mr. Reinhard, in his work on Agency, § 308, says: "If the party with whom the agent has contracted knew that the agent had no authority, or was cognizant of all the facts upon which the assumption of authority was based,—as, for example, where both parties labored under a mistake of law with reference to the liability of the principal,—the agent is not liable either in tort or upon the contract." Newport v. Smith, 61 Minn. 277, 63 N. W. 734; Baltzen v. Nicolay, 53 N. Y. 467. In Michael v. Jones, 84 Mo. 578, the justice writing for the court says: "But I am satisfied that under the best considered modern decisions the principle invoked by the plaintiff cannot be carried to such an extent. The true rule, I think, is . . . that where all the facts are known, to both parties, and the mistake is one of law as to the liability of the principal, the fact that the principal cannot be held is no ground for charging the agent with liability." Ruffin, J., in Fowle v. Kerchner, 87 N. C. 56, says: "The general rule is that, whenever a party assumes to act as agent for another if he have no authority, or if he exceed his authority, he will be held to be personally liable to the party with whom he deals, for the reason that, by holding himself out as having authority, he misleads the other party into making the engagement. But this rule is founded upon the supposition . . . that the want of authority is unknown to the other party, or, if known, that the agent undertakes to guarantee a ratification of the act; and when the want of authority is known, and it is clear that the agent did not undertake to guarantee a ratification, it results that the agent is not personally bound." Of course, for manifest reasons, there is no suggestion that the guardian undertook to guarantee the ratification of his wards. "In the absence of all agreement, express or implied, to be personally bound, there can be found no case, we apprehend, in which an agent has been held responsible who has not been guilty of fraud either actual or constructive." There can be no fraud when the person with whom the agent deals knows that he has no authority to bind his principal, or knows the character and extent of his agency. An examination of the many cases cited by the authors of works on agency discovers an absence of uniformity upon this question. It may be traced to the effort of the judges to escape from the early decisions holding that the agent acting without or in excess of authority becomes liable upon the contract, discarding the intention of the parties, and other considerations. The liability rests upon other, and, we think, more scientific, principles. The remedy for the injured party is ample.

The defendant also calls our attention to authorities holding that "a contract by a guardian to sell the ward's real estate, in advance of any legal authority, is contrary to public policy, and void." 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 57; Zander v. Feely, 47 Ill. App. 659. The law expressly provides the manner and purpose for which a guardian may sell his ward's real estate. The facts of this case show the danger of permitting a guardian to enter into a contract otherwise than is provided by law. After the defendant made this contract it was to his interest to prevent the land bringing more than the contract price, and, although he did not do so, and the commissioner obtained more than the price agreed upon, it may be easily seen how, if so disposed, he may have suppressed the bidding. We think the principle is founded upon reason and sound policy. Of course, if the contract was void for the reason assigned, the court would not enforce or give damages for a breach of it, but leave the parties as it found them. York v. Merritt, 77 N. C. 213.

The judgment must be affirmed.

Defendant Jacobosky's Appeal.

The main facts in this appeal are similar to those in that of the plaintiff, and, in addition thereto, the following will be sufficient to show the grounds of the defendants' exceptions: The defendants moved to dismiss the attachment proceedings upon the ground set out in their affidavits. Judge Council, who presided at the previous term of the court, found the facts in regard thereto, and refused the motion, and the defendants entered their exception. They further contend that the attachment should not be levied upon the money in the hands of the clerk of the superior court, and his honor refused to dismiss for that reason. The defendants objected to the introduction of the contract, for that the same had not been properly probated. The record shows that the execution of the contract was proved as to Jacobosky Brothers and H. Jacobosky, guardian for Simon, Fannie, and Sadie Weisel, upon the oath and examination of J. H. Le Roy, one of the parties thereto, and as to him the execution thereof was acknowledged; that as to S. H. Weisel the execution was acknowledged before a notary public in Norfolk, Virginia, whose certificate was afterwards submitted to the clerk of the superior court of Pasquotank county. and the instrument ordered to be recorded. There also appears in the record an affidavit bearing date March 21, 1903, made by J. H. Le Roy before the clerk of the superior court, to the effect that he knew the handwriting of Jacobosky Brothers and H. Jacobosky, having often seen them write; and, further, that the names of Jacobosky Brothers and H. Jacobosky are in the handwriting of H. Jacobosky and Jacobosky Brothers, and that both were present when H. Jacobosky signed the same, and both adopted the signature. His honor admitted the contract, and the defendants excepted.

We concur with Judge Council in his conclusions, both of law and fact, upon the motion to dismiss. There were no antagonistic relations on the part of counsel. We also concur in the conclusion that the money proceeds of the sale of the land in the hands of the clerk were subject to attachment. The sale had been confirmed, and the cash payment made to the commissioner, who had paid it to the clerk. He held it subject to the immediate demand of the defendants. The question is expressly so decided in Gaither v. Ballew, 49 N. C. (4 Jones, L.) 488, 69 Am. Dec. 763, and the authorities reviewed, overruling Alston v. Clay, 3 N. C. (2 Hayw.) 171, and Overton v. Hill, 5 N. C. (1 Murph.) 47; Williamson v. Nealy, 119 N. C. 341, 25 S. E. 953. We see no valid objection to the probate of the contract. There being no witness to the instrument, and the parties, except Le Roy, being nonresidents, it was proved as prescribed by § 1246 (9) of the Code. All the parties being alive, we can see no good reason why this proof may not be made by Le Roy, a party to the instrument. Clark v. Hodge, 116 N. C. 761, 21 S. E. 562. We do not find any merit in either of the exceptions in regard to the admission of the contract. His honor correctly held that the measure of the plaintiff's damage was the difference between the contract price and the value of the land. Nichols v. Freeman, 33 N. C. (11 Ired. L.) 99; Sedgw. Damages, § 1006; 2 Warvelle, Vendors, p. 959; Joyce, Damages, § 1758. The defendants, having sold the land at public auction and received the proceeds, are liable for the difference between the contract price and the amount received by them. That the contract is enforceable, and therefore that an action for damages for breach thereof may be maintained, is well established. Rodman v. Robinson, 134 N. C. 503, 65 L. R. A. 682, 101 Am. St. Rep. 877, 47 S. E. 19.

There is no error in the judgment against Jacobosky Brothers. Affirmed.

Appeal of Defendant S. H. Weisel.

The defendant S. H. Weisel insists that he was not a party to the contract when it was executed, and signed it without consideration after the option had expired, and that he is not bound thereby. It will be noted that the option expired April 23, 1903, and the contract was signed by Weisel April 28th. As to him it is without any consideration. He promised, on April 28th, to convey to the plaintiff the land on the 23d of April of the same year, which is an impossibility. We cannot see how it is possible for him to commit a breach of such an agreement. The contract made by Weisel was impossible of performance, and, of course, there could never be a breach of it. "Physical impossibility means here practical impossibility according to the state of knowledge of the day; as, for example, a promise to go from New York to London in one day, or to discover treasure by magic, or to go around the world in a week." 9 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 326. "If one promises to do what cannot be done, and the impossibility is not only certain, but perfectly obvious to the promisee as if the promisee were to build a common dwelling house in one day,—such a contract must be void for its inherent absurdity." 2 Parsons, Contr. 9th ed. 673. "An agreement may be impossible of performance at the time when it is made, and this in various ways. It may be impossible in itself,—that is, the agreement itself may involve a contradiction; as, if it contains promises inconsistent with one another, or with the date of the agreement." Pollock, Principles of Contr. p. 398. "Obvious and absolute physical impossibility, apparent upon the face of the promise, and thus known to the parties, renders the promise void. Thus, a charter-party executed on the 15th of March, covenanting that the ship would proceed from where she then lay on or before the 12th of February, was held void." Beach, Modern Law of Contracts, § 222. The execution of the contract was not a ratification of his guardian's agreement, and could not be, for the reason that the time within which the guardian had promised to sell was past, and for the further reason that his agreement, being against public policy, was void. The exception of the defendant Weisel must be sustained, and a new trial ordered as to him.

New trial.

67 L. R. A.

E. M. REDD, Appt.,

v.

EDNA COITTON MILLS.

(136 N. C. 342.)

1. The blowing of whistles at factories to regulate and direct the order of work is not a nuisance per se.
2. Equity will not enjoin the blowing of a whistle at a factory, where it is not satisfied that it amounts to a nuisance, until the fact of nuisance has been established by action at law.

(November 15, 1904.)

A PPEAL by complainant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Rockingham County in favor of defendant in a suit to enjoin the blowing of a whistle by the defendant in such a manner as to constitute a nuisance. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Watson, Buxton, & Watson for appellant.

Messrs. Scott & Reid and Glenn, Manly, & Hendren, for appellee:

From the singular and nervous temperament of plaintiff it was clear that he was and is abnormal, and that noises which disturb him are not of such character as the court will restrain, or would be declared public or private nuisances, and thus controlled by the court.

Rogers v. Elliott, 146 Mass. 349, 4 Am. St. Rep. 319, 15 N. E. 768; Powell v. Bentley & G. Furniture Co. 34 W. Va. 804, 12 L. R. A. 53, 12 S. E. 1085; Baltimore v. Fairfield Improv. Co. 87 Md. 352, 40 L. R. A. 494, 67 Am. St. Rep. 350, 39 Atl. 1081; Dittman v. Repp, 50 Md. 516, 33 Am. Rep. 327.

For any of those acts which are in the nature of a public nuisance, no individual is entitled to an action, unless he has received extraordinary and particular damage not common to the rest of the community.

Gordon v. Baxter, 74 N. C. 470.

And the special injury must differ, not merely in degree, but likewise in kind, from that sustained by the general public.

NOTE.—For another case in this series as to injunction to restrain blowing of factory whistle, see Hill v. McBurney Oil & Fertilizer Co. 52 L. R. A. 398.

As to right to injunction or damages for discomfort caused by noise generally, see in this series, Gainesville, H. & W. R. Co. v. Hall, 9 L. R. A. 298; Wylie v. Elwood, 9 L. R. A. 726; Powell v. Bentley & G. Furniture Co. 12 L. R. A. 53, and note; Jones v. Erie & W. Valley R. Co. 17 L. R. A. 758; Austin v. Augusta Terminal R. Co. 47 L. R. A. 755; Chicago G. W. R. Co. v. First M. E. Church, 50 L. R. A. 488; Louisville & N. Terminal Co. v. Jacobs, 61 L. R. A. 188; and Froelicher v. Oswald Iron Works, 64 L. R. A. 228.

14 Enc. Pl. & Pr. pp. 1095, 1145; 21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 713, 714.

The whole matter should be left to a jury.

Atty. Gen. v. Blount, 11 N. C. (4 Hawks) 384, 15 Am. Dec. 526; Clark v. Lawrence, 59 N. C. (6 Jones, Eq.) 83, 78 Am. Dec. 241; Simpson v. Justice, 43 N. C. (8 Ired. Eq.) 115; Ellison v. Washington, 58 N. C. (5 Jones, Eq.) 57, 75 Am. Dec. 430; Barnes v. Calhoun, 37 N. C. (2 Ired. Eq.) 199; Powell v. Bentley & G. Furniture Co. 34 W. Va. 804, 12 L. R. A. 53, 12 S. E. 1085; 14 Enc. Pl. & Pr. pp. 1131, 1132; Irwin v. Dirion, 9 How. 10, 13 L. ed. 25; Shields v. Arndt, 4 N. J. Eq. 235.

Unless the nuisance has been previously established at law, it must be "a strong and mischievous case of pressing necessity" to entitle the party to an injunction.

St. James Church v. Arrington, 36 Ala. 546, 76 Am. Dec. 332; Nelson v. Milligan, 151 Ill. 462, 38 N. E. 239; Atty. Gen. ex rel. Eason v. Perkins, 17 N. C. (2 Dev. Eq.) 38.

Private rights must yield to public convenience.

Daughtry v. Warren, 85 N. C. 137; Dorsey v. Allen, 85 N. C. 361, 39 Am. Rep. 704.

Town dwellers must take the good with the bad, and this includes noise, dust, smoke, etc.

Hyatt v. Myers, 73 N. C. 232.

Montgomery, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was brought by the plaintiff against the defendant for the recovery of damages alleged to have been sustained by means of a nuisance maintained by the defendant, and to have the nuisance abated by injunctive process. The injury for which damages are claimed is alleged to be to the health of the plaintiff's family and himself, and the nuisance the blowing of a steam whistle at the early hours of 4:30, 5:30, and 5:50 o'clock A. M., for the space of from two to seven minutes duration. The whistle is attached to the engine of the defendant company, and its blasts are declared to be "long, shrill, shrieking, discordant, startling, terrific, awakening the plaintiff and his family, disturbing his and their sleep, and seriously interfering with the reasonable enjoyment of their home, and seriously impairing their health. Before the defendant had answered, the plaintiff served a notice upon defendant that a motion would be made before the judge of the district for an order restraining the defendant from blowing the whistle of its engine between the hours of 9 P. M. and 6:30 A. M. Upon the plaintiff's complaint and affidavits and the defendant's affidavits 67 L. R. A.

the motion was denied, and the plaintiff appealed.

From the plaintiff's complaint and affidavits there was evidence going to show that for years the defendant's whistle had been blown at 4:30, 5:30, and 5:50 o'clock A. M.; that the blasts were from two to seven minutes long; that they were shrill, startling, shrieking, and terrific; that the night's rest of the plaintiff and several other families was broken up by the blasts of the whistle, the plaintiff's health impaired, and numbers of other families affected with nervousness. The evidence of the plaintiff further tended to show that the property of the plaintiff and others, situated as his and theirs was in respect to the mill, had depreciated in value by reason of the blowing of the whistle. The evidence afforded by the affidavits of the defendant tended to show that the blowing of the whistle did not disturb the sleep of the affiants, or produce discomfort in their homes; that the blasts of the whistle were useful to the defendant in the conduct of its business; that the property in the neighborhood had not been impaired in value; that the evidence contained in plaintiff's affidavits was that of his friends and kinspeople, and that his health had not been affected by the blasts of the whistle, but was due to other causes, he being an extremely nervous and excitable man. We think his honor was right in refusing to grant the injunction. The blowing of whistles at factories to regulate and direct the order of work may be necessary to the proper conduct of business; certainly it is not a nuisance per se. Such sounds and noises as these whistles are capable of making can become nuisances, however, and the protecting arm of the law can be invoked to prevent such. Injury to health and destruction of the comforts of one's home can be accomplished by frightful noises just as well as by means of noxious and offensive odors. Dorsey v. Allen, 85 N. C. 358, 39 Am. Rep. 704. But the courts are always slow to interfere by injunction in the conduct and management of business enterprises. Of course, where a nuisance is established by the evidence, no private enterprise for the mere purpose of bringing gain to its owner can be allowed to destroy one's home or to impair his health. Both are irreparable injuries, and no damage can compensate a man for the destruction of his home or for the undermining of his health. Clark v. Lawrence, 59 N. C. (6 Jones, Eq.) 83, 78 Am. Dec. 241; Barnes v. Calhoun, 37 N. C. (2 Ired. Eq.) 199. In the present case, however, the evidence does not satisfy us that the blowing of the whistle by the defendant amounted to a nuisance. In such a case under the old practice—that is, where the court of equity was not satisfied upon all the evidence that the thing complained of was a nuisance—there would be no interference or action until the fact of nuisance had been established by law. Simpson v. Justice, 43 N. C. (8 Ired. Eq.) 115. So here we think the jury, by their verdict, ought to pass upon the evidence, and find, under the instructions of the judge, whether or not the manner in which the whistle is blown was a nuisance; that is, whether or not the plaintiff's health and home have been impaired and injured by the blowing of the whistle.

No error.

Willie Hall GREEN, by Next Friend, Appt.,
v.

WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH COMPANY.

(136 N. C. 489.)

1. Failure of a telegraph company to deliver a message properly addressed, which requests the sendee to meet a train to arrive on the night of the transmission of the message, until it is called for by the sendee at company's office on the following day, raises a presumption of negligence.
2. Negligence in the transmission of a telegram is shown by the making of such a change in the name of the sendee that a person answering to the substituted name cannot be found.
3. A telegraph company may be held liable for damages for mental anguish where, by reason of its failure to deliver a telegram, friends fail to meet a sixteen-year-old girl who arrives after midnight in a strange city and is compelled to drive two miles in company with a strange driver in search of their residence.

(November 15, 1904.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for Halifax County in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for failure promptly to deliver a telegram. Reversed.

Statement by Douglas, J.:

The material facts are thus briefly stated by the defendant: This is the plaintiff's appeal from a judgment sustaining the defendant's demurrer. The complaint states that the plaintiff was a girl of 16, living in Weldon, the daughter of Isaac E. Green. That the defendant telegraph company maintained offices at Weldon and Columbia, and on September 23, 1903, she left Weldon to go to Spartanburg, S. C., via Columbia, and that it was necessary for her to remain over in Columbia during the night. That the agent of the defendant company at Weldon was acquainted with the young lady and her father, and the father informed the agent that he greatly desired some one to meet his daughter in Columbia. That, immediately after the train on which the young lady was traveling left Weldon, her father, Dr. Green, delivered the following message to the defendant's agent in Weldon, directed to: "Mrs. Jno. B. Lee, 2010 Main Street, Columbia, S. C.: Willie leaves here on Coast Line train 39 to-day. Meet her. [Signed] I. E. Green." This message was taken in Columbia as addressed to "Mrs. Knoblee, 2010 Main street," and was not delivered until the next morning, when Mrs. John B. Lee inquired for it at the telegraph office at Columbia. The plaintiff, Miss Willie Green, arrived in Columbia about 12 o'clock the same night, and found no one to meet her. She was naturally disturbed and anxious. The conductor put her in charge of the colored matron at the station in Columbia, the matron secured a hack, and after some delay she was driven to the house of her friend Mrs. Lee. That, by reason of this negligence upon the part of the defendant, the plaintiff suffered mental anguish. Upon this the defendant demurred to the complaint, for that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action which, under the circumstances set forth, entitled the plaintiff to recover damages for so-called mental anguish, and that the disappointment and annoyance which the plaintiff calls "mental anguish," arising under the circumstances set out in the complaint, is not a legal ground for damages for mental anguish. His honor sustained the demurrer, and the plaintiff appealed.

NOTE.—For conflicting authorities as to right to recover damages for mental anguish on account of default of telegraph company, see note to Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Rogers, 13 L. R. A. 859.

For subsequent cases in this series sustaining the right, see also in this series Mentzer v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 28 L. R. A. 72; Cashlon v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 45 L. R. A. 160; Gray v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 56 L. R. A. 301; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Crocker, 59 L. R. A. 398; Cowan v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 64 L. R. A. 545, and Barnes v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 65 L. R. A. 666.
67 L. R. A.

For cases denying the right, see Willcox v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 17 L. R. A. 804; Connell v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 20 L. R. A. 172; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Wood, 21 L. R. A. 706; International Ocean Teleg. Co. v. Saunders, 21 L. R. A. 810; Francis v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 25 L. R. A. 406; Morton v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 32 L. R. A. 735; Peay v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 39 L. R. A. 463; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Robinson, 34 L. R. A. 431; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Ferguson, 54 L. R. A. 846; Connelly v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 56 L. R. A. 663, and Robinson v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 57 L. R. A. 611.

Messrs. W. E. Daniel, Murray Allen, and Day & Bell, for appellant:

The true view which seems to sustain the right of action is one which elevates the question above the plane of mere privity of contract, and places it where it belongs—upon the public duty which a telegraph company owes to any person beneficially interested in the message, whether the sender or his principal where he is agent, or the receiver or his principal where he is agent.

Thompson, Electricity, § 427; Cashion v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 124 N. C. 459, 45 L. R. A. 160, 32 S. E. 746; Landie v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 124 N. C. 528, 32 S. E. 886; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Mellon, 96 Tenn. 70, 33 S. W. 725; Gray v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 108 Tenn. 39, 56 L. R. A. 311, 91 Am. St. Rep. 706, 64 S. W. 1063.

Damages which are caused solely by mental anguish by reason of the neglect of a telegraph company to transmit a message are recoverable in an action against such company for its neglect.

Young v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 107 N. C. 370, 9 L. R. A. 669, 22 Am. St. Rep. 883, 11 S. E. 1044; Bright v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 132 N. C. 317, 43 S. E. 841.

Such damages are compensatory.

Mentzer v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 93 Iowa, 752, 28 L. R. A. 72, 57 Am. St. Rep. 294, 62 N. W. 1.

Whether the injurious consequences may have been reasonably expected to follow from the commission of the act is not at all determinative of the liability of the person who committed the act to respond to the person suffering therefrom.

Mentzer v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 93 Iowa, 752, 28 L. R. A. 72, 57 Am. St. Rep. 294, 62 N. W. 1; Cooley, Torts, §§ 646, 647; Gray, Communication by Telegraph, §§ 81, 82; Wharton, Neg. § 767; Sutherland, Damages, § 980; Cowan v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 122 Iowa, 379, 64 L. R. A. 545, 101 Am. St. Rep. 268, 98 N. W. 281; Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 605; Young v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 107 N. C. 373, 9 L. R. A. 669, 22 Am. St. Rep. 883, 11 S. E. 1044.

Mental suffering, as an element of compensatory damages, is not peculiar to actions against telegraph companies.

Shepard v. Chicago R. I. & P. R. Co. 77 Iowa, 54, 41 N. W. 564; Terwilliger v. Wands, 17 N. Y. 54, 72 Am. Dec. 420; Fisher v. Hamilton, 49 Ind. 341; Stewart v. Maddox, 63 Ind. 51; Craker v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 36 Wis. 657, 17 Am. Rep. 504; Young v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 107 N. C. 384, 9 L. R. A. 669, 22 Am. St. Rep. 883, 11 S. E. 1044; Cowan v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 122 Iowa, 379, 64 L. R. A. 545, 101 Am. St. Rep. 268, 98 N. W. 281; 67 L. R. A.

Landie v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 124 N. C. 528, 32 S. E. 886.

Recovery for mental suffering is not limited to cases in which the telegram relates to sickness or death.

Young v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 107 N. C. 370, 9 L. R. A. 669, 22 Am. St. Rep. 883, 11 S. E. 1044; Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 605; Thompson v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 107 N. C. 449, 12 S. E. 427; Sherrill v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 116 N. C. 655, 21 S. E. 429; Havener v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 117 N. C. 540, 23 S. E. 457; Sherrill v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 117 N. C. 352, 23 S. E. 277; Cashion v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 123 N. C. 267, 31 S. E. 493, 124 N. C. 450, 45 L. R. A. 160, 32 S. E. 746; Lynne v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 123 N. C. 129, 31 S. E. 350; Landie v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 124 N. C. 528, 32 S. E. 886; Kenyon v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 126 N. C. 232, 35 S. E. 468; Laudie v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 126 N. C. 431, 78 Am. St. Rep. 668, 35 S. E. 810; Darlington v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 127 N. C. 448, 37 S. E. 479; Sparkman v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 130 N. C. 447, 41 S. E. 881; Lefler v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 131 N. C. 355, 50 L. R. A. 477, 42 S. E. 819; Bright v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 132 N. C. 317, 43 S. E. 841; Efrd v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 132 N. C. 267, 43 S. E. 825; Higdon v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 132 N. C. 726, 44 S. E. 558; Meadows v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 132 N. C. 40, 43 S. E. 512; Bryan v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 133 N. C. 603, 45 S. E. 938; Bowers v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 135 N. C. 504, 47 S. E. 597.

Messrs. F. H. Busbee & Son and R. C. Strong for appellee.

Douglas, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant in its brief thus states the question intended to be presented: "This case baldly presents the question, which it has been apparent would soon arise, whether the barriers are to be thrown down, and every disappointment, annoyance, or vexation which may arise from a delay or a misdirected telegram can be the subject of an action for mental anguish. In other words, whether any annoyance, disappointment, vexation, or anxiety on account of a missing friend at the station, or from other cause, can be dignified by the name of 'mental anguish,' and adjudged to rank in the same class with the poignant grief arising from a failure to reach the bedside of a dying wife in time to receive her last adieus." We are fully aware of the importance of the question thus presented, and have given it the careful consideration which it deserves. We do not desire to impose any additional burdens upon telegraph companies or require any unnecessary restrictions, but we cannot ignore the essential purposes or their creation. A telegraph company is a quasi public corporation—private in the ownership of its stock, but public in the nature of its duties. It has all the powers of a private corporation, such as a separate legal existence, perpetual succession, and freedom from individual liability, and possesses, also, in addition thereto, the extraordinary privileges which under our Constitution can be exercised only by such corporations as are organized for a public purpose, and then only when necessary for the proper fulfillment of such purpose. Among the extraordinary privileges enjoyed by such corporations is the condemnation of private property, which can never be taken for a private purpose. The acceptance of such privileges at once fixes upon the corporation the indelible impress of a public use. A telegraph company is essentially public in its duties. Without such public duties there would be neither reason for its creation, nor excuse for its continued existence. In fact, being the complement of the postal service, it is one of those great public agencies so important in its nature and far-reaching in its application that some of our wisest statesmen have deemed its continued ownership in private hands a menace to public interests. Hence it follows, both upon reason and authority, that the failure of a telegraph company to promptly and correctly transmit and deliver a message received by it is a breach of a public duty imposed by operation of law. In the words of a great English judge: "A breach of this duty is a breach of the law, and for this breach an action lies, founded on the common law, which action wants not the aid of a contract to support it." This has been expressly held by this court in Cashion v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 124 N. C. 459, 45 L. R. A. 160, 32 S. E. 746; Landie v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 124 N. C. 528, 32 S. E. 886; and Cogdell v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 135 N. C. 431, 47 S. E. 490.

The demurrer admits all the facts alleged in the complaint, construed in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. It is therefore admitted that the message was received by the defendant, and not delivered until the following day, when called for by the sendee. This of itself raises the presumption of negligence. Sherrill v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 116 N. C. 655, 21 S. E. 429; Hendricks v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 120 N. C. 304, 78 Am. St. Rep. 658, 35 S. E. 543; Laudie v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 126 N. C. 431, 78 Am. St. Rep. 668, 35 S. E. 810; Rosser v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 130 N. C. 251, 41 S. E. 378; Hunter v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 130 N. C. 602, 41 S. E. 796; Cogdell v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 135 N. C. 431, 47 S. E. 490.

Teleg. Co. 135 N. C. 431, 47 S. E. 490. Aside from this presumption we think the facts alleged clearly tend to prove negligence on the part of the defendant. The telegram was addressed to Mrs. Jno. B. Lee, 2010 Main street. The name of the sendee was changed in transmission to Mrs. Knoble. The defendant urges in excuse for such negligence the similarity between the telegraphic "J" and "K." This is no legal excuse. Cogdell v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 135 N. C. 431, 47 S. E. 490. If the defendant adopts a code intrinsically liable to such mistakes, it should exercise the greater care in preventing them. The defendant's agents could at least have inquired at the street address given in the telegram. Such inquiry would doubtless have resulted in ascertaining the identity of the sendee. Such was the result when Mrs. Lee called for the telegram on the following day. The plaintiff alleges that she suffered mental anguish, and this is also admitted by the nonsuit. Aside from this, we think the circumstances in which she was placed may well have caused it. A girl 16 years of age finds herself after midnight in a strange city, riding two miles in a carriage with an unknown driver. It is true, she suffered no insult or physical injury; but the question is, What would be the natural effect upon the mind and nervous system of a child of her age? Nature offers no flower more tender or more fair than budding womanhood, and around it every protection will be thrown by the hand of the law. The defendant was informed of the full purpose of the telegram, and the importance of its immediate delivery. It therefore remains only to consider whether, under the admitted facts, the plaintiff is entitled to recover compensatory damages for the mental anguish she may have suffered as the direct result of the defendant's negligence. We see no reason why she cannot, and we find no authority in this state to the contrary.

It is said by the defendant that "it does not require to be pointed out that if the barriers are once thrown down, and any disappointment, annoyance, or unnecessary alarm occasioned by a delayed telegram shall be allowed to be the subject of damages, every barrier which the law has erected in the limitation of actions for damages will be thrown down, and the waters will be out in deluge." We do not think that any such result will follow our decision in this case, but such a possibility should not deter us from giving to the plaintiff the full measure of justice to which she is entitled. The defendant, in its brief, quotes the following extract from the decision of this court in Chappell v. Ellis, 123 N. C., on page 263, 68 Am. St. Rep. 822, 31 S. E. 709, which we may here repeat: "But it is urged that the principle of the Cashion Case, if carried out to its fullest extent, would directly lead to the recovery of damages for all kinds of mental suffering. It may be, but we feel compelled to carry out a principle only to its necessary and logical results, and not to its furthest theoretical limit, in disregard of other essential principles. . . . We do not feel at liberty to adopt any one principle as the sole guide of our decisions, and to carry it out to extreme and dangerous limits, regardless of other great principles of justice and of law so firmly established by reason and precedent." As we have already said, we are now considering the question of damages resulting from the breach of a public duty by a quasi public corporation. How far this principle may in the future be extended to other corporations or to other circumstances, we cannot tell; and, in the absence of any matter before us involving its further consideration, we have neither the right nor the wish to limit or extend its application, as a pure matter of legal speculation. As the cases come up, we will decide them as best we may. In the meantime we will try to confine our opinion to the facts of this case, and others identical therewith. We may, however, say that there seems a material difference between an incidental tort by an individual or a private corporation, and the breach by a quasi public corporation of a public duty relating to the essential object of its creation. The exact nature of this difference it is difficult and at present unnecessary to determine.

It is true, no case has been called to our attention in which this court has allowed damages for mental anguish arising from the failure to deliver a telegram, except in cases relating to sickness or death. On the other hand, we are not aware of any case in which this court has drawn any such distinction either in the allowance or disallowance of damages. The nearest approach to any such limitation that the diligence of the learned counsel for the defense, aided by our own research, has been able to find, is Chappell v. Ellis, 123 N. C. 259, 68 Am. St. Rep. 822, 31 S. E. 709, in which a poor old woman, against whom a writ of possession had been issued, was thrown out upon the highway. In that case the eviction was lawful, and it was merely the unlawful taking of certain personal property, nearly all of which was soon after returned, that could be considered in the assessment of damages. It is true, this court, in distinguishing that case from Cashion's Case, says: "Our opinion in Cashion's Case was hinged on the solemn fact of death, and the associations inseparable from the final severance of all earthly ties by an immortal spirit. The anguish of a mother bending over the body of her child, every lock of whose sunny hair is entwined with a heart string, and kissing the cold lips that are closed forever, cannot come within the range of comparison with any mental suffering caused by the loss of a pig." This language, correctly describing the facts in Cashion's Case, was used to more fully and forcibly distinguish it from Chappell's Case, and not as a limitation upon the general doctrine. Its purpose and application is apparent from the following language of the court in the same case: "The doctrine of mental suffering or 'mental anguish,' as we prefer to call it, as indicating a higher degree of suffering than arises from mere disappointment or annoyance, contemplates purely compensatory damages, and, as far as we are aware, has never been applied to cases like that at bar. This case would come under the rule of exemplary, punitive, or vindictive damages, as they are variously denominated. Such damages, which look not only to the loss sustained by the plaintiff, but still more to the conduct of the defendants, can be allowed only where there is shown, on the part of the defendants, malice, wantonness, oppression, brutality, insult, gross negligence, or certain cases of fraud. . . . We are not insensible to the pitiable condition of the plaintiff, thrown upon the highway without shelter and with but little to eat; but we must remember that her shelterless condition, which probably caused the greater part of her distress, was the result of a lawful eviction. Charity would have dictated a different course, but that great virtue is not enforceable in a court of law." Both before and since that opinion was rendered this court has recognized the doctrine in cases merely of sickness. While one may lead to the other, there is a vast difference between sickness and death, and there seems no reason why principles recognized in the former should not apply to kindred cases of equal strength and importance. While we find no direct decision of the question in any of our cases, we think that their line of reasoning tends to recognize the legal existence of mental suffering apart from sickness and death. This is especially so in Young v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 107 N. C. 370, 9 L. R. A. 669, 22 Am. St. Rep. 883, 11 S. E. 1044; Morton v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 130 N. C. 299, 41 S. E. 484; Bright v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 132 N. C. 317, 43 S. E. 841; and Bryan v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 133 N. C. 603, 45 S. E. 938. In Cashion v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 123 N. C. 267, 31 S. E. 493, this court quotes as follows from Shearman & Redfield on Negligence, § 605: "In case of delay or total failure of delivery of messages relating to matters not connected with business, such as personal or domestic matters, we do not think that the company in fault ought to escape with mere nominal damages, on account of the want of strict commercial value in such messages. Delay in the announcement of a death, an arrival, the straying or recovery of a child, and the like, may often be productive of an injury to the feelings which cannot be easily estimated in money, but for which a jury should be at liberty to award fair damages." This same language is quoted with approval in Young v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 107 N. C., on page 373, 9 L. R. A. 669, 22 Am. St. Rep. 883, 11 S. E. 1044.

In neither Bright's nor Cashion's Case was the plaintiff the sendee of the message, nor was she deprived of the satisfaction of attending the death or burial of the deceased. In both cases she sued on account of the absence of a relative to whom she looked for consolation and assistance. The death of the deceased was the occasion, rather than the cause, of the anguish for which she recovered. In cases where great stress is laid upon the fact of sickness or death, it is with the view of fixing the defendant with notice of the importance of the message where it has received no special information, like those cases where near relationship is relied on simply to raise the presumption of suffering. In Lyne v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 123 N. C. 129, 31 S. E. 350, this court says, on page 133, 123 N. C., page 351, 31 S. E.: "The same contention [that the relation of the parties was not disclosed] was made in that case that the defendant makes in this, and the court say, among other things, 'that the rule insisted on by appellant is too restricted to be safely applied to communications sent by the electric telegraph. . . . When such communications relate to sickness and death, there accompanies them a common-sense suggestion that they are of importance, and that the persons addressed have in them a serious interest.'" In Cashion v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 124 N. C. 459, 45 L. R. A. 160, 32 S. E. 746 (second appeal), this court says on page 464, 124 N. C., page 162, 45 L. R. A., and page 747, 32 S. E.: "The telegram in question stated that Mr. Cashion had been killed while at work, and, on its face, suggested that it was of unusual importance to somebody. The defendant knew that somewhere there was a vacant chair; that some one the lonely death watch was keeping. Who or where, it mattered not to the defendant, as it had no more right to wrong one person than another."

Another significant fact is the growing tendency of judicial opinion to allow compensatory damages for mental suffering even when disconnected with any physical suffering. This is forcibly illustrated in 67 L. R. A.

the case of Osborn v. Leach, 135 N. C. 628, 66 L. R. A. 648, 47 S. E. 811, where this court holds that in cases of libel, where the statute forbids punitive damages, actual damages may be allowed for mental suffering alone. This court says on page 633, page 351, 66 L. R. A., and page 813, 47 S. E.: "This being an action upon a libel per se, the plaintiff has a right to recover compensatory damages. Newell, Slander & Libel, 43; Hale, Damages, p. 99. Compensatory damages include all other damages than punitive, thus embracing not only special damages, as direct pecuniary loss, but injury to feelings, mental anguish, and damages to character or reputation. 18 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 1082 et seq.; Hale, Damages, 106 and 99. Actual damages are synonymous with compensatory damages. . . . Newell, Slander & Libel, 839; 18 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 1081 et seq. Damages for mental suffering are actual or compensatory. They are not special nor punitive, and are given to indemnify the plaintiff for the injury suffered. 1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 602. The law infers actual or compensatory damages for injury to the feelings and reputation of the plaintiff from a libel calculated to humiliate him or injure his reputation or character."

Of course, in cases merely of slander or libel there could be no physical pain except as the reaction of mental suffering. The mere fact that a shock to the feelings which goes directly to the mind, without ever touching the body, may produce such reaction upon the physical system as even to endanger life itself is per se the surest proof of the existence of actual suffering, and the strongest argument for the allowance of compensatory damages. If such suffering actually results directly from the wrongful act of the defendant, it would seem to make but little difference what were the collateral circumstances.

The case at bar was ably and elaborately argued, orally and by brief, on both sides; and, in the end, we find ourselves compelled to decide the question upon the reason of the thing, rather than any weight of decided authority. Of course, we could not look for precedents where the doctrine of mental anguish is not recognized; and, even where it is, the facts of the respective cases generally fall short of direct application. With few exceptions, as in our own state, the element of death or sickness appears directly or indirectly in the case; but, as with us, we find no decision containing any such limitation of the doctrine. The cases most nearly in point are those of Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Procter, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 300, 25 S. W. 811, and same plaintiff in error v. Taylor (Tex. Civ. App.) 81 S. W. 69. In the latter case, filed April 13, 1904, and reaffirmed by the denial of a rehearing on June 1, 1904, it was held (quoting the headnote) that: "Where a wife telegraphed to her husband to meet her, but owing to the telegraph company's negligence, the message was not delivered, and she arrived at the railroad station at night, and went to a hotel, where she failed to secure lodging, owing to its crowded condition, and from which, after a delay, she voluntarily went, escorted by a stranger, who treated her with courtesy, in a search for her husband, to a second hotel, where she found him, she was not entitled to damages from the telegraph company for mental suffering accruing from the time she reached the first hotel until she found her husband." We do not very clearly understand the reasoning of this case, nor do we see the force of the apparently arbitrary distinction between the mental suffering incurred between the depot and the first hotel, and that between the first hotel and the second. The latter seems to have been based upon the belief of the appellate court that in fact there was no such suffering. The point pertinent to the case at bar is that the plaintiff was allowed to recover compensatory damages for mental suffering disconnected from any physical pain or attending circumstances of sickness or death.

In Procter's Case the court held (quoting headnote) that: "R. eloped with plaintiff's daughter, aged 15 years, going towards the county seat to procure license and be married. Plaintiff at once telegraphed the county clerk, stating the girl's age and forbidding the issuance of license; but, through negligent delay in the delivery of the message, it did not reach the clerk until after the license had been issued and the parties married. Held, that plaintiff was entitled to recover of the telegraph company damages for the loss of his daughter's services up to the age of 18, and also for the mental distress involved." In that case the court, on page 304, 6 Tex. Civ. App., page 813, 25 S. W., says: "We think, also, that he was entitled to recover for the mental distress involved. We cannot distinguish this case, in principle, from the case of Stuart v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 66 Tex. 584, 59 Am. Rep. 623, 18 S. W. 351 [relating to sickness and death], and that line of decisions. The solicitude of a parent for the welfare of an only daughter of tender years, committed to his care both by nature and law, is certainly not less substantial than the affection of one brother for another."

Although not a telegraphic case, we are much impressed with the reasoning of the court in Missouri P. R. Co. v. Kaiser, 82 Tex. 144, 18 S. W. 305, where a girl 16 years of 67 L. R. A.

age, accompanied only by a girl companion, was ejected from the train at a small town where she was a stranger, and where she remained an hour before she was discovered by friends. The court therein says: "It is contended that the court erred in refusing a special charge asked by the defendant to the effect that plaintiff could not recover for mental suffering arising from any supposed or anticipated danger, because there was no aggravation attending her leaving the train, nor in the action of the conductor, and that, such being the case, she could only recover for inconvenience, loss of time, labor, and expense of reaching her destination. We do not think that this charge should have been given. We do not think that the mental condition of the plaintiff can be properly considered as arising 'from a supposed or anticipated danger.' The circumstances of two inexperienced girls, unaccustomed to traveling, suddenly ejected from a train at a small railroad station, where they were entire strangers, and contrary to provisions made for their safety by their careful parents, were well calculated to rouse in their minds feelings of insecurity and danger that would not have been properly characterized by referring to them in a charge as merely 'supposed or anticipated.'" This language singularly fits the case at bar.

In the recent case of Gillespie v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co. 178 N. Y. 347, 66 L. R. A. 618, 102 Am. St. Rep. 503, 70 N. E. 857, decided April 26, 1904, the court of appeals of New York in an able and learned opinion, held that a passenger on a street car can recover from the company for injuries to her feelings caused by the insulting language of the conductor; and that such damages are compensatory and not exemplary. The opinion quotes with approval the following language from Thompson on Negligence, § 3288: "Damages given on the footing of humiliation, mortification, mental suffering, etc., are compensatory, and not exemplary damages. They are given because of the suffering to which the passenger has been wrongfully subjected by the carrier. The quantum of this suffering may not, and generally does not, depend at all upon the mental condition of the carrier's servant,—whether he acted honestly or dishonestly, with or without malice." Further on in the opinion the court uses the following language: "Humiliation and indignity are elements of actual damages, and these may arise from a sense of injury and outraged rights in being ejected from a railroad train without regard to the manner in which the ejection was effected, though only done through mistake." The court also says: "The relation between a carrier and its passenger is more than a mere contract relation, as it may exist in the absence of any contract whatsoever. Any person rightfully on the cars of a railroad company is entitled to protection by the carrier, and any breach of its duty in that respect is in the nature of a tort, and recovery may be had in an action of tort as well as for a breach of the contract." We have quoted from this opinion because it unequivocally asserts the principle that a plaintiff can recover in tort compensatory damages for purely mental suffering, without any physical pain whatever, resulting from the breach of public duty by a common carrier. Telegraph and railroad companies are in their nature essentially similar, as being quasi public corporations organized for a public purpose, and fixed with a public use. For the breach of a public duty they are both liable in tort, and we see no reason why similar injuries arising from such breach of duty should not be governed by similar principles. That it is well settled in railroad cases is abundantly shown by the authorities cited in the last-named case, and we think that those authorities are applicable by analogy to the case at bar. For this reason, we have not deemed it necessary to cite the decisions allowing compensatory damages for mental suffering, without any physical pain, in such cases as seduction, breach of promise, slander and libel, malicious arrest and prosecution, false imprisonment, criminal conversation, and kissing a female against her will.

The defendant apparently relies upon the case of McAllen v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 70 Tex. 243, 7 S. W. 715, where the plaintiff sent a telegram to his father, who lived 75 miles from a railroad, to send the family carriage to take him home. The message was not delivered, and the carriage was not sent, whereupon the plaintiff took up the idea that "some dreadful calamity had befallen his father." He thereupon took passage in a "jerkey" and on a buckboard, and subsequently sued the telegraph company for mental anguish as well as physical suffering. The court held that neither the imaginary death of his father, nor the bouncing of the buckboard, was within the contemplation of the parties. That case has no application to the one at bar, coming clearly within the rule laid down in Bowers v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 135 N. C. 504, 47 S. E. 597.

We are struck with the phrase so often used—notably by Joyce on Electric Law—"Telegrams as to sickness, death, or the like." The meaning of the last three words is not defined, but there is an unwelcome suggestion, upon which the mind refuses to dwell, of what might happen to a defenseless girl in the deserted streets of a city at midnight, that may well be likened to death itself.

In this connection we have endeavored to ascertain the latest decisions of the courts of the different states upon this subject. When we remember that this doctrine of mental anguish in telegraph cases is of recent origin, having theretofore been deemed contrary to the principles of the common law, and has made constant progress in opposition to the preconceived ideas of courts and jurists, it seems that it must possess much inherent strength and merit. This is especially evident from the actions of certain courts, some of them of the highest reputation, which, while denying the doctrine in telegraph cases that damages for mental suffering may be recovered in the absence of physical pain or injury, allow it in cases of a kindred nature, such, for instance, as insulting or humiliating a passenger. The following is the present status of the doctrine in the different states, as far as we have been able to ascertain.

Its history in the state of Texas, where it was first specifically announced, may be briefly stated as follows: The first case in that court is the celebrated one of So Relle v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 55 Tex. 308, 40 Am. Rep. 805. There it was held that there could be a recovery in such cases. The next cases were Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Levy, 59 Tex. 542, 46 Am. Rep. 269, and 59 Tex. 563, 46 Am. Rep. 278. These cases were construed by the profession as in some respects modifying the doctrine in the first case. The question again arose in Stuart v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 66 Tex. 580, 59 Am. Rep. 623, 18 S. W. 351, and the rule announced in So Relle's Case was followed. That case was very thoroughly considered, and the decision then made has settled the law in that state upon the main question. Its reports show some 50 cases since in which the doctrine has been followed without question.

In Tennessee the doctrine was first announced in Wadsworth v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 86 Tenn. 695, 6 Am. St. Rep. 864, 8 S. W. 574, and has been reaffirmed in Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Mellon, 96 Tenn. 72, 33 S. W. 725, and Gray v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 108 Tenn. 39, 56 L. R. A. 301, 91 Am. St. Rep. 706, 64 S. W. 1063.

In Alabama the doctrine was expressly recognized in Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Henderson, 89 Ala. 510, 18 Am. St. Rep. 148, 7 So. 419, but seems to have been somewhat modified in the more recent case of Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Crumpton, 138 Ala. 632, 36 So. 517, which appears to be the latest decision upon the subject.

In Kentucky the leading case in which such damages are allowed is Chapman v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 90 Ky. 265, 13 S. W. 880. The doctrine is affirmed in the later cases of Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Van Cleave, 107 Ky. 464, 92 Am. St. Rep. 366, 54 S. W.

827, and Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Fisher, 107 Ky. 513, 54 S. W. 830.

In Iowa damages for mental anguish unaccompanied by physical pain are allowed. The leading case is Mentzer v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 93 Iowa, 752, 28 L. R. A. 72, 57 Am. St. Rep. 294, 62 N. W. 1, a carefully considered case, which has been widely cited. This case stood as the only expression of that court upon the subject until the recent case of Cowan v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 122 Iowa, 379, 64 L. R. A. 545, 101 Am. St. Rep. 268, 98 N. W. 281.

In Louisiana such damages are allowed. The leading and most recent case is Graham v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 109 La. 1069, 34 So. 91.

In South Carolina they are also allowed. At first the doctrine was denied in Lewis v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 57 S. C. 325, 35 S. E. 556. This case was followed by an act of the legislature (23 Stat. at L. 748; Civil Code 1902, vol. 1, § 2223) permitting damages in such cases. This statute was held to be constitutional in Simmons v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 63 S. C. 429, 57 L. R. A. 607, 41 S. E. 521, which has subsequently been uniformly followed.

In Nevada the doctrine has been recently adopted in the case of Barnes v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 27 Nev. 438, 65 L. R. A. 666, 76 Pac. 931, in an able and learned opinion by Fitzgerald, J.

In Washington there does not appear to be any decision upon a telegraph case, but the principle is fully recognized in Davis v. Tacoma R. & Power Co. 35 Wash. 203, 66 L. R. A. 802, 77 Pac. 209, in which telegraph cases are cited with approval.

The doctrine is denied in the following states, as is shown by the most recent cases:

Florida: International Ocean Teleg. Co. v. Saunders, 32 Fla. 434, 21 L. R. A. 810, 14 So. 148, apparently the only case upon the subject in that state.

Georgia: Chapman v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 88 Ga. 763, 17 L. R. A. 430, 30 Am. St. Rep. 183, 15 S. E. 901; Giddens v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 111 Ga. 824, 35 S. E. 638.

Illinois: Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Haltom, 71 Ill. App. 63. The question does not appear to have come before the supreme court of that state.

Indiana: Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Fergus, 67 L. R. A. son, 157 Ind. 64, 54 L. R. A. 846, 60 N. E. 674, 1080.

Kansas: West v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 39 Kan. 93, 7 Am. St. Rep. 530, 17 Pac. 807, appears to be the latest telegraph case in that state involving the question; but that case has been reaffirmed in Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. v. Dalton, 65 Kan. 661, 70 Pac. 645.

Minnesota: Francis v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 58 Minn. 252, 25 L. R. A. 406, 49 Am. St. Rep. 507, 59 N. W. 1078, which is the only case in that state.

Mississippi: Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Rogers, 68 Miss. 748, 13 L. R. A. 859, 24 Am. St. Rep. 300, 9 So. 823. This case has apparently been doubted in one or two subsequent cases, which, however, are not directly in point.

Ohio: Morton v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 53 Ohio St. 431, 32 L. R. A. 735, 53 Am. St. Rep. 648, 41 N. E. 689, seems to be the only case in that state involving the question.

West Virginia: Davis v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 46 W. Va. 48, 32 S. E. 1026.

Wisconsin: Summerfield v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 87 Wis. 1, 41 Am. St. Rep. 17, 57 N. W. 973.

Virginia: Connelly v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 100 Va. 51, 56 L. R. A. 663, 93 Am. St. Rep. 919, 40 S. E. 618. In this state a statute was passed upon the subject, which apparently failed of its purpose.

In the following states there have been no decisions in telegraph cases upon the question, so far as we have been able to ascertain: Arizona, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, Idaho, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Montana, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, North Dakota, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Dakota, Utah, Vermont, and Wyoming.

As the primary doctrine of mental anguish in telegraph cases has been too long and firmly settled by this court to be now called in question if decided cases stand for aught, and as we feel impelled by both reason and authority to apply these principles to the case at bar, the judgment of the court below is reversed, and the demurrer overruled.

Connor, J., concurs in the result.

RÉSUMÉ OF THE DECISIONS PUBLISHED IN THIS BOOK.

SHOWING the Changes, Progress, and Development of the Law during the Third Quarter of the Judicial Year Beginning with October 1, 1904, Classified as Follows:

- I. PUBLIC, OFFICIAL, AND STATUTORY MATTERS.
- II. CONTRACTUAL AND COMMERCIAL RELATIONS.
- III. CORPORATIONS.
- IV. DOMESTIC RELATIONS.
- V. FIDUCIARY RELATIONS.
- VI. TORTS; NEGLIGENCE; INJURIES.
- VII. PROPERTY RIGHTS; WILLS; LIENS; DEEDS.
- VIII. CIVIL REMEDIES; RULES AND PRINCIPLES.
- IX. CRIMINAL LAW AND PRACTICE.

I. PUBLIC, OFFICIAL, AND STATUTORY MATTERS.

Statutes; time for introduction of bill.

A bill which is introduced into the legislature within the time designated by the Constitution is held properly to become a law, although the constitutional authority for such legislation is not granted until after the expiration of the time when bills might constitutionally be introduced for passage at the pending session of the legislature. (Mich.) 965.

Municipal corporations.

That a defect in a street is part of the original plan of construction is held not to relieve the city from liability for injuries to travelers, caused by it. (Wash.) 253.

A provision in a contract for a municipal improvement that the contractor shall receive assessment certificates against the abutting property in full compensation for his labor, without recourse to the municipality, is held not to relieve the city from liability in case it makes an assessment which is invalid and unenforceable. (Iowa) 408.

A municipal corporation which turns into a stream flowing through it surface water falling within its watershed, and, for the maintenance of the public health, has cleaned its bed, is held not to be liable to a riparian owner for failure to remove obstructions placed in the stream by another riparian owner, so that the water is dammed back to the injury of the former. (Mich.) 931.

Ordinances.

An ordinance declaring it unlawful to hold public meetings in the streets of the city without the consent of the municipal authorities is held not to be unconstitutional as curtailing the liberty of speech, or making an arbitrary discrimination in favor of some persons against others. (Ga.) 803.
67 L. R. A.

An ordinance providing that it shall be unlawful for any person maintaining any saloon, barroom, or drinking shop, or any apartment thereto attached, to permit females to enter their said place of business, is held to be unconstitutional. (Idaho) 808.

Highways.

See also supra, Municipal corporations.

The right of the owner of the fee of a country highway to remove gravel from a gravel bed within the limits thereof, where this causes no injury to the highway, and the gravel is not required for grading or improving the same, is sustained. (Minn.) 901.

Voters and elections.

A statute prohibiting the printing of the name of a candidate for office in more than one column of the official ballot is held to be, as to the candidate who is the nominee of a single political party and the nominee of electors by petition, a reasonable regulation of the manner of exercising the right of suffrage. (N. D.) 473.

That faction of a county convention which assembles at the place designated by the chairman and a majority of the county committee, organizes, and proceeds to nominate candidates, is held to be necessarily regarded as the regular representative of the party, in the absence of anything which justifies delegates in refusing to attend at the place selected. (S. D.) 331.

Taxes.

Opportunity for contesting, in the ordinary course of justice, a charge imposed upon property where cigarettes are sold, is held to be sufficient to uphold the tax as against the owner of the property, without notice to him of its assessment, although he may not be directly engaged in the business. (Iowa.) 624.

The constitutional requirement of uniformity in taxation is held not to be violated with respect to a tax upon credits by imposing it upon those which are solvent only, leaving the debts due by insolvent persons untaxed. (Wis.) 200.

A poll tax for street purposes upon male inhabitants between the ages of twenty-one and fifty, except members of voluntary fire departments, is held to contravene a constitutional provision authorizing the legislature to empower municipal corporations to levy taxes which shall be equal and uniform in respect to persons within the jurisdiction of the body levying them. (Wash.) 280.

The amount of capital employed by a corporation, and not its share stock, is held to be considered under a statute imposing a franchise tax upon corporations, to be computed upon the basis of the amount of capital stock employed within the state. (N. Y.) 960.

The furnishing of trading stamps by merchants to their customers at the time of making purchases, in consideration of a cash payment, is held not to be a business which may be separated from the business of selling the merchandise, and taxed under a municipal charter authorizing the classification and taxation of business, trades, and professions carried on within the city. (Ga.) 795.

Public money.

The appropriation of public money for use by a private corporation organized to care for destitute children is held not to be prevented by a constitutional provision forbidding the giving or loaning of the state's credit to any corporation. (Ky.) 815.

Courts; mandamus.

The right of a court of appeals to issue a writ of mandamus in the exercise of, and in aid of, its appellate jurisdiction, without a prior invocation of that jurisdiction by appeal or writ or error, is held sustained. (C. C. A. 8th C.) 761.

Compulsory vaccination.

The right of the legislature, in the exercise of its police power, to authorize the health authorities of a municipal corporation to require, under penalty, all citizens to be vaccinated, when, in their discretion, it is necessary for the public health and safety, is sustained. (Mass.) 935.

Intoxicating liquors.

Furnishing liquor to a minor as an act of hospitality in one's home is held not to be a violation of a provision making it unlawful for any person to give such liquor to a minor, which is embraced within a statute the title to which states that it is to provide for the taxation and regulation of the business of selling, furnishing, and giving liquors. (Mich.) 424.
 67 L. R. A.

Conferring upon a municipal corporation power to require licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors within 4 miles of its corporate limits is held not to deprive citizens of their constitutional property rights, or of the privileges and immunities protected by the Federal Constitution. (Ind.) 613.

Husband and wife.

See also infra, IV.

The right of the legislature to empower the court, in its discretion, to authorize a married woman to convey her real estate by separate deed, in jurisdictions where the common law, giving the husband a freehold right in the property, is in force, is denied. (Vt.) 969.

Incompetent persons.

Empowering the court, in its discretion, to commit one acquitted of murder because of insanity to an asylum for treatment, from which he cannot be released without an act of the legislature, without notice to him, or giving him an opportunity to be heard, or any provisions for investigation as to his present mental state, is held to deprive him of his liberty without due process of law. (N. C.) 972.

Game laws.

The right of a state to forbid a nonresident landowner to take fish and game upon his property within the state, while according such privileges to resident landowners, is denied. (Ark.) 773.

Anti-trust law.

The Kansas anti-trust law of 1897, making unlawful any combination to create or carry out restrictions on trade, to control the prices of any article or commodity or the rates of insurance, or to prevent competition, is held to be a valid exercise of legislative power. (Kan.) 903.

Statute as to breaking contract to work.

A statute making it a misdemeanor for one under contract to labor, or work land, to break his contract and enter into another with a different person, without the consent of his employer, and sufficient excuse, to be adjudged by the court, and without giving notice of his contract to the person with whom he makes the new one, is held to violate the constitutional guaranties of life, liberty, and property, and to abridge the privileges and immunities of citizens. (Ala.) 286.

Changing period of limitation.

A period of three months within which to bring an action upon a judgment rendered in another state, against a bona fide resident of the state establishing such period, upon a cause of action which accrued more than six years before the action upon the judgment is brought, is held to be unreasonably short, and to render the statute providing it invalid. (C. C. A. 8th C.) 558.

A right fully matured under existing law, to defeat a debt by a plea of the statute of limitations, is held to be neither a vested right, nor a property right, and to be subject to be taken away at the will of the legislature. (N. M.) 438.

II. CONTRACTUAL AND COMMERCIAL RELATIONS.

Contracts; validity.

A lease by a corporation, engaged in the business of generating and furnishing electricity for public and private use, to a rival corporation in the city, for a period of ten years, of machinery and appliances used in generating electricity, by which it obligates itself not to engage in such business in the city during such period, and not to dispose of any of its property, machinery, or appliances retained by it for producing or generating in such city electric light and power, is held to be in contravention of public policy, and not sufficient to sustain an action to recover rents by the lessor or its assignee. (Kan.) 61.

Checks.

A check on an open bank account is held not to constitute an assignment of the fund, or take precedence of a subsequent attachment levied on the fund before the check is presented for payment or brought to the notice of the bank, if such presentment is not made, or notice given, within a reasonable time. (Ind. Terr.) 617.

Options.

An acceptance in writing of a formal and carefully prepared option of sale of land, within the time allowed by it for acceptance, using the formal words, "according to terms of the option given me," to which there is added, by the conjunction "and," a request for a departure from its terms as to the time and place of performance, is held to be unconditional, and to convert the option into an executory contract of sale. (W. Va.) 853.

An agreement, without consideration, giving an option to purchase real estate, is held to be revocable at any time before it is accepted; and a revocation is held to be effected by a sale and conveyance of the property to a stranger. (Wyo.) 571.

Telephones.

That a patron of a telephone company has broken his agreement not to make use of the lines of a rival company is held to give the former no right to refuse to grant him further service. (S. C.) 111.

A telephone company is held not to be required to furnish service to a bawdy house. (N. C.) 251.
67 L. R. A.

Carriers.

In case of a breach of a carriage contract in a state whose Constitution prohibits the carrier from contracting to limit its common-law liability, it is held that the carrier cannot, in the courts of that state, have the benefit of a contract valid where made in another state limiting such liability. (Ky.) 412.

Delay by the initial carrier in the transportation of goods at a season when weather conditions would naturally produce deterioration in their quality, which may have aided in causing the damaged condition in which they were delivered to the consignee, is held to render it liable for the loss, unless it shows that its delay did not produce the injury in whole or in part, although delay by a connecting carrier is also shown, which might have caused, or contributed to, the injury. (Ark.) 555.

The right of a carrier to limit, by special contract, his common-law liability, and thereby to exempt himself from liability for any loss resulting otherwise than by the negligence or misfeasance of himself or his servants, is sustained. (N. J. Err. & App.) 433.

A carrier transporting freight on platform cars to a station where it maintains a freight house, but no agent, is held to be obliged to place the freight in the house in order to relieve itself from liability for freight lost through theft, unless it shows that it is not able to do so. (Wash.) 271.

Conditions on the back of a void pass are held to be without effect upon the rights of the person who is attempting to use it for transportation. (N. C.) 227.

Papers pertaining to the business of an insurance agent, and belonging to his employer, are held not to be baggage; and, therefore, it is held that, in case they are placed in a trunk which is checked as baggage, an action cannot be maintained for the benefit of the employer for loss caused by delay in their transportation. (Miss.) 646.

Insurance.

See also infra, VIII.

That a creditor has an insurable interest in the life of his debtor is held; and the issue or pledge of a policy upon his life as collateral security for the payment of his debt is held to be valid. (C. C. A. 8th C.) 550.

Acceptance of the policy tendered, and waiver of the fraud in tendering one not in accordance with the expectation of the applicant and representations of the agent, are held to be effected by receiving the policy and retaining it for several months without complaint, in ignorance of the fraud, because of failure to examine the policy, where the substitution is plainly apparent on its face. (Wis.) 705.

A Pott's fracture consisting of the breaking of one bone of the lower leg between the knee and ankle joints, and a severance of the malleolus process of the other one so as to effect a complete solution of the continuity of both bones, is held not to be covered by a policy providing for indemnity in case of the breaking of the shafts of both bones between the knee and ankle joints. (Iowa) 631.

Recovery on an accident-insurance policy upon a person whose occupation is stated as "cattle dealer or broker visiting yards," the duties of which require him to ride on trains of cattle cars from place to place in the freight yards, is held not to be prevented by the fact that a clause in the policy provides that it shall not cover accidents received while being in any part of a car not provided for occupation by passengers. (S. D.) 175.

Want of knowledge of the policy by one of two mine operators for whose benefit insurance against liability for accidents to employees has been effected by the other, and want of knowledge of the accident by the latter, are held not to excuse failure to comply with the requirement in the policy that immediate notice of an accident be given to the insurer. (Wash.) 275.

The right of one issuing an accident insurance policy to stipulate that it shall not cover injuries received while assured is insane is sustained. (Cal.) 793.

A clause in an insurance policy relieving the insurer from liability in case death is caused by violation of any criminal law is held not to be applicable where insured was shot while attempting in good faith to escape from a personal difficulty, although he had begun it by assaulting his opponent with a weapon capable of producing great bodily harm, if not death. (Ark.) 770.
67 L. R. A.

A statute requiring an insurer to fix the insurable value of the property insured, and to state such value in the policy, the measure of damages in case of total loss to be the amount so fixed, and in case of partial loss such proportion of the amount upon which premiums are paid as the damage sustained is of the insurable value as fixed by the agent; and providing that the insurer shall be estopped to deny that the property insured was worth at the time of insuring the amount so fixed, and that the agent soliciting the insurance shall be held to be the agent of the insured,—is held to be valid. (Fla.) 518.

A policy of insurance on the furniture of a house is held to be void in toto if a large part of the furniture has been purchased on the instalment plan, and is not paid for, and the policy provides that it shall be void if the interest of the insured is other than unconditional and sole ownership. (R. I.) 479.

Where a policy of insurance for $2,500 on two buildings contained a clause providing that the entire policy, unless otherwise provided by agreement indorsed thereon, should be void if the insured had, or should thereafter procure, any other contract of insurance on the property; and attached to the policy was a slip of the same date as the policy, containing a description of the property insured with the amount of insurance written thereon, and a clause that 2,500 total concurrent insurance was permitted,—it is held that the last clause, construed in connection with the language of the entire policy, permitted other concurrent insurance not to exceed $2,500. (Fla.) 581.

Principal and surety.

Ratification of an unauthorized signing of their names to a renewal note by the maker is held to be effected where the sureties on a note which is past due, upon receiving notice from the payee that a new note has been substituted for the old one with their names attached as sureties, neglect to repudiate the transaction, and fail to notify the payee of their nonliability until after the insolvency and death of the maker. (Ind. Terr.) 812.

Sale f. o. b.

A sale of goods to be delivered "f. o. b. cars" is held to impose on the seller the duty of procuring the cars to carry out the contract, in the absence of clear and satisfactory evidence of a custom to the contrary, known to both parties to the transaction at the time of making the contract. (Wis.) 756.

III. CORPORATIONS.

See also supra, I., Taxes.

Where the same five persons compose both the directorate and the body of the stockholders of a corporation, it is held that two of these persons cannot, by joining with a third, enter into contracts with the corporation, or fix their own salaries, or vote allowances to themselves, over the protest of their two other associates. (La.) 76.

A written transfer of a certificate of shares of stock in a corporation, made in good faith, and for value, and possession taken thereof as a pledge for the payment of a private debt of the assignor, is held to have preference over a subsequent attachment thereof in favor of a creditor of the assignor, although the transfer was not entered on the proper books of the corporation. (Idaho) 656.

Unregistered transfer of shares.

An unregistered transfer of shares of corporation stock, for which no certificate has been issued, if made for a valuable consideration and without fraud, is held to vest in the transferee a title to the shares superior to the claims of a subsequent attaching creditor of the transferrer. (W. Va.) 670.

IV. DOMESTIC RELATIONS.

Husband and wife.

See also supra, I.

A parol gift of a note is held not to be within the meaning of a constitutional provision requiring a man's written consent to make valid his wife's conveyance of her property, since the word "conveyance" has reference to the transfer of such property as must be transferred by written instruments. (N. C.) 461.

Infants.

That a guardian appointed for an infant

by a court in one state will not, on the ground of comity, be given custody of the child against its best interests by the courts of another state, into which the child has been taken, is held although the child was removed from the state where the guardian was appointed contemporaneously with, and possibly for the purpose of escaping the effect of proceedings for, the guardian's appointment. (Wyo.) 860.

V. FIDUCIARY RELATIONS.

One who accepts an agency to take charge of a house and lot belonging to his principal, collects the rents, pays taxes, and sees to repairs, and gives advice as to the value of the principal's unimproved farm lands, is held thereby to assume a fiduciary and confidential relation, and to have no right to purchase such farm lands for himself without making full disclosure of all facts bearing on their value, material for the principal to know in order to act intelligently. (N. D.) 288.

VI. TORTS; NEGLIGENCE; INJURIES.

See also supra, I., Municipal Corporations; infra, VII., Waters.

Proximate cause.

Placing an electric light in close proximity to a trolley wire at a curve is held not to be the proximate cause of an injury to one struck by glass falling from the globe when shattered by a trolley leaving the wire, since failure to keep the trolley on the wire is prima facie negligence, and is the act of a responsible person intervening between the placing of the light and the injury. (R. I.) 116.

Telegrams.

A telegraph company receiving a message for transmission is held to be bound to 67 L. R. A.

notify the sender, in case the line is obstructed so that the message cannot be sent within a reasonable time, so as to give him an opportunity to avail himself of other modes of conveying the desired information to the sendee. (C. C. A. 7th C.) 153.

Change of the stated price in a telegram intended to notify a purchaser of the market price of mules, so as apparently to quote them at $10 a head less than their market price, which results in the sendee's directing the purchase of a certain number on his account, is held to render the telegraph company liable for the difference in the price paid and that stated in the telegram as delivered. (S. C.) 481.

Injury to servant; vice principals.

Persons engaged in the service of a master, who are intrusted by him with the management or direction of his general work, or with some particular part thereof, are held not to be fellow servants with subordinate employees, but vice principals, for whose negligence, resulting in the injury of employees, the master is liable. (Utah) 508.

A railroad conductor, in signaling the engineer to back the engine for the purpose of effecting a coupling, is held to act in his capacity as representative of the master, and not as a fellow servant of the brakeman, who is attempting to prepare the cars for the coupling; so that the master will be liable in case he acts negligently to the injury of the brakeman. (Tenn.) 340.

Failure of a master to take precautions to prevent electric wires in process of being strung on telephone poles from reels from coming in contact with a trolley-feed wire charged with a powerful current, or to supply his employees with rubber gloves or other devices to prevent the communication to them of a serious shock in case the wires become charged, is held to render him liable for injury to employees attending the reels, who receive a severe shock by reason of one or more of the telephone wires coming in contact with the trolley-feed wire because of their sagging or breaking. (N. J. Err. & App.) 956.

Injury to volunteer.

One into whose service another volunteers without his assent, express or implied, is held not to be under the duties of a master toward a servant, or required to anticipate or discover the peril of such volunteer, but only to be bound to use care not to injure him after notice of his peril. (Ga.) 701.

Assault by servant.

The appointment of one as cashier of a railway station, with power to collect money, give receipts, sell tickets, take care of the money received, and forward it to the treasurer of the company, is held not to empower him to arrest persons whom he suspects of having stolen money which has come into his possession, so as to render the railroad company liable in case he causes the arrest of an innocent person. (N. C.) 455.

Injury to boy by torpedo.

Injury to a boy from a torpedo which he picks up near a railroad track is held not to make the company liable merely upon evidence that a brakeman tossed it to a flagman, who threw it back, and, upon the brakeman's failure to catch it, and letting it fall to the ground, no attempt was made to recover and remove it to a safe place. (Mass.) 422.

Fire set by engine; railroad company's right to insurance.

A clause in a statute making a railroad company liable for losses by fire set out by its engines, which gives it the benefit of any insurance on the property, is held to apply only to cases where the liability is imposed by the statute, and not to those where it is liable because of its own negligence. (Me.) 418.

Killing dog by street car.

A street railway company is held not to be liable in damages for the killing of a dog by one of its cars, unless the killing is done wilfully, wantonly, or recklessly. (N. C.) 470.

Electric shock.

A corporation which contracts to light a building by electricity is held to undertake thereby to protect its occupants from injury by the electrical current, so far as it can do so by exercising the highest degree of care, skill, and diligence in the construction and maintenance of its plant. (Pa.) 475.

Standing on platform of interurban car.

The law of negligence governing the standing on a platform of a moving street car in a municipality is held not to be applicable to the case of standing on such platform of a moving interurban car in the open country; but the rule governing such a case is held to be the same as that in the case of steam cars. (Ohio) 637.

Hiring another's servant.

One who employs a person in ignorance of the fact that he is under a time contract to work for another, in violation of which he has left the latter's service, is held not to be liable in damages to the former employer because, when informed of the servant's breach of contract, he fails to discharge him, where, though offering to release his new employer, he expresses his determination not to return to the one whose service he has abandoned. (La.) 65.

VII. PROPERTY RIGHTS; WILLS; LIENS; DEEDS.

Homestead.

Merely raising a few vegetables on a vacant lot is held not to be such occupancy as entitles one entirely insolvent, without ability L. R. A.

ity sufficient to earn her own support, and without any prospect of getting money to erect a building thereon, to hold the land indefinitely as a homestead. (Mich.) 313.

Fraudulent conveyance.

See also infra, VIII., Estoppel.

The legal title to property alleged to have been transferred with intent to defraud creditors is held to be in the fraudulent grantee, where the fraudulent character of the transfer does not appear on its face; and the title is held to continue in such grantee notwithstanding a sale of the property by a creditor on execution against the grantor, until the fraud is exposed, and the transfer set aside in some judicial proceeding. (Minn.) 865.

Waters.

The right of a public corporation organized to provide a drainage system, to contest its liability to make compensation for injuries done to riparian owners by taking water from a navigable stream to supply its ditch, upon the ground that incidentally it has created a navigable channel, and that the public is not liable for injuries to riparian owners in consequence of the improvement of navigation, is denied. (Ill.) 820.

The owner of lands through which a natural water course flows is held to have the right to accumulate surface waters falling upon lands adjacent thereto, and cast the same into such stream, without becoming liable to a lower riparian owner for damages, so long as the natural capacity of the stream is not exceeded. (Kan.) 642.

Grant of water power.

Maintenance for nearly fifty years, with the knowledge and acquiescence of the canal commissioners, of flumes to take water from a canal feeder, under a contract by which the commissioners granted the right to take it, the bottoms of which are level with the bottom of the feeder, so that whenever the grantee was entitled to take water he would receive it under a head, is held to be a practical construction of the rights of the parties which will prevent the commissioners from subsequently placing weirs in the flumes so that no water can be received until it has reached a certain height in the feeder. (Ill.) 369.

Fixtures.

Machinery and other appliances necessary for the prosecution of the work, placed on land by a lessee under a lease for oil and gas purposes, by which it is agreed that he shall have the privilege at any time to remove therefrom all machinery and fixtures placed thereon, are held not to become parts of the freehold, and to be removable by the lessee within a reasonable time after the forfeiture of the lease because of nonpayment of the rental. (W. Va.) 694.

67 L. R. A.

The insertion in a renewal lease of a clause giving the tenant the right to remove trade fixtures is held not to be necessary to enable him to remove, before the termination of the extended period, fixtures which he might have removed before the expiration of the original term. (Pa.) 359.

Mortgage.

An affidavit of a renewal of a chattel mortgage in favor of a corporation after it is received and filed by the register of deeds of the county is held not to be void, so as not to impart constructive notice of the lien of the mortgage, by reason of the fact that the affidavit is sworn to before a notary public, who is an officer and stockholder in said corporation. (Kan.) 851.

Wills.

That a will may pass title to after-acquired real estate is decided under a statute providing that every person may, by last will, devise "all his estate, real, personal, and mixed." (Mo.) 648.

A clause in a will forbidding the sale of testator's real estate during the lifetime of the life tenant is held to be void as against public policy. (N. C.) 444.

Under a will giving real estate to testator's wife for life, and providing that at the expiration of the life estate "that which is given to her for life shall be equally divided between all my children, share and share alike, the representatives of such as may have died to stand in the place of their ancestors," it is held that no estate vests in the children until the widow's death, and that, therefore, a child dying before the widow has no interest which will pass by its will. (N. C.) 440.

A codicil directing trustees, who, under the will, are to hold the residue of the estate during the lifetime of the testator's youngest two children, paying annuities to all the children during their lives, and dividing the property at their termination, to hold the share of another child during her lifetime upon the happening of a certain contingency, paying her an annuity during her life, and dividing the principal among her children at her death, is held to be void as suspending the period of alienation beyond two lives in being at the testator's death. (N. Y.) 146.

A devise to certain persons named, "and to their heirs and assigns forever," is held not to be cut down, either expressly or by implication, from a fee simple to a fee tail by a subsequent declaration that, if either should die without "issue," his share should go over to others. (Mo.) 97.

A residuary devise to testator's widow is held not to pass title, as against his children, to a burial lot upon which members of his family are buried. (R. I.) 118.

The marriage of a testator, whether or not it is followed by the birth of a child, is held to revoke an antenuptial will. (N. M.) 315.

Liens.

Explosives consumed in grading a roadbed or driving a tunnel for a railroad company are held to be within the provisions of a statute giving a lien to contractors and material men for materials furnished for grading the roadbed, constructing culverts, laying tracks, or erecting buildings. (Tenn.) 487.

Deeds; rule in Shelley's Case.

A fee in the first taker is held not to be created by the rule in Shelley's Case by a conveyance to one for her natural life with provisions for forfeiture in case of attempt to encumber, or nonpayment of taxes, "and at her death to her children or to their lineal descendants;" and it is held to be immaterial that, under the forfeiture clause, in case of compliance with the conditions the land was to pass to the lineal descendants of the life tenant. (Iowa) 629.

VIII. CIVIL REMEDIES; RULES AND PRINCIPLES.

Where an insurer, who has paid part of the loss caused by a fire negligently set out, and been subrogated to the rights of the property owner, joins with the latter in a suit to recover the entire loss caused by the negligence, it is held that the suit should be at law, and not in equity. (Or.) 161.

Statutes providing a summary remedy for a landlord to obtain possession of leased premises are held not to deprive equity of jurisdiction of a suit to determine the rights of the parties under a clause in the lease giving a right to renewal at a rental to be fixed by arbitrators, since the remedy provided by them is not adequate. (Pa.) 353.

A guardian who is tenant in common of certain real estate with his wards is held not to be personally liable as upon his own contract for breach of a contract to convey their interest, made without authority, where, in contracting to sell the whole tract, he signs the contract to convey personally, and also as guardian for the wards. (N. C.) 977.

Who may sue.

To entitle the sendee to sue for failure promptly to transmit and deliver a telegram, it is held that the telegraph company must know, or be chargeable with notice, that the message is for his benefit. (Or.) 319.

Parties.

Officers of a corporation who secure subscriptions to its stock by fraud are held to be properly joined in an equitable suit against the corporation to enjoin collection of the amount unpaid, and to secure the return of what has been paid upon the subscription. (N. Y.) 126.

Judgment as to infant's custody; conclusiveness.

The judgment of a court in a habeas corpus proceeding as to the custody of a child is held not to prevent another court from afterwards making a different order, where the welfare of the child requires it. 67 L. R. A.

even though no material change of circumstances is shown. (Kan.) 783.

An unreversed judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction in a habeas corpus proceeding for the custody of a child is held to be binding upon the parties, while the facts are unchanged, and to bar independent proceedings in another court, even though it be one of higher jurisdiction. (Ill.) 787.

Remittitur.

The power of an appellate court to require a remittitur of excessive damages, instead of reversing the judgment, and to affirm the judgment for the smaller amount in case the plaintiff assents to it, is sustained. (Tenn.) 495.

Conspiracy.

An attempt to break up the business of loan agents, and to secure their custom, by a rival, by statements that they are inattentive and neglectful, and have been guilty of fraudulent conduct for which their principal has taken the business from them, and that they are insolvent, is held to give them a right of action for the injuries thereby inflicted upon them. (Tex.) 195.

Injunction.

The right to an injunction to restrain the blowing of a whistle at a factory is denied where it is not clear that it amounts to a nuisance, until the fact of nuisance has been established by action at law. (N. C.) 983.

Under a constitutional provision requiring compensation in case property is damaged for public use, it is held that injunction will not lie to stay the improvement of a public street, according to a grade lawfully adopted by the municipal corporation, until the damages are paid to the complaining property owner, where none of the property is taken, but is merely subjected to consequential injuries. (Mo.) 362.

Attachment of wages.

Wages due by a corporation, which, although having its domicile of origin in one state, has acquired a domicile for business purposes by adoption in another one, where its property is located, to a salesman whose services are rendered in still another state, where he resides, are held to be subject to attachment for the debt of the salesman in favor of a creditor residing in the state of the latter's domicile at the adopted domicile of the corporation, under a statute providing that an action may be brought against a foreign corporation by a plaintiff not a resident of the state when the cause of action shall have arisen, or the subject of the action shall be situated, within the state. (N. C.) 209.

Presumption as to law of other state.

In the absence of proof as to the law of another state by which a contract is to be enforced, it is held that the common law, and not the statute law, of the state where the suit is brought will be applied. (Mass.) 33.

Estoppel.

An alleged fraudulent grantee is held to be estopped from setting up, in an action by a judgment creditor to set aside the conveyance as fraudulent, any defense that might have been interposed by his grantor in the original action. (Minn.) 590.

A widow who offers for probate, and undertakes to carry out as administratrix with the will annexed, the will of her husband, which devises to her her own land for life with remainder to their children, and an additional sum of money, is held to be estopped to assert her absolute title to the real estate. (N. C.) 449.

Damages.

The fact that a person other than the wrongdoer, as a mere gratuity, pays to one injured as the result of his negligence a sum equal to the amount he would have earned had he been able to work during the period of his disability, is held not to mitigate the damages due by the wrongdoer to the injured party for lost time. (Ga.) 87.

The right to recover damages for mental anguish from a telegraph company is sustained where, by reason of its failure to deliver a telegram, friends fail to meet a sixteen-year-old girl, who arrives after midnight in a strange city, and is compelled to drive 2 miles in company with a strange driver in search of their residence. (N. C.) 985.

Writ and process.

Service of summons by publication is held not to confer jurisdiction to compel a non-resident to perform his contract to convey real estate located within the state. (Mont.) 940.

IX. CRIMINAL LAW AND PRACTICE.

Taking up court records from the place where they have been laid, and walking away with them with intent to destroy them, are held to render one guilty under a statute making the unlawful removal of such records a crime, although they were taken from the place where they had been put by authority of the district attorney for the purpose of detecting defendant in the commission of the crime. (N. Y.) 131.

Homicide.

The right of a man to champion the cause of a woman with whom he is maintaining improper relations, and to defend her against the simple assaults of her brother, so as to give him the benefit of the rule as to self-defense in case he kills the brother during the altercation, is denied. (Ky.) 529.

Where it appeared on the trial for murder that the victim was shot and wounded by one person using a shotgun and another using a pistol, and that one of the wounds inflicted by the pistol was certainly mortal, and that probably one or more of the wounds inflicted by the shotgun were so, it is held that, in order to convict the person using the shotgun of murder in such a case, 67 L. R. A.

the evidence must be such as to authorize the jury to find that death actually ensued as the result of the act of the defendant on trial, in the absence of any conspiracy between the parties doing the shooting. (Ga.) 426.

An officer who kills a person whom he is attempting to arrest for misdemeanor, by striking him on the head with a billy, is held not to be guilty of murder if he uses no more force than is necessary in case of an ordinary person, although it proves fatal in the particular case because of the thinness of the prisoner's skull, of which the officer has no knowledge. (Iowa) 292.

Robbery.

The ownership of money in a cash drawer, of which a clerk has possession with the right to make change therefrom and place receipts from sales therein, is held to be properly laid in such clerk as against one who, in the absence of the proprietor, by exhibiting a deadly weapon, compels the clerk to permit him to take the money from the drawer, although the clerk claims no personal interest in the money, and is not held accountable for its loss, where the statutes permit an indictment for robbery for taking money from the clerk or agent. (Mo.) 343.

Assault.

To excuse a person for assaulting another under the belief that he is a third person, upon whom an assault would be justified, it is held that he must exercise the highest degree of care practicable under the circumstances to ascertain whether or not the person whom he is about to strike is in fact the one whom he believes him to be. (Ky.) 565.

Mandamus to compel arrest.

The right to a writ of mandamus to compel the arrest without warrant of certain designated persons for the alleged commission of a misdemeanor is denied. (Or.) 166.

Evidence; confessions.

The judge who convened a grand jury which is investigating a crime is held not to be permitted to give in evidence a confession made to him by a witness called before such jury, who is subsequently indicted and placed on trial, where the witness, being unable to obtain advice from a lawyer in whom he had confidence, went to the judge, and, upon stating his difficulty, was told by the judge that he could give him no advice, but that he should tell the truth, whereupon the witness made the confession. (Mich.) 923.

Burden of proving insanity.

The burden of proving insanity as a defense to a criminal prosecution is held to be upon the accused; and it is held not to be sufficient merely to raise a reasonable doubt as to sanity, but that the evidence upon that point must preponderate in his favor, or be sufficient to satisfy the jury of that fact. (R. I.) 322.
67 L. R. A.

Wife as witness.

The right of the state to place on the stand the wife of one on trial for a crime, and ask her questions as to the commission of the crime, for the purpose of forcing defendant to object to her testimony against him in order to prejudice his case, by supporting the theory that he married her to suppress her testimony under a statute making her incompetent to testify against him, is denied. (Tex. Crim. App.) 499.

Motion in arrest; amendment to cure defect.

A supreme court which has arrested a judgment of conviction in a criminal case because of a fatal defect in the indictment as presented to it, is held to have the power, even after the close of the term, to grant the state an opportunity to correct the record so as to show that the alleged defect did not exist, and proceed to hear the appeal upon the corrected record. (N. C.) 179.

Habeas corpus.

The sufficiency of the evidence before a grand jury to warrant an indictment is held not to be subject to inquiry on habeas corpus proceedings to obtain the release of accused from custody consequent upon the indictment, although by statute the evidence offered before the grand jury may be taken down, and a copy of it delivered to the accused, so that the proceedings before that body are no longer incapable of proof. (Cal.) 406.

Extradition.

A joinder in one indictment of several counts charging distinct offenses is held not to prevent the rendition of accused as a fugitive from justice,—at least if, under the laws of the state where the indictment was found, it was sufficient to support a conviction under one of the counts. (N. H.) 946.

INDEX TO NOTES.

(The General Index follows this.)

Appeal.

Amendment of record to cure defect for which motion in arrest of judgment has been made 179

Assault.

Homicide in resisting 532, 541
Mistaken identity as justification for 565

Attachment.

Of corporate stock; effect of pledge or other transfer not made in books of company 656

Bankruptcy.

See JUDGMENT.

Breach of peace.

Homicide in attempting to prevent 535

Burglary.

Homicide in attempting to prevent 534

Burial lot.

See CEMETERIES.

Carriers.

Is an interurban railroad company controlled by general railroad law in regard to the operation of railroads as carriers of passengers? 637

Cemeteries.

Character of estate or property of owner in burial lot:—
I. Introductory 118
II. Easement 119
III. License 120
IV. Devise 121
V. Cemetery dedicated to a class 122
VI. When held in common 122
VII. Right to mortgage 122
VIII. Power of cemetery authorities 123
IX. Trespass on lot owner's possession 124
X. Ejectment 125
XI. Effect upon, of legislative act or municipal ordinance closing cemetery 125

Collusion.

See JUDGMENT.

Conflict of laws.

How case determined when proper foreign law not proved:—
I. Introduction 33
II. Judicial cognizance of foreign law
a. Specific rules of law of other jurisdiction
1. Law of foreign country 33
2. Law of other state 34
b. General system of law upon which foreign jurisprudence based 37

Conflict of laws—continued.

III. Different theories as to proper practice
a. In general 38
b. Jurisdiction with respect to which the presumption in favor of common law may be indulged 40
c. Conflict between presumption in favor of common law and presumption that law of other jurisdiction is same as that of forum 41
d. Application of lex fort without indulging any presumption 56
e. Refusal to apply any substantive law 59

Constitutional law.

See STATUTES.

Conveyance.

Parol gift as 461

Corporations.

Validity of pledge or other transfer of stock of corporation when not made in books of company, as against attachments, executions, or subsequent transfers:—
I. The elements of the problem 657
II. Registry not necessary in absence of statute or by-law 660
III. Statutes requiring transfer on books 664
IV. By-law requiring transfer on books 672
V. Provision of certificate requiring transfer on books 675
VI. Requirement of record with county clerk 675
VII. Effect of effort to secure transfer 676
VIII. Effect of notice to purchaser or creditor 677
IX. Persons not entitled to benefit of statutes 680
X. Estoppel of pledgee 682
XI. Statutory recognition of transfers of certificates 683

Courts.

Judicial cognizance of foreign law 33

Covenants.

In grant of water power 369

Damages.

Mitigation of damages for personal injury by fact that injured person has received from some source other than the wrongdoer money because of the injury:—
I. In actions by injured person
a. Insurance money 87
b. Wages 89
c. Other gratuities 90
1003

Damages—continued.
II. In actions for wrongful death
a. Property received from deceased	91
b. Insurance money	92
c. Pensions and subscriptions	94
d. Remarriage	95
III. Payments made at instance of wrong-doer	95
Easement.
Interest of owner in burial lot as	119
Ejectment.
To obtain possession of burial lot	125
Electric railroads.
See CARRIERS.
Estoppel.
See also JUDGMENT.
Of pledgee or transferee of stock to assert title against claims subsequently accruing; where pledge or transfer not entered on books of company	683
Evidence.
Presumption as to law of other state or country	33
Admissibility in evidence of communications made to persons serving in a judicial capacity	923
Execution.
On corporate stock; effect of pledge or other transfer not made in books of company	656
Forgery.
See JUDGMENT.
Fraud.
Attack by alleged fraudulent grantee on judgment on which action to set aside his conveyance is based	590
Waiver of	705
Effect on legal title of a conveyance of land in fraud of creditors:—
I. Scope of note	865
II. As to creditors
a. Conveyance executed by debtor	865
b. Land purchased and paid for by debtor, but conveyed to another	882
III. Title of fraudulent grantee as to parties not creditors	889
IV. Title of bona fide purchaser from fraudulent grantee	891
V. Title conveyed by bona fide purchaser to one having knowledge of the fraud	898
VI. When title is in fraudulent grantee as to his creditors	899
VII. Rights of purchaser other than judgment creditor at execution sale	900
VIII. Conclusion	900
Garnishment.
Where debt garnishable:—
I. Domicil of garnishing creditor	209
II. Domicil of debtor	209
III. State, other than his domicil, where debtor temporarily present	213
IV. State where foreign corporations engaged in business	214
67 L. R. A.
Garnishment—continued.
V. Conflict of jurisdiction	220
VI. Exemptions	222
Gift.
Parol gift as conveyance	461
Grant.
Of water power	369
Habeas corpus.
Habeas corpus decree as to custody of infant as res judicata	783
Highways.
Municipal liability for defective plan of street construction as distinguished from other defects:—
1. General principles	253
II. Plan must be formally adopted	256
III. Injury to property rights
a. Interference with rights in street	257
b. Interference with streams	258
c. Injury by surface water	260
d. The Missouri cases	264
IV. Injury to travelers
a. Defective streets	265
b. Defective walks	266
c. Defective bridges	268
d. Courts denying liability	268
Homicide.
By official action or by officers of justice:—
I. Scope	293
II. Homicide by authority of law or under official direction
a. In execution of death sentence	293
b. In discharge of ordinary official duty	293
c. In the discharge of military duty	295
III. Effect of official character and action in case of arrest	297
IV. General rules as to use of force in making arrest
a. In case of felony	297
b. In case of misdemeanor	298
V. Checking flight
a. In case of felony	299
b. In case of misdemeanor	300
VI. Meeting actual physical resistance	301
VII. Preventing escape or rescue
a. In case of felony	302
b. In case of misdemeanor	302
VIII. Recapture
a. Generally	303
b. Of escaped convicts	303
IX. Limitation as to force which may be used
a. General rules	303
b. Self-defense as a test	304
c. When use of deadly weapon is justified	305
d. Appearance as a test of the right of self-defense	306
e. Necessity a question for the jury	306
X. Effect of question of legality or propriety of officer's action
a. General rule as to illegal action	307
b. Action without a warrant	308
c. Action outside of territorial jurisdiction	309

Homicide, X.—continued
d. Negligent action	310
e. Malicious action	310
f. Notice of character and purpose	311
g. Further authority	312
XI. Action by deputy or assistant	312
XII. Conclusion	312
Resulting from injuries by different persons acting independently:—
I. Scope	428
II. Responsibility when joint	426
III. Individual responsibility
a. The general rule	427
b. For act nearest to time of death	427
c. For first or prior act
1. Generally	428
2. When act contributes to death	429
IV. Proof	430
V. Summary	431
To prevent criminal or unlawful acts:—
I. Scope and nature	529
II. Forcible felonies and crimes
a. General rules as to	529
b. Justification limited to necessity	530
c. Apparent, as distinguished from real, danger as necessity	531
III. Application of rules to particular acts
a. Attempts to kill or seriously injure
1. Upon the slayer	532
2. Upon others	532
b. Robbery or burglary	534
c. Breaches of the peace	535
IV. Misdemeanors, crimes without force, and trespasses
a. General rules as to misdemeanors and secret crimes	536
b. Larceny	537
c. Trespass on property
1. General rules	538
2. Personality	539
3. Realty	540
V. Attack in, or trespass or assault on, dwelling
a. Personal attack in	541
b. Defense against entrance	542
c. Expulsion	544
d. Who may defend, and against whom	545
e. What constitutes dwelling or castle	545
VI. Defense of family and relations	546
VII. Prevention as distinguished from punishment	547
VIII. The question of degree	548
IX. Summary	549

Husband and wife.

Effect of marrying witness in order to prevent her from testifying	499
--	-----

Infants.

Habeas corpus decree as to custody of, as res judicata	783
---	-----

Insurance.

Retention of policy of insurance as waiver of mistake or fraud of insurer or its agent:—
I. Introduction	703

67 L. R. A.

Insurance—continued.

II. Time of misrepresentation	706
III. Mistake of fraud as to terms of policy
a. Character of policy	706
b. Various provisions of policy
1. Risks insured against	711
2. Duration of insurance	712
3. Limitation of time for action on policy	714
4. Existence of options at maturity	714
5. Liability to assessment	715
6. Right to cancel	716
7. Obligation to keep books in safe	717
8. Obligation to keep watchman on premises	718
9. Signature to application	718
10. Agency clause	718
11. Date of policy	719
12. Value of policy	719
c. Variation of terms on renewal of policy	719
IV. Mistake or fraud as to facts disclosed by the insured
a. Appearing in the policy
1. Subject-matter of insurance
(a) Property covered	721
(b) Voyage covered by marine policy	723
(c) Misdescription of property	724
(d) Location of property	724
2. Interest protected	724
3. Facts affecting the hazard
(a) Other insurance	726
(b) Occupancy of premises	729
(c) State of title	731
(d) Encumbrances	732
b. Appearing only in the application
1. Copy attached to policy
(a) Physical condition of insured	734
(b) Prior insurance	735
(c) Occupation	736
(d) Encumbrances	737
2. Copy not attached	737
V. Mistake or fraud as to matters outside of the policy and application	738
VI. Effect of retention by other than insured	739
VII. Effect of insured's illiteracy	740
VIII. Retention with knowledge of defect
a. Generally	741
b. Effect of attempted rescission	742
c. Effect of agent's reassurances	743
IX. Distinction between action at law and suit in equity	744

Interurban railroads.

See CARRIERS.

Judgment.

Amendment of record to cure defect for which motion in arrest of judgment has been made:—

I. Amendment in the trial court
a. Amendment of pleading
1. In general	179

Judgment, I.—continued.

2. To supply omitted averments	179
3. To cure insufficient or erroneous allegations	181
4. By striking out	182
b. Amendments concerning indictments, informations, or complaints
1. As to verification	182
2. As to organization of grand jury	182
3. As to finding, return, or filing of indictment	182
4. To cure omissions	183
5. To cure errors or insufficiency	183
c. Amendments concerning verdict or judgment
1. General verdict rendered on declaration containing several counts	183
2. Misjoinder of counts	184
3. Verdict in criminal case	184
4. Amendment of judgment	184
d. Amendment of record	184
II. Amendment in the appellate court
a. To cure errors or omissions	185
b. On certiorari or certificate	185
Attack by alleged fraudulent grantee on judgment on which action to set aside his conveyance is based :—
I. Introductory	590
II. The judgment considered as evidence
a. As prima facie evidence of the debt	590
b. What must, or may, be produced	592
III. Conclusive effect of the judgment
a. Generally	593
b. Effect of the time of the conveyance	595
c. As to defenses to the original action
1. Defense by way of denial, generally	597
2. Statute of limitations	598
3. Minority	598
4. Set-off	598
5. Bankruptcy	599
6. Estoppel	599
7. Payment	599
8. Fraud in the transaction	600
9. Forgery	601
10. Illegal transaction
(a) Usury	601
(b) Sunday law	602
(c) Immoral consideration	602
11. Failure of consideration	603
12. Lack of jurisdiction	603
d. Attack for fraud or collusion
1. Fraud	605
2. Collusion	607
e. Attack for irregularity	608
f. Unintentional default in the original action	609
g. Attack for matters arising since the judgment
1. Dormancy	609
2. Waiver or estoppel	609
3. Satisfaction	610

Judgment, III. g.—continued.

4. Intervening judgment in favor of a stranger	610
5. Intervening bankruptcy	610
6. Pendency of other proceedings	610
IV. Status of the grantee as affecting his right to attack the judgment	610
V. How the objection to the judgment must be made	611
VI. The sufficiency of the judgment pleaded, to support the action
a. Generally	611
b. Tort claims	613
Habeas corpus decree as to custody of infant as res judicata :—
I. Doctrine of res judicata generally applicable	783
II. Former judgment only conclusive upon same state of facts	784
III. Conclusiveness as to issues involved	787
IV. Parties or persons concluded	787
V. Foreign judgment as res judicata	788
VI. Dismissal of writ without decision or prejudice	788
Larceny.
Homicide in attempting to prevent	537
License.
Right of purchaser of burial lot as	120
Limitation of actions.
See JUDGMENT.
Logs.
Right to erect booms in river for sorting logs	839
Misdemeanor.
Homicide in attempting to prevent	536
Mistake.
Waiver of	705
Mortgage.
Of burial lot	122
Municipal corporations.
See HIGHWAYS.
Officers.
Homicide by	292
Payment.
See JUDGMENT.
Pleading.
Amendment of, to cure defect for which motion in arrest of judgment has been made	179
Railroads.
See CARRIERS.
Real property.
See FRAUD.
Robbery.
By taking from one person property belonging to another :—
I. Introduction	343
II. In general	344
III. Taking from wife or servant	346
IV. Conclusion	351
Homicide in attempting to prevent	534

Statutes.

Construction of constitutional limitations as to time for introduction of bills in legislative assemblies :—

- I. Text of constitutional provisions 965
- II. Presumptions respecting the regularity of legislative action 966
- III. Amendment and substitution of bills after expiration of constitutional limitation 967

Telegraphs.

Duty of telegraph company to notify sender of message if it cannot be promptly transmitted or delivered 153

Tolls.

Exaction of, under statute for improvement of water way 835

Trespass.

Person interfering with rights of owner
of burial lot 124
Homicide in attempting to prevent 538

Usury.

See JUDGMENT.

Waiver.

Of mistake or fraud of insurer or agent ;
by retention of policy 705

Waters.

Grant of water power :—

- I. Form ; estate created 369
- II. Successive and conflicting grants 372
- III. What rights conveyed
 - a. By general grants
 - 1. In general 375
 - 2. Construction of grant 378
 - 3. Exceptions and reservations 382
 - 4. Sufficiency of conveyance 383
 - b. Grant of flow of stream 384
 - c. Grant of dam 384

67 L. R. A.

Waters, III.—continued.

- d. Head and flow 386
- e. Races, channels, and flumes 386
- f. Right to convey ; rescission 388
- g. Other matters 389
- IV. Limitation of rights
 - a. As to use
 - 1. General rules 390
 - 2. Illustrations 391
 - b. As to premises 395
 - c. As to quantity 395
 - d. Improved machinery 396
 - e. As to time 397
- V. Protecting rights
 - a. By repairing works 397
 - b. By action 398
- VI. Measurement 399
- VII. Loss of rights 400
- VIII. Compensation 401
- IX. Covenants
 - a. In general 401
 - b. Runs with the land 402
 - c. Breach 404
 - d. Damages 405
- Right to improve navigability of stream :—
 - I. Extent and limits of the right 820
 - II. Right as between state and Federal governments 824
 - III. Character of improvement 827
 - IV. Improvement companies 828
 - V. Booming and sorting logs 839
 - VI. Interference with private rights 841
 - VII. Exercise of power of eminent domain 847
 - VIII. Public rights in improvement 848
 - IX. Use of surplus water 848
 - X. Other matters 849

Witnesses.

Effect of marrying a witness in order to prevent her from testifying :—

- I. Competency at common law 499
- II. Competency under statutory provisions 501

GENERAL INDEX

TO

OPINIONS, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

(Separate Index to Notes Precedes this.)

ACCIDENT INSURANCE.

See INSURANCE.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Acknowledgment; before disqualified officer; record of instrument so acknowledged as constructive notice. 851

ACTION OR SUIT.

1. An action to compel specific performance of a contract to convey real estate is one in personam. Silver Camp Min. Co. v. Dickert (Mont.) 940

2. The suit should be at law, and not in equity, where an insurer, who has paid part of the loss caused by a fire negligently set out, and been subrogated to the rights of the property owner, and the property owner, join in a suit to recover the entire loss caused by the negligence. Firemen's Fund Ins. Co. v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. (Or.) 161

3. Officers of a corporation who secure subscriptions to its stock by fraud are properly joined in an equitable suit against the corporation to enjoin collection of the amount unpaid, and to secure a return of what has been paid upon the subscription. Mack v. Latta (N. Y.) 126

4. An application for an injunction, filed jointly by a trading-stamp company and one or more merchants who are its customers, seeking to enjoin the collection of a tax imposed on the merchants under an ordinance requiring the payment of a tax by all persons furnishing trading stamps to their customers, is not bad for misjoinder of parties, although the trading-stamp company, having paid its tax, was not a necessary party. Hewin v. Atlanta (Ga.) 795

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Action; for rescission of subscriptions to corporate stock obtained by fraud of agent; 67 L. R. A.

right to join agent with corporation as party; effect of asking two inconsistent remedies. 127

For negligent injury; right to split so as to give two rights of action at law; without defendant's consent; action at law in name of assignor of part of cause of action set out in first cause of action, for his own benefit and that of assignee; right of insurer subrogated to rights of property owner to maintain action at law; right of insurer and insured to join in one action against wrongdoer; distinction between actions at law and suits in equity. 161

Right of sendee of telegram to maintain action for default. 320

Misjoinder of parties and causes. 798

Right of superintendents of county poor to sue and be sued. 966

By private individual to restrain nuisance. 983

AGREED CASE.

The exercise of the power of a trial court to permit parties to withdraw from written stipulations waiving a jury and submitting the cause upon an agreed statement of facts to the court rests in its discretion, and such power is properly exercised where the application is made before the court has decided the cause under the written submission, and the party applying has discovered other pertinent facts since the submission was entered into, which the other party declines to embrace in the agreed statement; and the fact that, by the exercise of due diligence, the omitted facts might have been discovered before the submission was entered into, does not deprive the court of the power to grant the application to withdraw. Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Redding (Fla.) 518

ANIMALS.

Negligence of Street Railroad in Killing Dog, see NEGLIGENCE.

ANNUITY.NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Annuity; effect to suspend power of alienation; assignability of; right to create trust to pay. 148

ANTI-TRUST LAW.NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Anti-trust law; constitutionality of. 905

APPEAL AND ERROR.Objections, exceptions, and record.

1. A supreme court which has arrested a judgment of conviction in a criminal case because of a fatal defect in the indictment as presented to it may, even after the close of the term, grant the state the opportunity to correct the record so as to show that the alleged defect did not exist, and proceed to hear the appeal upon the corrected record. State v. Marsh (N. C.) 179

2. A reviewing court cannot consider cases and statutes for the purpose of determining what is the law of another state by which the contract in suit is alleged to be governed, where they were not mentioned in the bill of exceptions, and it is apparent that they were not considered by the trial court. Cherry v. Sprague (Mass.) 33

Questions not raised below.

3. A motion for arrest of judgment for defect in the indictment in a criminal case may be made for the first time in the appellate court. State v. Marsh (N. C.) 179

Review.

4. The question whether a witness has such special knowledge or experience as to qualify him to give opinion evidence is a question of fact for the determination of the trial court, whose finding is not reviewable on writ of error if there be any legal evidence to support it. Burns v. Delaware & A. Teleg. & Teleph. Co. (N. J. Err. & App.) 956

5. The court of appeals cannot review the decision of the comptroller when based on sufficient evidence and affirmed by the appellate division of the supreme court as to the capital employed within the state upon which a corporation is subject to a franchise tax. People ex rel. Commercial Cable Co. v. Morgan (N. Y.) 960

6. A ruling that, because of its character, property alleged to be employed within the state by a corporation sought to be subjected to a franchise tax cannot in fact be made the basis of the assessment, presents a question of law reviewable by the court of appeals. Id.

07 L. R. A.

Ground for reversal.

7. When the penalty for violation of a statute or ordinance is left to the discretion of the trial judge, within certain fixed limits, his judgment will not be disturbed upon the ground that the sentence was excessive, if the penalty imposed does not exceed the limit provided. Fitts v. Atlanta (Ga.) 803

8. Errors without injury are not ground for reversal. Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Redding (Fla.) 518

9. The exclusion of general evidence as to the past life of one accused of murder and the condition of his father, offered as a foundation for the inference that he was suffering from delirium tremens at the time of the homicide, is not error if evidence is subsequently admitted showing his condition and habits within a reasonable time of the commission of the crime. State v. Quigley (R. I.) 322

Rehearing.

10. In a criminal case, if the accused has actually overlooked an error in the original submission which might have misled the jury in reaching their verdict, the court will correct it on rehearing. State v. Phillips (Iowa) 292

Judgment.

11. If a judgment in an equity case or an action at law tried by the court be reversed on appeal to the supreme court, and there is an unsolved question of fact that must be determined before final judgment can be rendered, and there are conflicting reasonable inferences as to how such issue should be solved, rendering it doubtful which way is the right of the matter, lest injustice may be done by the exercise of jurisdiction to decide the issue here as an original matter, the court will remand the cause to the trial court to determine such issue and then to apply the law to the case as directed. Bostwick v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. (Wis.) 705

12. An appellate court may, instead of reversing a judgment for damages in an action for tort in which the verdict is so excessive as to evince passion, prejudice, or caprice, require the prevailing party to remit the portion which it deems excessive upon penalty of a reversal for refusal to comply, and affirm the judgment for the smaller amount in case the plaintiff assents to it. Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Roberts (Tenn.) 495

Second appeal.

13. A decision on appeal that the possession of a note by the maker raises a presumption of payment does not preclude the raising upon a subsequent appeal of the question as to the legal effect of the indorsement and transfer of the note by the payee. Vann v. Edwards (N. C.) 461

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Appeal; what is final order or judgment for purpose of. 860

Right to take advantage, on appeal, of error apparent upon face of record; where no bill of exceptions has been reserved. 66

Amendment of record on, to cure defect for which motion in arrest of judgment has been made. 179

Right of appellate court to interfere with verdict. 496

APPROPRIATIONS.

See PUBLIC MONIES.

ARREST.

Killing of Person by Officer Attempting to Make Arrest, see HOMICIDE.
Mandamus to Compel, see MANDAMUS.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Arrest; when officer justified in striking or killing accused. 293

Liability of master for unlawful arrest by servant. 457

ASSAULT AND BATTERY.

Exemplary Damages, see DAMAGES, 11.

1. A property owner who, having removed from his premises an intoxicated person, strikes and injures a stranger who is attempting to enter the premises, under the belief, after exercising the highest care practicable under the circumstances to ascertain the facts, that it is the same person whom he has just ejected returning, is excused from liability for the assault on the ground of self-defense and apparent necessity, if belief in the identity of the persons is based on reasonable grounds, and, if, in the exercise of a reasonable judgment, he further believes that it is necessary to strike the ejected person to defend himself, and uses no more force than is, or appears to be, necessary for the purpose. Crabtree v. Dawson (Ky.) 565

2. To excuse a person for assaulting another under the belief that he is a third person, upon whom an assault would be justified, he must exercise the highest degree of care practicable under the circumstances to ascertain whether or not the person whom he is about to strike is in fact the one whom he believes him to be. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Assault; homicide in resisting. 532, 541
Mistaken identity as justification for. 565
67 L. R. A.

ASSIGNMENT.

Bank Check as Constituting an Assignment of the Funds, see CHECKS.

Estoppel to Question Validity of Assignment of Insurance Policy, see ESTOPPEL.

Of Insurance Policy, see INSURANCE.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Assignment; of choses in action; necessity of notice of, to person from whom debt is owing. 619

ASSUMPTION OF RISK.

See MASTER AND SERVANT.

ATTACHMENT.

See also GARNISHMENT, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

1. The proceeds of a judicial sale of lands, confirmed by the court, which are held subject to the immediate demand of the party entitled to them, are subject to attachment by his creditors in the hands of the clerk of court. Le Roy v. Jacobosky (N. C.) 977

2. An attachment by a creditor of a stockholder of stock which has been pledged and transferred by indorsement and delivery as security for the payment of a debt, but the transfer of which was not entered on the books of the corporation, is valid only against the interest of the assignor therein after the debt has been paid. Mapleton Bank v. Standrod (Idaho) 656

3. In the absence of fraud and statutory regulations, a creditor proceeding by execution or attachment obtains only such rights in the property seized as his debtor had at the time of the seizure. Lipscomb v. Condon (W. Va.) 670

4. An unregistered transfer of shares of corporation stock, for which no certificate has been issued, if made for a valuable consideration and without fraud, vests in the transferee a title to the shares superior to the claim of a subsequent attaching creditor of the transferor. Id.

5. In a proceeding by the creditor of a shareholder to subject his shares to the payment of his debt, the corporation in which the shares are held should be made the garnishee. Id.

6. Shares of corporation stock are included in the terms "personal property, choses in action, and other securities," as used in W. Va. Code 1899, chap. 106, § 9, giving the plaintiff in an attachment proceeding a lien on the personal property of the debtor from the time of the levying of the attachment, or serving a copy thereof on the garnishee, on all the personal property, choses in action, and other securities of the defendant in the hands of the garnishee, and on any real estate of the debtor levied on by virtue thereof, from the suing out of the same, Id.

7. Wages due by a corporation, which, although having its domicile of origin in one state, has acquired a domicile for business purposes by adoption in another one where its property is located, to a salesman whose services are rendered in still another state, where he resides, are subject to attachment for the debt of the salesman in favor of a creditor residing in the state of the latter's domicile at the adopted domicile of the corporation, under a statute providing that an action may be brought against a foreign corporation by a plaintiff not a resident of the state when the cause of action shall have arisen, or the subject of the action shall be situated, within the state. Goodwin v. Clayton (N. C.) 200

8. The debt owing by the garnishee to the principal debtor at the time of his appearance and answer, and not that due at the time of service of summons, may be applied in satisfaction of the claim of the attaching creditor, under a statute providing that judgment shall be entered for all sums of money due to the principal debtor from him. Id.

9. Taking personal judgment against the principal debtor and the garnishee does not waive the lien of the attachment, where the statute contemplates personal judgment against the garnishee, and the judgment against the principal debtor is void for lack of jurisdiction. Id.

10. A written transfer of a certificate of shares of stock in a corporation, made in good faith and for value, possession being taken thereof as a pledge for the payment of a private debt of the assignor, and the transfer of which is not entered on the proper book of the corporation, has preference over a subsequent attachment thereof in favor of a creditor of the assignor or transferrer of the stock. Mapleton Bank v. Standrod (Idaho) 656

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Attachment; statutory exemption of wages from; right of nonresident to claim benefit of; entry of personal judgment without order of sale or condemnation of attached property; as effecting dissolution of attachment. 222

Of shares of corporate stock; superiority over lien of prior pledge; where transfer to pledgee is not entered in books of corporation. 657

Of corporate stock; effect of pledge or other transfer not made in books of company. 656
67 L. R. A.

Effect of, as against prior bona fide purchaser of chattels; of shares of stock previously transferred; failure to enter transfer on books of company. 673

ATTORNEYS' FEES.

1. The provision for the recovery of attorneys' fees in certain cases against fire and life insurance companies, made by Fla. act approved June 2, 1893, chap. 4173, p. 101, is not repugnant to any provision of the state or Federal Constitution. L'Engle v. Scottish Union & N. Ins. Co. (Fla.) 581

2. An act authorizing the recovery of attorneys' fees in certain cases against insurance companies is constitutional. Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Redding (Fla.) 518

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Attorneys' fees; provision for, in promissory note. 36

Right to recover in insurance case. 584

BAGGAGE.

See CARRIERS, 9.

BANKRUPTCY.

See also JUDGMENT, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

A trustee in bankruptcy is entitled to maintain an action to set aside a conveyance alleged to be fraudulent as to a judgment creditor where the estate of the judgment debtor is in the bankrupt court, and the claim of the creditor has been filed. Schmitt v. Dahl (Minn.) 590

BANKS.

See also CHECKS.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Banks; check on open account as assignment of fund. 619

BAR.

Of Judgment, see JUDGMENT.

BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

See APPEAL AND ERROR, 2.

BILLS AND NOTES.

See also CHECKS; CONFLICT OF LAWS.

1. A third person placing his name on the back of a promissory note before delivery to the payee is an original promisor or maker, not entitled to demand or notice of nonpayment, and, as to him, no consideration need be proved. Cherry v. Sprague (Mass.) 33

2. The character of an instrument as a promissory note is not destroyed by the addition to the promise of payment of clauses providing for additional interest after maturity, and for payment of attorneys' fees in case suit is necessary to collection. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Bills and notes; effect on promissory note of "additional substantive agreement;" indefiniteness of amount; third person placing name on back as maker; what law governs when executed in one state and delivered to payee in another; presumption of consideration. 34

Indorsement by wife without consent of husband. 462

Proof of note not stating consideration; statement that consideration was goods sold and delivered, without setting forth date, items, and kind of goods. 595

Estoppel of person whose signature is forged to. 812

BREACH OF THE PEACE.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Breach of peace; homicide in attempting to prevent. 535

BURDEN OF PROOF.

See EVIDENCE.

BURGLARY.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Burglary; homicide in attempting to prevent. 534

BURIAL LOT.

See CEMETERIES, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

BUSINESS.

Right of Action for Injuries to, see CASE.

CANALS.

Practical Construction of Contract by Acts of Parties, see CONTRACTS, 10.

1. The opening of canals for dockage purposes, leading out of a navigable river, and maintaining them for a period of twenty years, selling lots abutting upon them, establish a prescriptive right to use the water of the river to fill them; so that the level of the water in the river cannot be drawn down for purposes of public drainage in such a manner as to impair the value of such canals for dockage purposes without making compensation, under a constitution requiring compensation to be made in case private property is taken or damaged for public purposes. Beidler v. Sanitary District (Ill.) 820

2. Canal commissioners who have contracted to permit a riparian owner to take water from its feeder in consideration of the right to take the water of the river to 67 L. R. A.

supply their canal will not be permitted to place weirs intended to restrict him to the quantity to which he is entitled, in such a manner as to deprive him of a portion of the water to which he is entitled under his contract. Merrifield v. Canal Commissioners (Ill.) 369

3. Under a contract giving the right to withdraw a certain quantity of water from a canal feeder, with the proviso that the water shall not be drawn so that "during the season of navigation" the water in the canal shall be reduced to less than a specified depth, the canal commissioners have no right to place weirs in the flumes by which the water is taken from the feeder, so as to maintain the water in the feeder, at all times, of a depth requisite to maintain the specified depth in the canal, even after the close of navigation, and at times when water from the feeder is not necessary to maintain the specified depth in the canal. Id.

CARRIERS.

Conflict of Laws as to Validity of Contract Limiting Liability, see CONFLICT OF LAWS, 6.

Presumption of Negligence, see EVIDENCE.

Reasonable Time for Consignee to Remove Freight, see TRIAL, 9.

Rates and discrimination.

1. A railroad company renders itself liable to the penalty provided by a statute for making unjust discrimination in rates for transportation over its road, not by making a contract for free transportation, but by actually transporting a person without charge or for an inadequate consideration. McNeill v. Durham & C. R. Co. (N. C.) 227

2. The giving of passes in consideration of the publication of railroad time-tables in a newspaper is within the prohibition of a statute making it unjust discrimination for a common carrier to receive from any person a greater or less compensation for transportation than is demanded or received from any other person by means of any special rate, rebate, drawback, or other device. Id.

Carriage of passengers.

3. Conditions on the back of a void pass are without effect upon the rights of the person who is attempting to use it for transportation. Id.

4. A person riding on the cars of a railroad company with its consent without any contract between him and the company may hold it liable for injuries inflicted upon him by the negligence of the company or its servants. Id.

5. The acceptance of free transportation, which a railroad company is prohibited, under penalty, from granting, does not deprive one of the character of a bona fide passenger, or the protection to which he is entitled as such. Id.

6. While interurban railroad companies are subject to the same regulations and have all the powers of street railroad companies, so far as applicable, the law of negligence governing the standing on a platform of a moving street car in a municipality is not applicable to the case of standing on such platform of a moving interurban car in the open country. Cincinnati, L. & A. Electric Street R. Co. v. Lohe (Ohio) 637

7. In a contract for safe carriage, there is an implied agreement that the passenger will obey the reasonable rules of the carrier; and where the passenger purposely violates such rule, and is thereby injured, he cannot recover damages from the carrier in an action on the contract. Id.

8. The law of negligence governing the standing on a platform of a moving interurban car outside of a municipality is the same as in the case of steam cars; and where a rule of the company prohibits passengers from standing on the platform, and notice thereof is properly posted, or where the passengers, upon request, refuse to enter the car, there being in either case vacant seats, they remain on the platform at their peril. Id.

Baggage.

9. Papers pertaining to the business of an insurance agent and belonging to his employer are not baggage, and therefore, in case they are placed in a trunk which is checked as baggage, an action cannot be maintained for the benefit of the employer for loss caused by delay in their transportation. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Blackmar (Miss.) 646

Carriage of freight.

10. A carrier must place freight carried on platform cars to a station where it maintains a freight house, but no agent, in the house, to relieve itself from liability for freight lost through theft, unless it shows that it is not able to do so. Normile v. Northern P. R. Co. (Wash.) 271

11. Written notice of the arrival of a consignment of freight need not be given to a consignee if he has actual notice thereof. Id.

12. Mailing notice of the arrival of the consignment of freight to the consignee at the place of its destination is sufficient. Id.

13. A consignee of freight loaded on a flat car which is placed on a side track at a station where no agent is maintained by the company is not guilty of laches when. 67 L. R. A.

after receiving notice of the arrival of the property and communicating with the agent having supervision of the station, insufficient time remains to effect a removal that day, so that his vehicle does not reach the car until the next morning. Id.

14. It is lawful for a carrier to limit, by special contract, his common-law liability, and he may thereby exempt himself from liability for any loss resulting otherwise than by the negligence or misfeasance of himself or his servants. Russell v. Erie R. Co. (N. J. Err. & App.) 433

15. A clause inserted without consideration in a carriage contract, fixing the damage, in case of loss of the goods, at their value at the place of shipment rather than of destination, is invalid. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Coolidge (Ark.) 555

16. The presentation of a shipping order signed by a storage company, to a railroad agent by a cartman sent to deliver goods for shipment, was notice to the railroad company that the authority of the cartman was in no sense discretionary, and there was no authority on his part to enter into a contract to exempt the railroad company from liability. Russell v. Erie R. Co. (N. J. Err. & App.) 433

17. The agent of a railroad company has no right to assume that a cartman has the authority to alter or modify the terms of the shipping order, where the owner of goods held in storage directed the storage company to send them to him by railroad, and an officer of the storage company sent the box containing the goods by the cartman to the railroad station, accompanied by a complete shipping order. Id.

18. Delay by the initial carrier in the transportation of goods at a season when weather conditions would naturally produce deterioration in their quality, which may have aided in causing the damaged condition in which they were delivered to the consignee, will render it liable for the loss, unless it shows that its delay did not produce the injury in whole or in part, although delay by a connecting carrier is also shown, which might have caused or contributed to the injury. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Coolidge (Ark.) 555

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Carriers; giving of free passes by; conditions on, exempting carrier from liability; validity; binding effect on holder. 227

Who are, 252

As insurer of property; duty to store goods in warehouse on arrival at destination; liability as carrier ceases when goods stored; sufficiency of delivery of goods on side track. 272

Of freight; statement of wrong value by shipper; estoppel to claim greater amount; who are common carriers of live stock; necessity of alleging and proving negligence to render carrier liable: contract limiting liability; what law governs; valuation clauses as limitation of common-law liability. 413

Right to limit liability; in absence of negligence; validity of such contract made with cartman of shipper; burden of proof to show shipper's consent; duty to ascertain extent of cartman's authority; charge for transportation based on stated value of goods. 434

Liability for loss due to vice or defect inherent in goods; presumption that injury to goods passing over lines of connecting carriers occurred while in hands of last carrier; validity of contract fixing value of goods in case of loss; sufficiency of consideration for relinquishment of common-law liability. 556

Is an interurban railroad company controlled by general railroad law in regard to operation of railroads as carriers of passengers? 637

Interurban electric road as; measure of care toward passenger; rules governing conduct of passengers; negligence in riding on platform; of steam car; of street car. 639

Delay in delivering baggage; what constitutes baggage. 647

CASE.

Statements that loan agents are inattentive and neglectful, and have been guilty of fraudulent conduct, for which their principal has taken the business from them, and that they are insolvent, made for the purpose of breaking them up in business and securing their custom, give them a right of action for the injuries thereby inflicted upon them. Brown v. American F. L. M. Co. (Tex.) 195

CEMETERIES.

Residuary Devise as Including Burial Lot, see WILLS, 16.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Cemeteries; nature of right of burial in churchyard. 119

Character of estate or property of owner in burial lot:—(I.) Introductory; (II.) easement; (III.) license; (IV.) devise; (V.) cemetery dedicated to a class; (VI.) when held in common; (VII.) right to mortgage; (VIII.) power of cemetery authorities; (IX.) trespass on lot owner's possession; 67 L. R. A.

(X.) ejectment; (XI.) effect upon, of legislative act or municipal ordinance closing cemetery. 118

CERTIORARI.

1. Points made in a petition for certiorari, not verified by the answer of the trial judge, present nothing for determination either by the superior or the supreme court. Fitts v. Atlanta (Ga.) 803

2. An assignment of error on petition for certiorari, that the trial court erred in overruling objections to the testimony of certain witnesses upon designated subjects, without setting forth, either literally or in substance, the testimony to which the objections were made, is not well taken. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Certiorari; petition for, after argument. 181

CHattel MORTGAGE.

See MORTGAGE.

CHECKS.

A check on an open bank account does not constitute an assignment of the fund, or take precedence of a subsequent attachment levied on the fund before the check is presented for payment or brought to the notice of the bank, if such presentment is not made, or notice given, within a reasonable time. Love v. Ardmore Stock Exchange (Ind. Terr.) 617

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Check; as assignment of open bank account. 619

CHOSE IN ACTION.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Chose in action; as property subject to tax; right to seize or sell on execution at common law. 201

CITIZENS.

Privileges and Immunities of, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

CODICIL.

See WILLS.

COLLATERAL ATTACK.

On Judgment, see JUDGMENT.

COLLUSION.

See JUDGMENT, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

COMBINATIONS.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Combinations; validity of; when tending to suppress competition or fix prices. 904

COMMON LAW.

1. The common law of England at the time of its adoption by Wyoming had no relation to the master's liability for injuries to his servants and decisions by the English courts subsequently rendered are not binding in determining the question of the liability of the master for injuries occurring within that state. Johnson v. Union P. Coal Co. (Utah) 506

2. The term "common law of England," as used in a statute adopting such law as a rule of decision in a state, does not include judicial decisions of English courts rendered subsequently to the independence of America. Id.

COMPLAINT.

See PLEADING.

CONDITIONAL SALE.

Validity of Insurance on Property, see INSURANCE, 22.

CONFLICT OF LAWS.

1. A promissory note payable in the state where the payee receives it through the mail is a contract of that state, and not of the one where the maker resides, and where the instrument was executed. Cherry v. Sprague (Mass.) 33

2. In the absence of proof as to the law of another state by which a contract is to be enforced, the common law, and not the statute law, of the state where the suit is brought, will be applied. Id.

3. The right to exemption from execution is subject to the law of the forum. Goodwin v. Claytor (N. C.) 209

4. A debtor cannot claim the benefit of the exemption law of the state of his domicile, even against his creditor residing there, with respect to a debt due him by a corporation, located and doing business in another state, which is also the situs of the debt, and which debt has been attached by the creditor at the domicile of the corporation. Id.

5. The courts of one state will not enforce the provisions of a contract made in another state as to the time in which actions shall be brought on it, which are contrary to the provisions of the local statute of limitations. Adams Exp. Co. v. Walker (Ky.) 412

6. In case of a breach of a carriage contract in a state whose Constitution prohibits the carrier from contracting to limit its common-law liability, the carrier cannot, in the courts of that state, have the benefit of a contract valid where made in another state limiting such liability. Id. 67 L. R. A.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Conflict of laws; how case determined when proper foreign law not proved:—(I.) Introduction; (II.) judicial cognizance of foreign law: (a) specific rules of law of other jurisdiction: (1) law of foreign country; (2) law of other state; (b) general system of law upon which foreign jurisprudence based; (III.) different theories as to proper practice: (a) in general; (b) jurisdiction with respect to which the presumption in favor of common law may be indulged; (c) conflict between presumption in favor of common law and presumption that law of other jurisdiction is same as that of forum; (d) application of lex fori without indulging any presumption; (e) refusal to apply any substantive law. 33

What law governs note executed in one state and delivered to payee in another; presumption as to law of other state. 34

As to carrier's contracts; limitation of liability. 413

As to validity of assignment of life insurance policy. 551

CONSCRIPTION.NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Conscription; validity of. 937

CONSIDERATION.

See CONTRACTS.

CONSPIRACY.NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Conspiracy; indictment for; not less than two can be joined in; to fix prices; right to indict, try, and convict separately one of two or more conspirators. 904

To destroy business of rival; as basis for right of action; necessity that means employed should be unlawful; not necessary to prove express agreement between conspirators. 195

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

Validity of Provision for Recovery of Attorneys' Fees, see ATTORNEYS' FEES.

See also STATUTES.

1. A statute which may constitutionally operate upon certain persons or in certain cases is not to be held unconstitutional merely because there may be persons to whom or cases in which it cannot constitutionally apply; but it is to be construed not to apply to such persons or cases. State v. Smiley (Kan.) 903

2. An ordinance declaring it unlawful to hold public meetings in the streets of a city without the consent of the municipal authorities is not unconstitutional, either because it curtails or restricts the liberty of speech, or makes an arbitrary discrimination in favor of some persons against others, or because the city has no legal power to enact it; nor is such ordinance void upon the ground that it is an unreasonable and oppressive exercise of police power. Fitts v. Atlanta (Ga.) 803

3. The legislature cannot assume the right to pass upon the question of the release of one committed to a hospital for criminal insane, and thereby deprive the courts of their jurisdiction to inquire into the legality of his restraint. Re Boyett (N. C.) 972

4. The Kansas anti-trust law of 1897 making unlawful any combination to create or carry out restrictions on trade or commerce, to control the prices of any article or commodity or the rates of insurance, or to prevent competition in the manufacture, transportation, sale, or purchase of merchandise, produce, or commodities, does not conflict with the guaranty of the Federal Constitution of the right to acquire property by lawful contract, and is a valid exercise of legislative power. State v. Smiley (Kan.) 903

5. A right, fully matured under existing law, to defeat a debt by a plea of the statute of limitations, is neither a vested right nor a property right, and may be taken away at will by the legislature. Orman v. Van Aredell (N. M.) 438

Equal protection of the laws.

6. The taxation by a state of debts due by solvent debtors is not forbidden by the clause of the amendment to the Federal Constitution forbidding any state to deny to any person the equal protection of the laws, although no tax is laid on debts due by insolvents. Kingsley v. Merrill (Wis.) 200

7. A state cannot forbid a nonresident landowner to take fish and game upon his property within the state while according such privilege to resident landowners, in view of the provisions of the Federal Constitution forbidding denial of the equal protection of laws, and the deprivation of property without due process of law. State v. Mallory (Ark.) 773

8. Exemption of minors and persons under guardianship from the penalty imposed by a statute for refusal to be vaccinated does not render the statute unconstitutional as working an inequality. Com. v. Pear (Mass.) 935

Privileges and immunities of citizens.

9. A statute making it a misdemeanor for one under contract to labor, or work land, to break his contract and enter into 67 L. R. A.

another with a different person, without the consent of his employer, and sufficient excuse, to be adjudged by the court, and without giving notice of his contract to the person with whom he makes the new one, violates the constitutional guaranties of life, liberty, and property, and abridges the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States. Toney v. State (Ala.) 286

10. Conferring power upon a municipal corporation to require licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors, within 4 miles of its corporate limits, does not deprive citizens of their constitutional property rights, or of the privileges and immunities protected by the Federal Constitution. Jourdan v. Evansville (Ind.) 613

Due process of law.

11. The legislature cannot empower the court, in its discretion, to authorize a married woman to convey her real estate by separate deed, in jurisdictions where the common law, giving the husband a freehold right in the property, is in force, since it would deprive him of his property without due process of law. Hubbard v. Hubbard (Vt.) 969

12. Empowering the court, in its discretion, to commit one acquitted of murder because of insanity to an asylum for treatment, from which he cannot be released without an act of the legislature, without notice to him or giving him an opportunity to be heard, or any provisions for investigation as to his present mental state, deprives him of his liberty without due process of law. Re Boyett (N. C.) 972

13. Opportunity for contesting in the ordinary courts of justice a charge imposed upon property where cigarettes are sold is sufficient to uphold the tax as against the owner of the property without notice to him of its assessment, although he may not be directly engaged in the business. Hodge v. Muscatine County (Iowa) 624

14. An assessment for construction of a sewer upon a strip of property fronting on the street, which is only 8 feet deep, at the same front-foot rate as is applied to full-sized lots, is so manifestly unequal and unjust that it violates the constitutional provisions against taking property without due process of law. Iowa Pipe & Tile Co. v. Callanan (Iowa) 408

Police power.

15. The police power does not warrant an arbitrary discrimination between individuals in regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors, although as between liquor selling and other callings less harmful to the public the former may be discriminated against. State ex rel. Galle v. New Orleans (La.) 70

16. The legislature may, in the exercise of its police power, authorize the health authorities of a municipal corporation to require, under penalty, all citizens to be vaccinated when, in their discretion, it is necessary for the public health and safety. Com. v. Pear (Mass.) 935

17. The constitutional requirement that police powers shall be wholesome and reasonable does not justify the court in setting aside a statute upon a subject in regard to which the legislature is authorized to act because the opinion of the judge differs from that of the legislators on the question whether it will be for the good and welfare of the state. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS,

See also INTOXICATING LIQUORS: STATUTES; TAXES.

Constitutional law; validity of statute making breach of contract by employee a misdemeanor. 286

Power of state to compel nonresident having property rights in state to sue in state courts only. 763

What constitutes "law of the land;" due process. 625

What constitutes "law of the land;" essential elements of due process; validity of statute permitting court to commit one acquitted of murder because of insanity, to asylum for treatment. 972

Police power; invasion of private rights by exercise of; what constitutes due process of law; validity of compulsory vaccination law; of quarantine; of conscription; of regulation of trades and callings. 936

Unconstitutional delegation of power; by authorizing city council to empower city police force to make rules for use of streets. 803

Delegation of police power to municipalities. 832

Taking of property without compensation. 825

Provisions of, not directory; constitutional limitations as to time for introduction of bills in legislature. 965

CONTINUANCE.

A refusal to continue a case against one who violated a municipal ordinance for the previously announced purpose of testing its constitutionality, merely to give his counsel time to investigate the constitutional questions claimed to be involved therein, is not error. Fitts v. Atlanta (Ga.) 803
67 L. R. A.

CONTRACTS.

Validity of Contract Limiting Liability, see CARRIERS, 14.

Between Corporation and Stockholders or Directors, see CORPORATIONS, 13-16.

Measure of Damages for Breach of, see DAMAGES, 4-8.

Parol Evidence Affecting, see EVIDENCE.

Fraud in Inducing Execution of, see FRAUD.

See also CONFLICT OF LAWS; INSURANCE; VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

1. One accepting free transportation which a railroad company is forbidden, under penalty, to grant, is not precluded, on the ground that he is in pari delicto, from holding the carrier liable to him for injuries due to its negligence, since he is not in pari delicto with a railroad company, and, if he is so with respect to the carriage contract, it does not extend to the negligence causing the injury. McNeill v. Durham & C. R. Co. (N. C.) 227

2. Mere ignorance of the contents of a paper, by one who becomes a party thereto under a mistake as to its import, will not enable him to avoid his act. Bostwick v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. (Wis.) 705

3. A mere request by one of the parties thereto for an alteration or modification of a fully accepted proposed contract, which by acceptance has been wrought into a binding contract, is not a breach thereof, giving right of rescission or action; neither does it effect such alteration, unless assented to by the other party. Turner v. McCormick (W. Va.) 853

4. A person who, in a business deal with another, signs a written instrument, is conclusively presumed, as to that other and all persons claiming under him through such instrument, to know the contents thereof, no fraud or deceit being used by such other or by anyone for whose conduct he is responsible, reasonably calculated to, and which does, induce such person to become a party to such instrument without reading it. Bostwick v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. (Wis.) 705

Consideration.

5. A lease with the affirmative covenants of the lessee is sufficient consideration for a contract giving him a right to purchase the property during the continuance of the lease, so that the option cannot be withdrawn by the lessor during that time. Frank v. Stratford-Handcock (Wyo.) 571

6. One who signed an option contract to convey land after the expiration of the option and without any consideration moving to him is not bound thereby. Le Roy v. Jacobosky (N. C.) 977

Validity.

7. A contract by a guardian to sell his wards' land in advance of legal authority is contrary to public policy and void. Id.

8. A contract by a patron of a telephone company not to engage service from a rival company is void as contrary to public policy. Gwynn v. Citizens' Teleph. Co. (S. C.) 111

9. A lease by a corporation, engaged in the business of generating and furnishing electricity for public and private use, to a rival corporation in the same city, for a period of ten years, of machinery and appliances used in generating electricity, by which it obligates itself not to engage in the business of furnishing electric light and power to public or private consumers in the city during said period, and not to dispose of any of its property, machinery, or appliances retained by it for producing or generating in such city electric light and power, is in contravention of public policy, and no action to recover rents can be maintained thereon by the lessor or its assignee. Keene Syndicate v. Wichita Gas, E. L. & P. Co. (Kan.) 61

Construction.

10. Maintenance for nearly forty years, with the knowledge and acquiescence of the canal commissioners, of flumes to take water from a canal feeder, under a contract by which the commissioners granted the right to take it, the bottoms of which are level with the bottom of the feeder, so that whenever the grantee was entitled to take water he would receive it under a head, is a practical construction of the rights of the parties which will prevent the commissioners from subsequently placing weirs in the flumes so that no water can be received until it has reached a certain height in the feeder. Merrifield v. Canal Commissioners (Ill.) 369

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Contracts; tending to suppress competition or fix prices; validity; liberty to contract. 904

In partial restraint of trade. 112

Effect of adding condition after acceptance of; effect of expression of dissatisfaction with terms. 853

Giving right to hunt or fish on one's land; as one within statute of frauds. 773

Lack of mutuality of right and obligation; effect of subsequent events or acts to obviate objection; right to repudiate one portion of, and enforce others; specific performance of; necessity of valid consideration; enforceability against other party of contract which one party is at liberty to revoke at any time; condition precedent; op- 97 L. R. A.

tion contracts; withdrawal of option; necessity of literal performance by party to whom offer made, to entitle him to demand performance by other. 571

Binding effect of written contract; right to rescind; duty to exercise within reasonable time. 713

Right to recover on illegal contract which has been executed; in partial restraint of trade; validity; between quasi-public corporations; as affecting commodity of common utility; refusal of courts to enforce void contract. 61

CONVENTIONS.

See VOTERS AND ELECTIONS.

CONVEYANCE.NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Conveyance; parol gift as. 461

CORPORATIONS.

Parties to Suit to Enjoin Collection of Subscriptions, see ACTION OR SUIT, 3.

Attachment of Stock by Creditor of Stockholder, see ATTACHMENT.

Attachment of Wages Due by Foreign Corporation, see ATTACHMENT, 7.

Execution against Shares of Stock, see LEVY AND SEIZURE.

Franchise Tax, see TAXES.

1. The books and papers of a private corporation under the laws of this state are not public, but private, records and documents. Lipscomb v. Condon (W. Va.) 670

Stock.

2. A certificate of stock is not the stock itself, but is evidence of its existence and ownership. Id.

3. Though, when issued, a certificate of stock is a muniment of title, it is not essential to the existence of the property represented by it. Id.

4. The rights of a creditor respecting shares of corporation stock for which certificates have not been issued, alleged to be the property of his debtor, are the same as in the case of an ordinary chose in action. Id.

5. The beneficial interest in shares of corporation stock is assignable by parol, the ownership passing immediately on consummation of the sale, by force of the contract, as in the case of ordinary choses in action, and not by operation of law. Id.

6. A sale of shares of stock for which no certificate has been issued may be evidenced by an informal written instrument, executed and delivered by the transferrer to the transferee, without a power of attorney entitling the latter to have the same transferred on the books of the company.

Id.

7. A shareholder may, upon his demand, obtain a certificate of his shares, but, unless demanded by him, it need not be issued; and he may freely transfer the shares without it if they are fully paid up, or security for the balance due on them, satisfactory to the board of directors, be given.

Id.

8. The requirement that corporations keep transfer books and that shares of stock be assigned therein is intended for the protection and convenience of the corporation and its shareholders, and does not affect the rights of one to whom shares are transferred without an entry in the transfer book.

Id.

9. Shares of stock in a corporation are personal estate and a species of incorporeal property.

Id.

10. A certificate is not necessary to a sale of shares of corporate stock.

Id.

11. That provision of Idaho Rev. Stat. § 2611, which provides that a transfer of stock, made by indorsement and delivery of the certificate, is not valid, except between the parties thereto, until the same is entered upon the books of the corporation, was not intended as a protection to creditors of a stockholder, but was intended to protect the corporation, its members, and its creditors. Mapleton Bank v. Standrod (Idaho) 656

Dividends.

12. On complaint of the minority stockholders, and on proper showing, the court will order the board of directors of a corporation to declare a dividend. Crichton v. Webb Press Co. (La.) 76

Transactions between corporation and stockholders, or directors.

13. Where the same five persons compose both the directorate and the body of the stockholders of a corporation, two of these persons cannot, by joining with a third, enter into contracts with the corporation, or fix their own salaries, or vote allowances to themselves, over the protest of their two other associates.

Id.

14. Equity will not permit the members of a corporation, whether as directors or as stockholders, to vote to themselves the money of the corporation over the protest of their associates.

Id.

15. Stockholders who undertake to discharge the functions of directors and conduct the affairs of the corporation become subject to the same trust relation which precludes directors from contracting with themselves to the detriment of the corporation.

Id.

16. On complaint of minority stockholders the court will intervene to protect their interests, where the majority of the stockholders of a corporation, who were also the sole managers of its business, have gone on, over the protest of the minority, and dealt with themselves; and the court cannot approve the basis upon which the business has been carried on, even though its intervention involves reforming the contract between the corporation and the majority of stockholders, or revising the basis for the apportionment of the profits of the business.

Id.

Foreign corporations.

17. A foreign corporation which has its principal place of business and the bulk of its property in a state with whose laws it has complied for the purpose of obtaining the privilege of doing business there, which subject it to the service of process there, is subject to the jurisdiction of the courts of that state in actions to collect debts due from it either to foreign or domestic creditors, so far as foreign creditors are permitted to maintain actions in the state. Goodwin v. Claytor (N. C.) 209

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Corporations; engaged in performing public duties; right to lease or alienate franchise or property. 62

Public or quasi public; right to discriminate in furnishing service. 251

Tax on franchise of; how computed; how value of capital stock determined for purpose of. 961

Right of directors or stockholders to fix amount of royalty on patents, to be paid them as individuals; right of majority to withhold profits earned, or to apply them to unauthorized use; stockholders' right to manage corporate affairs. 77

Validity of pledge or other transfer of stock of corporation when not made on books of company, as against attachments, executions, or subsequent transfers:—(I.) The elements of the problem; (II.) registry not necessary in absence of statute or by-law; (III.) statutes requiring transfer on books; (IV.) by-law requiring transfer on books; (V.) provision of certificate requiring transfer on books; (VI.) requirement of record with county clerk; (VII.) effect of effort to secure transfer; (VIII.) effect of notice to purchaser or creditor; (IX.) persons not entitled to benefit of statutes; (X.) estoppel of pledgee; (XI.) statutory recognition of transfers of certificates. 656

Attachment of shares of stock; superiority over lien of prior pledgee; where transfer to pledgee has not been entered on books of company. 657

Transfer of shares of stock in; attachment by debtor of transferer; effect of failure to enter transfer on books of company. 673

Foreign; when nonresident may sue; how residence of foreign corporation determined; situs of debts of; for purpose of garnishment; effect of statutes providing for service of process against, to give jurisdiction over. 214

CORPSE.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Corpse; right to custody and control of. 119

COURTS.

Encroachment by Legislature upon Judicial Power, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 3.

Jurisdiction to Issue Writs of Mandamus, see MANDAMUS.

Wrongful Removal of Records, see RECORDS.

1. Decisions of the English courts, rendered since the independence of America, are entitled to respect upon the question as to what the common law is, and in particular cases may properly be regarded as conclusive. Johnson v. Union P. Coal Co. (Utah) 506

2. In case actions between the same parties and involving the same subject-matter are brought in courts of co-ordinate jurisdiction, and one of the courts secures by proper process the custody or dominion which it is one of the objects of the suit in the other court to subject to its judgment, the latter action should not be dismissed but should be stayed until the proceedings in the court that first obtained jurisdiction of the property are concluded or ample time for their termination has elapsed. Re Barber Asphalt Pav. Co. (C. C. A. 8th C.) 761

Federal courts.

3. Wherever the citizens of a state may secure a trial of their controversies by its courts of general jurisdiction either by original process, or by appeal, or by other proceedings, the citizens of different states may obtain the trial of like controversies between them by some appropriate action in the Federal courts. Id.

4. The jurisdiction of the Federal courts may not be limited or impaired by state legislation which confers exclusive jurisdiction of litigation upon state courts or 67 L. R. A.

prescribes exclusive methods of invoking that jurisdiction. Id.

5. The pendency in a state court of a prior action between the same parties for the same cause furnishes no ground for an abatement or for a stay of proceedings in a subsequent action brought by the same plaintiff in a Federal court, where no conflict arises between the courts over the custody or dominion of specific property. Id.

6. A city charter which provides for appeals from the allowance or rejection of claims against that city to a certain state court, and prohibits the payment of such claims while such appeals are there pending, does not restrict the jurisdiction of the Federal courts over claims of citizens of other states, or the power of those courts to enforce their judgments upon such claims; and actions by original process in the Federal courts may be maintained in controversies over such claims without presenting them to the city council. Id.

Effect in Federal courts of state decisions.

7. The question whether or not an insurable interest in an assignee is requisite to the validity of the assignment of a policy of life insurance, which was originally issued to one who had an insurable interest, is a question of general law, upon which the decisions of the courts of the state in which the assignment was made are not controlling in the Federal courts. Gordon v. Ware Nat. Bank (C. C. A. 8th C.) 550.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Courts; judicial cognizance of foreign law. 33

Probate; jurisdiction of infant removed from state. 860

Refusal to enforce contract void as against public policy. 63

No power to enlarge scope of title of statute. 424

Right to review action of legislature in giving city jurisdiction to regulate sales of intoxicating liquors within 4 miles of corporate limits. 615

Duty to protect person against results of his own negligence; where injury has been intentionally inflicted by another through fraud. 719

Right of United States circuit court of appeals to issue mandamus in exercise of, and in aid of, appellate jurisdiction; duty of Federal court to hear case where suit involving same parties and subject-matter is pending in state court. 763

When adjudicated cases will be overruled. 462

COVENANT.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Covenants; in grant of water power. 369

CRIMINAL LAW.

Arrest of Judgment, Amendment of Record to Cure Defect, see APPEAL AND ERROR, 1.

Review of Discretion of Judge in Determining Amount of Penalty, see APPEAL AND ERROR, 7.

Burden of Proving Insanity as a Defense, see EVIDENCE, 11.

Mandamus to Compel Issuance of Bench Warrants, see MANDAMUS.
See also EXTRADITION; HABEAS CORPUS; NEW TRIAL.

1. One who proposes a scheme, and puts in motion the forces by which court records are removed from the files for the purpose of destroying them, is guilty as principal throughout the transaction, although the papers are actually removed by the district attorney under permission of a judge of the court, and placed in the custody of a public officer for delivery to the one who wishes them. People v. Mills (N. Y.) 131

2. Punishment by fine of not less than $25 nor more than $200, or by imprisonment in the city jail for not less than ten days nor more than sixty days, for violation of an ordinance prohibiting keepers of saloons, barrooms, etc., from permitting females to enter their places of business for immoral purposes, is not unreasonable or oppressive. State v. Nelson (Idaho). 808

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Criminal law; what necessary to constitute crime; effect of instigation or consent to crime, when given for purpose of discovering criminals; removing court records with consent of judge and district attorney; sufficiency of mere solicitation to commit crime to justify conviction for attempt. 134

Right to petition to rehear in criminal case. 180

Presumption of sanity of accused; burden of proof to show insanity; admissibility of evidence of hereditary insanity; sanity as essential element in crime of murder; acquittal required in case of reasonable doubt of sanity. 323

Civil liability for act criminal in its nature, but excusable under criminal law. 566

Necessity of alleging and proving intent where statute makes this an element of the crime. 904

Proving corpus delicti by admissions of 67 L. R. A.

accused; where there is corroboration by other evidence. 923

CUSTODY OF THE LAW.

Attachment of Proceeds of Judicial Sale, see ATTACHMENT, 1.

DAMAGES.

Judgment on Appeal Requiring Remission of Excessive Amount, see APPEAL AND ERROR, 12.

1. A clause in a statute making a railroad company liable for losses by fire set out by its engines, which gives it the benefit of any insurance on the property, applies only to cases where the liability is imposed by the statute, and not to those where it is liable because of its own negligence; so that in the latter case it is not entitled to the benefit of the insurance on the property. Dyer v. Main C. R. Co. (Me.) 416

Measure of damages.

2. Where riparian property has been injured by lowering the level of the water so as to interfere with access between the water and land, the measure of damages is the difference in value of the property before and after the injury was done, and not the cost of charges made to avoid the result of the change in conditions. Beidler v. Sanitary District (Ill.) 820

3. The measure of damages for failure to notify one who delivers a message to a telegraph company for transmission, advising the sendee to purchase certain stock, of the fact that it cannot be transmitted because of obstruction of the line, is the difference between what the stock could have been purchased for had the message been promptly sent and what was paid for the stock under the belief that the advice related to conditions at the time the message reached the sendee. Swan v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (C. C. A. 7th C.) 153

4. The general rule that the measure of damages in case of breach of an executory contract to sell and deliver goods is the difference between the market value thereof at the time and place of delivery and the contract price, with interest, does not apply where at the time of the breach the buyer could not have obtained like goods at the place of delivery, and in such case the damages recoverable are such as arise naturally from the breach, or such as may reasonably be supposed to have been in contemplation of both parties, at the time they made the contract, as the probable result of the breach of it. Vogt v. Shienebeck (Wis.) 756

5. The proper measure of damages for breach of an executory contract of sale and delivery, where at the time of the breach similar goods could not be obtained by the buyer at the place agreed upon for delivery but there was a market value for such goods at the point to which they were to be consigned, is the difference between the contract price and such value, less any expense which the buyer, if the contract had been performed, would have been put to in delivering the goods at such place, with interest on the residue at the legal rate, from the date of the breach. Id.

6. In an action to recover damages for the breach of an executory contract to sell and deliver goods, the general rule is that the difference between the market value thereof at the time and place of delivery, and the contract price, with interest from the time of the breach, is the true measure. Id.

7. The measure of damages for breach by an agent who signs a contract to convey his principal's land and so warrants his authority to make the contract, is what the other contracting party loses by reason of the false assertion of authority, or the amount of money paid out, or the value of services rendered, or the special damages sustained. Le Roy v. Jacobosky (N. C.) 977

8. The measure of damages for breach of a contract to convey real estate is the difference between the contract price and the market value of the property. Id.

Mitigation of damages.

9. The fact that a person other than the wrongdoer, as a mere gratuity, pays to one negligently injured a sum of money equal to the amount he would have earned had he been able to work during the period of disability, will not mitigate the damages due by the wrongdoer to the injured party for lost time, even though the person making the payment is the employer of the injured party. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Miller (Ga.) 87

10. That a telephone company has not the means to supply service to one applying for it may be shown in mitigation of damages for refusal to comply with its duty in that regard, but not in justification thereof. Gwynn v. Citizens' Teleph. Co. (S. C.) 111

Exemplary damages.

11. One who recklessly and wantonly strikes a stranger upon the pretext of defending himself against one with whom he has had an altercation is liable for exemplary, as well as compensatory, damages. Crabtree v. Dawson (Ky.) 565

12. Belief in the existence of a legal right to refuse telephone service to one applying for it, although erroneous, and refusal to furnish service for the purpose of protecting the rights of the telephone company, will 67 L. R. A.

prevent the imposition of punitive damages for such act. Gwynn v. Citizens' Teleph. Co. (S. C.) 111

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Damages; for inducing or encouraging servant to break contract; measure of. 67

Mitigation of damages for personal injury by fact that injured person has received from some source other than the wrongdoer money because of the injury:—(I.) In actions by injured person: (a) insurance money; (b) wages; (c) other gratuities; (II.) in actions for wrongful death: (a) property received from deceased; (b) insurance money; (c) pensions and subscriptions; (d) remarriage; (III.) payments made at instance of wrongdoer. 87

For personal injury: mitigation of, by fact that injured person has received money because of injury from one other than wrongdoer. 88

For delay in sending telegram. 155

For conspiracy to ruin plaintiff's business: right to recover for injury to reputation, as well as for damage to business. 196

For default in sending telegram; when too remote. 320

For failure to deliver telegraph message; mental suffering as element of. 986

For mistake in sending business telegram; right to consider lost profits. 481

Right to recover for act criminal in its nature, but excusable under criminal law. 566

Measure of, for injury by diversion of water; necessity of proving actual damages from diversion; right to damages for injuries resulting from proper exercise of police power. 831

DECLARATION.

See PLEADING.

DEMURRER.

See PLEADING.

DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION.

See WILLS.

DEVISE.

See WILLS.

DISCRIMINATION.

In Rates, see CARRIERS.

DIVIDENDS.

See CORPORATIONS.

DOGS.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Dogs; duty of driver of railway or street car to avoid injuring. 470

DRAINAGE COMPANIES.See WATERS.*DUE PROCESS OF LAW.See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.*EASEMENTS.*NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Easement; interest of owner in burial lot
as. 119

EJECTMENT.See also LIMITATIONS OF ACTIONS.*NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Ejectment; to obtain possession of burial
lot. 125

ELECTIONS.See VOTERS AND ELECTIONS.*ELECTRICAL USES AND APPLICATIONS.

A corporation which contracts to light a building by electricity undertakes to protect its occupants from injury by the electrical current, so far as it can do so, by exercising the highest degree of care, skill, and diligence in the construction and maintenance of its plant. Alexander v. Nanticoke Light Co. (Pa.) 475

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Electrical uses; measure of care required of company using electricity; when contracting to light building thereby; presumption of negligence where person attempting to turn on light is injured by escape of current; necessity of proving that injury was caused by negligence of company. 475

ELECTRICITY.

As to Judicial Notice that Electricity can be Safely Conducted and Used, see EVIDENCE, 8.

ELECTRIC LIGHTING COMPANY.

As to Injury to Pedestrian from Shattered Electric Light Globe, see HIGHWAYS.

Judicial Notice that Lights cannot be Located in Street without Authority of Municipality, see EVIDENCE, 5.

Presumption of Negligence where Injury is Caused by Escape of Current from Wire, see EVIDENCE, 15.

ELECTRIC RAILWAYS.See CARRIERS, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

67 L. R. A.

EMINENT DOMAIN.

Injunction to Restrain Public Improvement until Compensation is Paid, see INJUNCTION, 4.

Lowering the water of a navigable river by drawing it through a drainage ditch so as to obstruct ingress to and egress from abutting property is within a constitutional provision requiring compensation in case private property is damaged for public use, and liability for damages cannot be defeated on the ground that the act was an exercise of the police power for the promotion of the public health. Beidler v. Sanitary District (Ill.) 820

EQUAL PROTECTION OF LAWS.See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.*EQUITY.

Tender of a portion of the assessment for a local improvement is not a condition to equitable relief from an invalid assessment if there is nothing to show that some amount at least is due, but it appears that the entire assessment is illegal. Iowa Pipe & Tile Co. v. Callanan (Iowa) 408

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Equity; concurrent jurisdiction with courts of law; of suit to recover damages for having been induced by fraud to subscribe to corporate stock. 127

Jurisdiction to fix rent to be paid during renewal term of lease; where arbitrators provided for by contract fail to do so; right to restrain proceedings under landlord and tenant acts. 363

ESTATE.See REAL PROPERTY.*ESTOPPEL.Of Insured, see INSURANCE.

1. A policy of life insurance which was pledged by the insured to secure an indebtedness having been sold and the proceeds applied to the debt under order of court, in an action by the pledgee against the insured and his wife, the beneficiary, both of whom appeared and admitted the pledge and consented to the trial of the case, the administrator of the estate of the beneficiary is estopped to claim title to the policy on the ground that subsequent assignments of the policy were void because the immediate and remote assignees of the pledgee, who bought the policy on the sale, had no insurable interest in the life of the insured. Gordon v. Ware Nat. Bank (C. C. App. 8th C.) 550

2. He who is inexcusably negligent in a business transaction forfeits the right to judicial remedies for relief, and not because of any favor or indulgence which the law extends to the wrongdoer, but because of failure on the part of the injured person to exercise that care for his own protection which the policy of the law requires as a condition of its protection, such policy being to aid only those who exercise some reasonable care to guard their own interests. Bostwick v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. (Wis.) 705

3. Negligence of a person in not asserting his right as against another by whom he has been defrauded in a business transaction, is not a defense, strictly so called, to an action on the former's part for redress, but is evidence of submission to or waiver of the wrong, more or less strong according to the circumstances, and may be conclusive evidence thereof; or it may be so gross as to forfeit such person's right to judicial redress; or, in connection with some injury to the wrongdoer, it may operate to estop such person from claiming redress for the wrong first inflicted. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also JUDGMENT.

Estoppel; what necessary to constitute. 276

Of judgment; what covered by. 370

Of pledgee or transferee of stock to assert title against claims subsequently accruing; where pledge or transfer not entered on books of company. 683

By conduct induced by fraud. 714

Of person whose signature is forged on commercial paper. 812

EVIDENCE.

Review of Findings as to Qualifications of Expert Witness, see APPEAL AND ERROR, 4.

See also WITNESSES.

1. Proof of the signatures of nonresident parties to a contract who are alive may be made by one of the parties thereto. Le Roy v. Jacobosky (N. C.) 977

2. Upon prosecution of one for killing the brother of a woman, with whom he was maintaining improper relations, in an altercation about her, evidence is admissible to show such relation for the purpose of explaining the circumstances of the parties, illustrating their motives, and showing interest on the part of the woman, who has testified on behalf of defendant. Morrison v. Com. (Ky.) 529

3. The aggressor who kills his opponent in an altercation cannot show that decedent was a violent and dangerous man, and had made threats to kill him, which had been communicated to him. Id.

4. To justify a consideration of the man- 67 L. R. A.

ner in which a particular class of work is usually performed by other employers, in determining whether a particular employer was negligent in its performance, so as to be liable for injuries to a servant, it must be shown that the conditions under which the work is performed by the respective employers are similar. Johnson v. Union P. Coal Co. (Utah) 506

Judicial notice.

5. The court will take judicial notice of the fact that an electric lighting company could not locate lights in the street of a city without authority from the city to do so. Nelson v. Narragansett Electric Light Co. (R. I.) 116

6. Courts will not take judicial notice of the laws of another state. Adams Exp. v. Walker (Ky.) 412

7. Courts take judicial notice that, where one agrees to sell to another property "f. o. b. cars" at the place of shipment, such term means that the seller will, without expense or act of the buyer, deliver to the latter the subject of the sale on cars at such place. Vogt v. Shienebeck (Wis.) 756

8. That electricity can be safely conducted and used as an agent for production of light, heat, and power is a matter of judicial notice. Alexander v. Nanticoke Light Co. (Pa.) 475

9. Evidence as to what vaccination consists of is not admissible in a prosecution for refusal to obey an order of the board of health to be vaccinated, since it is a fact of common knowledge. Com. v. Pear (Mass.) 935

Presumptions and burden of proof.

10. In the absence of proof of the law of a sister state the presumption is that the common law is the same as the local law, but not that the statute law of the two states is the same. Cherry v. Sprague (Mass.) 33

11. The burden of proving insanity as a defense to a criminal prosecution is upon the accused; and it is not sufficient merely to raise a reasonable doubt as to sanity, but the evidence upon that point must preponderate in his favor, or be sufficient to satisfy the jury of the fact. State v. Quigley (R. I.) 322

12. Negligence on the part of the carrier will be presumed where three dogs are delivered to it for transportation securely crated, and but two reach their destination, without any account being given of the missing one. Adams Exp. Co. v. Walker (Ky.) 412

13. Negligence on the part of a railroad company will be presumed when fire is communicated by its engines to property abutting on its right of way. Dyer v. Maine C. R. Co. (Me.) 416

14. The presence of a signal torpedo upon the planking where a highway crosses a railroad track is not of itself evidence of negligence on the part of the railroad company in failing properly to care for the torpedo. Obertoni v. Boston & M. R. (Mass.) 422

15. Injury to a property owner whose building an electric lighting company has contracted to light by means of an equipment furnished by itself, by the escape of a current from the wires when he attempts to turn on light at a particular lamp, raises a presumption of negligence on the part of the company, and places the burden of rebutting the presumption upon it. Alexander v. Nanticoke Light Co. (Pa.) 475

16. Failure of a telegraph company to deliver a message properly addressed, which requests the sendee to meet a train to arrive on the night of the transmission of the message, until it is called for by the sendee at company's office on the following day, raises a presumption of negligence. Green v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (N. C.) 985

Parol evidence affecting writings.

17. The rule that where a written contract is made as a mere part execution of an entire verbal contract, that portion not embodied in the paper may be shown by parol, applies only where such portion is in itself a distinct, complete contract, not to mere stipulations in regard to, and varying the terms of, the written contract. Vogt v. Shienebeck (Wis.) 756

18. A contract having been reduced to writing, evidence of what occurred between the parties in respect thereto at the time thereof or prior thereto is inadmissible. Id.

19. If a written contract is ambiguous or obscure in its terms, so that the contractual intention of the parties cannot be understood from a mere inspection of the instrument, extrinsic evidence of the subject-matter of the contract, of the relations of the parties to each other, and of the facts and circumstances surrounding them when they entered into the contract, may be received to enable the court to make a proper interpretation of the instrument. L'Engle v. Scottish Union & N. Ins. Co. (Fla.) 581

Opinion evidence.

20. A question calling for the opinion of an expert witness upon a matter not in issue before a court is properly excluded. Johnson v. Union P. Coal Co. (Utah) 506

Admissibility under pleadings.

21. Under an allegation that, by reason of the character of the work and the conditions under which it is done, the letting down into a mine of cars loaded with rails was dangerous to employees, and resulted in an injury for which the action is brought, evidence is admissible to show the manner of doing the work, although it is not limited to the trip on which the accident occurred. Id.

22. An allegation in a petition that the plaintiff "has suffered and will continue to suffer great pain" is sufficient to authorize the admission of evidence that mental pain has been suffered. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Miller (Ga.) 87

Weight and sufficiency.

23. That the fender on the car which killed a dog was defective cannot be shown by evidence that witness had measured a fender on one of defendant's cars and found it to be too far from the ground, and that there were different kinds of fenders in use on different cars, without anything to show the condition of the fender on the car which did the injury. Moore v. Charlotte E. R. L. & P. Co. (N. C.) 470

24. The contention that the evidence does not show that the death of one insured against accident resulted from external, violent, and accidental means cannot prevail where it is alleged in the complaint and admitted by the answer that assured fell from cars and received injuries from which he died. Richards v. Travelers' Ins. Co. (S. D.) 175

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Evidence; presumption as to law of other state or country. 33

Presumption as to law of other state; presumption of consideration for note. 34

Presumption that plan for constructing street is safe. 254

In criminal prosecution; of hereditary insanity of father of accused; presumption of sanity. 323

Presumption of negligence where fire is set by sparks from engine. 417

Presumption of negligence from happening of accident. 475

Presumption that injury to goods passing over lines of several carriers occurred while in hands of final carrier. 556

In habeas corpus; to review extradition proceedings; burden of proving that valid indictment exists against relator; presumption as to governor's jurisdiction to issue warrant of removal. 947

Burden of proving assent by shipper to exemption of carrier from liability. 434

Burden of proof on telegraph company to explain delay in sending message. 155

Burden of proof to show alleged agency. 288

In action for killing dog by street car; that fender on car was defective. 470

Admissibility in evidence of communications made to persons serving in a judicial capacity. 923

EXECUTION.

See also LEVY AND SEIZURE.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Execution; on corporate stock; effect of pledge or other transfer not made in books of company. 656

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

See also WILLS.

Specific performance of a contract to sell property devised by will will not be decreed against the protest of the parties, where the result would be to defeat the intention of the testator as manifested in the will. Wool v. Fleetwood (N. C.) 444

EXEMPLARY DAMAGES.

See DAMAGES.

EXEMPTION.

Conflict of Laws as to Right to Exemption from Execution, see CONFLICT OF LAWS.

EXPLOSIVES.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Explosives; as "materials," in statute giving material man's lien. 488

EXTRADITION.

See also HABEAS CORPUS.

1. That one of the crimes for which an alleged fugitive from justice is indicted was committed after his departure from the state, and that in case he is returned to the state, he may be tried on that charge, do not remove him from the class of persons liable to rendition under the Federal Constitution, where the indictment also charges the commission of other crimes before the date of his departure. State ex rel. Munsey v. Clough (N. H.) 946

2. A finding that an accused is a fugitive from justice is not precluded by the fact that the indictment shows that the offenses were committed more than six years before the indictment was found. Id.

3. A governor's warrant for the arrest of a fugitive from justice is not void because it describes the offense as uttering forged wills, where the indictment in each count charged the uttering and publication as true of "a certain forged instrument purporting to be a will," where, by reference to the indictment, the meaning of the warrant is rendered plain and definite. Id.
67 L. R. A.

4. A clerical error in the affidavit of the clerk of court, to the effect that an indictment was found in 1892, does not preclude the governor from finding that it was in fact found in 1902, for the purpose of upholding a proceeding for the interstate rendition of one accused of crime. Id.

5. The addressing of the governor's warrant for the rendition of a fugitive from justice to a local officer, rather than to the agent of the demanding state, affords no reason for the discharge of the accused from custody, where the statute merely directs that the warrant shall authorize the agent to take and transport the fugitive out of the state without prescribing to whom it shall be addressed. Id.

6. One whose rendition is sought from a sister state as a fugitive from justice is not entitled, as matter of right, to a hearing before the governor upon the question whether or not he is such fugitive. Id.

7. A governor, in determining whether or not one whose rendition is demanded by a sister state is in fact a fugitive from justice, is not precluded from receiving evidence that fails to meet the requirements of legal proof. Id.

8. The governor's order directing the rendition of a person as a fugitive from justice is not nullified by the fact that he acted upon copies of affidavits showing that accused was a fugitive from justice, the originals of which were on file with the governor of the demanding state, rather than requiring the originals to be produced before him. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Extradition; right to review proceedings on habeas corpus, and to discharge where evidence not sufficient; sufficiency of warrant; effect of including nonextraditable offense in indictment; conclusiveness of action of governor in issuing warrant of removal; when refusal to comply with requisition is justified. 947

FEDERAL COURTS.

See COURTS.

FELLOW SERVANTS.

See MASTER AND SERVANT.

FIRE.

Caused by Sparks from Engine, see RAILROADS.

See also RAILROADS, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

FIRE INSURANCE.

See INSURANCE.

FISHERIES.NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Fisheries; right to fish in waters on one's own land; right of riparian owner on non-navigable river to fish to thread of stream; grant of right to fish in pond or stream, apart from land; right to fish as appurtenance to land on non-navigable water; compensation to riparian owner deprived of right; right of marine fishing. 773

FIXTURES.

1. What is a reasonable time for the removal of fixtures after the termination of a lease permitting their removal is to be determined from all the facts and circumstances of the case. Garlan v. Hickman (W. Va.) 694

2. Under a lease for oil and gas purposes, by which it is agreed that the lessees shall have the privilege at any time to remove therefrom all machinery and fixtures placed on said premises, machinery and other appliances placed on the property by the lessees and necessary for the prosecution of that work do not become parts of the freehold, and, upon forfeiture of the lease for non-payment of rental, the lessees, or the owners of the machinery and fixtures, have a reasonable time after the termination of the lease in which to remove the property from the land. Id.

3. The insertion in a renewal lease of a clause giving the tenant the right to remove trade fixtures is not necessary to enable him to remove, before the termination of the extended period, fixtures which he might have removed before the expiration of the original term. Radey v. McCurdy (Pa.) 359

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Fixtures; what are trade fixtures; right of tenant to remove; when right may be exercised; making renewal lease without reserving right to remove fixtures. 359

What constitute; trade fixtures; right of tenant to remove after termination of lease; where lease stipulated that tenant should have right to remove fixtures at any time. 694

FOREIGN CORPORATIONS.

See CORPORATIONS.

FOREIGN LAWS.

Judicial Notice as to, see EVIDENCE, 6.
Presumption as to, see EVIDENCE, 10.

FORFEITURE.NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Forfeitures; not favored in law.

277, 577, 584

67 L. R. A.

FORGERY.

See JUDGMENT, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

FORMER RECOVERY.

See JUDGMENT.

FRANCHISE TAX.

See TAXES.

FRAUD AND FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES.

Suit by Trustee in Bankruptcy to Set Aside Conveyance, see BANKRUPTCY.

1. If a person, by the fraud of another, or of someone for whose conduct he is responsible, becomes a party to a written instrument without reading it or personally knowing the contents thereof, he is not precluded thereby from obtaining judicial redress, in some form of action, for any injury which may be thereby caused to him through such instrument not being what he supposed it to be. Bostwick v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. (Wis.) 705

2. The existence of a cause of action at law to recover the consideration parted with upon a contract, on the ground of fraud, presupposes the actual termination of the contract because of the fraud, and that requires a repudiation of such contract by the insured person in toto, or so far as justice may require, and an unconditional offer on his part, so far as justice may require, to restore the wrongdoer to his former situation, or a waiver of such offer by such conduct on the latter's part as clearly to indicate that a tender to him of that which he parted with in the transaction would be useless because he would not accept it. Id.

3. The doctrine that a person is not inexcusably negligent in signing a paper in a business transaction with another, relying upon positive false statements on the part of that other, or of someone for whose conduct he is responsible, as to its import, applies only where the deceit is practised at the time, and in the transaction, of such signing. Id.

4. If a person, in a business transaction with another, is deceived by the latter to his injury, such person may rescind the transaction within a reasonable time after he discovers, or has reasonable opportunity to discover, the fraud, constructive knowledge thereof being just as effective as actual knowledge to set the time for rescission running and to mark its limits. Id.

5. In an action by a judgment creditor to set aside as fraudulent a conveyance of property made prior to the entry of the judgment, it is necessary to prove that the claim upon which the judgment is based existed prior to the time of the conveyance, and the judgment itself does not prove such facts.

but it is not required to establish the fact that the claim was lawful. Schmitt v. Dahl (Minn.) 590

6. A defrauded creditor may cause property fraudulently transferred to be sold on execution against a fraudulent grantor, and then maintain ejectment to recover the possession of the same, but can recover only upon establishing that the transfer was in fact fraudulent as to him. Brasie v. Minneapolis Brewing Co. (Minn.) 865

7. The title of a fraudulent grantee is protected by the statute of limitations, and, unless defrauded creditors effect a cancellation thereof in some appropriate action brought within six years from the discovery of the fraud, his title becomes absolute and unassailable. Id.

8. The legal title to property alleged to have been transferred with intent to hinder, delay, and defraud creditors is in the fraudulent grantee, the fraudulent character of the transfer not appearing upon its face; and the title continues in such grantee, notwithstanding a sale of the property by a creditor on execution against the grantor, until the fraud is exposed, and the transfer set aside in some judicial proceeding. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Fraud; of person assuming to give information to other, in concealing facts; of promoters of corporation in securing subscriptions; statements of opinion in bad faith; right of action where person making statements derived no benefit from them; necessity that damages result, to sustain action. 126

Attack by alleged fraudulent grantee on judgment on which action to set aside his conveyance is based. 590

Alleged fraudulent conveyance; action to set aside by judgment creditor; necessity of showing that debt antedated conveyance; action to set aside by trustee in bankruptcy; on what ground alleged fraudulent grantee may attack judgment; false representations as to land. 591

No presumption of; necessity of proving. 674

Waiver of. 705

Misrepresentations by seller; duty of buyer to make inquiry as to truthfulness; fraud in delivering insurance policy different from one agreed upon; right of insured to rescind for. 717

Effect on legal title of a conveyance of land in fraud of creditors:—(I.) Scope of note; (II.) as to creditors: (a) conveyance executed by debtor; (b) land purchased and paid for by debtor, but conveyed to another; (III.) title of fraudulent grantee as 67 L. R. A.

to parties not creditors; (IV.) title of bona fide purchaser from fraudulent grantee; (V.) title conveyed by bona fide purchaser to one having knowledge of the fraud; (VI.) when title is in fraudulent grantee as to his creditors; (VII.) rights of purchaser other than judgment creditor at execution sale; (VIII.) conclusion. 865

Fraudulent conveyance; remedies of judgment creditor seeking relief from; conveyance not void, but voidable; effect on legal title. 867

FREIGHT.

See CARRIERS.

FREIGHT HOUSE.

See CARRIERS.

FUGITIVE FROM JUSTICE.

See EXTRADITION.

GAME LAWS.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Game laws; right to regulate taking of fish and game on one's own land; discrimination against nonresidents. 773

GARNISHMENT.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Garnishment; where debt garnishable:—(I.) Domicil of garnishing creditor; (II.) domicil of debtor; (III.) state, other than his domicil, where debtor temporarily present; (IV.) state where foreign corporation engaged in business; (V.) conflict of jurisdiction; (VI.) exemptions. 209

Situs of debt for purpose of; in case of debt of foreign corporation; plaintiffs subrogated to position of principal debtor; exemption of wages from; right to waive; garnishee liable only for amount due at time of service of writ. 213

GIFT.

By Wife, Necessity of Consent of Husband, see HUSBAND AND WIFE.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Parol gift as conveyance. 461

GRAND JURY.

A grand jury which has been adjourned to the next term of court "unless sooner called by the court" may be recalled for the purpose of considering other cases before the termination of the existing term, although the statute provides that the jury shall, on completion of its business, be discharged. State v. Phillips (Iowa) 292

GRANT.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Grant; of water power. 369

GUARDIAN AND WARD.

As to Person Entitled to Custody of Infants, see INFANTS.

Validity of Contract Authorizing Sale by Guardian in Advance of Legal Authority, see CONTRACTS, 7.

1. A guardian who is tenant in common of certain real estate with his wards is not personally liable as upon his own contract for breach of a contract to convey their interest, made without authority, where, in contracting to sell the whole tract, he signs the contract to convey personally, and also as guardian for the wards. Le Roy v. Jacobosky (N. C.) 977

2. A guardian appointed for an infant by a court in one state will not, on the ground of comity, be given custody of the child against its best interests by the courts of another state into which the child has been taken, although the child was removed from the state where the guardian was appointed contemporaneously with, and possibly for the purpose of escaping the effect of proceedings for, the guardian's appointment. Jones v. Bowman (Wyo.) 860

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Guardian and ward; right of guardian to custody of ward; when appointed in state from which infant has been previously taken. 860

HABEAS CORPUS.

1. Failure of the governor's warrant, for the arrest and rendition of an alleged fugitive from justice, to state that the person whose arrest is directed is a fugitive from justice, does not require his release in habeas corpus proceedings, where the written evidence required by law for the issuance of the warrant is before the court, and is legally sufficient to support a finding of such fact. State ex rel. Munsey v. Clough (N. H.) 946

2. The finding of the governor that an alleged fugitive from justice is such, and should be returned to the state from which he fled, is subject to review by the courts in a habeas corpus proceeding to obtain his release from custody under the governor's warrant. Id.

3. An unreversed judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction in a habeas corpus proceeding for the custody of a child is, while the facts are unchanged, binding upon the parties, and will bar independent proceedings in another court, even though it be one of higher jurisdiction. Cormack v. Marshall (Ill.) 787

4. The sufficiency of the evidence before a grand jury to warrant an indictment cannot be inquired into by habeas corpus proceedings. 67 L. R. A.

ceedings to obtain the release of accused from custody consequent upon the indictment, and it is immaterial that, by statute, the evidence offered before the grand jury may be taken down and a copy of it delivered to the accused, so that the proceedings before that body are no longer incapable of proof. Re Kennedy (Cal.) 406

5. The judgment of a court in a proceeding in habeas corpus with regard to the custody of a child will not prevent another court from afterwards making a different order, where the welfare of the child requires it, even though no material change of circumstances is shown. Re King (Kan.) 783

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Habeas corpus; in case involving custody of children; right of successive applications for writ; decree as res judicata. 783, 787

Determination of proceedings as final order upon which appeal may be predicated. 860

Review of extradition proceedings by: right to discharge if charge of "fleeing" is not sustained by record evidence. 947

HEALTH.

Protection of, as a Proper Exercise of Police Power, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 16.

1. The testimony of experts that the effects of vaccination are injurious and dangerous does not, in view of facts of history, warrant a court in holding a statute requiring citizens to be vaccinated unconstitutional. Com. v. Pear (Mass.) 935

2. The views of an individual do not entitle him to be exempted from the operation of an order of the board of health requiring the vaccination of all citizens of the municipality. Id.

3. The theoretical possibility of an injury from vaccination in an individual case does not show that a statute requiring the vaccination of all citizens is unreasonable. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Health; validity of compulsory vaccination law; of quarantine. 936

HIGHWAYS.

Constitutionality of Ordinance Forbidding Public Meetings in Streets, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 2.

Judicial Notice that Lights Cannot be Located in Street without Authority of Municipality, see EVIDENCE, 5.

1. The owner of the fee of a country highway may remove gravel from a gravel bed within the limits thereof where this causes no injury to the highway and the gravel is not required for grading or improving the same. Glencoe v. Reed (Minn.) 901

2. That a defect in a street is part of the original plan of construction does not relieve the city from liability for injuries to travelers, caused by it. Stone v. Seattle (Wash.) 253

3. The location of an electric light in a street at the place designated by the proper municipal authorities is not wrongful as against pedestrians, so as to render its owner liable to such a person injured by glass falling from the globe when shattered by a trolley pole leaving the wire. Nelson v. Narragansett Electric Light Co. (R. I.) 116

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Highways; municipal liability for defective plan of street construction as distinguished from other defects:—(I.) General principles; (II.) plan must be formally adopted; (III.) injury to property rights: (a) interference with rights in street; (b) interference with streams; (c) injury by surface water; (d) the Missouri cases; (IV.) injury to travelers: (a) defective streets; (b) defective walks; (c) defective bridges; (a) courts denying liability. 253

Defect in, from failure to repair; liability of municipality for injury caused by; injury by defect in original plan of construction; negligence in following proper plan. 254

Change of grade; recovery of damages for; what necessary to justify; injunction to restrain change until damages are paid; in favor of one not an abutting owner. 363

Right of owner of fee to remove gravel from. 901

HOMESTEAD.

Merely raising a few vegetables on a vacant lot is not such occupancy as entitles one entirely insolvent, without ability sufficient to earn her own support, and without any prospect of getting money to erect a building thereon, to hold the land indefinitely as a homestead. Ware v. Hall (Mich.) 313

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Homestead; what constitutes; liberal construction of homestead laws; effect of absence to destroy; what occupancy necessary to constitute. 314

HOMICIDE.

Admissibility of Evidence in Prosecution for, see EVIDENCE.

1. A man is not entitled to champion the cause of a woman with whom he is maintaining improper relations, and defend her against the simple assaults of her brother, 47 L. R. A.

so as to give him the benefit of the rule of self-defense in case he kills the brother during the altercation. Morrison v. Com. (Ky.) 529

2. An officer cannot be convicted of murder for killing a person whom he is attempting to arrest for misdemeanor by striking him on the head with a billy, if he uses no more force than is necessary in case of an ordinary person, although it proved fatal in the particular case because of the thinness of the prisoner's skull, of which the officer had no knowledge. State v. Phillips (Iowa) 292

3. Proof of absolute necessity is not necessary to justify an officer in killing a person whom he is attempting to arrest for misdemeanor, where the statute requires him to employ no more force in effecting the arrest than to him, acting as an ordinarily prudent person would, under the circumstances, seem reasonably and apparently necessary to effect the result. Id.

4. A person having been shot and wounded with a shot gun by one on trial for murder, and by another person using a pistol, one of the pistol wounds being certainly mortal and probably one or more of the inflicted by the shot gun being so, accused cannot be convicted of murder unless the evidence shows that the wounds inflicted by him were the immediate cause of death. Walker v. State (Ga.) 426

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Homicide; necessity of sanity of accused to justify conviction. 323

By official action or by officers of justice:—(I.) Scope; (II.) homicide by authority of law or under official direction: (a) in execution of death sentence; (b) in discharge of ordinary official duty; (c) in the discharge of military duty; (III.) effect of official character and action in case of arrest; (IV.) general rules as to use of force in making arrest: (a) in case of felony; (b) in case of misdemeanor; (V.) checking flight: (a) in case of felony; (b) in case of misdemeanor; (VI.) meeting actual physical resistance; (VII.) preventing escape or rescue: (a) in case of felony; (b) in case of misdemeanor; (VIII.) recapture: (a) generally; (b) of escaped convicts; (IX.) limitation as to force which may be used: (a) general rules; (b) self-defense as a test; (c) when use of deadly weapon is justified; (d) appearance as a test of the right of self-defense; (e) necessity a question for the jury; (X.) effect of question of legality or propriety of officer's action: (a) general rule as to illegal action; (b) action without a warrant; (c) action outside of territorial jurisdiction; (d) negligent action; (e) malicious action; (f) notice of character and purpose; (g) further authority; (XI.) action by deputy or assistant; (XII.) conclusion. 292

Resulting from injuries by different persons acting independently:—(I.) Scope; (II.) responsibility when joint; (III.) individual responsibility: (a) the general rule; (b) for act nearest to time of death; (c) for first or prior act: (1) generally; (2) when act contributes to death; (IV.) proof; (V.) summary. 426

To prevent criminal or unlawful acts:—(I.) Scope and nature; (II.) forcible felonies and crimes: (a) general rules as to; (b) justification limited to necessity; (c) apparent, as distinguished from real, danger as necessity; (III.) application of rules to particular acts: (a) attempts to kill or seriously injure: (1) upon the slayer; (2) upon others; (b) robbery or burglary; (c) breaches of the peace; (IV.) misdemeanors, crimes without force, and trespasses: (a) general rules as to misdemeanors and secret crimes; (b) larceny; (c) trespass on property: (1) general rules; (2) personalty; (3) realty; (V.) attack in, or trespass or assault on, dwelling: (a) personal attack in; (b) defense against entrance; (c) expulsion; (d) who may defend, and against whom; (e) what constitutes dwelling or castle; (VI.) defense of family and relations; (VII.) prevention as distinguished from punishment; (VIII.) the question of degree; (IX.) summary. 529

HUSBAND AND WIFE.

Wife's Conveyance of Property by Separate Deed as Depriving Husband of Property without Due Process of Law, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 11.

Wife as Witness, see WITNESSES.

1. A parol gift of a note is not within the meaning of a constitutional provision requiring a man's written consent to make valid his wife's "conveyance" of her property, since the word "conveyance" has reference to the transfer of such property as must be transferred by written instruments. Vann v. Edwards (N. C.) 461

2. The right to free alienation by a married woman of her property, except as expressly restricted, is conferred by a constitutional provision vesting in her a sole and separate estate in her property with power to devise and bequeath it, and, "with the written consent of her husband," convey it as if she were unmarried; so that the restriction must be limited to technical conveyances such as are required to be in writing. Id.

67 L. R. A.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Husband and wife; effect of marrying witness in order to prevent her from testifying. 499

Right of legislature to empower court to authorize married woman to convey her real estate by separate deed; in jurisdiction where common law is in force. 969

ILLEGALITY.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Illegality; interference with person's right to carry on lawful business; as basis of right of action for damages. 190

INCOMPETENT PERSONS.

See also INSANE PERSONS.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Incompetent persons; responsibility for crime committed. 323

Right to commit to asylum without judicial inquiry into sanity and notice; no right to detain person not actually insane; habeas corpus to obtain release from asylum; statute permitting commitment to asylum without right to institute proceedings for release. 972

INDICTMENT, INFORMATION, AND COMPLAINT.

See also GRAND JURY.

1. A joinder in one indictment of several counts charging distinct offenses will not prevent the rendition of accused as a fugitive from justice,—at least if, under the laws of the state where the indictment was found, it was sufficient to support a conviction under one of the counts. State ex rel. Munsey v. Clough (N. H.) 946

2. The omission from an indictment for rape of the words "against her will," or their equivalent, renders the indictment factually defective. State v. Marsh (N. C.) 179

3. The ownership of money in a cash drawer, of which a clerk has possession with the right to make change therefrom and place receipts from sales therein, may be laid in such clerk as against one who, in the absence of the proprietor, by exhibiting a deadly weapon, compels the clerk to permit him to take the money from the drawer, although the clerk claims no personal interest in the money, and is not held accountable for its loss, where the statutes permit an indictment for robbery for taking money from the clerk or agent. State v. Montgomery (Mo.) 343

4. Failure to verify an information for robbery is waived if no objection is made on that ground. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Indictment; containing accusations of several felonies; sufficiency in extradition proceedings. 948

INFANTS.

As to Liability for Furnishing Liquor to Minors, see INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

See also GUARDIAN AND WARD.

1. Religious belief will not, in the absence of statutory requirement, be taken into consideration in determining the proper custodian for an infant. Jones v. Bowman (Wyo.) 860

2. In determining the question of the proper custody of an infant, that disposal should be made, if possible, which will keep the family together. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Infants; habeas corpus decree as to custody of, as res judicata. 783, 787

Custody of; how determined; jurisdiction of probate court over; right of guardian appointed in one state to recover custody of infant taken to another state. 860

INJUNCTION.

Parties to Suit, see ACTION OR SUIT, 3, 4.

1. Persons against whom an unlawful exaction in the form of a tax is sought to be made may unite in an application for an injunction to restrain the collection of the tax, and are not compelled to pay the same and bring separate suits against the tax officer for damages. Hewin v. Atlanta (Ga.) 795

2. Equity will not enjoin the blowing of a whistle at a factory, where it is not satisfied that it amounts to a nuisance, until the fact of nuisance has been established by action at law. Read v. Edna Cotton Mills (N. C.) 983

3. Equity may enjoin proceedings at law under statutes giving a summary remedy for obtaining possession of property under lease, where the lessee has an equitable right to a continuance of possession, and where the remedy at law is not adequate to determine the rights of the parties. Kaufmann v. Liggett (Pa.) 353

4. Injunction will not lie, under a constitutional provision requiring compensation in case property is damaged for public use, to stay the improvement of a public street, according to a grade lawfully adopted by the municipal corporation, until the damages are paid to the complaining property owner, whether the property abuts upon the street or not, where none of it is taken, 67 L. R. A.

but it is merely subjected to consequential injuries; his sole remedy being at law to recover the damages, after the improvement is completed and they can be ascertained. Clemens v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. (Mo.) 362

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Injunction; to restrain proceedings under the landlord and tenant acts. 353

To restrain change of grade of highway until damages therefor are paid. 363

To restrain enforcement of municipal ordinance. 798

To restrain noises. 983

INSANE PERSONS.

Deprivation of Liberty without Due Process of Law, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 12.

Burden of Proving Insanity as a Defense, see EVIDENCE, 11.

If the evidence indicates that one committed to an asylum for the insane under an invalid statute is actually insane, the court should not order his discharge, but should direct his detention for a reasonable time until proceedings can be taken for his commitment in a proper manner. Re Boyett (N. C.) 972

INSTRUCTIONS.

See TRIAL.

INSURANCE.

Nature of Action by Insurer and Property Owner against Person Negligently causing Fire, see ACTION OR SUIT, 2.

Validity of Statutory Provision for Recovery of Attorneys' Fees, see ATTORNEYS' FEES.

Right of Railroad Company to Benefit of Insurance on Property Destroyed by its Negligence, see DAMAGES, 1.

Estoppel to Question Validity of Assignment of Policy, see ESTOPPEL.

1. A statute requiring an insurer to fix the insurable value of the property insured and to state such value in the policy, the measure of damages in case of total loss to be the amount so fixed, and in case of partial loss, such proportion of the amount upon which premiums are paid as the damage sustained is of the insurable value as fixed by the agent, and providing that the insurer shall be estopped to deny that the property insured was worth at the time of insuring the amount so fixed, and that the agent soliciting the insurance shall be held the agent of the insurer,—is not repugnant to either the state or Federal Constitution. Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Redding (Fla.) 518

2. A statute requiring an insurer to state on the policy the insurable value of the property insured, which shall be the measure of damages in case of loss, and providing that the insurer shall be estopped to deny that the property was worth at the time of insuring the amount so fixed and that the agent soliciting the insurance shall be held to be the agent of the insurer,—does not deprive the insurer of the right to plead that the fire was caused by the criminal conduct of insured or that the insured by fraud procured the insurable value to be fixed at an excessive amount. Id.

3. Other concurrent insurance to the amount of $2,500 is permitted by an indorsement slip containing a description of the property insured, with the amount of insurance thereon and the clause: "Two thousand five hundred total concurrent insurance permitted," bearing the same date as, and attached to, a policy of insurance for $2,500 on two buildings, which contained a clause providing that the entire policy unless otherwise provided by agreement indorsed on the policy or added thereto, should be void if the insured had or thereafter procured any other contract of insurance, whether valid or not, on the property covered by the policy; notwithstanding another indorsement slip stating the insurable value of the property to be $2,500, this being attached in compliance with Fla. act May 31, 1899, chap. 4677, p. 33, requiring the insurable value to be fixed by the insurer and written in the policy, as the measure of damages in case of loss. L'Engle v. Scottish Union & N. Ins. Co. (Fla.) 581

Insurable interest.

4. A creditor has an insurable interest in the life of his debtor, and the issue or pledge of a policy upon his life as collateral security for the payment of his debt is valid. Gordon v. Ware Nat. Bank (C. C. A. 8th C.) 550

5. The issue of a policy of life insurance to one who has no interest as a relative, dependent, creditor, or otherwise, in the life of the insured, and who pays the premiums for the chance of recovering upon the policy, is against public policy, and the contract is void, because the interest of the holder is to shorten, rather than to lengthen, the life of the insured, and his maintenance of the policy is of the nature of a wager. Id.

Construction of policy.

6. In construing the different provisions of a contract of insurance all must be so construed, if it can reasonably be done, as to give effect to each. L'Engle v. Scottish Union & N. Ins. Co. (Fla.) 581

7. That interpretation which will give the greater indemnity will prevail in conflict.

8. A statute requiring an insurer to state on the policy the insurable value of the property insured, which shall be the measure of damages in case of loss, and providing that the insurer shall be estopped to deny that the property was worth at the time of insuring the amount so fixed and that the agent soliciting the insurance shall be held to be the agent of the insurer,—does not deprive the insurer of the right to plead that the fire was caused by the criminal conduct of insured or that the insured by fraud procured the insurable value to be fixed at an excessive amount. Id.

9. If one interpretation of a contract of insurance capable of two interpretations would lead to an absurd conclusion, looking to the other provisions of the contract and its general scope and object, such interpretation must be abandoned and that adopted which will be more consistent with reason and probability. Id.

Assignment of policy.

9. The pledgee of a policy of life insurance has the right and power to sell the policy to the highest bidder for the purpose of realizing money to pay the debt which it secures, and both immediate and remote assignees under such a sale take good title to the policy and to its proceeds, although they have no insurable interest in the life insured by the policy. Gordon v. Ware Nat. Bank (C. C. A. 8th C.) 550

10. An assignment of a policy of life insurance immediately upon its issue to evade the rule that the issue of a policy to one without an insurable interest renders it void avoids the assignment. Id.

11. An insurable interest in the assignee is not requisite to the validity of an assignment of a policy of life insurance which was lawfully issued to one who had such an interest, unless the assignment was made in bad faith as a cover for the issue of a wager policy. Id.

Estoppel of insured.

12. Acceptance of the policy tendered, and waiver of the fraud in tendering one not in accord with the expectation of the applicant and representations of the agent, are effected by receiving a policy and retaining it for several months without complaint, in ignorance of the fraud because of failure to examine the policy, where the substitution is plainly apparent on its face. Bostwick v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. (Wis.) 705

13. If a person receives a policy of insurance ostensibly in response to an application therefor, which he signed and parted with in the belief, induced by the fraud of the agent taking the same, that it called for a policy different from that which it called for in fact, he is bound, as a matter of law, to examine the policy within a reasonable time after it comes to his hand, and to discover obvious departures therein from the one which he supposed he was to get, and promptly, upon discovering the same, to rescind the transaction, give the company due notice thereof, and do all on his part which justice requires to restore the former situation, or he will be held to have accepted the policy as satisfying his application, so as to be precluded from rescinding the same. Id.

14. The reasonable time for discovering that a policy of insurance received ostensibly in response to an application therefor, signed in the belief, induced by the fraud of the agent, that it called for a policy different from that actually called for, differs from the one supposed to have been applied for, commences to run immediately upon the receipt of the paper, nothing occurring then reasonably to excuse the applicant from omitting to examine his contract. Id.

15. Four and one half months delay in discovering that a policy of insurance differs from the one that the applicant supposed he had applied for, the agent having procured his signature to the application by misrepresenting its contents, is, as a matter of law, unreasonable, and defeats the right of the insured to rescind the contract, where there was nothing to prevent his examining his policy as soon as it was delivered to him. Id.

16. The acceptance, retention, and renewal, for successive terms, of an accident insurance policy, preclude the personal representatives of the insured from claiming that there were provisions in it to which the insured had not agreed. Blunt v. Fidelity & C. Co. (Cal.) 793

Warranties; representations; forfeitures.

17. A condition in an insurance policy is not void because not referred to in the application. Id.

18. A policy of insurance on the furniture of a house is void in toto if a large part of the furniture has been purchased on the instalment plan and is not paid for, and the policy provides that it shall be void if the interest of the assured is other than unconditional and sole ownership. Dow v. National Ins. Co. (R. I.) 479

19. A provision of an insurance policy requiring written consent, indorsed on the policy, for other insurance, is waived where, at the time a policy of insurance is written, other insurance exists upon the same property, and the fact is known to the agent, who communicates it to the company, and the company accepts the premium, and does not deny the validity of its policy on account of such other insurance until after a loss occurs, and the waiver will apply, not only to the other insurance as it existed when its policy was written, but to any policy subsequently issued in lieu or renewal of such other insurance. Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Redding (Fla.) 518
67 L. R. A.

Cause of death or injury.

20. Recovery on an accident insurance policy upon a person whose occupation is stated as "cattle dealer or broker visiting yards," the duties of which require him to ride on trains of cattle cars from place to place in the freight yards, is not prevented by the fact that a clause in the policy provides that it shall not cover accidents received while being in any part of a car not provided for occupation by passengers. Richards v. Travelers' Ins. Co. (S. D.) 175

21. Injuries to an insane person need not be intentionally inflicted to relieve the insurer from full liability under a policy providing that in case of injuries intentionally inflicted upon himself by the assured, or inflicted upon himself or received by him while insane, the measure of liability shall be a sum equal to the premiums paid. Blunt v. Fidelity & C. Co. (Cal.) 793

22. A Pott's fracture, consisting of the breaking of one bone of the lower leg between the knee and ankle joint, and a severance of the malleolus process of the other one so as to effect a complete solution of the continuity of both bones, is not covered by a policy providing indemnity in case of the breaking of the shafts of both bones between the knee and ankle joints. Peterson v. Modern Brotherhood of America (Iowa) 631

23. A clause in an insurance policy relieving the insurer from liability in case death is caused by violation of any criminal law is not applicable where insured was shot while attempting in good faith to escape from a personal difficulty, although he had begun it by assaulting his opponent with a weapon capable of producing great bodily harm, if not death. Supreme Lodge K. of P. v. Bradley (Ark.) 770

24. The right of an insurer to plead that a fire was caused by the criminal conduct of the insured, or that the insured by fraud procured the insurable value to be fixed at an excessive amount, is not taken away by a statute requiring an insurer to state in the policy the insurable value of the property insured, which shall be the measure of damages in case of loss, and providing that the insurer shall be estopped to deny that the property was worth at the time of insuring the amount so fixed and that the agent soliciting the insurance shall be held to be the agent of the insurer. Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Redding (Fla.) 518

25. One issuing an accident insurance policy may stipulate that it shall not cover injuries received while assured is insane. Blunt v. Fidelity & C. Co. (Cal.) 793

Notice and proofs of loss.

26. Want of knowledge of the policy by one of two mine operators for whose benefit an insurance against liability for accidents to employees has been effected by the other, and want of knowledge of the accident by the latter, will not excuse failure to comply with a requirement in the policy that immediate notice of an accident be given to the insurer. Deer Trail Consol. Min. Co. v. Maryland Casualty Co. (Wash.)

275

27. Notice to the insurer, given eight months after the occurrence, of an accident to an employee, is not within a reasonable time, so as to establish the liability of the insurer upon a policy insuring against liability for accidents to employees which requires immediate notice of the accident to be given to the insurer. Id.

28. The statement of a general agent of a corporation which has insured employers against liability for accidents to their employees by a policy requiring immediate notice of accidents to be given to the company, upon receiving notice of an accident eight months after it occurred, that formal notice would be soon enough if given six or seven days later, does not waive the provision of the policy requiring immediate notice, since liability on the policy had terminated when the accident was first brought to his attention. Id.

29. The requirements in the standard insurance policy, that the insured shall give notice of loss and make proofs of loss, are conditions precedent to the right to sue; but a failure to give the notice or to make the proofs within the time stipulated will not invalidate the policy, or work a forfeiture of the rights of the insured, in the absence of a stipulation to that effect, but will merely postpone the day of payment, where such notice is given and proofs of loss made within such time as will enable the insured to bring his suit within the time limited by the policy. Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Redding (Fla.)

518

30. Proofs of loss served upon an insurance company, signed and sworn to by the insured, stating that the fire occurred at a stated hour on a day named; that it originated in the roof or attic of the building, but how it originated, or the cause thereof, was to the insured entirely unknown; that the fire did not originate by any act, design, or procurement on the part of the insured, or in consequence of any fraud or evil practice done or suffered by the insured; and that any other information required by the company would be furnished on request, —substantially comply with a provision in the policy requiring the proofs of loss to state the knowledge and belief of the insured as to the time and origin of the fire, particularly as the company requested no further information from the insured. Id.

31. Where proofs of loss required to be made and served upon the company by an insurance policy are sufficiently full to give the company notice of the loss required by another provision in the policy, the same document will be sufficient as a notice of the loss, as well as proofs of loss. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Insurance; right of insurer subrogated to rights of owner of property negligently destroyed to bring action at law; right of insurer and insured to join in one action against wrongdoer where injury exceeds value of insurance. 161

On property destroyed by fire set by sparks from railroad engine; right of railway company to. 417

Knowledge by insurer of violation of provision of policy; effect on right to take advantage of provision to defeat liability. 480

Waiver of objections to proofs of loss; by basing refusal to pay on other grounds; provision requiring proofs within certain time; time as essence of contract; effect of clause requiring written consent to other insurance; where company has actual notice thereof; silence as consent to additional insurance; notice to agent as notice to company. 519

On life; sale of policy to one having no insurable interest; where policy is paid up; what constitutes insurable interest; vested interest of beneficiary in policy; effect of subsequent extinguishment of beneficiary's insurable interest. 551

What constitutes death by external, violent, and accidental means; effect of usage or custom to modify contract; provision excepting death or injury while in state of intoxication; effect of intoxication which does not contribute to injury; provision against liability for accident received while in car not provided for passengers; effect where policy shows that insured's business necessitates his riding on freight cars; voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger; contributory negligence of insured; no presumption of suicide. 175

What constitutes death by external, violent, and accidental means; provision against liability for injuries received while insane; validity; renewal of policy as acceptance of conditions. 793

Provision requiring prompt notice; as condition precedent or subsequent; effect of failure to give; of delay; effect of retention of premium as waiver; of requests for proof of accident; lack of knowledge by insured of accident. 276

Doubt as to construction of policy resolved against insurer; construed according to plain terms; forfeiture not favored; receipt and retention of premium with notice as waiver of violation of provision in policy; right of plaintiff in insurance case to recover attorney's fee. 583

Construction of terms of policy; attempt to limit liability to specific injury; necessity of making limitations specific and definite. 631

Retention of policy as waiver of mistake or fraud of insurer or its agent:—(I.) Introduction; (II.) time of misrepresentation; (III.) mistake or fraud as to terms of policy; (a) character of policy; (b) various provisions of policy; (1) risks insured against; (2) duration of insurance; (3) limitation of time for action on policy; (4) existence of options at maturity; (5) liability to assessment; (6) right to cancel; (7) obligation to keep books in safe; (8) obligation to keep watchman on premises; (9) signature to application; (10) agency clause; (11) date of policy; (12) value of policy; (c) variation of terms on renewal of policy; (IV.) mistake or fraud as to facts disclosed by the insured: (a) appearing in the policy: (1) subject-matter of insurance: (a) property covered; (b) voyage covered by marine policy; (c) misdescription of property; (d) location of property: (2) interest protected; (3) facts affecting the hazard: (a) other insurance; (b) occupancy of premises; (c) state of title; (d) encumbrances; (b) appearing only in the application: (1) copy attached to policy: (a) physical condition of insured; (b) prior insurance; (c) occupation; (d) encumbrances; (2) copy not attached; (V.) mistake or fraud as to matters outside of the policy and application; (VI.) effect of retention by other than insured; (VII.) effect of insured's illiteracy; (VIII.) retention with knowledge of defect: (a) generally; (b) effect of attempted rescission; (c) effect of agent's reassurances; (IX.) distinction between action at law and suit in equity. 705

Agent falsely filling blanks in application; right of insured to enforce contract; delivery of policy different from that agreed upon; duty of insured to examine policy; right to rescind upon discovering fraud. 717

On life; provision against liability where death is caused by violation of criminal law; what constitutes crime within meaning of; loss of life while attempting to retreat from difficulty brought on by insured; strict construction of forfeiture clauses. 771
67 L. R. A.

INTENT.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Intent; as element of crime; necessity of alleging and proving. 904

INTERURBAN RAILROAD COMPANIES.

Negligence in Standing on Platform of Car, see CARRIERS.

See also CARRIERS, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

Discrimination between Individuals in Regulating Sale of, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 15.

Mandamus to Compel Granting of License, see MANDAMUS.

Validity of Statute Requiring License for Sale of, within Prescribed Distances from Corporate Limits, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 10.

1. An ordinance providing that it shall be unlawful for any person maintaining any saloon, bar-room, or drinking shop, or any apartment thereto attached, to permit females to enter their places of business, is unconstitutional. State v. Nelson (Idaho) 808

2. Furnishing liquor to a minor as an act of hospitality in one's home is not a violation of a provision, making it unlawful for any person to give such liquor to a minor, which is embraced within a statute the title to which states that it is to provide for the taxation and regulation of the business of selling, furnishing, and giving liquors. People v. Bird (Mich.) 424

3. An applicant for a barroom license, to whose character no objection is found, ought not to be refused permission to engage in that business, in a neighborhood where others are so engaged, on the objection of a minority of the property holders, or on the ground that no more barrooms are needed. State ex rel. Galle v. New Orleans (La.) 70

4. The business of selling intoxicating liquors is made lawful by the Constitution and statutes of Louisiana, and the right of any citizen to engage in it is one the enjoyment of which is subject to such conditions only as may be imposed or authorized by the general assembly in the legitimate exercise of the police power of the state. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Intoxicating liquors; constitutional right to sell; act of licensing board judicial, and not ministerial; discretion in issuing licenses; mandamus to compel issue; arbitrary refusal to issue. 71

Requiring payment of license fee for privilege of selling; object of requiring such payment; delegation by legislature to municipality of power to lay special tax upon sale of; statute giving jurisdiction to city to regulate sale within 4 miles of corporate limits. 614

Ordinance forbidding person selling, to permit females to enter place of business; inherent right to engage in business of selling. 808

Statute forbidding giving of liquor to minor; validity; scope of; sale for medicinal purposes; liability of person procuring liquor as agent for buyer. 424

JUDGE.

Communication to, as Privileged, see WITNESSES, 3.

JUDGMENT.

On Appeal, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

1. Plaintiff in an action for personal injuries is entitled to recover for lost time such an amount as the evidence authorizes, when the petition contains allegations which in a general way show that the plaintiff has lost time, and evidence which fixes the time lost and the value of such time with certainty is admitted without objection, though there is in the petition no distinct claim for damages on account of lost time. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Miller (Ga.) 87

2. Canal commissioners who have contracted for the right to take water from a river to supply the canal in consideration of permitting the riparian owner to take a certain quantity of water from the feeder, and who have subsequently leased to another person all the surplus after the rights of the riparian owner are satisfied, may take steps to enforce a judgment in an action between its lessee and the riparian owner or his representatives for the determination of the respective rights of the parties under a contract, by placing weirs so as to limit the amount which can be taken from the feeder by the riparian owner to the amount awarded him by the judgment. Merrifield v. Canal Commissioners (Ill.) 369

Conclusiveness and bar.

3. In an action between the same parties or between those in privity with them, a prior judgment on the merits upon the same claim or demand by a court which had jurisdiction, is conclusive, whether right or wrong, not only of every matter offered, but of every admissible matter which might have been offered to sustain or defeat the claim or demand. Gordon v. Ware Nat. Bank (C. C. A. 8th C.) 550

4. A judgment cannot be collaterally impeached, except for fraud, where the court had jurisdiction of the parties and the subject-matter. Schmitt v. Dahl (Minn.) 590

5. The alleged fraudulent grantee is estopped from setting up, in an action by a judgment creditor to set aside the conveyance as fraudulent, any defense that might have been interposed by his grantor in the original action. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Judgment; amendment of record to cure defect for which motion in arrest of judgment has been made:—(I.) Amendment in the trial court: (a) amendment of pleading: (1) in general; (2) to supply omitted averments; (3) to cure insufficient or erroneous allegations; (4) by striking out; (b) amendments concerning indictments, informations, or complaints: (1) as to verification; (2) as to organization of grand jury; (3) as to finding, return, or filing of indictment; (4) to cure omissions; (5) to cure errors or insufficiency; (c) amendments concerning verdict or judgment: (1) general verdict rendered on declaration containing several counts; (2) misjoinder of counts; (3) verdict in criminal case; (4) amendment of judgment; (d) amendment of record; (II.) amendment in the appellate court: (a) to cure errors or omissions; (b) on certiorari or certificate. 179

Amendment of record to cure defect for which motion in arrest of judgment has been made. 180

Estoppel of; res judicata. 370

Attack by alleged fraudulent grantee on judgment on which action to set aside his conveyance is based:—(I.) Introductory; (II.) the judgment considered as evidence: (a) as prima facie evidence of the debt; (b) what must, or may, be produced; (III.) conclusive effect of the judgment: (a) generally; (b) effect of the time of the conveyance; (c) as to defenses to the original action: (1) defense by way of denial, generally; (2) statute of limitations; (3) minority; (4) set-off; (5) bankruptcy; (6) estoppel; (7) payment; (8) fraud in the transaction; (9) forgery; (10) illegal transaction: (a) usury; (b) Sunday law; (c) immoral consideration; (11) failure of consideration; (12) lack of jurisdiction; (d) attack for fraud or collusion: (1) fraud; (2) collusion; (e) attack for irregularity; (f) unintentional default in the original action; (g) attack for matters arising since the judgment: (1) dormancy; (2) waiver or estoppel; (3) satisfaction; (4) intervening judgment in favor of a stranger; (5) intervening bankruptcy; (6) pendency of other proceedings; (IV.) status of the grantee as affecting his right to attack the judgment; (V.) how the objection to the judgment must be made; (VI.) the sufficiency of the judgment pleaded, to support the action: (a) generally; (b) tort claims. 590

Attack on, by alleged fraudulent grantee of judgment debtor in action to set aside his conveyance; necessity of showing that indebtedness antedated fraudulent conveyance; conclusiveness of judgment as to amount and validity of claim; waiver of defenses by judgment debtor; right of other parties to set up; collateral attack on judgment by creditors; right of alleged fraudulent grantee to attack judgment on ground of fraud. 591

Habeas corpus decree as to custody of infant as res judicata:—(I.) Doctrine of res judicata generally applicable; (II.) former judgment only conclusive upon some state of facts; (III.) conclusiveness as to issues involved; (IV.) parties or persons concluded; (V.) foreign judgment as res judicata; (VI.) dismissal of writ without decision or prejudice. 783

JUDICIAL NOTICE.

See EVIDENCE.

JUDICIAL SALE.

Attachment of Proceeds by Creditors, see ATTACHMENT, 1.

LANDLORD AND TENANT.

Removal of Fixtures, see FIXTURES.

Lease as Sufficient Consideration for Option to Purchase, see CONTRACTS, 5.

1. Demand for compliance with a condition precedent to the taking effect of a lease is not necessary to put the lessee in default for failure to comply, and thereby defeat the operation of the instrument. Frank v. Stratford-Handcock (Wyo.) 571

2. A clause requiring the lessee to deposit money with the lessor to secure the faithful performance by the lessee of the covenants of the lease is not a covenant, but a condition, failure to perform which will prevent the lease from taking effect, although the terms of the contract indicate a present demise, where the covenants to be secured relate to the payment of taxes, the operation and use of the property, and the delivery of a portion of the crops as rent. Id.

3. A lease which does not become operative because of failure to comply with a condition precedent does not constitute a consideration for an agreement contained in it, giving the lessee an option to purchase the property. Id.

4. The fact that the lessee is in possession of the leased property at the time of the execution of the lease, with nothing to show that possession was delivered to him by the lessor, is not sufficient to give validity to the lease, which would otherwise be of no effect because of failure to comply with a condition precedent. Id.

5. A lessee who has not entitled himself to possession under the lease because of failure to comply with a condition precedent is not entitled to damages for being evicted from and kept out of possession of the property. Id.

6. Statutes providing a summary remedy for a landlord to obtain possession of the leased premises do not deprive equity of jurisdiction of a suit to determine the rights of the parties under a clause in the lease giving a right to renewal at a rental to be fixed by arbitrators, since the remedy provided by them is not adequate. Kaufmann v. Liggett (Pa.) 353

7. Failure of the arbitrators to fix the rental to be paid during the extended term, as the contract for renewal of the lease provided they should do, does not deprive the lessee of the privilege of renewal, where he has given the agreed notice of his desire to do so, and where, from the provisions of the contract, it is evident that the right of renewal, and not the rent to be paid, was regarded as the essence of the contract. Id.

8. Equity has jurisdiction to fix the rent to be paid during the renewed term of a lease, if the arbitrators provided by the contract failed to do so, where the lessee has taken the required steps to preserve his right to renewal, and such right, and not the amount of rent to be paid, is the essence of the contract. Id.

9. The fixing of the rental is not of the essence of a contract to renew a lease upon receipt of notice to that effect, upon a rent to be fixed by arbitrators to be appointed by the parties. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Landlord and tenant; injunction to restrain proceedings under the landlord and tenant acts; provision for arbitrators to fix rent for renewal term; right of equity to fix, when arbitrators fail to do so. 353

Right of tenant to remove trade fixtures; when it may be exercised; necessity of removing during term; effect of making renewal lease without reserving right to remove; what determines title to fixtures in absence of express agreement; sale by tenant of fixtures to incoming tenant. 359

Agreement in lease giving tenant right to remove fixtures; right to remove after termination of lease for nonpayment of rental. 694

LARCENY.NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Larceny; homicide in attempting to prevent. 537

LEASE.

See LANDLORD AND TENANT.

LEGACY.

See WILLS.

LEVY AND SEIZURE.

Conflict of Laws as to Right to Exemption from Execution, see CONFLICT OF LAWS.

1. A statute exempting wages from the reach of creditors in supplementary proceedings will operate in favor of nonresidents, and will be construed to include property sought to be reached by mesne process, such as writs of attachment and garnishment issued to place the property in the custody of the court to preserve it for application to plaintiff's claim. Goodwin v. Claytor (N. C.) 209

2. By the common law, shares of stock in a corporation being in the nature of choses in action, intangible property incapable of manual seizure, are not subject to execution or attachment. Lipscomb v. Condon (W. Va.) 670

LICENSE.NOTES AND BRIEFS.

License; right of purchaser of burial lot as. 120

LIENS.

Waiver of, by Taking Personal Judgment against Debtor, see ATTACHMENT, 9.

1. Explosives consumed in grading a roadbed or driving a tunnel for a railroad company are within the provisions of a statute giving a lien to contractors and material men for materials "furnished for grading the roadway, constructing culverts, laying tracks, or erecting buildings." Hercules Powder Co. v. Knoxville, L. & J. R. Co. (Tenn.) 487

2. In case of an entire contract to furnish materials for construction of a railroad, under which shipments are made as material is ordered, a lien for the entire amount will be effected by giving notice within the time required by statute after the date of the last shipment. Id.

3. The consideration of the date of the last shipment in determining whether or not notice has been given in time to perfect a lien for material furnished for the construction of a railroad is not prevented by the 67 L. R. A.

fact that the shipment is stopped in transitu because of the insolvency of the contractor who had ordered it. Id.

4. If material is delivered in good faith to a subcontractor for use in the construction of a railroad the material man is entitled to his lien therefor in the absence of definite proof that it was not used for that purpose. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Liens; grant of, to person furnishing material for "grading" of railroad right of way; explosives as material within meaning of; tunnel as structure on which lien may be claimed; when notice of lien must be given. 488

LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

Constitutionality of Statute Taking Away Right to Plead Statute of Limitations, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 5.

Enforcement of Provisions of Foreign Contract Contrary to Provisions of Local Statute of Limitations, see CONFLICT OF LAWS, 5.

1. A nonsuit should not be granted in an action for breach of contract correctly to transmit a telegram, upon the ground that the action was not brought within the time limited by the conditions of the blank on which the message was written, since plaintiff has a right to prove waiver of such condition or estoppel to rely on it. Hays v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (S. C.) 481

2. The re-enactment of a statute of limitations with a shortened limitation period applicable to judgments rendered without the state applies to actions upon judgments existing at the time of its passage, where, if not made so applicable, it would operate as a repeal of all limitation periods as to existing causes of action not barred at the time of its passage. Lamb v. Powder River Live Stock Co. (C. C. A. 8th C.) 558

3. A period of three months within which to bring an action upon a judgment rendered in another state, against a bona fide resident of the state establishing such period, upon a cause of action which accrued more than six years before the action upon the judgment is brought, is unreasonably short, and renders the statute providing it invalid. Id.

4. In cases where a creditor levies upon and sells property transferred in fraud of his rights on execution, the statute of limitations commences to run from the date of sale, unless it be made to appear that the creditor did not discover the fraud until some later time. Brasie v. Minneapolis Brewing Co. (Minn.) 865

5. An action of ejectment to recover possession of land fraudulently transferred, brought by a creditor who has caused the property to be sold on execution against the fraudulent grantor and become the purchaser thereof, must be brought within six years of the discovery of the fraud. Id.

6. The one-year statute of limitations does not apply to a cause of action for breaking one up in business, and driving him therefrom by the use of false and malicious statements. Brown v. American F. L. M. Co. (Tex.) 195

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also JUDGMENT.

Limitation of actions; right of nonresident to plead; validity of statute shortening period of; prospective construction of. 559

LIMITATION OF LIABILITY.

Conflict of Laws as to Validity of Contract Limiting Liability, see CONFLICT OF LAWS, 6.

Validity of Contract, see CARRIERS, 14.

LOGS.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Logs; right to erect booms in river for sorting logs. 839

MANDAMUS.

1. Mandamus will not lie to compel the arrest without warrant of certain designated persons for the alleged commission of a misdemeanor. State ex rel. Livingstone v. Williams (Or.) 166

2. The supreme court has jurisdiction to control by mandamus the action of the county auditor in determining the names to be placed on an official ballot, where there is not sufficient time to enable the county judge to whom the statute gives jurisdiction to act, and have his action reviewed on appeal prior to the election. State ex rel. Howells v. Metcalf (S. D.) 331

3. Mandamus will not lie to compel a judge to issue bench warrants, where the pleadings do not show it to be his duty to do so, and the statute imposes the duty upon the clerk of the court. Id.

4. Where the statute imposes the duty upon a police officer to prosecute gamblers, a writ of mandamus to compel him to do so should not join the mayor and common council for the purpose of compelling them to direct him to perform his duty, since their co-operation is not necessary to secure the end sought. Id.

5. That municipal officers have entered into a conspiracy to license gambling houses under the guise of periodical fines does not 67 L. R. A.

require the joining of anyone but the chief of police in a writ of mandamus to compel him to perform his statutory duty to prosecute gamblers, since in such case he cannot claim to have been directed to neglect his duty by any lawful command of a superior officer. Id.

6. When a demurrer is sustained to an alternative writ of mandamus because several causes of action were improperly united, the plaintiff can proceed only by filing an amended complaint containing the cause of action which he elects to pursue. Id.

7. Mandamus will issue to compel the granting of a barroom license, where the refusal to grant such license is arbitrary and discriminatory and in excess of the discretion vested in the city as to regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors. State ex rel. Galle v. New Orleans (La.) 70

8. Writs of mandamus in the exercise of and in aid of its appellate jurisdiction may be issued by a court of appeal without a prior invocation of that jurisdiction by appeal or writ of error, the test of the right to issue such writs being the existence of jurisdiction to review, and not its prior invocation. Re Barber Asphalt Pav. Co. (C. C. A. 8th C.) 761

9. Mandamus may be issued by the circuit court of appeals to compel the judge of a circuit court to vacate a stay of proceedings and to proceed to try and adjudicate the controversy and enforce the judgment upon it, where, upon allowance by a city council of the claims of a citizen of another state, the city appealed therefrom to a certain state court in accordance with the provisions of its charter, which prohibited its officers from paying claims against the city thus challenged except upon the order of that court, and the claimant thereupon sued the city upon its claims in the Federal circuit court, the judge of which court stayed all proceedings in the case until the final determination of the appeals of the state court. Id.

10. The United States circuit courts of appeals have jurisdiction to issue writs of mandamus in the exercise of, and in aid of, their appellate jurisdiction. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Mandamus; when writ will issue; to compel discretionary act. 71

As writ of discretion, and not right; discretion not arbitrary; right will not lie where law provides other adequate remedy; what is adequate remedy; issue of, to compel officers to arrest and prosecute alleged offenders; to compel arrest without warrant or complaint; to compel a series of acts or general course of conduct; not issued in 66

doubtful cases; to compel judge to issue warrant of arrest; necessity of demand where duty is of public nature; right to control abuse of discretion of officer by mandamus; to compel enforcement of liquor law; necessity that relators have special interest. 167

When granted; to compel furnishing of telephone service; to compel unlawful acts. 252

To compel county auditor to file certificates of nomination of county officers; who may maintain action for. 331

To compel inferior Federal court to hear and determine action; from United States circuit court of appeals; where action of lower court cannot be reviewed on appeal or writ of error; to compel lower court to reverse or revise decision; to control conduct of judge in proceedings taking place before trial; to compel judge to proceed according to certain rules of practice; grant of, in anticipation of omission; not granted in case of doubt. 762

MARRIED WOMEN.

See HUSBAND AND WIFE.

MASTER AND SERVANT.

Attachment of Wages, see ATTACHMENT. 7.

Common Law of England as Constituting Part of American Law Relating to Master's Liability for Injuries. see COMMON LAW.

Constitutionality of Statute Forbidding Breaking of Contract by Employee. see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 9.

Evidence in Action for Personal Injury, see EVIDENCE, 4.

1. One who employs a person in ignorance of the fact that he was under a time contract to work for another, in violation of which he had left the latter's service, is not liable in damages to the former employer because, when informed of the servant's breach of contract, he fails to discharge him, where the servant, though offering to release his new employer, expresses his determination not to return to the one whose service he has abandoned. Wolf v. New Orleans Tailor-Made Pants Co. (La.) 65

Duty of master.

2. It is one of the duties of an employer to exercise reasonable care that the place in which he sets his servant to work and the system or method adopted by the employer for the doing of the work shall be reasonably safe for the servant, and free from latent dangers known to the master, or discernible by an ordinarily prudent master in the circumstances. Burns v. Delaware & A. Teleg. & Teleph. Co. (N. J. Err. & App.) 956
67 L. R. A.

3. The rule that the duty of a master with respect to care as to the tools and appliances furnished for his servant's work is limited to such as are in fact supplied by the master has no application to the failure of the master to supply appliances needed, not for the work itself, but solely to protect the servant against latent dangers arising out of the work. Id.

4. Failure of a master to take precautions to prevent electric wires in process of being strung on telephone poles from reels from coming in contact with a trolley-feed wire charged with a powerful current, or to supply his employees with rubber gloves or other devices to prevent the communication to them of a serious shock in case the wires become charged, renders him liable for injury to employees attending the reels who receive a severe shock by reason of one or more of the telephone wires coming in contact with the trolley-feed wire because of their sagging or breaking. Id.

Injury to volunteers.

5. To create the relation of master and servant there must be some contract or some act on the part of one person which expressly or impliedly recognizes another as his servant. Atlanta & W. P. R. Co. v. West (Ga.) 701

6. One into whose service another volunteers without his assent, express or implied, is not under the duties of a master toward a servant, or required to anticipate or discover the peril of such volunteer, but is only bound, relatively to such volunteer, to use care not to injure him after notice of his peril. Id.

7. A person in whose service a volunteer engages in compliance with an unauthorized request of an employee owes such volunteer none of the obligations of a master toward a servant, but is only bound to use care not to injure him after notice of his peril. Id.

8. The fact that one who voluntarily engages in the service of another at the unauthorized request of a servant of the latter is of tender years, and without sufficient mental capacity to appreciate the danger, while it might be an element of notice to the person into whose service he has volunteered of the peril of the volunteer, cannot change the relations of the parties, or impose upon such person any duty not ordinarily imposed by law relatively to volunteers. Id.

9. If a person into whose service an infant has volunteered had been negligent, and relied upon the concurrent negligence of the plaintiff to defeat or diminish the recovery, then the infancy of the volunteer would be material to the determination of his dilligence; but his infancy cannot change the relations of the parties, or supply the place of negligence on the part of the person whose service he has entered. Id.

Assumption of risks.

10. It is not merely the physical surroundings of the servant that must be obvious to him in order that he may be held to have assumed the risks arising therefrom, but it must be obvious to him, or at least to an ordinarily prudent servant under the circumstances, that there is danger to him in such a situation. Burns v. Delaware & A. Teleg. & Teleph. Co. (N. J. Err. & App.) 956

Fellow servants.

11. A railroad conductor in signaling the engineer to back the engine for the purpose of effecting a coupling acts in his capacity as representative of the master, and not as a fellow servant of the brakeman, who is attempting to prepare the cars for the coupling; so that the master will be liable in case he acts negligently to the injury of the brakeman, although the engineer would have obeyed the signal had it been given by the brakeman himself. Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Baldwin (Tenn.) 340

12. If rails, loaded under the supervision of a foreman, to be sent down an incline into a mine, are negligently loaded so that one falls from the car and injures an employee, the negligence is that of the foreman, and not of the servant working under him, and the master will be liable for the resulting injury. Johnson v. Union P. Coal Co. (Utah) 506

13. Persons engaged in the service of a master, who are intrusted by him with the management or direction of his general work, or with some particular part thereof, are not fellow servants with the subordinate employees, but are vice principals, for whose negligence, resulting in the injury of employees, the master is liable. Id.

14. The duty of the master to exercise care for the safety of the servant cannot be evaded by the employment of others for its performance; and the persons so employed are not fellow servants engaged in common employment with the servant for whose safety the care is to be exercised. Burns v. Delaware & A. Teleg. & Teleph. Co. (N. J. Err. & App.) 956

Injuries to third persons.

15. A railroad company is not liable for injuries to a boy from a torpedo which he picks up near the track merely upon evidence that a brakeman tossed it to a flagman, who threw it back, and, upon the brakeman's failure to catch it and letting it fall to the ground, no attempt was made to recover and remove it to a safe place; 67 L. R. A.

since there is nothing to show that the employees were acting within the scope of their employment. Oberton v. Boston & M. R. (Mass.) 422

16. The appointment of one as cashier at a railway station, with power to collect money, give receipts, sell tickets, take care of the money received, and forward it to the treasurer of the company, does not empower him to arrest persons whom he suspects of having stolen money which has come into his possession, so as to render the railroad company liable in case he causes the arrest of an innocent person. Daniel v. Atlanta C. L. R. Co. (N. C.) 455

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Master and servant; employing servant violating contract; after notice of servant's wrong: inducing or encouraging servant to break contract; who is a "laborer." 66

Liability for acts of servant in excess of powers; for wilful or malicious act of servant: while acting within general scope of employment; liability for unlawful arrest. 456

Assumption of risk of injury by fellow servants; liability for negligence of superintendent when acting as fellow servant; conductor as coservant of other railway employees. 340

Duty of master toward volunteer; who is volunteer; effect of minority of volunteer. 701

Injury to servant by fall of rail from car; sufficiency of care used in loading; when done in usual and customary way; failure to adopt rules as proof of negligence; assumption of risks by servant; men lowering rails into mine as fellow servants of employee in mine; right of servant to rely on master's diligence to protect him; duty to keep place of work safe. 506

Negligence of servant in throwing torpedo on track. 422

MAXIMS.

1. Caveat emptor. Bostwick v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. (Wis.) 705

2. He who remains silent when, in conscience, he ought to speak, will be debarred from speaking when, in conscience, he ought to remain silent." Cornerstone Bank v. Rhodes (Ind. Terr.) 812

3. He who seeks equity must do equity. Tripp v. Nobles (N. C.) 449

4. It is to the interest of the state that there should be an end to litigation. State v. Marsh (N. C.) 179

5. Reason is the soul of the law, and, when the reason of any particular law ceases, so does the law itself. Tripp v. Nobles (N. C.) 449

6. Vigilantibus, et non dormientibus servat lex. Bostwick v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. (Wis.) 705

7. Volenti non fit injuria. People v. Mills (N. Y.) 131

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Res ipsa loquitur. 476

Volenti non fit injuria. 134

MECHANICS' LIENS.

See LIENS.

MISDEMEANOR.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Misdemeanor; homicide in attempting to prevent. 536

MISTAKE.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Mistake; waiver of. 705

Right to recover money paid by; negligence in making payment. 718

MONOPOLY.

Validity of Contract Not to Engage Services from Rival Company, see CONTRACTS, 8.

Constitutionality of Anti-Trust Law, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

1. The making of anti-competitive trade agreements as to products and merchandise bought or sold on the general market is contrary to public policy, and it is competent for the legislature to enact penal measures to prevent the making and carrying out of such agreements. State v. Smiley (Kan.) 903

2. An agreement entered into by all the dealers on a certain market, limiting their right, severally, under stipulated forfeitures or penalties to buy all the grain they otherwise might on such market, is an agreement in restraint of trade, and falls within the penal terms of the Kansas anti-trust act of 1897. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Monopolies; anti-trust law; what contracts in restraint of trade violate. 63

Validity of statute to restrain. 905

MORTGAGE.

Recording of, as Constituting Notice. see NOTICE.

An affidavit of a renewal of a chattel mortgage in favor of a corporation after it is received and filed by the register of deeds of the county is not void, so as not to 67 L. R. A.

impart constructive notice of the lien of the mortgage, by reason of the fact that the affidavit is sworn to before a notary public who is an officer and stockholder in said corporation. Fair v. Citizens' State Bank (Kan.) 851

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Mortgage; of burial lot. 122

Taxation of. 202

Affidavit of renewal; effect on validity of verifying before interested person. 851

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

Judicial Notice that Lights Cannot be Located in Street without Authority of Municipality, see EVIDENCE, 5.

Validity of Statute Requiring License for Sale of Intoxicating Liquors within Prescribed Distance from Corporate Limits, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 10.

Constitutionality of Ordinance Forbidding Public Meetings in Streets, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 2.

See also PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS; PUBLIC MONIES; WATERS.

A city may, by ordinance, prohibit females from entering places where intoxicating liquors are sold, for immoral purposes. State v. Nelson (Idaho) 808

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also HIGHWAYS; INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

Municipal corporations; liability for injury to abutting land by operations on highway; duties and liabilities as to surface waters. 643

Delegation to, of power to regulate use of street; right to declare void ordinance expressly authorized by statute. 803

Necessity that ordinance be reasonable; reasonableness of, as question for court; ordinance must be tested by its own terms; reasonableness of penalty for violation of; prohibiting presence of females in saloons. 808

Liability for injury caused by performance of governmental duty; for injury from defect in plan of drainage; right to drain surface water into streams; liability for injury caused by; failure to keep sewer and cesspool in repair; flooding of cellar thereby; insufficiency of drain in times of floods; surface water in streets overflowing on land of adjoining proprietor; liability for failure to enact or enforce ordinances; injury from obstruction of culvert under highway; liability for damages resulting from torts of officers; right to invade private property. 932

NAVIGABLE WATERS.

See WATERS.

NEGLIGENCE.

Presumption of Negligence, see EVIDENCE.

See also CARRIERS; PROXIMATE CAUSE; TELEGRAPHS.

1. A street railroad company is not liable in damages for the killing of a dog by one of its cars in motion, unless the killing is done either wilfully, wantonly, or recklessly. Moore v. Charlotte E. R. L. & P. Co. (N. C.) 470

2. The rule that contributory negligence is not a defense to an intentional wrong does not apply to a situation where negligence is so inexcusable as not to be really a contributing cause, but to be really a cause intervening between the wrong and the injury as the real producing cause thereof. Bostwick v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. (Wis.) 705

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Negligence; effect of intervening agency; in placing electric light in close proximity to trolley wire at curve. 116

Presumption of, from happening of accident; in handling of electricity. 475

In doing act in ordinary and customary way. 506

In presuming that other person will perform his duty. 715

NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS.

See BILLS AND NOTES.

NEW TRIAL.

A new trial cannot be granted in a criminal case for newly discovered evidence to rebut the testimony of one of the state's medical witnesses, who testified that he vaccinated accused and observed his condition on a certain day, by showing that the witness was mistaken, where the accused and his counsel knew before the trial ended that there was no evidence of recent vaccination of the accused, and had access to the prison records to determine the medical treatment of him. State v. Quigley (R. I.) 322

NONRESIDENTS.

Discrimination against, as a Denial of Equal Protection of the Laws, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 7.

NOTICE.

To Consignee of Arrival of Consignment of Freight, see CARRIERS.

Sufficiency of Notice Sent by Mail, see CARRIERS, 12.

Of Loss, see INSURANCE.

A chattel mortgage regular upon its face, duly filed for record, and accompanied by an affidavit of renewal, filed in proper time, and regular upon its face, and regular in fact, except for the latent defect that the notary public who administered the oath was a stockholder in the mortgagee corporation, imparts notice as fully as if such defect did not exist. Fair v. Citizens' State Bank (Kan.) 851

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Notice; to agent of insurance company as notice to company. 518

Of assignment of chose in action to person from whom debt is owing. 619

Failure of statute to prescribe; fact of actual notice not sufficient to cure defect. 625

By record of instrument verified or acknowledged before person disqualified by interest. 851

NUISANCE.

Restraining Blowing of Factory Whistle, see INJUNCTION, 2.

The blowing of whistles at factories to regulate and direct the order of work is not a nuisance per se. Redd v. Edna Cotton Mills (N. C.) 983

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Nuisance; blowing of whistle and other noises as; necessity that individual suffer special injury in order to maintain action; injunction to restrain. 983

OFFICERS.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also ARREST.

Officers; homicide by. 292

Functions of county auditor ministerial, and not judicial. 331

OPINION EVIDENCE.

See EVIDENCE.

OPTION.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Option; specific performance of option contract; withdrawal of option. 572

What constitutes unconditional acceptance of; expressing dissatisfaction with terms; affixing condition to acceptance. 853

PARTIES.

See ACTION OR SUIT, 3, 4.

PASSENGERS.

See CARRIERS.

PASSES.

Giving of, as Constituting an Unjust Discrimination, see CARRIERS, 2.

PATENTS.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Patents; no right to royalties earned before issuance of patent; inventor's interest in invention before issue of patent; what originality necessary to entitle one to patent; effect of selling article to others before issuance of patent; right of vendees to continue to sell to others after patent is issued.

77

PAYMENT.

See JUDGMENT, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

PERPETUITIES.

1. A clause in a will forbidding the sale of testator's real estate during the lifetime of the life tenant is void, as against public policy. Wool v. Fleetwood (N. C.)

444

2. A codicil directing trustees, who, under the will, are to hold the residue of the estate during the lifetime of the testator's two youngest children paying annuities to all the children during such lives, and dividing the property at their termination, to hold the share of another child during her lifetime upon the happening of a certain contingency, paying her an annuity during her life, and dividing the principal among her children at her death, is void as suspending the period of alienation beyond two lives in being at the testator's death. Hertzog v. Title Guarantee & T. Co. (N. Y.)

146

PERSONAL INJURIES.

To Passengers, see CARRIERS.

See also HIGHWAYS; MASTER AND SERVANT.

PLEADING.

Admissibility of Evidence under, see EVIDENCE.

1. A plaintiff who, where an exception of no cause of action is sustained, with leave to amend, amends his petition in obedience to the order of the court, thereby waives his right to question the correctness of the ruling on the exception. Wolf v. New Orleans Tailor-Made Pants Co. (La.)

65

2. Plaintiff may file more than one replication or subsequent pleading to any pleading of the defendant, if he so desires, under Fla. Rev. Stat. 1892, § 1059, providing that plaintiff may file as many replications or subsequent pleadings to any pleading of defendant as he may desire. Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Redding (Fla.)

518

3. Leave to amend a pleading may be granted during a term of court without notice to the opposite party of the application therefor, even though the cause has been submitted upon demurrer by brief at such term.

Id.

4. A defect in a declaration in claiming damages by an incorrect measure cannot be tested by a general demurrer. Beidler v. Sanitary District (Ill.)

820

67 L. R. A.

5. An amendment of the declaration having been permitted pending the hearing of a demurrer thereto, the court should permit the defendant to plead or demur to the amended declaration, and it is error to apply the demurrer on file to the amended declaration without defendant's consent. Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Redding (Fla.)

518

6. A demurrer admits the truth of a plea that the provision for limitation of defendant's liability was valid according to the law of the state where the contract was made, in an action to recover the value of the property lost while in possession of a carrier for transportation. Adams Exp. Co. v. Walker (Ky.)

412

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Pleading; amendment of, to cure defect for which motion in arrest of judgment has been made.

179

Proof of note not stating consideration; sufficiency of statement that consideration was goods sold and delivered, without setting forth date, items, and kind of goods.

595

Discretion as to pleading title in general terms, or alleging specific links constituting chain of.

866

Necessity of alleging intent where statute makes intent an element of crime.

904

PLEDGE.

Attachment of Property by Creditors of Pledgeor, see ATTACHMENT.

POLICE POWER.

See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

POLL TAX.

See TAXES.

PRESCRIPTION.

Rights Acquired by, see CANALS.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Prescription; acquirement of riparian rights by; right of private individuals to acquire prescriptive rights against public.

829

PRESUMPTIONS.

See EVIDENCE.

PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

1. An agent who signs a contract to convey his principal's land thereby warrants his authority to make the contract, and is liable in damages to the other contracting party in case the authority does not in fact exist. Le Roy v. Jacobosky (N. C.)

977

2. A local agent of a telegraph company, intrusted with the duty and responsibility of getting up all possible information with respect to claims for damages because of breach of contract to transmit messages, has power to bind the company by a waiver of a condition as to time within which the claim must be presented. Hays v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (S. C.) 481

3. One contracting with an agent knowing that he has no authority to bind his principal upon the contract cannot hold him liable for the damages in case the principal refuses to carry out the contract. Le Roy v. Jacobosky (N. C.) 977

4. In order to constitute a ratification, there must be acceptance of the results of the act with an intent to ratify, and with full knowledge of all the material circumstances. Russell v. Erie R. Co. (N. J. Err. & App.) 433

5. One who accepts an agency to take charge of a house and lot belonging to his principal, collects the rents, pays taxes, and sees to repairs, and gives advice as to the value of the principal's unimproved farm lands, thereby assumes a fiduciary and confidential relation, and cannot purchase such farm lands for himself and in his own name without making full disclosure of all facts bearing on the value of such lands material for the principal to know in order to act intelligently, and if the agent conceals such facts the conveyance is voidable at the principal's election. Van Dusen v. Bigelow (N. D.) 288

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Principal and agent; agency as question of fact; what sufficient to constitute agency to sell real estate; necessity that appointment as agent be accepted; agent's duty toward principal. 288

Duty of person dealing with agent to ascertain extent of powers. 435

PRINCIPAL AND SURETY.

Ratification of an unauthorized signing of their names to a renewal note by the maker will be effected in case sureties on a note, which is past due, upon receiving notice from the payee that a new note has been substituted for the old one with their names attached to sureties, neglect to repudiate the transaction, and fail to notify the payee of their nonliability until after the insolvency and death of the maker. Cornerstone Bank v. Rhodes (Ind. Terr.) 812

PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATIONS.

See WITNESSES.

PROCESS.

See WRIT AND PROCESS.

PROMISSORY NOTES.

See BILLS AND NOTES.

67 L. R. A.

PROPERTY.

The rights of the maker of a note, to whom it had been indorsed and delivered by the payee as a gift, are not affected by the fact that it is found among the effects of another person after the latter's death, and his administrator takes possession of and attempts to enforce it as part of the estate. Vann v. Edwards (N. C.) 461

PROXIMATE CAUSE.

Placing an electric light in close proximity to a trolley wire at a curve is not the proximate cause of an injury to one struck by glass falling from the globe when shattered by a trolley leaving the wire, since failure to keep the trolley on the wire is prima facie negligence, and is the act of a responsible person intervening between the placing of the light and the injury. Nelson v. Narragansett Electric Light Co. (R. I.) 116

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Proximate cause; what constitutes. 506

PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS.

Assessment for Local Improvements as a Denial of Due Process of Law, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 14.

Equitable Relief from Invalid Assessment, see EQUITY.

1. A provision in a contract for a municipal improvement that the contractor shall receive assessment certificates against the abutting property in full compensation for his labor without recourse to the municipal corporation does not relieve the city from liability in case it makes an assessment which is invalid and unenforceable. Iowa Pipe & Tile Co. v. Callanan (Iowa) 408

2. Notice of an assessment for a sewer improvement is not insufficient because the same document notices other and different improvements. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Public improvements; assessments for; necessity of notice; front-foot rule; necessity of benefits. 408

PUBLIC MONEY.

1. The appropriation of money for the care of destitute children is for a public purpose. Hager v. Kentucky Children's Home Soc. (Ky.) 815

2. The appropriation of public money for use by a private corporation organized to care for destitute children is not prevented by a constitutional provision forbidding the giving or loaning of the state's credit to any corporation. Id.

3. That a public charity is to be administered by a private corporation will not prevent the state from appropriating the public funds to it. Id.

4. That a state has no power to remove the officers of a corporation organized to administer a public charity to which the state has made an appropriation will not invalidate the appropriation, where the state takes a bond conditioned upon the proper use of the funds, and requires a report of such use to the proper state officials. Id.

5. A charter giving a corporation organized to secure homes for destitute children power to adopt by-laws in harmony with those of a national association does not show that an appropriation of public funds for its use may be diverted to objects in which the state has no interest, where the statute provides that the by-laws must not be in conflict with the laws of the state, and the appropriation act requires the money to be applied for the benefit of the children of the state. Id.

6. An appropriation of public funds for a public charity to be administered by a private corporation does not create an indebtedness against the state if it may be discontinued, reduced, or changed at the pleasure of the legislature. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Public money; support of paupers as public purpose: effect of permitting fund appropriated to be controlled by private corporation. 815

PUBLIC POLICY.

Contracts Violating, see CONTRACTS, 7-9.

QUARANTINE.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Quarantine; validity of. 937

QUESTION OF LAW AND FACT.

See TRIAL.

RAILROADS.

Injury to Passengers, see CARRIERS.

Presumption of Negligence where Fire is Communicated by Locomotive, see EVIDENCE, 13.

Presence of Torpedo at Highway Crossing of Railroad as Raising Presumption of Negligence, see EVIDENCE, 14.

See also CARRIERS.

1. The burning of buildings near a railroad right of way may be found to have been caused by sparks from an engine where no fire existed before the passage of the engine, which was emitting a large quantity of smoke and fire, and shortly after its passage fire was discovered in the grass, which communicated to and consumed the buildings. Dyer v. Maine C. R. Co. (Me.) 416

2. The engineer in charge of a moving locomotive is not bound either to keep as vigilant lookout for dogs on the track, or to exercise as great care in the management of his engine to prevent their injury, as in the case of cattle or live stock. Moore v. Charlotte E. R. L. & P. Co. (N. C.) 470

3. One in charge of a locomotive or motor car, seeing a dog near the track, is entitled to act upon the presumption that it will get out of the way in time to avoid danger, in the absence of anything to indicate that it is helpless or totally indifferent to its surroundings. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also CARRIERS; LIENS.

Railroads; fires set by locomotive; presumption of negligence; right of railroad company to benefit of insurance on property destroyed. 416

Injury to boy by torpedo picked up near track; liability of company. 422

Duty to avoid injuring dog on track. 470

REAL PROPERTY.

See also PERPETUITIES.

A fee in the first taker is not created by the rule in Shelley's Case by a conveyance to one for her natural life with provisions for forfeiture in case of attempt to encumber, or nonpayment of taxes, "and at her death to her children or to their lineal descendants;" and it is immaterial that, under the forfeiture clause, in case of compliance with the conditions the land was to pass to the lineal descendants of the life tenant. Brown v. Brown (Iowa) 629

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also FRAUD.

Real property; rule in Shelley's Case; not law in Iowa, life estate, with remainder in fee. 629

RECORDS.

On Appeal, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

As Constituting Notice, see NOTICE.

1. A district attorney, even when acting by permission of a judge of the court, has no authority to consent to the removal of indictments from the court records, so as to relieve one who removes them from his consent with intent to destroy them from liability to prosecution under the provisions of the statute which make their wilful and unlawful removal criminal, and their unlawful appropriation grand larceny. People v. Mills (N. Y.) 131

2. Taking up court records from the place where they have been laid, and walking away with them with intent to destroy them, are overt acts which render one guilty under a statute making the unlawful removal of such records a crime, although they were taken from a place where they had been placed by authority of the district attorney for the purpose of detecting defendant in the commission of the crime. Id.

REHEARING.

See APPEAL AND ERROR.

REPEAL.

Of Statutes, see STATUTES.

RES JUDICATA.

See JUDGMENT.

RÉSUMÉ.

For Résumé of Contents of Book, see p. 993.

RIPARIAN RIGHTS.

See CANALS; WATERS.

ROBBERY.

Information for, see INDICTMENT, ETC.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Robbery; by taking from one person property belonging to another:—(I.) Introduction; (II.) in general; (III.) taking from wife or servant; (IV.) conclusion. 343
Homicide in attempting to prevent. 534

SALE.

Measure of Damages for Breach of Contract of, see DAMAGES, 4-6.

Judicial Notice as to Meaning of Agreement to Sell "F. O. B. Cars," see EVIDENCE, 7.

Validity of Insurance on Property Purchased on Instalment Plan, see INSURANCE, 22.

See also VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

A sale of goods to be delivered "F. O. B. cars" imposes on the seller the duty of procuring the cars to carry out the contract, in the absence of clear and satisfactory evidence of a custom to the contrary, known to both parties to the transaction at the time of making the contract. Vogt v. Shienebeck (Wis.) 756

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Sale; F. O. B. cars; duty of seller to procure cars: necessity of demand by buyer. 758

SELF-DEFENSE.

In Committing Assault, see ASSAULT AND BATTERY.

See also HOMICIDE.

67 L. R. A.

SET-OFF AND COUNTERCLAIM.

Damages accruing to a telephone company for breach of contract by a patron not to make use of rival lines may be set up as a counterclaim, in an action to hold it liable for withdrawing its service from him, under a statute permitting to be filed as a counterclaim a cause of action connected with the subject of the principal action. Gwynn v. Citizens' Teleph. Co. (S. C.) 111

SIGNATURES.

Proof of, see EVIDENCE, 1.

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

Nature of Action, see ACTION OR SUIT, 1.

Of Contract to Sell Property Devised by Will, see EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

In a suit to compel specific performance of a contract to convey land which, subsequently to the execution of the contract, has been conveyed by the vendor to, and paid for by, a third person, the decree should require a conveyance by the latter, and entitle him to the purchase money, and not declare his deed void, and direct payment of the purchase money to the original vendor. Frank v. Stratford-Handcock (Wyo.) 571

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Specific performance; necessity of mutuality of obligation; of option contract; acceptance of offer and tender as entitling party to specific performance. 571

Of contract to convey real estate; action as one in personam; provision in decree that, on failure of defendant to execute conveyance, commissioner appointed by court should execute it; service by publication in case of. 940

STATUTES.

1. A bill which is introduced into the legislature within the time designated by the Constitution may properly become a law, although the constitutional authority for such legislation is not granted until after the expiration of the time when bills might constitutionally be introduced for passage at the pending session of the legislature. Morrison v. Kent (Mich.) 965

2. The constitutional prohibition against the passage of any statute containing matter different from that expressed in the title thereof is not violated by an act entitled "An Act to Amend the Charter of the City of Atlanta; to wit, The Act Incorporating the City of Atlanta, Approved February 28, 1874," etc., and empowering the mayor and general-council of the city to provide by ordinance for the regulation of public meetings and public speaking in its streets by preventing the obstruction thereof or the gathering of disorderly crowds thereon. Fitts v. Atlanta (Ga.) 803

3. An appropriation of public funds to be expended by a private corporation organized to provide homes for destitute children is not void as local or special legislation when it is for the benefit of all children of the class within the state generally. Hager v. Kentucky Children's Home Soc. (Ky.) 815

4. Objections to the constitutional validity of statutes can be made only by those to whom the enactment applies, and against whom attempts to enforce it are made. State v. Smiley (Kan.) 903

5. That the language of an anti-trust law is broad enough to include classes of persons who cannot rightfully be included therein does not render it invalid as to one who does not come within any of such classes. Id.

Construction.

6. The general language of statutes will be limited to such persons and subjects as it is reasonable to presume the legislature intended it should apply. Id.

7. An act providing that if, at any time after the incurring of an indebtedness or the accrual of a cause of action against him or the entry of judgment against him, a debtor "shall have been" or shall be absent from the territory, the time during which he "may have been" or may be absent shall not be included in computing the period of limitations (N. M. Laws 1903, chap. 62, p. 121), must be construed to be retrospective in operation. Orman v. Van Arsdell (N. M.) 438

8. A statute making the injury or killing of cattle or other live stock by a railroad company prima facie evidence of negligence does not apply in case of the killing of a dog. Moore v. Charlotte E. R. L. & P. Co. (N. C.) 470

Repeal or annulment.

9. Florida act approved June 2, 1893, chap. 4173, p. 101, providing for the recovery of attorneys' fees in certain actions against insurance companies, was not repealed by act approved May 31, 1899, chap. 4677, p. 33. L'Engle v. Scottish Union & N. Ins. Co. (Fla.) 581

Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Redding (Fla.) 518

10. A statute, authorizing superintendents of the poor to draw from time to time on the county treasury for expenses incurred in the discharge of their duties is annulled by a subsequent statute providing that all bills against the county shall be audited or allowed by the board of auditors except 67 L. R. A.

those of the drain commissioners and board of supervisors. Morrison v. Kent (Mich.) 965

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Statutes; exempting wages from legal process; liberal construction of; right of nonresident to claim benefit of. 222

Effect of repeal of statute and substitution of one which is unconstitutional; when construed prospectively. 559

Adoption from other state; effect of construction already put upon it by courts of state from which adopted. 659

Statute of limitations; meaning of word "actions" as used in; meaning of provision as to "action for relief on ground of fraud." 866

Construction of constitutional limitations as to time for introduction of bills in legislative assemblies:—(I.) Text of constitutional provisions; (II.) presumptions respecting the regularity of legislative action; (III.) amendment and substitution of bills after expiration of constitutional limitation. 965

Limitation of time for introduction of bill in legislature; no remedy for bill that has no lawful beginning; presumption of intent to repeal law not referred to in later act. 966

STOCK.

See CORPORATIONS.

STREET RAILROADS.

Injury to Passengers, see CARRIERS.

Negligence in Killing Dog, see NEGLIGENCE.

An interurban electric railroad is classed as a street railroad by the statutes of this state. Cincinnati, L. & A. Electric Street R. Co. v. Lohe (Ohio) 637

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Street railways; duty to avoid injuring dog on track. 470

SUBMISSION OF CONTROVERSY.

See AGREED CASE.

SUMMARY PROCEEDINGS.

See LANDLORD AND TENANT.

SUMMONS.

See WRIT AND PROCESS.

SURFACE WATER.

See WATERS.

TAXES.

Review of Decision of Comptroller as to Capital Employed within State, see APPEAL AND ERROR, 5.

Review of Ruling as to Property Subject to Franchise Tax, see APPEAL AND ERROR, 6.

Taxation as a Denial of Equal Protection of the Laws, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 6.

Want of Notice of Assessment as a Denial of Due Process of Law, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 13.

Assessment for Local Improvements as a Denial of Due Process of Law, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 14.

Injunction to Restrain Collection of, see INJUNCTION.

1. Taxes imposed as a deterrent against the transaction of a certain business need not be collected through judicial proceedings, but may be enforced by distraint or tax sale. Hodge v. Muscatine County (Iowa) 624

2. Provisions of a mulct tax law relating to the remission of the tax as well as the provisions for its enforcement are incorporated in a statute imposing a tax upon property devoted to a business different from that to which the law is primarily applicable, by a provision that the new tax shall be assessed and collected in the same manner as in the former law, although the sections relating to the remission are not specifically mentioned in the later statute. Id.

3. Mortgages and notes of solvent debtors are property at the residence of their owner, within the meaning of a constitutional provision permitting the legislature to levy taxes upon such property as it shall prescribe. Kingsley v. Merrill (Wis.) 200

4. The furnishing of trading stamps by merchants to their customers at the time of making purchases, in consideration of a cash payment, is not a business which may be separated from the business of selling the merchandise and taxed under a municipal charter authorizing the classification and taxation of business, trades, and professions carried on within the city. Hewin v. Atlanta (Ga.) 795

Equality and uniformity.

5. A poll tax for street purposes upon male inhabitants between the ages of twenty-one and fifty, except members of voluntary fire departments, contravenes a constitutional provision authorizing the legislature to empower municipal corporations to levy taxes which shall be equal and uniform in respect to persons within the jurisdiction of the body levying them. State v. Ide (Wash.) 280

67 L. R. A.

6. A taxation of solvent credits does not present a case of double taxation, forbidden by the constitutional requirements of uniformity, although a tax may also be levied on the debtor. Kingsley v. Merrill (Wis.) 200

7. The constitutional requirement of uniformity in taxation is not violated with respect to a tax upon credits by imposing it upon those which are solvent only, leaving debts due by insolvent persons untaxed. Id.

Franchise tax.

8. The amount of capital employed by a corporation, and not its share stock, is to be considered under a statute imposing a franchise tax upon corporations, to be computed upon the basis of the amount of capital stock employed within the state. People ex rel. Commercial Cable Co. v. Morgan (N. Y.) 980

9. Government bonds and those of other corporations held by a corporation whose capital stock is subject to a franchise tax cannot be presumed to have been purchased with surplus so as to bring them within the rule withdrawing them from consideration in ascertaining the capital employed within the state, if so purchased, against the finding of the comptroller that they were purchased with capital as distinguished from surplus. Id.

10. The value of stock of another corporation purchased by a corporation against which a franchise tax is to be enforced and paid for with its bonds, to secure which the stock is deposited with a trustee, is to be regarded as part of the capital employed within the state, where the identity of the former corporation is preserved, although the stock was purchased for the purpose of securing the assets and privileges of the other corporation. Id.

Levy and assessment.

11. Popular acquiescence in a particular mode of levying taxes for a long period of time cannot make it legal if it clearly contravenes the provisions of the Constitution. State v. Ide (Wash.) 280

12. No notice of the assessment or levy need be given to the one engaged in the business in case of the imposition of a specific tax upon the business of selling cigarettes. Hodge v. Muscatine County (Iowa) 624

13. For the purpose of determining whether or not the maker of notes is solvent within the meaning of a statute taxing solvent credits, he must be considered solvent if, although indebted to others, he has business or income and pays his debts, or has property out of which collection can be made. Kingsley v. Merrill (Wis.) 200

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Taxes; extent of power to tax; taxation of choses in action; what necessary to make property subject to tax; imposing tax upon debts of solvent persons only; validity of tax on mortgage; where land is also taxed for full value to mortgagor; effect of inequality of tax. 201

Poll or capitation tax; necessity of equality and uniformity in; what classification justified; effect of acquiescence to make law valid. 280

Duty of legislature to protect rights of taxpayer; necessity of notice and opportunity for hearing; on business of selling cigarettes. 625

On business of furnishing trading stamps to customers; what constitutes business subject to tax; necessity that power to tax incidents must be specifically given. 797

On franchise of corporation; how computed; how amount of capital determined for purpose of; including government bonds and those of other corporations. 961

TELEGRAPHS.

Measure of Damages for Failure to Advise Sendee of Inability to Deliver Message, see DAMAGES, 3.

Presumption of Negligence in Failing to Deliver Telegram, see EVIDENCE, 16.

Waiver of Defense, see WAIVER.

1. Change of the stated price in a telegram intended to notify a purchaser of the market price of mules so as apparently to quote them at $10 a head less than their market price, which results in the sendee's directing the purchase of a certain number on his account, will render the telegraph company liable for the difference in the price paid and that stated in the telegram as delivered. Hays v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (S. C.) 481

2. Negligence in the transmission of a telegram is shown by the making of such a change in the name of the sendee that a person answering to the substituted name cannot be found. Green v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (N. C.) 985

3. A telegraph company may be held liable for damages for mental anguish where, by reason of its failure to deliver a telegram, friends fail to meet a sixteen-year-old girl who arrives after midnight in a strange city and is compelled to drive two miles in company with a strange driver in search of their residence. Id.

4. To entitle the sendee to sue for failure promptly to transmit and deliver a telegram, the telegraph company must know, or 67 L. R. A.

be chargeable with notice, that the message is for his benefit. Frazier v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (Or.) 319

5. A message addressed to a firm who are not known by the telegraph company to be brokers, directing them to see a certain person and take his last offer, does not disclose that it is for the benefit of the addressees, so as to give them a right of action for failure promptly to deliver it, where the telegraph company is not otherwise notified that it is intended for their benefit. Id.

6. A telegraph company receiving a message for transmission is bound to notify the sender, in case the line is obstructed so that the message cannot be sent within a reasonable time, so as to give him an opportunity to avail himself of other modes of conveying the desired information to the sendee; and it is liable to the sendee for any damages which may be caused to him because of non-performance of this obligation. Swan v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (C. C. A. 7th C.) 153

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Telegraphs; duty of company to have sufficient facilities to transact all business offered. 112

Duty of telegraph company to notify sender of message if it cannot be promptly transmitted or delivered. 153

Duty to notify sender of message if it cannot be promptly transmitted or delivered; addressee of message not charged with notice of company's rules as to putting hour date on message; measure of damages for delay. 154

Right of sendee to maintain action for default; necessity of informing company of purpose of message. 320

Mistake in transmission of business telegram; measure of damages; right of agent to waive condition as to time of presenting claim; validity of provision as to time limit. 481

Negligence in failing to deliver message; who entitled to sue; damages for mental suffering. 986

TELEPHONES.

Validity of Contract Not to Engage Services from Rival Company, see CONTRACTS, 8.

Punitive Damages for Refusal to Furnish Service, see DAMAGES, 12.

Mitigation of Damages for Refusal to Supply Service, see DAMAGES, 10.

See also SET-OFF AND COUNTERCLAIM.

1. A telephone company is bound to furnish service on equal terms to all applying for it. Gwynn v. Citizens' Teleph. Co. (S. C.) 111

2. That a patron of a telephone company has broken his agreement not to make use of the lines of a rival company gives the former no right to refuse to grant him further service. Id.

3. A telephone company will not be required to furnish service to a bawdy house. Godwin v. Carolina Teleph. & Teleg. Co. (N. C.) 251

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Telephones; right to reasonable time to comply with demand for use of telephone. 112

Telephone companies as common carriers; duty to serve public generally on like conditions; refusal to place telephone in bawdy house. 251

TENDER.

A tender made for the purpose of exercising an option to purchase real estate which has been conveyed by the vendor to a third person after the execution of the contract is properly made to the original vendor. Frank v. Stratford-Handcock (Wyo.) 571

TOLLS.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Tolls; exaction of, under statute for improvement of water way. 835

TORPEDO.

Presence of, at Highway Crossing of Railroad as Raising Presumption of Negligence, see EVIDENCE. 14.

TORT.

Right of Action for Injury to Business, see CASE.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Tort; every wrong has a remedy. 65

Committed by mistake in assertion of supposed right; right to recover punitive damages. 112

TRADE FIXTURES.

Right to Remove, see FIXTURES.

TRADING STAMPS.

Parties to Suit to Enjoin Collection of Taxes, see ACTION OR SUIT. 4.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Trading stamps; validity of trading stamp business; tax on; imposing tax on merchants furnishing stamps. 797

TRESPASS.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Trespass; person interfering with rights of owner of burial lot. 124

As necessary element of larceny. 135

Homicide in attempting to prevent. 538
67 L. R. A.

TRIAL.

Cure of Error in Excluding Evidence by Subsequent Admission of Similar Evidence, see APPEAL AND ERROR, 9.
See also AGREED CASE.

1. The liability of one, who, being tenant in common with his wards, contracts to sell the common property without authority to bind them for breach of his contract to convey his own interest and for breach of his warranty of authority to sign the contract on their behalf, cannot be tried upon one issue. Le Roy v. Jacobosky (N. C.) 977

2. When, under the provisions of W. Va. Code 1899, chap. 106, § 23, a petition is filed in a suit in equity founded upon an attachment, setting up title by purchase, and the plaintiff in the cause relies upon fraud in the alleged purchase to defeat the claim of title so set up, the trial of the issue must be upon the petition without any other pleading, and by jury, unless trial by jury is waived; and it is reversible error to hear and determine the issue upon the petition, and answer thereto, and depositions of witnesses, according to the rules and principles governing courts of equity. Lipscomb v. Condon (W. Va.) 670

3. Waiver of the right of trial by jury must be by consent entered of record; it cannot be merely inferred from the fact that the court tried the case without objection. Id.

4. The suspension of a trial for a short time, against the protest of the defendant, for the purpose of procuring the evidence of an important witness, is a matter within the discretion of the trial judge, and is not error. Walker v. State (Ga.) 426

Instructions.

5. A charge in relation to the law of conspiracy was proper in a murder trial, where accused was jointly indicted with another for the murder, and there was evidence that tended, to some extent at least, to show that accused and such other had entered into a conspiracy to commit the murder. Id.

6. In the absence of any evidence of threats against a deceased person, by one on trial for his murder, the trial judge should not charge the jury in relation to threats. Id.

7. One on trial for the commission of a crime cannot require the judge to single out for particular comment in its instructions to the jury certain facts or evidence to which his attention is called. State v. Quigley (R. I.) 322

Questions for jury.

8. Whether or not a city is negligent in permitting an electric light to be placed in such a manner that the shadow cast by the supporting pole conceals an opening in a cross walk, which may cause injury to pedestrians, is a question for the jury. Stone v. Seattle (Wash.) 253

9. The question of what is a reasonable time in which freight is to be removed from the cars by the consignee so as to relieve the carrier from risk of loss is one of law for the court, where there is no dispute about the material facts. Normile v. Northern P. R. Co. (Wash.) 271

10. The jury must decide whether, under all the circumstances, an officer attempting to arrest for misdemeanor a drunken person who resists the arrest at a time when bystanders are present, who presumably would render assistance, is justified in striking him on the head with a billy, and, if so, whether or not he exerts more force than is permissible, where the blows result in death. State v. Phillips (Iowa) 292

11. When the evidence, as to whether or not a master has promulgated suitable rules for the government of his employees, is such that reasonable men might differ as to whether or not the duty has been performed, the question must be determined by the jury. Johnson v. Union P. Coal Co. (Utah) 506

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Trial; questions of negligent construction of street and of defect therein, for jury. 256

Question whether notice of accident was given immediately, as one for jury. 278

Question for jury whether servant acted within scope of employment. 457

Question for jury as to existence of nuisance. 984

Submitting question to jury where fact is established by clear weight of evidence. 758

Reasonableness of tax, or of ordinance imposing, as question for court. 798

TRUSTS.

See also MONOPOLY.

The court cannot take a portion of the fund out of the hands of trustees for the purpose of giving validity to a codicil by permitting a construction of its provisions independently from those of the will where a fund is left to trustees to pay annuities to testator's children during the lifetime of two of them, and to devise the residue at their decease, and the codicil attempts to create a further restriction on the alienation of the share of one of the children under certain contingencies. Hertzog v. Title Guarantee & T. Co. (N. Y.) 146

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Trusts; creation of, to pay annuity; 67 L. R. A. raising trust by implication; where it must immediately be declared void. 148

USURY.

See JUDGMENT, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

VACCINATION.

Constitutionality of Statute Requiring, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 8. 16.

As to Judicial Notice as to Nature of, see EVIDENCE, 9.

See also HEALTH.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Vaccination; validity of compulsory vaccination law. 936

VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

Consideration of Option Contract, see CONTRACTS, 5. 6.

Measure of Damages for Breach of Contract, see DAMAGES, 7. 8.

See also SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

1. Absence of obligation, on the part of one who has an option to purchase land, to make the purchase, will not bar his right to have the contract enforced against the vendor, when he elects to exercise the option, and tenders the purchase price. Frank v. Stratford-Handcock (Wyo.) 571

2. An agreement, without consideration, giving an option to purchase real estate, may be revoked at any time before it is accepted, and a revocation is effected by a sale and conveyance of the property to a stranger. Id.

3. An acceptance in writing of a formal and carefully prepared option of sale of land, within the time allowed by it for acceptance, using the formal words, "according to terms of the option given me," to which there is added, by the conjunction "and," a request for a departure from its terms as to the time and place of performance, is unconditional, and converts the option into an executory contract of sale. Turner v. McCormick (W. Va.) 853

VOTERS AND ELECTIONS.

See also MANDAMUS.

1. The claim of a candidate for office to have his name printed in the regular party column where all the candidates in the column can be voted for at once by a mark at the head of the column, presents a question of substantial right. State ex rel. Howells v. Metcalf (S. D.) 331

2. An organized political party cannot have at the same time on the official ballot more than one candidate for the same county office. Id.

3. That faction of a county convention which assembles at the place designated by the chairman and a majority of the county committee, organizes, and proceeds to nominate candidates, must be regarded as the regular representative of the party, in the absence of anything which justifies delegates in refusing to attend at the place selected. Id.

4. The desire to prevent bloodshed is not a sufficient excuse to justify delegates to a convention of a prominent political party in refusing to attend the meeting organized by the central committee. Id.

5. Delegates are not justified in refusing to attend the convention organized by the central committee of a political party because there are contesting delegations, and the central committee is favorable to the opposing faction. Id.

6. The names of candidates nominated by a convention erroneously claiming to represent a political party, in opposition to the regular convention, of that party, should be excluded from the official ballot. Id.

7. That the law does not require the official ballots to be printed and in possession of the proper officer until ten days before election does not, prior to that time, deprive the court of jurisdiction of a controversy to settle the names which shall be placed upon the ballot. Id.

8. An act which prohibits the printing of the name of a candidate for office in more than one column of the official ballot is, as to a candidate who is the nominee of a single political party and the nominee of electors by petition, a reasonable regulation of the manner of exercising the right of suffrage, and is valid and constitutional. State ex rel. Fisk v. Porter (N. D.) 473

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Voters and elections; mandamus to compel filing of certificates of nomination; injunction against placing names of irregular nominees on official ballot; refusal of court to go into procedure of convention; effect of division of convention and nominations made by both factions; power of court to determine who are regular nominees. 331

WAGES.

Attachment of, see ATTACHMENT, 7.

WAIVER.

Seeking further information as to the merits of a claim against a telegraph company for damages for breach of a contract to transmit a message, long after receipt of verbal notice of it, and eight or ten days after receiving written notice, without disclosing any intention to rely on the fact that the claim was not presented in time, constitutes a waiver of that defense. Hays v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (S. C.) 481
67 L. R. A.

. NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Waiver; or exemption of wages from legal process. 220

Implication of, from conduct; power of agent to waive condition. 481

Of mistake or fraud of insurer or agent; by retention of policy. 705

WATERS.

Measure of Damages for Injury to Riparian Property, see DAMAGES.

Lowering of Water of Navigable Stream as Constituting a Taking of Property, see EMINENT DOMAIN.

See also CANALS.

Public; navigable.

1. The right of the public to improve navigation without liability for consequential injuries to riparian rights does not include the right to take the water of a navigable stream to supply an artificial channel or canal. Beidler v. Sanitary District (Ill.) 820

2. A public corporation organized to provide a drainage system cannot contest its liability to make compensation for injuries done to riparian owners by taking water from a navigable stream to supply its ditch, upon the ground that incidentally it has created a navigable channel, and that the public is not liable for injuries to riparian owners in consequence of the improvement of navigation. Id.

Obstruction.

3. A municipal corporation which has utilized a stream to carry off the surface water falling within its watershed, and, for the maintenance of the public health, has cleaned its bed, is not liable to a riparian owner for failure to remove obstructions placed in the stream by another riparian owner so that the water is dammed back to the injury of the former. A. L. Lakey Co. v. Kalamazoo (Mich.) 931

4. A municipal corporation which turns into a stream flowing through it storm sewers from streets within the watershed of the stream is not bound to remove the sand and debris carried into the stream by the water for the purpose of protecting riparian owners from injury by overflow of the stream. Id.

Surface water.

5. The owner of lands through which a natural watercourse flows may accumulate surface waters falling upon lands adjacent thereto, and cast the same into such stream, without becoming liable to a lower riparian owner for damages, so long as the natural capacity of the stream is not exceeded. Baldwin v. Ohio Twp. (Kan.) 642

6. An upper proprietor of lands is not liable to a lower proprietor for damages caused by diverting surface water and casting it into a natural watercourse passing through both estates, where such diversion is occasioned by the improvement of the upper estate in good faith, and where the injury is incidental, small, or not occasioned by the natural carrying capacity of the stream being exceeded. Id.

7. A lower riparian proprietor who is injured by the act of a road overseer who in good faith made a substantial improvement to a highway by grading it up and by cutting a ditch along its side, whereby surface waters were gathered and cast into a natural watercourse flowing across such highway, to the damage of such lower proprietor, cannot recover damages or enjoin the maintenance of such ditch; it not appearing that such damages were occasioned by the overflow of the stream by reason of the increased flow of water therein. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Waters; grant of water power:—(I.) Form; estate created; (II.) successive and conflicting grants; (III.) what rights conveyed: (a) by general grants: (1) in general; (2) construction of grant; (3) exceptions and reservations; (4) sufficiency of conveyance; (b) grant of flow of stream; (c) grant of dam; (d) head and flow; (e) races, channels, and flumes; (f) right to convey; rescission; (g) other matters; (IV.) limitation of rights: (a) as to use: (1) general rules; (2) illustrations; (b) as to premises; (c) as to quantity; (d) improved machinery; (e) as to time; (V.) protecting rights: (a) by repairing works; (b) by action; (VI.) measurement; (VII.) loss of rights; (VIII.) compensation; (IX.) covenants: (a) in general; (b) runs with the land; (c) breach; (d) damages. 369

Right of riparian proprietor to divert water from stream; adverse use of. 371

Surface waters; liability of municipality for casting on to land of another. 643

Right of riparian owners to fish in non-navigable waters; marine fisheries. 773

Right to improve navigability of stream:—(I.) Extent and limits of the right; (II.) right as between state and Federal governments; (III.) character of improvement; (IV.) improvement companies; (V.) booming and sorting logs; (VI.) interference with private rights; (VII.) exercise of power of eminent domain; (VIII.) public rights in improvement; (IX.) use of surplus water; (X.) other matters. 820

Construction of canals leading from river by riparian owners; lowering of water in canal by taking of water from river by drainage channel; riparian owner's right to 67 L. R. A.

damages for diversion of water; where damage to property is caused by legal acts; who are riparian owners; acquirement of riparian rights by prescription; respective rights of several riparian owners; injury by exercise of state's right to improve navigation; necessity of proving actual damage from diversion. 825

Surface waters; liability of municipality as to. 932

WHISTLE.

Restraining Blowing of, see INJUNCTION, 2.

Blowing of, as Constituting a Nuisance. see NUISANCES.

WILLS.

Sale of Property Devised by Will, see EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

See also TRUSTS.

1. Creditors of a widow, who become such after the death of her husband, cannot complain of her election to claim under the will of her husband, which devises to her her own real estate with remainder to her children, and an additional sum of money. Tripp v. Nobles (N. C.) 449

2. A widow who offers for probate, and undertakes to carry out as administratrix with the will annexed, the will of her husband, which devises to her her own land for life, with remainder to their children, and an additional sum of money, is estopped to assert her absolute title to the real estate; and it is immaterial that the money is only a small portion of the value of the estate, and no more than she would be entitled to claim under the law for support. Id.

After-acquired property.

3. The intention of the testator, as gathered from the four corners of the will, in the light of the circumstances under which it was written, will determine whether or not he has disposed of after-acquired real estate. Mueller v. Buenger (Mo.) 648

4. A will may pass title in after-acquired real estate under a statute providing that every person may by last will devise "all his estate, real, personal, and mixed." Id. Devise and legacy.

5. The use of the word "heirs" in conveying an interest by will after the statute has made the use of such word unnecessary to convey a fee-simple estate does not cast a doubt upon the intention of the deviser to devise a fee simple. Gannon v. Albright (Mo.) 97

6. The use of the word "bequeath" in making a devise of real estate does not indicate an intention to convey less than the fee-simple estate when used in connection with the word "devise." Id.

7. Following a devise of real estate in terms broad enough to convey a fee simple, with a provision that the land shall not be sold, "at least not before" the devisee becomes of age, gives a power of alienation, at least by implication, and renders a subsequent limitation over of the estate void. Id.

8. A devise to certain persons named, "and unto their heirs and assigns forever," is not cut down, either expressly or by implication, from a fee simple to a fee tail by a subsequent declaration that, if either should die without "issue," his share should go over to others. Id.

9. A fee-simple estate devised to one with contingent limitation over in case he should die without issue becomes absolute and incontestable in his assignee upon his death leaving children surviving him. Id.

10. If the devise of a fee tail is to be implied from the limitation over of the estate in the event that the devisee should "die without leaving any issue" the words must be taken as referring to an indefinite failure of issue, which will render the limitation over void for remoteness. Id.

11. Under a statute providing that, in case of a limitation over in a devise upon the death of the first taker without issue, the word "issue" must be taken to mean issue living at the death of the person named; an estate tail by implication cannot be created by a limitation over after such failure of issue, but, in case the first taker has issue living at his death, his estate in fee is absolute. Id.

12. Where, because of a statutory provision that a limitation over in a devise in case of the death of the first taker without issue shall be referred to the time of the first taker's death, no estate tail can be implied from such a provision in the devise, the right of the first taker to the fee simple in case he dies leaving issue is not affected by further statutory provisions abolishing fee tails, and providing that, in cases where by the common law such estate would exist under the terms of the instrument, the first taker should have a life estate, and the next in succession a fee simple. Id.

13. If a will making a limitation over after the death of the first taker without issue is susceptible of a construction that will make it apply to a definite failure of issue at the time of his death, such construction will be adopted in preference to one requiring an indefinite failure of issue. Id.

14. The word "remainder" in a statute providing that, in case of the limitation of a remainder upon failure of issue, the word "issue" must be construed as issue living at the death of the life tenant, is broad enough to include an executory devise which is to take effect upon such failure of issue. Id.

15. The one half of a tract of land acquired by a testator after the execution of his will will pass under the residuary clause, and not under the clause disposing of the half which he owned at the time the will was made, where by the latter clause he gave to his niece "my interest" in the tract, and by the residuary clause gave to his wife "all the remainder of my property, both real and personal, I may possess at my death, . . . excepting that property which I have mentioned" in the former clause of the will. Mueller v. Buenger (Mo.) 648

16. A residuary devise to testator's widow will not, as against his children, pass title to a burial lot upon which members of the testator's family are buried. Waldron's Petition (R. I.) 118

17. A direction that testator's real estate remain in the name of his estate for a period of five years after the death of his wife, who is given a life estate in the property, and that at the expiration of that period his children appoint commissioners who shall partition the property between them, does not prevent the immediate vesting of the remainder in them, so that with the co-operation of the life tenant they can convey a good title to the property immediately after the death of the testator. Wool v. Fleetwood (N. C.) 444

18. The meaning of the words "lawful heirs" cannot be restricted as including only children. Id.

19. A provision in a will that, five years after the death of a life tenant, testator's children shall procure the property to be divided between them, and that they shall own and occupy during their natural lives, and directing that at their death the property shall go to their lawful heirs, vests in them a fee simple, under the rule in Shelley's Case, so that an attempt to make a further limitation of the estate in case of their death without lawful heirs is void. Id.

20. A limitation over to the heirs of testator in case of failure of lawful heirs of the persons to whom and their lawful heirs an estate is given, is defeated, and does not make the first estate a conditional or defeasible fee if the heirs of testator and of such persons must of necessity be the same persons. Id.

21. No estate vests in the children until the widow's death, under a will giving real estate to testator's wife for life, and providing that at the expiration of the life estate "that which is given to her for life shall be equally divided between all my children, share and share alike, the representatives of such as may have died to stand in the place of their ancestors," and therefore a child dying before the widow has no interest which will pass by its will. Bowen v. Hackney (N. C.) 440

22. The word "representatives" in a devise of a remainder to be equally divided, at the expiration of the life estate, among testator's children, "the representatives of such as may die to stand in the place of their ancestors," is not broad enough to include a devisee of the interest of a child. Id.

23. A revocation, as to one of the testator's children, of a provision in a will that the remainder of his property shall be divided among his children, will leave the portion of that child to be distributed as interstate property. Herzog v. Title Guarantee & T. Co. (N. Y.) 146

24. A partial disinheritance of a child, who, by the terms of a will, is to share equally in the distribution of testator's estate, does not, in the absence of express words, constitute a devise to the other children; but, as to the portion taken from such legatee, there will be an intestacy. Id.

25. A bequest is not a gift to a class within the rule that it shall be divided among the survivors, where at the time of making it the number of the donees is certain, and the share each is to receive is also certain, and in no way dependent for its amount upon the members who shall survive. Id.

Revocation.

26. Wills may be revoked, not only by a written instrument, as provided in N. M. Comp. Laws 1897, § 1953, but also in certain causes by operation of law. Re Teopfer's Estate (N. M.) 315

27. The marriage of a testator or testatrix, whether or not it is followed by the birth of a child, revokes an antenuptial will. Id.

Codicils.

28. The provisions of a will will be affected by those of a codicil only so far as the latter is valid. Herzog v. Title Guarantee & T. Co. (N. Y.) 146

29. A provision in a will giving a child an annuity and an equal share in the residue when distributed is modified by a codicil providing that, in case of her marriage to a person named, her annuity shall be a specified amount, and upon her death a certain sum shall be divided among her children, so far as the matter of definiteness and certainty of language is concerned. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Wills; devise of fee simple, with absolute power of alienation; validity of subsequent devise over; devise to certain persons and to their heirs and assigns forever, with limitation over in case of failure of issue. 98

Invalid suspension of power of alienation; effect of invalid codicil on provisions of will; construction of, causing intestacy, not favored; provision that remainder of property shall be divided among testator's children; effect of revocation as to one child, on distribution of his share; effect of annuities to suspend power of alienation. 147

Of woman; revocation by marriage; effect of statutes prescribing method of express revocation. 316

Tendency of court to regard devise as vested; what circumstances will overcome. 441

Meaning of "lawful heirs;" rule in Shelley's Case; clause forbidding sale of real estate during lifetime of life tenant; effect of deed by remainderman and life tenant to convey title. 445

Effect to pass title to after-acquired property. 648

WITNESSES.

Review of Findings as to Qualifications of Expert Witness, see APPEAL AND ERROR, 4.

1. Defendant in a criminal case may be required to testify that he had married the state's main witness just prior to the trial, even though he married her for the purpose of suppressing her testimony. Moore v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 499

2. The state cannot place on the stand the wife of one on trial for a crime, and ask her questions as to the commission of the crime, for the purpose of forcing defendant to object to her testimony against him in order to prejudice his case, by supporting a theory that he married her to suppress her testimony under a statute making her incompetent to testify against him. Id.

3. The judge who convened a grand jury which is investigating a crime cannot be permitted to give in evidence a confession made to him by a witness called before such jury, who is subsequently indicted and placed on trial, where the witness, being unable to obtain advice from a lawyer in whom he had confidence, went to the judge, and, upon stating his difficulty, was told by the judge that he could give him no advice, but that he should tell the truth, whereupon the witness made the confession: such evidence is excluded upon the grounds that it is in the nature of a confidential communication from client to counsel, and that it was received by the judge in his official capacity, as having charge of the grand jury and being required to determine what testimony the witnesses before it might be required to give. People v. Pratt (Mich.) 923

4. In making a statement an accused person is not subject to cross-examination without his consent, and he cannot be subjected thereto because he incorporates in his statement the answer to a question that his counsel asked permission to suggest to him, after the judge had refused such permission and had notified accused that, if he answered that question, he would subject himself to cross-examination. Walker v. State (Ga.) 426

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Witnesses; effect of marrying a witness in order to prevent her from testifying:— (I.) Competency at common law; (II.) competency under statutory provisions. 499

WOMEN.

Constitutionality of Statute Excluding Women from Saloons, see INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Women; ordinance prohibiting person 67 L. R. A. selling liquor from permitting females to enter place of business. 808

WRIT AND PROCESS.

1. Service of summons by publication will not confer jurisdiction to compel a nonresident to perform his contract to convey real estate located within the state Silver Camp Min. Co. v. Dickert (Mont.) 940

2. A statute providing for service of process on nonresident defendants by publication will be construed to apply to cases where, under recognized principles of law, suits may be instituted against such defendants, and will not be held to confer jurisdiction in case of service of process in that manner in a suit merely in personam. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Writ and process; sufficiency of service by publication in action for specific performance. 941

WRITS.

See CERTIORARI; HABEAS CORPUS; MANDAMUS.

Ex. * 6 P.
8/12/05

